February will be used by Fox to release five productions, the first of which will be "The Trouble Hunter," on Feb. 7. "The Johnstown Flood," Feb. 14; "Part Time Wives," Feb. 21; "The Road to Glory," and Tom Mix in "My Own Pal," Feb. 28th, will be the other releases of the short month.

During March the Fox releases will include "Daybreak," March 7; the third Kyne story, March 14; "Separate Rooms," and a Buck Jones starring vehicle, March 21, and "Manhood," March 28.

For April, May and June the following pictures have already been selected: "The Golden Butterfly," April 4; "Wages for Wives" (Golden Unit), April 11; "Palace of Pleasure" and a Tom Mix picture, April 18, the fourth Kyne story, and a Jones picture, May 9; a Tom Mix picture, June 6, and another Jones on June 27.

"KENTUCKY PRIDE," a JOHN FORD PRODUCTION FOR WILLIAM FOX
Among the players are J. Farrell MacDonald, Gertrude Astor and Henry B. Walthall

Figuratively and literally, Clara Bow adds charm to "My Lady's Lips," in the B. P. Schulberg production of that name.

"My Lady's Lips," Third Big 1925 Drama for Schulberg

FINDING the exhibitor and his patrons partial this year to melodramas that have new twists and original angles, B. P. Schulberg, producer of "Capital Punishment" and "Go Straight," will soon present his third melodramatic story this season in "My Lady's Lips," nearing completion on the coast with the director's magaphone in the hands of James P. Hogan.

In "Capital Punishment" Mr. Schulberg transferred a theme of international discussion into a specific human interest story which was accepted by picturegoers and critics as one of the exceptional pictures of the fall season. More recently another melodrama, "Go Straight," has been delivered from the same studio, made novel by a light comedy treatment and some Hollywood studio atmosphere offsetting the heavier moments.

Asserting that picture styles travel in cycles and the present season shows a preference to this new fashion melodrama, Mr. Schulberg promises that the new release, "My Lady's Lips" will eclipse both its predecessors in box-office value. It has been written directly for the screen by John Goodrich, well known scenario writer, and features Clara Bow, Frank Keenan, Alyce Mills, William Powell, Ford Sterling, John Sainpolis and Gertrude Short. Its director, James P. Hogan, was responsible also for "Capital Punishment."

Schulberg Here from Coast to Confer With Bachmann

B. P. SCHULBERG arrived in New York from the coast this week to confer with J. G. Bachman, general manager of distribution, relative to final details preparatory to beginning the eighteen special productions which B. P. Schulberg Productions will release during the coming season.

While in the East, Mr. Schulberg will plan the order in which his eighteen stories will be filmed and tentative release dates will be decided upon. Upon his arrival, the producer stated that his company's product next year will continue its established policy of best selling stories to be directed by four well known megaphone masters and enacted by the best box-office casts obtainable.

Before leaving California Mr. Schulberg supervised the filming of the final scenes of Gasnier's production, "Faint Perfume," and saw camera work start on John Goodrich's story, "My Lady's Lips," with James P. Hogan directing. These two features terminate the ten pictures on the current Schulberg schedule.

He also arranged preliminary work on several of the new series and put his O. K. on the adaptation of Percy Marks' novel, "The Plastic Age," just completed by Frederica Sagor. This valuable story will be one of his first productions for fall release.

Miss Cummings Goes West

Dorothy Cummings left last Monday on the Twentieth Century for California, where she will begin work on the special engagement with Gloria Swanson in "The Coast of Folly," under the direction of Allan Dwan. Miss Cummings was engaged in the East for this production and will return to New York at the completion of the picture to fulfill another contract.

Walsh Cast Completed

Director Scott Dunlop has completed casting for "Blue Blood," the second George Walsh starring picture under his contract with Chadwick Pictures Corporation. The company is now making location scenes at Catalina Island. Cecille Evans, whose million dollar legs have been exploited the world over, will play the leading role opposite the star. Joan Meredith, one of the 1925 Wampas Baby stars, who recently signed a long term contract with Chadwick, will play another prominent role. Others in the cast are Robert Bolder, Eugene Bordon, Harvey Clark, and G. Howe Black, the negro comedian, whose work in "The Wizard of Oz" has won him much praise from the critics.

Will Maintain High Quality of Short Subjects During Summer

Lige Conley, Lloyd Hamilton and Eddie Nelson, starred in Educational Comedies. Scenes from "Durand of the Bad Lands," starring Buck Jones A Fox production

THERE will be no let-down in the quality of the short subjects on the Educational program during the summer months according to a statement by E. W. Hammons, president of Educational Film Exchanges, Inc.

"Educational will continue its policy of quality short subjects during the hot weather months," says Mr. Hammons. "Our line-up of releases for the next four months is composed of subjects of the same high quality as those of the cooler and more profitable months of the year.

"Educational realizes that the exhibitor depends more and more on his short subjects as the hot weather approaches and with that fact in mind we are releasing many of the best pictures of the year's schedule during May, June, July and August. Our promise of 'Quality, not Quantity,' will be continued through the months when a curtailed supply of real box-office attractions seems to be the order of business with the distributors of longer productions.

"'The Spice of the Program' is never more welcome than in the heated months when the exhibitor has the hot weather and various summer attractions to contend with. It is our aim to provide as many short subject attractions during these months as during the seasons when exhibiting conditions were at their best.

"The short subject is a box-office attraction of real merit and when properly advertised can do much toward offsetting the 'summer slump' which seems to be the bugaboo of many theatre owners. Real comedy stars have real drawing power and by advertising and exploitation the enterprising exhibitor can turn these names into dollars at a season when the theatrical business is laboring under its greatest handicap.

"Our May releases include eight two-reel comedies with such proven stars as Lloyd Hamilton, Walter Hiers, Lige Conley, Al. St. John and Jimmie Adams in the leading roles, as well as the Educational Pictures Special 'Balto's Race to Nome.' These box-office attractions will be available for the subsequent runs during the summer months. Larry Semon, Bobby Vernon, Rickey Bennett, Eddie Nelson and Neal Burns will be seen in comedies in the June releases, just at the start of the warmer weather.

"During July and August Lloyd Hamilton will appear in the final comedy of his present series and Lige Conley will be seen in at least two Mermaid Comedies, one of which was made especially for hot wather consumption—a snow picture taken on Bear Mountain which we are holding for the heated season.

"We will announce our 1925-26 line up in a few weeks. Contracts have already been closed for the bulk of the next season's output and I want to say that our announcement will contain some pleasant surprises for exhibitors."

Dorothy Devore plays the title role in "The Prairie Wife," a Metro-Goldwyn picture, presented by Eastern Productions, Inc., and directed by Hugo Ballin.

Ten Educationals Are Listed

Ten Short Subjects from the Educational program are listed in the April issue of the Photoplay Guide, issued by the National Board of Review.

The list includes the Educational Pictures Special, "Balto's Race to Nome" and the third of the series of "Fables in Color" series, "Only a Country Lass." This series has earned the exceptional distinction of having every subject listed in this bulletin.

Other subjects contained in the list are the Larry Semon Special Comedy, "The Dome Doctor," the Walter Hiers Comedy, "Tender Feet," the Mermaid Comedy, "Fares, Please" with Al St. John and the Tuxedo Comedy "The Iron Mule" with the same star as well as the Hodge-Podge "The Village School" and three releases of the Judge's Crossword Puzzles series.

Standing With Chadwick

Wyndham Standing, one of the most popular leading men of the screen, has been engaged by Chadwick Pictures for an important role in "The Unchastened Woman," the Louis K. Anspacher play, in which Theda Bara will return to the screen. Mr. Standing will be seen in part of Hubert Knollys, which was created on the stage by H. Reeves-Smith. The picture was started this week under the direction of James Young.

Asher Buys "Good Luck"

E. M. Asher of Faultless Pictures Corporation, and Sol Lesser have purchased the film rights to the famous Drury Lane melodrama, "Good Luck." The Faultless company will produce the picture in association with Lesser. Asher is in New York to arrange for distribution of the picture.

Photographic study by Melbourne Spurr of Marion Davies, the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer star, who has scored her greatest success in "Zander."

De Mille Starts First Special June 15

According to advices from the De Mille studio, actual production work on "The Road to Yesterday," the first Cecil B. DeMille personally directed production, will start on June 15, at which time Joseph Schildkraut will be at liberty to begin his screen portrayal of the exceptionally vivid characterization for which he has been cast.

The script of "The Road to Yesterday" was adapted by Jeanie Macpherson and Beulah Marie Dix from the stage play of the same title by Miss Dix and E. G. Sutherland, which in addition to having a part remarkably well suited to Schildkraut has a leading feminine character that will be ideally filled by Jetta Goudal.

Weiss Brothers Start New Series

Telegraphic advices from the West Coast state the Lester F. Scott, Jr., who is producing the three series of Westerns which Weiss Brothers' Artclass Motion Pictures Corporation are releasing for 1925, is now preparing for the production of the second picture in each of the three series of thrill action dramas starring Buffalo Bill, Jr., Buddy Roosevelt and Wally Wales, respectively.

Stories for these pictures have already been selected and casts will be announced in the very near future. The first of each series has already been completed and shipped to New York in preparation for the new season.

Raymond Griffith Signed

That the public and not the producer makes screen stars was again demonstrated recently when Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president in charge of production of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, wired from Hollywood that Raymond Griffith had been signed to a five-year contract to be starred in Paramount pictures. He will appear exclusively in feature comedies.

"Faint Perfume" Possesses Box-Office Angles Galore

Alyce Mills, Betty Francisco and Seena Owen in "Faint Perfume," a B. P. Schulberg production.

"FAINT PERFUME," Gasnier's newest production which will be released by B. P. Schulberg Productions late this month, has many angles which make it potential box-office material, according to J. G. Bachman, general manager of distribution.

"Absolute sincerity to life is the key-note of the story, 'Faint perfume,'" says Mr. Bachmann. "That is why its publication as an Appleton novel precipitated it at once into the best-seller class where it remained throughout many months. It is known by the reading public everywhere. Likewise, it met with phenomenal success this winter when it was syndicated to fourteen big city newspapers—bringing its circulation up to several million more.

"The people of the story are on the one hand a group of small town folks and on the other the sophisticated smart set with whom the daughter is thrown when she marries riches. Both classes are absolutely real human beings swayed by impulses and emotions that will be understood by any audience.

"Exhibitors are already familiar with the box-office power of Zona Gale's work. In 'Faint Perfume' she has woven a story of greater popular appeal, deeper in understanding of human nature and richer in character delineation than even its tremendously successful predecessor, 'Miss Lulu Bett.'"

"Its very title makes it particularly attractive and appropriate for summer business. Incidentally, we are working out a far-reaching tie-up with a nationally merchandised perfume that will be a splendid exploitation aid wherever the picture is booked.

"Its cast of players too give 'Faint Perfume' unusual strength. Seena Owen, William Powell, Alyce Mills, Mary Alden, Russell Simpson, Betty Francisco, Philo McCullough, Jacqueline Saunders and others are the featured artists."

Elsie Ferguson in "The Unknown Lover," a Victor Hugo Halperin production for Vitagraph release.

Hunt Stromberg Will Make Special, "The Last Frontier"

"THE LAST FRONTIER," designed by the late Thos. H. Ince as the crowning achievement of his motion picture career, and left unfinished at his death, will be completed by Hunt Stromberg and released through Producers Distributing Corporation.

"The Last Frontier" will be a Hunt Stromberg personally directed special and one of the biggest features on the 1925-26 program of Producers Distributing Corporation.

Preparations are now being made to complete the picture on a most lavish scale of production with the intention of making it the greatest Western subject ever filmed.

The material already filmed consists of the big spectacles and the scenes in which the last of the buffalo herds are seen in a mighty stampede.

None of the dramatic action was recorded by Mr. Ince and therefore in completing the work, Stromberg will not be confronted with any difficulties in the matter of retakes or scene matching.

In taking up the work he will be able to continue the production just as though it had not been interrupted at all.

"The Unchastened Woman" Begun; Theda Bara Starred

PRODUCTION was started this week on Chadwick Pictures Corporation's "The Unchastened Woman," the Louis K. Anspacher Broadway stage success, which provide the vehicle for Theda Bara's return to the screen. James Young, a veteran producer, who is responsible for many noted screen successes, will direct the picture, which is being made by the F. B. O. Studios under the personal supervision of I. E. Chadwick, President of the company. The adaptation of the play was written by Douglas Doty.

"The Unchastened Woman," Louis K. Anspacher's greatest play, which has been included by George P. Baker in his volume, Modern American Plays, was a sensational success at the Thirty-ninth Street Theatre, New York, where it was produced by Oliver Morosco on October 9th, 1915. Emily Stevens, one of America's most prominent actresses, won the most distinguished success of her career in this production.

"The Unchastened Woman" will be produced on a lavish scale, as it is the intention of Chadwick Pictures Corporation that this production will be more spectacular than any of Miss Bara's many former successes. The cast will include many prominent players, including Wyndham Standing, the only player who has been definitely selected to date. The balance of the cast will be announced next week.

Victor McLaglen, athletic British actor who has been given one of the most dominant screen characters yet to be flashed on the silver screen in Poleon Doret, Alaskan trapper and packer, in Frank Lloyd's "Winds of Chance" by Rex Beach, has just signed a five-year contract to play featured parts in First National Pictures. With McLaglen's contract came a horseshoe made of carrots, radishes and parsley, donated by Frank Lloyd and McLaglen's associated players in Hollywood. Anna Q. Nilsson, John McCormick, western representative for First National Pictures; Frank Lloyd and Ben Lyon made the presentation.

George Terwilliger, who has many directorial successes to his credit, is now directing Owen Moore and Constance Bennett in "Married?" This is a Jans picture.

Start on "Half Way Girl"

Hudson Units Starting Sixth Picture in New Locale for First National

With the start during the past week of work on "The Half-Way Girl" at First National's New York Studios, Earl Hudson placed his sixth picture in production since bringing his First National units East last October. Five pictures have been completed.

"I Want My Man" with Milton Sills and Doris Kenyon in the featured roles was the first. "One Way Street" featuring Ben Lyon and Anna Q. Nilsson, was the second. Next came "Chickie" with an all-star cast, headed by Dorothy Mackaill in the title role, and "The Necessary Evil" with Ben Lyon and Viola Dana co-featured. The fifth production was Milton Sills' first starring vehicle, "The Making of O'Malley" which was finished last week. It is now in the cutting room and will be ready for release shortly.

Within the next few weeks Hudson will start the seventh and eighth productions. They will be "The Come-Back" with Milton Sills in the stellar role, and "The Scarlet Saint"—an adaptation of Gerald Beaumont's magazine story, "The Lady Who Played Fidele." Following these will be "The Pace That Thrills" featuring Ben Lyon. It is expected that additional stages which First National is now building, will be completed in time to provide full space for Hudson's summer production program.

Release Date Advanced

Barbara La Marr in "The White Monkey," Goes Out June 7 to Showmen

First National has advanced the release date of "The White Monkey" the Sawyer-Lubin picturization of the celebrated John Galsworthy novel, from July 12th to June 7th, in order that this photoplay, which has aroused wide interest, will reach exhibitors during the summer.

Barbara La Marr is featured in this important production, directed by Phil Rosen and supervised by Arthur H. Sawyer. Others in cast include Flora Le Breton, Thomas Holding, Henry Victor, Charles Emmett Mack, Colin Campbell and Tammany Young.

National Screening Week Will Exploit Merits of "Drusilla"

WHAT promises to be a far reaching campaign to bring a motion picture to the attention of every exhibitor and salesman in the United States will be launched when "Drusilla With a Million," the Associated Arts Corporation—F. B. O. Gold Bond special, will be shown simultaneously during "National Screening Week" to thousands of exhibitors and salesmen in F. B. O.'s thirty-four exchanges for the entire week, commencing May 25, the day after the world premiere of the picture at the Capitol Theatre, New York.

The purposes of F. B. O.'s "National Screening Week" are manifold: First, "Drusilla With a Million" will be seen, it is hoped, by every theatre owner and salesman in the United States; secondly, it will acquaint the film buying world in general with the type of picture which will be marketed by F. B. O. as a "Gold Bond" production; thirdly, "National Screening Week" will act as a huge national exploitation campaign for the production.

The fact that Roxy of New York's Capitol booked "Drusilla" at sight for the huge Broadway playhouse is evidence of its box-office and artistic worth. To "Drusilla" goes the distinction of being the first independent production to be booked into the Capitol Theatre in two years.

F. B. O. is planning a huge advertising and publicity campaign on the production. Nat G. Rothstein, director of publicity, advertising and exploitation at F. B. O., commenting on the advertising and publicity possibilities of the picture said: "'Drusilla With a Million,' based on the famous novel by Elizabeth Cooper, directed by F. Harmon Weight, starring Mary Carr, Priscilla Bonner and Kenneth Harlan, lends itself admirably to advertising and publicity. The fact that 'Drusilla' was a best seller a few years ago and has been read by millions, means that these same millions of readers are waiting to see the film version of the novel."

Carl Laemmle Plans Series of New Two-Reel Westerns

WESTERN pictures with real western heroes will be seen within a few weeks following a new plan started at Universal City by which the most daring of the members of the Universal Ranch Riders, an organization of more than 200 cowboys chosen for their records at rodeos, will be elevated to stardom. The new plan was worked out by Raymond L. Schrock, new general manager at Universal City, in conformity with Carl Laemmle's oft-expressed policy of raising his stars from the ranks of his players.

The new schedule of production featuring the Ranch Riders will be as follows:

A series of two-reel western dramas in which Edmund Cobb, already well known to the screen, will alternate with Freddy Humes, famous broncho rider, with William Crinley directing.

Ten two-reel western comedies from published stories by W. C. Tuttle, Vin Moore directing, in which Tuttle's famous characters, "Dirty Shirt" and "Magpie," will be enacted by Ben ("Smiley") Corbet and "Peewee" Holmes. "Peewee" Holmes is noted for his daring with leaping horses and as a rope trickster, while Corbett has held, since the Pendleton Roundup of 1912, the world championship in bareback Roman riding.

A series of western dramas in which Al Smith, well known in recent western productions at Universal City, and Tommy Grimes, world champion roper, are to be featured.

Another rider to be featured shortly is Art Ortego. Born in the Santa Clara Valley, Ortego attracted the attention of Frank Montgomery when the producer saw him riding a wild bull at Tia Juana at a bull fight, and he was taken to the Bison organization, thus coming to Universal.

The new features will be sueprvised by Isadore Bernstein.

Clarence Brown to Direct

To Clarence Brown comes the honor of directing Rudolph Valentino in first production for United Artists Corporation, according to information given out by Joseph M. Schenck, who recently signed the director for a long-term contract.

The picture, adapted from John Frederick's novel, "The Bronze Collar," bears the working title, "The Slave." The story is being adapted by Benjamin Glazer, with the continuity by Adelaide Heilbron. It is a story of California in the days of Spanish rule.

Nearing Completion

"Camille of the Barbary Coast," a new feature production being directed by Hugh Dierker for release by Associated Exhibitors, is nearing completion at the Cosmopolitan Studios in New York. Mae Busch, playing the feminine lead, finished her scenes this week, and Director Dierker expects to complete his shooting of final scenes within ten days. In addition to Mae Busch, the cast includes Owen Moore, Burr McIntosh and Charles Slattery.

Willard Louis, Eddie Gribbon and Monte Blue do a little posing while making "The Limited Mail" for Warner Brothers.

Alice Calhoun Signs as Featured Warner Player

ALICE CALHOUN, for years a popular screen favorite and featured in many Vitagraph successes, is now enlisted under the Warner Bros. banner. Announcement was made this week of the taking over of her contract by the Warners and her assignment to the Warner stock company

Miss Calhoun will play opposite Syd Chaplin in "The Man on the Box," succeeding June Marlowe, who has been transferred to "The Pleasure Buyers." Thus she is engaged on the production of two features simultaneously, for not only is work on "The Man on the Box" under way, under the direction of Fred Newmeyer, but she has the role of Dora in A. S. M. Hutchinson's "The Happy Warrior," which J. Stuart Blackton is making for Vitagraph.

Virtually the whole of Miss Calhoun's screen career has been with Vitagraph. She shared honors with Cullen Landis in "Pioneer Trails" and "The Midnight Alarm," playing Rose Miller in the former and the waif in the latter. One of her greatest successes was in the current Vitagraph production, "Pampered Youth," David Smith's adaptation of Booth Tarkington's Pulitzer prize winning novel, "The Magnificent Ambersons." In this picture she played for the first time in her career virtually a triple role, appearing first as a young village belle, then as a young mother, and finally as a matron of middle age.

Alice Calhoun's contract with Vitagraph has been taken over by Warner Brothers for a long period. She will be seen opposite Syd Chaplin in "The Man on the Box."

Sam Rork Joins Producers Distributing Corporation

THE newest addition to the aggregation of big independent producers affiliated with Producers Distributing Corporation is Sam Rork, veteran stage and screen producer, and long associated with First National, who will hereafter release through Producers Distributing Corporation.

In announcing Mr. Rork's new association, John C. Flinn, Vice-President and General Manager of Producers Distributing Corporation, states that the 1925-26 program will list at least four Rork productions, one of which will be "Fifth Aveue," in which Lewis Stone will be starred in the role of modern "Beau Brummel." Lewis Stone is under contract with Rork, as is Director Alfred E. Green, who will continue to direct the Rork productions.

"Mr. Rork is a showman as well as a producer," says John C. Flinn, "and this fact has been an important factor in the conspicuous success he has achieved since turning his attention from the stage to motion picture production. He was one of the first contributors to First National with the first five Katherine MacDonald pictures, after which he produced 'The Rosary,' and the new version of 'The Spoilers.' Then came 'Ponjola,' 'Inez From Hollywood,' and 'The Talker' now at the New York Strand, which have all been exceptional attractions."

John Sainpolis Cast

B. P. Schulberg has signed John Sainpolis for one of the principal roles in his new society melodrama, "My Lady's Lips." Sainpolis did outstanding work for the Schulberg producing unit in "The Hero" and "Shadows" and has appeared in many big productions.

A scene in Mack Sennett's "The Lion's Whiskers," a Pathe comedy.

"The Still Alarm"

Famous Old Stage Melodrama to be Filmed By Universal

Edward Laemmle has started work on preparations for the production of "The Still Alarm," Harry Lacy's famous old fire department stage play, which is to be produced shortly at Universal City with Laemmle as director. The scenario has been completed by Charles Kenyon.

"The Still Alarm" was for years one of the reigning successes among the old time melodramas, and was produced on the stage with fire engine effects that in their day were hailed as the last word in stagecraft. In motion pictures these effects will lend themselves to spectacular treatment. Laemmle expects to stage a fire in a reproduction of several city blocks with actual fire apparatus and real firemen for the larger effects. The cast has not yet been selected.

Mrs. Valentino Supervises

Natcha Rambova, in private life Mrs. Rudolph Valentino, is soon to begin the supervision of an independently produced photoplay which bears the title, "What Price Beauty." The cast will feature Nita Naldi in the type of role for which she has become famous. Pierre Gendron, well-known leading man, Dolores Johnson and Paulette Duval will have important roles also. A few others are yet to be announced.

The picture is being made by Circle Films, headed by George S. Ullman, business manager for Rudolph Valentino. No arrangement has as yet been made for the release of the picture.

Select New Title

Associated Exhibitors announces that "Under the Rouge" is the title chosen for the Lewis H. Moomaw production made under the working title of "The Greatest Thing." Eileen Percy of Patheserial fame, and Tom Moore, popular leading man, are the featured players of a cast which includes William V. Mong, Mary Alden, Chester Conklin, James Mason and Claire de Lorez.

Florence Vidor, one of the stars in "Are Parents People?" This Paramount picture was recently completed.

Barbara La Marr's Next

Associated Pictures Acquires Elsie Jerard's Story, "Florrie Meets a Gentleman"

Associated Pictures Corporation announce the securance of "Florrie Meets A Gentleman" an original screen story by Elsie Jean Jerard for Barbara La Marr's next starring vehicle. This will be the fourth Sawyer-Lubin production in the series of Barbara La Marr features they are making for First National release and will set at rest the unfounded reports of a split between these organizations.

Jack Lait, who writes a weekly feature for the King Syndicate and is the author of numerous short stories, vaudeville shows and musical comedies, in addition to his work on Variety, has been engaged to write the continuity for this production, which has its locale along Broadway and is largely concerned with theatrical life in New York.

"Florrie Meets a Gentleman" will appear as a feature story in the November issue of the Pictorial Review which has a circulation of over a million and will be illustrated with scenes from the production. Barbara La Marr will have the support of an excellent cast in this production on which studio work is expected to commence within the next few weeks.

Clara Bow in "Two Gates"

Clara Bow who continues to be in constant demand for important screen work has been loaned by B. P. Schulberg to play the feminine lead in "Two Gates," a special production to be directed by Wallace Worsley. Miss Bow who is under lng term contract to the Schulberg organization will begin work in "Two Gates" as soon as she finishes her current engagement in "My Lady's Lips," now being made by James P. Hogan for B. P. Schulberg Productions.

New Century Comedy

Abe Stern, vice-president of the Century Film Corporation, announces the release of a two-reel Century Comedy this week, featuring Beth Darlington and Arthur Lake. It is "Love Sick." Beth Darlington is one of the most promising of Century's bevy of comediennes. Arthur Lake has become well known through his interpretation of a modern young he-flapper. Charles Lamont directed.

Charlie Chaplin Completes Filming of "The Gold Rush"

THE final scenes of the long-awaited feature comedy, Charlie Chaplin in "The Gold Rush," have been filmed. The Chaplin studio records reveal that the first scenes were filmed February 7, 1924, and the final scenes taken April 16, 1925.

"This is the picture I want to be remembered by," was the only comment Chaplin would make when the last "shot" was made. "Let's call it a picture. We're all tired out, and a couple of months' vacation will be a tonic for a fresh start when I am ready for my next one."

While the actual filming of "The Gold Rush" has been completed, there is still work to be done—the task of cutting and editing, the perfect synchronization of scenes and action. This, the real secret of the Chaplin successes, must be accomplished before the public will get a glimpse of the first comedy which has cost more than a million dollars to produce.

"The Gold Rush" will be released in ten or more reels, and will reveal a biographic symbolization of the real Charlie Chaplin; his life of enterprise from an unknown to a multi-millionaire and most famous screen comedian. This will be portrayed against a background of hardships as one of the gold seekers in the frozen wastes of Alaska during the early days of the Klondyke discoveries.

A new note in comedy dramatics will be sounded in this picture; an advanced departure in character portrayal and delineation; a type even more revolutionary than in Chaplin's "A Woman of Paris."

Apollo Closes With Columbia to Handle Eighteen Pictures

JACK COHN of Columbia Pictures Corporation announces that he has just completed the biggest Independent deal of the season, with the Apollo Exchange, giving these distributors exclusive right to handle Columbia's eighteen productions for the season of 1925-26.

Apollo is located in the same building, 1600 Broadway, New York City, with Columbia Pictures, and Cohn stated that this would greatly aid the exhibitor. This exchange covers the territory embraced by New York City, New York State and Northern New Jersey.

Bobbie North, of the Apollo, who distributed Warner's product last season, announces that he is delighted to hook up with Columbia and handle their output as he has been greatly impressed with the calibre of the pictures which Columbia makes.

Columbia is distributing three different brands of box office attractions, in quotas of six each. They will bear the Columbia, Perfection and Waldorf brands.

A number of stars have proven box office work are already under contract: Elaine Hammerstein, Jane Novak, Pauline Garon, Dorothy Revier, William Fairbanks, as well as a number of character actors of proven ability. The first release the 1925-26 product, "The Danger Signal" is just being completed by Director Earl C. Kenton. Jane Novak is featured.

Lolita Lee, the first of several hundred applicants for admission to the Paramount Pictures School, recently established by Famous Players-Lasky Corporation for the training of screen stars, posing under the supervision of Tom White, Paramount casting director, for her screen test. Miss Lee is a native daughter of California and was the first person to apply for admission in the school.

Film Booking Offices Announce Sixty-four for 1925-26 Season

F. B. O., the bulk of whose productions are made in Hollywood, announces one of the heaviest production schedules for the Fall and Winter season of 1925-26 in the recent annals of the industry.

The new program will embrace 64 features, 12 of which will be Gold Bond special productions, including stories from such nationally famous authors as Gene Stratton-Porter and Laura Jean Libby, with no less than two productions by Emory Johnson.

The Gold Bond specials will consist of "Drusilla With a Million," an Associated Arts Corporation production, based on the famous novel by Elizabeth Cooper and directed by F. Harmon Weight, starring Mary Carr, with Priscilla Bonner and Kenneth Harlan in support.

"Parisian Nights," a Gothic production, is the second picture to come under the head of specials for the 1925-26 season. "Parisian Nights" is a romantic, colorful melodrama of the Paris underworld, and co-stars Elaine Hammerstein and Lou Tellegen, with Renee Adoree prominent in support. It was directed by Alfred Allen Santell.

C. Gardner Sullivan's second independent production for F. B. O. distribution, called "If Marriage Fails?" and featuring Jacqueline Logan, Clive Brook and Jean Hersholt, is also scheduled as a special. "If Marriage Fails?" is an original story by the well known author-scenarist-producer, and concerns the love life of a beautiful girl fortune teller.

"The Keeper of the Bees," the well known novel by the late Gene Stratton-Porter, now running serially in McCall's Magazine, which has been read by over 10,000,000 persons, is the fourth special on F. B. O.'s Fall and Winter schedule. James Leo Meehan, Mrs. Porter's son-in-law, who is thoroughly familiar with the works of his late mother-in-law, and who understood her ideals in literature, will direct "The Keeper of the Bees."

"When His Love Grew Cold," one of the four Laura Jean Libbey stories which F. B. O. purchased from the estate of the late author, is now in course of production on the F. B. O. lot, and will be followed by "A Poor Girl's Romance," an equally famous Libbey romance.

Emory Johnson and his well known mother, Mrs. Emilie Johnson, are preparing the story and continuity of "The Last Edition," the young director-producer's new effort, which will immortalize the profession of journalism. The leading character will be an assistant foreman in the press room of a big metropolitan daily. It is likely that Ralph Lewis will sign to play the leading role, with a group of stars handling the other parts.

"The Isle of Retribution," one of the best sellers of 1923, written by Edison Marshall, will be produced on an unusually lavish scale.

The cast, which calls for two leading ladies and two leading men, one a giant at least six feet six inches in height, is now being assembled by Production Manager B. P. Fineman, and shooting will commence in a few weeks.

Suffice to say that "The Isle of Retribution" is eagerly awaited by the millions of Mr. Marshall's readers, who are movie fans, and anxious to see the film version of their favorite novel flash across the screen.

"Flaming Waters," an original story by E. Lloyd Sheldon, well known scenarist, will be produced as soon as a cast is assembled, according to an announcement by B. P. Fineman, Production Manager of F. B. O. The story is a red-blooded action melodrama, with an unusual climax in the form of a fire in an enormous oil well.

B. P. Fineman contends that "The Midnight Flyer"' will outdo "Westbound Limited," an F. B. O. railroad picture which made box office history, in point of view of thrilling story, prominent stars and brilliant direction. Mr. Fineman is assembling a cast now, and production will start just as soon as the players are selected.

F. B. O. promises exhibitors the greatest race track story ever filmed in the history of the motion picture industry in "The Futurity Winner," production on which will commence on the F. B. O. lot in Hollywood as soon as a cast is assembled.

In addition to the twelve specials, there will be 52 program pictures, embracing the Evelyn Brent series of crook melodramas; the Maurice Flynn series of comedy dramas; the Richard Talmadge series of action comedy melodramas; the Fred Thomson series of Western specials and the Bob Custer series of Western adventure stories.

Two of the country's best known and most popular humorous writers will contribute of their genius to make three new series of F. B. O. short reel subjects, production of which will begin immediately. Sam Hellman has been signed by F. B. O. for a series of stories starring Alberta Vaughn and Larry Kent, which will appear serially in the Saturday Evening Post. H. C. Witwer will screen his latest series of Cosmopolitan stories for a new series, and will write another series especially for F. B. O.

Divorcing college athletics from their academic background, and making athletic prowess serve as a means for extricating his hero from ticklish situations is part of Mr. Hellman's idea for the new series, tentatively titled "Push and Pep." The subject matter of the new H. C. Witwer series has not yet been titled.

The Bray Studios will contribute 26 cartoons to the imposing list of short subjects.

F. B. O. Special Booked by Capitol

THE distinction of being the first independent production to be booked by the Capitol Theatre, New York in two years, goes to "Drusilla with a Million," an Associated Arts Corporation F. B. O. Gold Bond special, which will open in the Broadway house on Sunday, May 24.

"Drusilla with a Million" is based on the famous novel by Elizabeth Cooper, and centers around an old lady inmate of a charity home and the unique manner in which she disposes of a million dollar legacy which is left her, and the happiness which she brings into the lives of a young husband and wife.

Mary Carr, Priscilla Bonner and Kenneth Harlan are featured with Henry Barrows, Claire Du Brey and William Humphreys prominent in support. The production was directed by F. Harmon Weight from the scenario by Lois Zellner. The entire production was supervised by Ludwig G. B. Erb, one of the officating heads of Associated Arts Corporation.

Blanche Mehaffey, the charming leading lady in current Hal Roach comedies for Pathe release.

"Manhattan Madness"

Camera Work Completed on the Associated Exhibitors' Special

With the completion of camera activity on the West Coast for the Associated Exhibitors —Fine Arts production "Manhattan Madness," which co-stars Jack Dempsey and his wife, Estelle Taylor, the champion, accompanied by director John McDermott and other players of his company shifted to New York City where the final scenes for the production were filmed.

The Dempsey picture is now being cut and titled, and it is expected that the film will be made ready for presentation within another month.

"Manhattan Madness" is based on an original script written by Charles T. and Frank Dazey, and was filmed under the personal supervision of Oscar Price. Bull Montana, Frank Campeau, Nelson McDowell, George Seigman, Bill Franey Theodore Lorch, Tom O'Brien, Ed Kennedy, Glenn Cavender, Jack Derry, Dean Markham, and Buddy Mason are in the cast.

Ed. Hurley Promoted

Transferred from Pathe to Important Post With Associated Exhibitors

The Associated Exhibitors announce this week that Ed. Hurley, who handled trade and newspaper publicity for Pathe for the last year, has been transferred to the home office staff of the Associated Exhibitors.

Mr. Hurley will oversee production costs of the various units producing for Associated Exhibitors, supervise studio publicity and act as editor of the newly created Associated Exhibitors house organ, "The Associated Exhibitors News."

Mr. Hurley is one of the pioneers of the motion picture industry. He started twelve years ago with Essanay. Since that time he has been actively identified with the leading producers and distributors of films.

Prior to his going with Pathe he was associated with Nat Rothstein at F. B. O., having direct charge of the advance campaign on Mrs. Wallace Reid's production, "Human Wreckage."

Pathe Program for May 24 Offers Fine Entertainment

PROMINENT on the list of Pathe releases for the week of May 24 are two Hal Roach comedies, both directed by Fred L. Guiol under the supervision of F. Richard Jones, and the third chapter of "Sunken Silver," the mystery serial of the Florida Everglades, which offers Allene Ray and Walter Miller in the featured roles.

In the two-reel comedy, "Tell It to a Policeman," Hal Roach presents the popular comedian, Glenn Tryon. Supporting the star are Blanche Mehaffey, James Finlayson, Olive Borden, Jack Gavin, and four regiments of "policemen."

"Sure-Mike!" is the one-reel Hal Roach presentation of the week and depicts the hilarious romance of a department store sales girl. Martha Sleeper leads in the funmaking, and aiding her are James Finlayson, Marjorie Whiteis, William Gillespie and Jules Mendel.

Chapter No. 3 of "Sunken Silver" is entitled "The Hidden Ray," and continues the fast action, mystery and suspense of the opening episodes of this Pathe serial adapted by Frank Leon Smith from Albert Payson Terhune's story, "Black Caesar's Clan." Allene Ray is adding to her fame as a serial star in this George B. Seitz production, and Walter Miller appears to advantage in the leading male role.

Pathe Review No. 21 offers a trio of entertaining subjects: "The Last of the Hawaiians," showing some survivors of the race of the Sandwich Islanders; "Jacksonville, the Gateway City," one of the "Visiting Our Own America" series in Pathecolor, and "The Highland Bride," first of an informative series of "Quaint Marriage Customs of All Nations."

"Echoes from the Alps" is the current Aesop's Film Fables cartoon comic. Completing the list are "Topics of the Day" and Pathe News Nos. 44 and 45.

Will Direct "Are You a Mason?"

Edward Sutherland, the Paramount director who has just completed "The Wild, Wild Girl," starring Bebe Daniels, his second picture as a director has gone to the West Coast studios to prepare for his third Paramount production.

This will be a new screen version of the well known stage comedy, "Are You a Mason?" starring Raymond Griffith, popular silk hat comedian. As both the director and star of this picture are graduates of the Mack Sennett studio an extremely good comedy is anticipated by the Paramount officials.

Astor Planning Big Production for the Independent Market

$480,000 advertising campaign for independent productions.

16,340,000 readers monthly in huge publicity tie-up.

Greatest co-operative publicity campaign ever arranged for exploitation of independent productions.

Astor Distributing Corporation and Macfadden Publications, with millions of readers, allied in field of independent picture-making.

Stories on which productions are based will be published in installments and as novelettes in Macfadden magazines and newspaper.

Twelve Astor "Gold Medal" productions and one Astor "Aristocrat" Special for season of 1925-26.

The burning national question which startled America and is bringing pages of publicity in newspapers—child wives—will be theme of the big special.

Harry Rathner, after fourteen successful years in marketing and exhibiting productions now becomes distributor. Has implicit faith in supremacy of independents.

Independent market to get all product.

Ramon Novarro one star.

THESE were some of the high-lights of an announcement made by Harry Rathner, president of the Astor Distributing Corporation in his offices, 1005-8 Loew State Building, New York. An entirely new distributor of picture productions and one whose advertising and exploitation will be dedicated to the purpose of building up the business of the independents.

"Our plan of distribution and production has been carefully worked out after months of study and with the benefit of practical advice and long experience," said Mr. Rathner.

"A number of productions already are scheduled, and as our plans progress further we will keep buyers and exhibitors fully advised through advertising in the trade papers and at the same time we will have under way simultaneously the biggest national tie-up for publicity ever worked out for independent productions.

"The Macfadden Publications offer without doubt the greatest means of publicity of any similar group of magazines. In organizing the Astor Distributing Corporation it was our aim to get our publicity through magazines which would be read by the many rather than a class. We considered many mediums before closing a contract with the Macfadden Publications. We were determined not to place publicity in magazines which lie around doctors' offices or barber shops; we wanted widely read magazines, and we have them in the Macfadden Publications. These magazines include "Movie Weekly," "Dream World," "Dance Lovers," "Physical Culture," "True Story," "Modern Marriage," "True Detective," "Sportlife," "True Romance," "Fiction-Lovers," "Your Car," and "Muscle Builder."

"What this tie-up means to independent exchanges and state-right men is to be seen in the statement of Bernarr Macfadden that each magazine is read by approximately two and one-half persons, with a total reading public of 16,340,000 persons.

"Each story from which a picture is produced will be written in installments or as a novelette and be printed in one of the Macfadden magazines.

"The Macfadden magazines have a circulation of more than 5,000,000 copies. But magazine publishers and advertisers long have known that each magazine often has as many as five readers before it is worn out or discarded. We have, to be conservative, figured three readers to each magazine, thus giving a reading-public of more than 15,000,000 persons.

HARRY RATHNER
President of the Astor Distributing Corporation, in the Loew State Theatre Building, New York City.

"In addition to the Macfadden magazines as publicity mediums, we will have the Graphic, the Macfadden tabloid newspaper in New York. This has an estimated reading public of approximately 300,000. These daily 300,000 are the New York people who go to the theatres, the vast public in search of amusement.

"Our first Astor 'Aristocrat' will be on a theme which startled the whole country, namely child wives. This is a subject which has been getting big newspaper space, in some cases whole pages, throughout the country.

"One of our first 'Gold Medal' productions to be released will be Ramon Novarro in 'A Lover's Oath.' This is a Ferdinand Pinney Earle production. Playing opposite Novarro is the talented Kathleen Key, and the production was edited by Milton Sills. These are the stars in "Ben Hur."

"The Shining Adventure," from the novel by Dana Burnett, produced by Madeline Brandeis and directed by Hugo Ballin, stars Percy Marmont, of "If Winter Comes" fame, and Mabel Ballin. Ben Alexander plays an important part in 'The Shining Adventure.'

"The story for the child wives production was written by Garrett Fort, the prominent young scenarist who has just been placed under contract by Cecil B. De Mille. The script was worked out in collaboration with Major Maurice Campbell, who also will personally direct it.

"The first picture will be in the hands of exchanges by June 15 and thereafter will be available on a regular schedule. Stories are being selected for other productions.

Capt. Nungesser, French flying ace who downed more than a hundred German planes during the war, took Bebe Daniels for a ride over New York in his aeroplane. Miss Daniels and the Captain taxied about at a height of 3,000 feet, swooping down at intervals to seek locations for her latest Paramount picture, "That Wild, Wild Girl," which is laid in New York.

Inspiration Signs Dorothy Gish

Walter Camp, Jr., president of Inspiration Pictures, Inc., announces that Dorothy Gish has been signed under a long term starring contract. Mr. Camp announces that Miss Gish's first appearance under her new contract will be opposite Mr. Barthelmess in his next production, "The Beautiful City," written expressly for the screen by Edmund Goulding. Following her appearance in this production Miss Gish will be presented in her own productions.

F. B. O. Holds Rousing Sales Meet in Chicago; Big Program for 1925-6

THE third annual sales convention of Film Booking Offices of America, Inc. was held at the Drake Hotel, Chicago, on May 9 and 10. Harry M. Berman, general sales manager of F. B. O. presided, both over the official meeting, and at the dinner which was held on the evening of May 10, when the business of the convention was concluded.

The program for the season of 1925-26, as well as F. B. O.'s ambitious plans for coming years, was announced at the sessions by Vice-President Schnitzer. Extreme optimism and enthusiasm characterized the conference, at which plans for selling and advertising F. B. O.'s 1925-26 program of 64 features and 76 short subjects, including 12 Gold Bond special productions, a series of Fred Thomson super-western productions, a series of 8 Evelyn Brent crook melodramas, a series of 8 Richard Talmadge stunt comedy dramas, 8 Maurice Flynn productions, 8 Bob Custer Westerns and 8 Westerns starring "surprise" western star, and the 76 short subjects including 12 two-reel H. C. Witwer comedies, 12 two-reel Sam Hellman comedies, 26 two-reel comedies, details of which will be announced shortly, and 26 one-reel Bray cartoons, were discussed in detail by Sales Manager Berman and Advertising Director Rothstein.

Division and branch managers and salesmen reported that during the past year F. B. O. has built up much good will among exhibitors through a consistent output of box-office successes.

Mr. Berman discussed in detail each of the "Gold-Bond" specials which will be made this year. Vice-President Schnitzer announced that Fred Thomson, prominent western star, this week signed a new contract with F. B. O.

Sales and advertising policies covering "The Last Edition," Emory Johnson's new effort, which will immortalize the profession of journalism, were discussed at the sesions, as well as the Laura Jean Libbey and Gene Stratton-Porter stories which were recently purchased from the estates of the late authors.

The huge advertising campaigns which are being launched by F. B. O. in the Saturday Evening Post and McCall's Magazine on "Drusilla With a Million" and "The Keeper of the Bees" were outlined in detail by Mr. Rothstein.

The following district and branch managers were in attendance: E. J. Smith, Division Manager, Buffalo, New York; C. E. Penrod, Division Manager, Indianapolis, Indiana; E. J. Weisfeldt, Division Manager, Minneapolis, Minn.; Cleve Adams, Division Manager, Chicago, Ill.; and A. A. Schmidt, Division Manager, Los Angeles, California. The branch managers who will attend are: Herman Stern, Albany, New York; F. L. Davie, Atlanta, Georgia; I. L. Wallenstein, Boston, Mass.; H. T. Dixon. Buffalo, New York; William Conn, Charlotte, N. C.; J. J. Sampson, Chicago, Ill.; E. M. Booth, Cincinnati, Ohio; Lou Geiger, Cleveland, Ohio; L. E. Harrington, Dallas, Texas; S. D. Weisbaum, Denver, Color.; F. W Young, Des Moines, Iowa; A M. Elliott, Detroit, Michigan; H. H. Hull, Indianapolis, Ind.; C. B. Ellis, Jacksonville, Fla.; R. E. Churchill, Kansas City, Mo.; H. C. Cohen, Los Angeles, Calif; J. L. Franconi, Memphis, Tenn.; S. H. Abrams, Milwaukee, Wis; Eph Rosen, Minneapolis; Harold Eskin, New Haven, Conn.; Paul H. Tessier, New Orleans, La.; Charles Rosenzweig, New York City; Sam Benjamin, Oklahoma City, Okla.; S. W. Fitch, Omaha, Nebr.; Jerome Safron, Philadelphia, Pa.; A. H. Schnitzer, Pittsburgh, Pa.; W. E. Matthews, Portland, Ore.; S. J. Goldman, San Francisco, Cal.; Tom McKean, St. Louis, Mo.; A. H. Huot, Seattle, Washington; A. Davis Salt Lake City, Utah; H. N. Weinberg, Sious Falls, S. Dak.

At the close of the F. B. O. convention, Vice-president Schnitzer, Sales Manager Berman, Charles Rosenzweig, manager of the New York Exchange, and Lee Marcus and Al Boasberg of the Sales Promotion Department, went to Milwaukee to attend the convention.

First National Sales Force Pushing "Summer" Attractions

THE FIRST NATIONAL sales force, acting under the instructions of General Manager of Distribution E. A. Eschmann, is at the present time concentrating its efforts to obtain the greatest volume of summer business in the history of the organization.

This drive has taken the form of an advance summer booking campaign on the Leader group of pictures now available and at the present moment in the course of making. Eight weeks are being devoted to this drive, with the stimulus of prizes to the managers and salesmen of the three branches writing the most business which shall subsequently be actually played, in order to clear the decks for rapid and concerted selling of the new season's product when the summer actually sets in.

The drive for summer booking dates will end on May 30th. All business obtained during the drive must be played within the months of June, July and August in order to be counted to the credit of the branch writing the business.

All of First National's branches are now devoting enthusiastic attention and energy to getting contracts for Leader pictures in towns still unsold, and subsequent runs in the larger cities, all contracts to mature by August 30th. Their ammunition consists of a line-up of pictures which, in merit and proved box-office drawing power, have not been surpassed in the history of the company. Included in the list of productions are the specials, "Abraham Lincoln," "Secrets," "The Lady" and "Quo Vadis," and such Leader group pictures of outstanding merit as "Sally," "Chickie," "Declasse," "His Supreme Moment," "Soul-Fire," "The Talker," Milton Sills' first stellar production, "The Making of O'Malley," Colleen Moore in "The Desert Flower," Corinne Griffith in 'The Marriage Whirl," Barbara La Marr in Galsworthy's "The White Monkey" and many others.

When the summer-date drive on these productions is over, the sales force will be ready to concentrate its activities on contracts for "The Lost World" and "The Sea Hawk," two of the outstanding specials in the history of motion pictures, (the latter of which has been withdrawn from the market during the summer but will again be available in September,) and the first of the Winner group of pictures for the new season opening on September 1st, 1925.

Mr. Eschmann expects his sales force to hang up a championship belt for quick sales and a big number of early contracts on the Winner pictures, because of the quality of story material which First National has purchased and the ability of directors and players thus far assigned to them.

"Friendly Enemies" Big Hit In New York City Premiere

"FRIENDLY ENEMIES," starring Weber and Fields, is now in the second week of its Broadway run at B. S. Moss' Colony Theatre, where it passed the test of critical and public approval with flying colors. And a comprehensive idea of the opinion of the New York newspaper critics may be obtained from the following excerpts:

"Fashions may change and people may age and pass on, but Joe Weber and Lew Fields are still holding their own. Their names in electric lights are once again adding to the brightness of the Great White Way. Mr. Fields as the old native German, delivers a memorable performance in this picture."—New York Times.

"It is pleasant to see Weber and Fields transferring their famous antics from stage to screen. The picture deserves credit for being a sympathetic presentation of an emotional crisis."—Herald-Tribune.

"'Friendly Enemies' impersonated by those rare artists Weber and Fields' merges from hilarious comedy to tearful comedy with an ease that starts you laughing while you wipe away a tear.—It is corking entertainment."—N. Y. Mirror.

"Weber and Fields are just as poignantly appealing on the screen as they have been for many years on the stage. All day long they swayed crowded houses through the whole gamut of emotions from profound pathos to hilarious comedy."—Evening Journal.

"Weber and Fields on the screen are a success. It is the kind of entertainment that makes you feel that you have been something important. The supporting cast is exceptionally good."—Morning Telegraph.

"The performance of this pair will come with all the force of a revelation to the younger set. Weber and Fields couldn't help being funny if they were dressed as angels."—Telegram-Mail.

"Friendly Enemies" is a credit to the producers who made it and a reason why the Colony should make money this week."—N. Y. American.

"Here is a picture we can embrace enthusiastically. Weber and Fields are wonderful movie actors."—Daily News.

"Seldom have we such good advice to give as visit the Colony and see 'Friendly Enemies.' It will make you feel so good that you'll be apt to make friends of your enemies."—Evening Graphic.

With this enthusiastic start this Producers Distributing Corporation release bids fair to rival "Charley's Aunt" as a box office attraction.

Julian Eltinge, delineator of the fair sex, signed by Al Christie to be starred in a feature comedy through Producers Distributing Corporation.

Prince of Wales in Africa, In International Newsreel

WHAT the Prince of Wales is seeing on his trip to West Africa is most vividly portrayed in the second installment of motion pictures received exclusively by International Newsreel, and released this week through Universal Exchanges in International News No. 40.

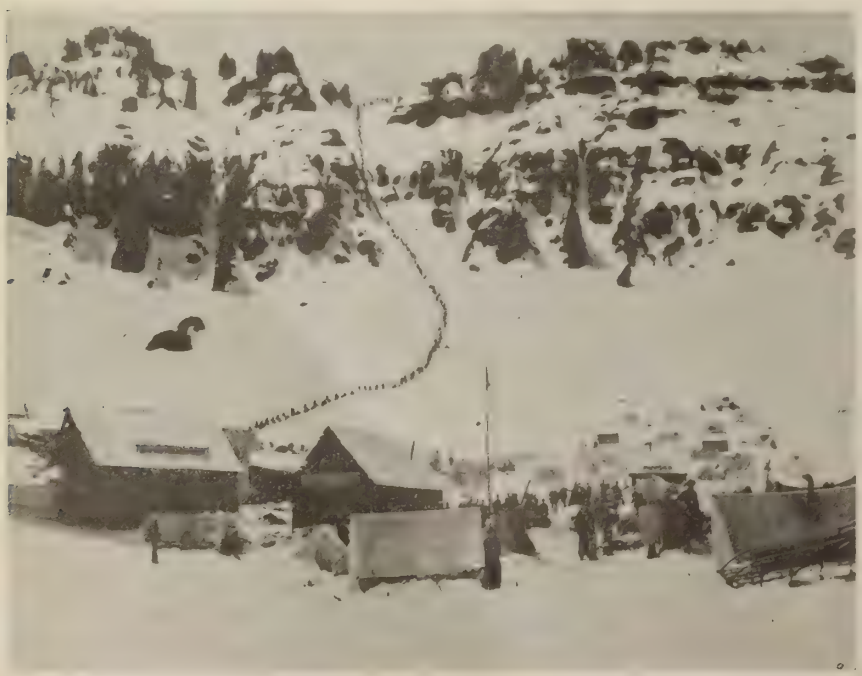
Misguided and misinformed Americans have always boasted of the fact that modern jazz was distinctly and exclusively an American institution. The Prince of Wales thought so, too, until he saw West Africa's classiest dancers of both sexes strut before him. What the dusky belles lack in costume, they more than make up in the enthusiasm and wild abandon with which they whirl through these century-old jungle steps.

In the pictures of these dances one can almost hear the uncanny strains of the music; and the fact that it is unquestionably the forerunner of our modern jazz is evidenced by the amazing contortions of the participants.

What the Prince of Wales thinks of the wild antics of these semi-barbarians whom he will some day govern, is indicated by his highly amused expression. Not since the days of "Little Egypt" have such sensational dances been staged.

In addition to the dances, there are many other remarkable scenes attendant upon the visit of the Prince to West Africa, particularly in connection with the exercises in his honor at Sierra Leone.

The war in Morocco is also vividly pictured in the current issue of International Newsreel. Desert Sheiks, with their hordes in picturesque dress, give amazing exhibitions of "rough-riding"; while Marshall Lyautey's defense of Fez is shown for the first time.



The endless chain of gold seekers, crossing Chilcoot Pass, in Charlie Chaplin's, "The Gold Rush," for United Artists.

New Plaster Department

Another department has been added to the technical department at the Hollywood studios, according to an announcement from William Sistrom, general manager.

"A new plaster department now graces the studios at Las Palmas and Santa Monica Boulevard, and those employed therein are literally 'up to their necks' in work, making the ornamental designs necessary for 'Without Mercy' and 'Seven Days,' which will soon go into production, as well as for the productions which will emanate from Hunt Stromberg, Renaud Hoffman, Harold Lloyd, Metropolitan and Sebastian companies, which occupy offices at this studio."

"Crackerjack" Preview Holds Surprise for Johnny Hines

BEFORE an invited audience of 1,200, which consisted of prominent film executives, exhibitors, exchangemen and film in general at the Hotel Plaza, New York City on Friday evening May 8th, Johnny Hines at the completion of the premiere of his latest C. C. Burr production, "The Crackerjack," was called to the stage by Edmund Breese, who, on behalf of the management of the Gotham Theatre, New York City, presented the comedy star with a silver placque as a token of appreciation for his help as master of ceremonies at the reopening of the Gotham Theatre recently.

The inscription engraved on the placque reads as follows:

To JOHNNY HINES

As a token of appreciation for his cooperation and help as Master of Ceremonies on the occasion of the Star Carnival at the re-opening of the Gotham Theatre, Broadway and 138th Street, New York City.

"A friend in need is a friend indeed."

Harmon Yaffa
Edward Freidberger
Sam Bock

The presentation came as a complete surprise to Hines, who when called to accept the gift received a tumultous reception from the entire assemblage. The enthusiasm which greeted the star gave visible proof of the popularity that the new First National star enjoys.

Hines delivered a short address that was full of witticisms, and expressed his thanks and appreciation to the Gotham Theatre management for what he termed modestly was more a pleasurable evening to him than a task.

The sentiment behind the placque, however, was such as to be commended and the unique tribute to Johnny Hines is in keeping with the high regard that exhibitors throughout the country hold for this C. C. Burr star. Johnny has repeatedly gone out of his way to accomodate the various entities of the film business, and the fact that his services are in continual demand attests the winning personality the star possesses.

The feature of the evening, aside from the gift of the placque, was the presentation of "The Crackerjack," the last picture Johnny Hines is to make or the State-Right market.

If the spontaneous laughter of the large audience which greeted the production is any criterion, then Johnny Hines has wound up his independent production career in a blaze of glory. The host of complimetary remarks showered upon both Hines and Burr was a source of gratification to this producer-star combinatin, which has fought its way to the top over a period of five years of consistently good product. The well wishers included many executives, not only of First National Pictures, with which organization the future Johnny Hines features are to be released, but from executives of practically every other big and small company, who stated that in "The Crackerjack," Johnny Hines has made one of the outstanding comedy successes of the year.

The calibre of "The Crackerjack" is evidenced by the fact that immediately after the premiere at the Hotel Plaza, the Mark-Strand Theatre thought so well of the picture that it was booked into the theatre beginning next Sunday, May 17th.

Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks, United Artists' stars, whose forthcoming productions take them back to the type of roles that made them famous.

Weiss Ready to Start New Season With New Western Series

LOUIS WEISS, managing executive of Weiss Brothers' Artclass Pictures Corporation, announces that the first print of "Tearing Loose" has arrived in New York and is now ready for release.

With this arrival this company is ready to start off its second year with three series of fast moving Westerns. There will be eight in each series.

One series will feature Buffalo Bill, Jr., the second will be headed by Buddy Roosevelt and the third will star Wally Wales.

The great success of the Westerns made by Buffalo Bill, Jr., and Buddy Roosevelt during the past year in those theatres whose patrons demand fast moving action pictures has been responsible for Weiss Brothers' adding this third series to their list.

Their move in this direction has been fully justified in the response made by the many franchise holders of last year's series. There has been no difficulty whatsoever in closing all territories particularly since the public taste has made a distinct move toward this type of picture.

Another angle on the popularity of last year's series was found in the unusual type of stories used in the productions and the greater variety of sets which appeared in the picture. It is somewhat unusual to find rich interiors and a social atmosphere in a Western but just as the cowboy has become a tractable person from the original frontier type, just so have Western pictures made the same change. The old type of two-gun man is no more and the Western in which gun play makes the action interest has also passed. The public demands something different and it is just this difference that Lester F. Scott, Jr., the producer of these pictures has succeeded in introducing.

"Drusilla With a Million," an F. B. O. Gold Bond Special, goes into the New York Cap itol on Sunday, May 14.

First National Buys New Plays and Stories for Early Production

AMONG recent purchases of story material by First National Pictures are the following:

"We Moderns," from Israel Zangwill's new play, which will serve Colleen Moore as a starring vehicle immediately upon her return from a two or three months' vacation in Europe with her husband, John McCormick, Western representative for First National.

"The Dangerous Mrs. Denham," from an unpublished play by Violet Elsie Powell, for production by M. C. Levee.

"Florrie Finds A Gentleman," from a short story written by Elise Jean Gerard, to be published in a forthcoming issue of the Pictorial Review. Sawyer-Lubin will feature Barbara La Marr in a production based upon this story.

"The Sea Woman," by Willard Robinson, which Edwin Carewe will produce.

"The Scarlet Saint," from a short story by Gerald Beaumont. First National will feature Mary Astor in it.

"The Savage," by Ernest Pascal. This will be an Earl Hudson production.

"The Just Steward," by Richard Dehan.

"Puppets," the play by Frances Lighter recently rechristened by its producer, Brock Pemberton, "The Knife in the Wall."

"The Tidal Wave," by Hutcheson Boyd.

"Hat of Destiny," by Mrs. P. T. O'Connor.

"Isles of Romance," by Richard Connell who has recently sprung into great prominence through his vigorous short stories.

Three Legitimate Stage Stars In "Lovers' Island"

HOPE HAMPTON, James Kirkwood and Louis Wolheim, all of whom have attracted attention in Broadway legitimate productions this season, are seen in leading roles in "Lovers' Island," now in production under the direction of Henri Berger for release through Associated Exhibitors.

Hope Hampton proved to her public that a screen star may also possess an excellent singing voice by qualifying for the leading role in "Madame Pompadour" and subsequently receiving high praise from the critics when the operetta opened its season out of town. Miss Hampton is expected to return to the speaking stage this Fall.

James Kirkwood, who distinguished himself on the stage in "The Fool" and is a veteran screen star, is now appearing in New York in David Belasco's production, "Ladies of the Evening," at the Lyceum.

Louis Wolheim, who thrilled Broadway audiences by his performance in "The Hairy Ape" as well as presenting some of the best villainy on the screen, is now essaying the leading role in "What Price Glory?", one of the most talked of plays this season.

Another member of the "Lovers' Island" cast now doubling on the stage and screen is Douglas Gilmore, who appears nightly in the New York company of "White Cargo," another "best seller" on Broadway. In addition to those named, others in the cast of this Associated Exhibitors' feature are Flora Finch and Ivan Linow.

"Lovers' Island" is a screen adaptation of a Smart Set magazine story.

Helene Chadwick and Clive Brook in Warner Bros. "The Woman Hater."

Bessie Love, featured First National player, who is seen opposite Richard Barthelmess in "Soul Fire."

Torrence Contract Renewed

Ernest Torrence's contract with Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has been renewed for a long term, it has been announced by Jesse L. Lasky. Mr. Lasky made signing occasion for an unusual tribute to the famous character actor, who leaped into screen prominence with his sensational portrayal of pioneer scout in "Covered Wagon," which James Cruze made for Paramount. "Our contract with Mr. Torrence was soon to expire," said Mr. Lasky. "Because of his superb ability, as well as his splendid qualities as a man, it afforded us sincere pleasure to complete arrangements to keep him with Famous Players-Lasky Corporation."

Signs for New Product

Louis L. Mayer, Eastern representative for H. T. Henderson, of Los Angeles, signed a contract with Joseph Klein of the Chesterfield Motion Pictures Corporation of New York for a series of six pictures featuring Eileen Sedgwick. The first release, "The Web," has already been delivered to Mr. Klein. They will be released in the State Right market. Mr. Mayer, who is also Eastern representative for the Sierra Pictures, Inc., of Hollywood, has signed a contract with Klein for a series of six Westerns featuring Bill Patton.

Chet Withey to Direct

Warner Bros. have signed Chet Withey to direct "The Pleasure Buyers," an adaptation of Arthur Somers Roche's well known novel, in which Irene Rich is to be starred. Withey has a long list of popular successes to his credit, among the latest being "A Cafe in Cairo,' with Priscilla Dean, which had its premiere in March last. Besides being a director of wide reputation he is author of a large number of photoplays.

Completing "Love Gamble"

Henry Ginsberg has received word from the coast studios of Banner Productions that the first production, "The Love Gamble," will be completed about May 20. Lillian Rich, who plays the feminine lead in this elaborate picturization of Maysie Greig's novel, has a very strong part. Edward Lesaint directed the picture and the continuity is by Harry O. Hoyt.

Scenes from chapter two of the newest of Patheserials entitled "Sunken Silver," which features Walter Miller and Allene Ray. "Sunken Silver" is a mystery story of the Florida Everglades and was adapted by Frank Leon Smith from the novel, "Black Caesar's Clan." George B. Seitz directed. The initial episode was released May 10.

Abramson's "Lying Wives" Got Big Reception by Independents

THE latest cinema of the pioneer author-director-producer, Ivan Abramson called "Lying Wives," has been accorded one of the most enthusiastic receptions of the year by the leading independent exchangemen throughout the country. In the cast of "Lying Wives" is Clara Kimball Young, Madge Kennedy, Richard Bennett, Edna Murphy, Niles Welch and J. Barney Sherry.

"Lying Wives" is the first of the four Ivan Emerald Productions to be produced by Ivan Players, Inc., of which Ivan Abramson is president. All these productions will be offered singly on its individual merits. They will not be sold as a series.

Rapid strides have been made in closing territories for "Lying Wives." Bobby North, president of the Apollo Film Exchange, has closed a deal by which he acquired the distribution rights for Greater New York and Northern New Jersey. This is the first independent production he has purchased since he acquired the Warner Bros. product.

The Golden Distributing Corporation of Boston, Mass., has acquired the rights for the New England States. Other deals which have been pending have been closed during the Milwaukee Convention through the efforts of Mr. Abramson and the salesmanager, Ira H. Simmons, and the territories and the respective exchanges will be announced next week.

"A Son of His Father" Cast

With the addition of Raymond Hatton, Walter McGrail and James Farley to the cast of "A Son of His Father," as announced by Paramount all the important roles in this productin are filled; Warner Baxter and Bessie Love having been previusly signed.

"A Son of His Father" is the latest Harold Bell Wright nvel, and will be produced for Paramount by Victor Fleming with the above mentioned cast. The romance is based on the operations of a band of gamblers and smugglers overrunning the southern part of Arizona.

Directs "The Danger Signal"

Columbia Pictures Corporation is now 'shooting' the first of their eighteen big 1925-26 productions, "The Danger Signal," with Earle C. Kenton as the man behind the megaphone, and Jane Novak heading a large cast of favorites: Robert Gordon, Dorothy Revier, Pat Harmon, Lincoln Stedman, Gaston Glass and Gertrude Short, featured players with established audience appeal. "The Danger Signal" is adapted from a popular novel and will be ready for release by the middle of the summer.

Doug to Be a Pirate

Scenario Writers Turning Out Rollicking Story of the Sea

Douglas Fairbanks, according to present plans, is about to become a pirate bold. Now that "Don Q, Son of Zorro," is off his chest, so to speak, he is horn-piping about his studio, cutting capers with corsairs, buccaneers, swashbucklers and what not.

With a corps of scenario writers collaborating Fairbanks is devising a story that will savor of the sea and breathe all of the wild, rollicking spirit of the heyday of piracy.

Plans now are to fix the period of the forthcoming photoplay at about the time when the Phoenicians held sway. The picture will be called "The Black Pirate" and will be entirely in color, providing experiments now being considered by Henry Sharp, the Fairbanks cameraman, work out satisfactorily.

"The Love Gamble"

According to Sam Briskin, supervising producer of "The Love Gamble," first of the Banner Productions for the coming season, the production will be the most ambitious effort of his company.

The Maysie Greig novel, from which the adaptation was made by Harry O. Hoyt, is exceptionally well done and with the distinguished cast of stars and players it is expected to prove an unusual production.

The featured players are Lillian Rich, Robert Frazer, Pauline Garon and Arthur Rankin, with a supporting cast consisting of James Marcus, Kathleen Clifford, Brooks Benedict and Bonnie Hill. Edward Lesaint is directing for Ben Verschleiser, the producer.

Scenes from the Hunt Stromberg production, "The Crimson Runer," starring Priscilla Dean, for release by Producers Distributing Corporation. Ward Crane and Alan Hale have prominent roles

$1 for Your Time

Many exhibitors tell us that Moving Picture World Guide to Releases is the most accurate available to them. We know it is the most complete in that it is the only chart containing names of stars, type of picture, and all necessary information to the exhibitor.

We want it to be absolutely accurate—Moving Picture World recognizes the importance of accurate footage information, etc.

If you notice an error in FEATURE footage, or any other major error, we will pay you $1 for the effort on your part of writing us a letter telling us the correct facts.

In many territories local censorship cuts alter the footage to a minor extent. Don't write to tell us of these unimportant variations. But in any case where you feel that our figures will work a real hardship on the exhibitor following them—shoot us the word and we will shoot the dollar for your trouble.

Moving Picture World is willing to back up its complete confidence in the accuracy of its chart with its money.

We can't do more. No one else does as much. We thank you.

PROJECTION

EDITED BY F. H. RICHARDSON

A Hard Struggle

Comes a long letter from a Pennsylvania village. It is an "American Legion" paper, signed by the Post Adjutant and Acting Manager. I am going to print it because I know you will all be intensely interested in reading of how men are putting up a real fight to keep motion pictures within reach of themselves and their village and farmer communities. I shall withhold the location, because possibly its publication might prove embarrassing. The letter reads:

I expect you don't have time to bother with a little, one-horse outfit such as we are, but if you could help us out a wee bit you would earn our undying gratitude. However, if you are busy with worth-while concerns, just toss this into the waste paper basket and I'll understand.

The Post owns and operates the motion picture theatre in this small town of some 500 humans. We purchased it a year and a half ago, from a local amusement company composed of business men who could not make it pay because of heavy taxation. The idea was that since the Legion was exempt from most taxation we could "get by" with it. Though we did not make anything, still things went pretty well up until last fall. For light we used 110 volt D. C. from a 72 ampere generator, run by a tractor engine. Using a rheostat this gave us such a good projection light that it was noted for miles around. Our tractor power cost us $2.50 per night, however, which was quite an expense.

Power Supply

Last fall the town was supplied with 110 volt A. C. from a distant power station. We wished to take advantage of this cheaper power, and the man who had supplied the tractor power did not wish to do so lnger. We tried a Mazda bulb, with an adaptor, such as I had seen advertised in the World, only this was an old one. We use a 1,000 watt, 110 volt bulbs, which gave results so inferior to the arc that complaints came in promptly. Later we purchased a new Bell and Howell Inductor, and are now using A. C. at the arc—sixty amperes—with Columbia White A. C. Special carbons, size 5/8 inch.

Conditions

This works pretty well on "thin" scenes, but on most films we get now-a-days the density is such that the light is not nearly powerful enough to equal the results we got with 35 amperes, D. C., using half inch positive and (I think) 5/16 negative carbons.

The projector is an old Power Six—quite old enough to be junked, but it still does pretty good work and we cannot afford a new one. We renewed the intermittent recently. Seldom injure any film which is in decent condition, though some we receive could not possibly go through any projector.

At first we hired the operator (I use the wrd intentionally and advisedly) who had worked for the former company. However, we wanted the business entirely in the hands of Legion men, so I secured a Projectionists' Apprenticeship certificate, recently took the examination and now have a license.

Shows Two Nights

We show pictures Tuesday and Saturday nights. I am a farmer, living four miles from town, with an ample abundance of work at home, but there is no one nearer who is responsible enough to take charge of things. You can thus see that I don't have unlimited itme to work at the proposition. Have a copy of the handbook, latest edition. Is it necessary to spend six mo re good hard earned dollars for the Bluebook which I see mentioned in the Moving Picture World?

I spent four years in college, and have faith to believe that I learned at least a little, though what I really did do there was get an inkling of how much there is that I don't know.

Our screen is painted with Kalsomine, or some such preparation. The theatre is long and not over 30 feet wide. Projection distance about 70 feet. Lens we use is 1 3/4 inch inside diameter. Would a larger lens give us enough more light to make up for the loss in definition and clearness? Would a different screen surface help matters? The screen coating was renewed last fall.

We don't seem able to pick up a used motor-generator which is any good, and don't like to meddle with a rectifier. One manager of a theatre in a not distant city advises that we get a Mazda with a regulator, using 900 watt lamp. We could buy a motor to run our old generator, but it would take at least 10 H. P., and that would cost considerable, and then we would be burning up juice in the rheostat, which same costs five cents per K. W. for power, with fifty cents per H. P. in addition each month. One manufacturer would take our old generator in exchange for a new motor generator, with five hundred dollars in addition, which might as well be five million, as we just haven't the money to spend.

Exchanges Decent

The exchanges have been pretty decent, and have supplied us at prices considerably less than we have paid heretofore. We play the best we can get—First National, Warner Brothers and Paramount. When business in general picks up, as it will when the weather and the roads get better, we see no reason why we should not be able to at least break even, provided we can improve our projection light so as to make people stop kicking—and staying home. Have tried to eliminate all glare spots, and to improve projection in every possible way, but I can't seem to get sufficient light out of a sixty ampere A. C. arc. To be sure we do need a new projector and lamp, a new screen, new seats and a new theatre, but aside from that we are in pretty good shape, but we're trying to make good anyhow. Took the place over ONLY to prevent it being converted into a garage, thus leaving our people without any form of theatrical amusement whatsoever.

I have imposed upon your good nature, but as I said, if you can and will give us a bit of advice it will be appreciated.

Forum For All

First and foremost, get the idea entirely OUT of your head that we give attention only to "bigger and better things." As a matter of fact, while I always will give the "big fellow" any assistance possible, the real pleasure comes when I am able to help a little village theatre which is engaged in a real struggle for existence, because as a rule it and the little village paper represent just about all the contact that community has with the great outside world, and absolutely ALL the form of theatrical amusement available to them.

In my opinion your community would actually be serving its OWN BEST INTERESTS were it to buy that property, equip it with a good projection plant and permit the American Legion to run it, paying such rental as it might be able to, the said rental to be placed in the bank at interest until such time as it equaled the investment, whereupon it be turned over to the people who gave it and the theatre to the Legion.

Crudely put, of course, but my idea is that it is to the best interest of ANY small community to have such a place of amusement and have it run rightly. It helps keep the young people at home, on the farms. The old days when young people will long remain where they have only church once a week and a circus once a year, have gone. What I have suggested, while crudely put, is not half as crazy as it may sound. I have long had the idea that it would be good business for every village to build into its town hall a little, well equipped motion picture theatre, with a good, well equipped stage, the same to be operated by the village, or leased under village control. My reasons for this are very briefly set forth above.

As to Your Trouble

And now as to your trouble. If you had a 110 volt, 1000 watt incandescent lamp, you had a VERY inefficient projection lamp. An A. C. 60 volt arc should give you fair illumination, but it must be expertly handled, which probably you cannot do. The 900 watt, 30 volt incandescent lamp gives excellent results, provided the instructions for its handling be followed ACCURATELY, BUT DON'T forget that "ACCURATELY." The instructions are ample, and such as may be followed by any one who has the patience to study and master them, which unquestionably you can do. If you have the latest edition of the handbook (if your book has a blue cover it is the latest edition, now called the Bluebook of Projection) you will find the instructions on pages 815 to 868, inclusive. Instructions will also be provided by the manufacturer. If you have a red covered handbook—yes, you'd better expend the six dollars for the Bluebook. It will, I am very sure, pay you to do it, and under the circumstances I certainly would not recommend the expenditure of a single unnecessary dollar.

The Mazda is not a powerful light as compared with a D. C. arc. It is giving excellent results, however, in some pretty large theatres. The next best thing is the new reflector type arc, but that equipment is pretty expensive. You can get full data by addressing Joseph Hornstein, Howell Cine Equipment Company, Seventh Avenue at 48th Street, New York City.

Mazda Probably Best

Under all the conditions, however, I guess the regular Mazda equipment will be best for you, though you will need the aspherical condenser. Inasmuch as you have a Power projector, it will be best to consult that company with regard to it. Address Mr. Herbert Griffin, N. Power Company, No. 90 Gold Street, New York City. Give all particulars as to projection distance, size of picture, etc., and tell them I referred you to them.

As to screen, I could not tell just what would be best without a full, to-scale drawing of your seating, and the exact location of screen with relation thereto. However, you are limited to paint or kalsomine, because all other screens are quite costly. Paint will be somewhat better than kalsomine, see page 227 if you have a Bluebook; page 184 if the cover of your handbook is red.

Your lens diameter is, I think, all right, but you have not given me its working distance, hence I cannot do any more than guess. To tell with certainty I must know the distance face of converging lens of condenser to film, and distance film to first surface of lens. Also it is entirely possible that your condenser is all wrong. Measure the exact diameter (horizontal diameter) of the crater on the upper carbons. Send me that and the other measurements AND the present distance of crater from face of lens; also tell me how you have your carbons set. Better do this before you do anything else. Perhaps you are all wrong with your condenser, which would account for the poor light. Mr. Squarehead me should have thought of that in the first place.

Watch Carefully

I have a letter from a projectionist of real ability and energy, complaining of something I very well know constitutes an evil of greater or less proportions in SOME locals. It is an evil because of the fact that these locals have delegated authority to either one or to a few individuals, and then have permitted him or them to wield that power ruthlessly.

In my humble opinion it is but a matter of decency, fairness and good business procedure (and a real union is nothing more or less than a business organization, the "brother" end of it—and I say it with an experience dating back to 1883—being for the most part just plain bull) to advance men to better theatres and positions, including better pay, so far as is practicable, on ABILITY TO DO HIGH GRADE, EFFICIENT WORK IN MOTION PICTURE PROJECTION.

Gentlemen, you, both as individuals and as unions, OWE that much to the MOTION PICTURE INDUSTRY, from which you draw your livelihood, and by virtue of which the union has its existence.

Plain Fact

As a matter of plain fact, however, in some locals the officers, and more particularly the Business Agent or Business Manager, can and pretty well DOES place men according to his own sweet will, WHICH IS, IN MY HUMBLE OPINION, A VERY WRONG PROCEDURE. Where a Business Agent or Business Manager or other officer or officers are given power to place men arbitrarialy, THEY SHOULD BE OBLIGED TO GIVE AN ACCOUNTING OF THE MEN PLACED SINCE LAST MEETING AT EVERY REGULAR MEETING OF THE UNION, AND SHOULD BE OBLIGED TO GIVE EXACT, DETAILED REASONS AS TO WHY THOSE PARTICULAR MEN WERE PLACED WHERE THEY WERE PLACED.

If any one can raise a reasonable objection to that proposed line of procedure I would very much like to hear it. I will go a step further by saying (and this will be jumped on, of course) that the mere fact that a man is "an old union man" should NOT count in this matter in any degree, except to secure him preference where ability is equal. If a man is an old union man, but in all those years he has just dragged along without making any adequate effort to improve his technical knowledge, and has allowed men entering later to go ahead, and by application and study to become his superior in ability, then I say, and defy any one to successfully contradict me, that the wide awake, energetic man who has been more interested in his work than in (perhaps) a crap game, is entitled to consideration AHEAD of the older member whose only union virtue is that he IS an old member. I say the "only union virtue" because I hold that there are two distinct virtues possible to a union man, viz: STANDING FIRM AND TRUE TO THE PRINCIPLES OF THE ORGANIZATION, and KEEPING ABREAST WITH THE TIMES IN EXPERT KNOWLEDGE, TO THE END THAT HE BE ABLE TO RENDER SERVICE WHICH WILL BE A CREDIT TO THE ORGANIZATION WHICH CONTROLS THAT SERVICE.

Efficiency

President Green, of the American Federation of Labor, hit the nail upon its honorable head when, in an address made recently, he said: "HIGH WAGES COMMAND EFFICIENCY." Is it "efficiency" to place an inefficient man in a high grade theatre, where the pay is comparatively high, and where men and women pay relatively high prices of admission, simply because that man "stands in" with the Business Agent or union officials, or because he is an "old union man"? Verily it is NOT. And now you chaps don't need to get up on your elevated steeds and rave about "Richardson" butting in, because Richardson is NOT butting in. Richardson was a union man, and had actually SUFFERED HARD FOR TRADES UNIONISM before some of you—yes, before a great many of you had yet seen the light of day. He has been a trades unionist consistently ever since 1883, and was one in those days when an "agitator" was looked upon as some sort of a wild animal, and in those days every active union man was, per se, an agitator. Another thing: In this matter I set myself up as talking for the motion picture industry and the public has the RIGHT to discuss anything which affects the ultimate welfare of the motion picture industry, or the excellence of the thing the public pays to see upon the screen, which this matter certainly does, since while I may be willing to stand for a punk picture in a ten cent house, I expect something decidedly better, and without projectional fault, when I pay twenty-five to seventy-five cents.

If any of you call this "butting in," then I have absolutely NO excuse or apology to offer you. You will just have to go on calling me names, for I propose to lift my voice for whatever I think is for the best interests of (A) The motion picture industry, (B) The public which supports it and (C) the profession of projection, the men engaged therein and the I. A. T. S. E. & M. P. M. O. which represents them, and on the whole represents them very well indeed, though, as I have said, there are abuses in every large organization.

Screen Surfaces

Chas. E. Ashabraner, Projectionist Kerrigan Theatre, New Albany, Indiana, says:

Enclosed find seven dollars for a Bluebook of Projection and a copy of the Lens Chart. Would very much like to know how I can tell what type of screen I am projecting with. In other words, what appearance does each type, other than a painted screen have. My reason for asking this is that I am wondering if the screen we have could be refinished so as to improve projection, without too great expense.

I would direct you to the text pages 219 to 267 of the Bluebook, which you doubtless will have by the time this arrives. It is very difficult to reply to your question intelligently. In general, it may be said that there are but three types of screen surface in present general use. One type is the painted surface, which may be flat paint or water color—Kalsomine. Another is a specially treated cloth, such as the Raven screen, and the third is the metallic surface screen. I think it is likely you have the latter, in which case you should be able to tell it, as it has a surface very similar to an aluminum coated cloth surface.

If you have a metallic screen surface I would NOT advise you to try to refinish it yourself as a metallic surface. If you want that done, send it to the company or person who made it. You may, however, wash it thoroughly with ivory soap and warm water, roughen the entire surface with No. ½ sandpaper, and paint it, using the formula found on page 227 of the Bluebook. As a matter of fact, unless you have a long, rather narrow house, I think you will find this procedure to be an improvement on what you now have, always assuming that your present surface has been dulled by time.

Do this: get a piece of muslin a yard square. Tack it securely to a light wood frame, stretching it tightly. Mix a tablespoonful of powdered glue (which you can get at any paint shop) in a quart of hot water, and paint the cloth with it, wetting it thoroughly. Let it dry thoroughly. This called "Sizing." Next mix zinc white with one third boiled linseed oil and two thirds turpentine, adding just enough ultamarine blue to it to make it a very faint bluish color when in the mixing can.

Now paint the cloth two or three coats, allowing each coat to dry. When finished you will have just what you would have if you painted your present screen. Next, using fine cord, suspend this yard-square screen in the center of your own screen, project the white light to it and view it from all parts of the theatre.

If it looks no brighter from the center of the theatre than your present screen, but does look whiter or brighter from the side seats, then it is better for your theatre than what you now have. If it looks less bright from the center, but brighter from the sides or balcony, then you will get a less brilliant picture viewed from center of the house seats, but a brighter one viewed from the side seats or balcony, and you must use your own judgment. It proves that your present screen surface is not suited to your theatre. Of course if you get a better result from all over with the sample than from your screen, then that settles is—paint the screen.

"Diopter" Strength

Cecil James, Projectionist Lyric Theatre, Stevens Point, Wisconsin, says:

Have been a reader of our department for several years, and have received many excellent tips from its pages. Have not answered Bluebook School questions because I'm not much of a letter writer. Am in trouble, hence spoiling good paper with poor writing, asking help.

We have bought a new spotlamp, and I don't believe its lens is the right diopter strength. Propection distance, to foots, 91 feet. Lens is four (4) DIOPTER STRENGTH. Using D. C. from a Transverter.

Your information is not sufficiently complete to permit of any very accurate reply, even if I knew what four "diopter strength" is in inches. For the love of Mike who is sending out lenses for theatre use, marked with their "diopter strength"? Must not know much about theatre practise. Have called up the Kliegl Company, one of the largest makers of spotlamps in the country. They did not know what a 4 diopter strength is in civilized language. Webster defines "Diopter" as an instrument. It is, however, a measurement used by opticians. It is quite correct—for folks who understand just what it represents, and know how to apply it. Projectionists and theatre people have always used inches to express focal length. Diopter is used mostly for measuring spectacle lenses.

In order to answer you accurately I would have to know the diameter of the lens, and the minimum spot diameter desired anyhow. Do this: Remove the lens. In a room pin a sheet of white paper on the wall opposite a window from which some detailed object, such as a house or tree not less than 100 deet distant, may be seen. Darken all the windows but that one, and having some one hold the lens flat size toward the white paper, focus the object selected as sharply on the paper as you can, and measure the exact distance from flat surface of lens to screen, BEING SURE LENS IS SQUARE WITH THE SCREEN.

Now reverse the lens, flat side away from wall, refocus, and again measure from flat surface of lens to screen.

Add these two measurements together and divide by two. The result will be, if you have done the work carefully, pretty close to the focal length of the lens, in inches.

Usually a ten inch focal length lens is about right. If yours don't measure pretty close to that, then send all data—diameter of lens, projection distance and amperage—to your supply dealer. He should be able to supply you with the right lens. If you care to send it to me I will be glad to advise you exactly what you require, but I am in New York City, a thousand miles away, whereas your dealer presumably is much nearer—Chicago, probably.

Wrong Procedure

Slowly, oh very, very slowly exhibitors are making progress toward intelligent action in the matter of motion projection procedure. Really right action will, however, never come fully until the exhibitor is willing to concede that motion picture projection is a distinct department of the motion picture industry, and that it has very real and very important problems of its own.

Right here in New York City there are several big theatre circuits. I shall take just one of them as an illustrative example. It has a man who is PRESUMED to have general charge of projection in its many theatres. This man probably would get very good results IF HE WERE PERMITTED TO. The real fact is, however, that he is tied hand and foot by being immediately under the orders of a man who knows about as much about projection and its real, vital problems, AS the editor of this department knows about the Zenda Avesta of the Hindoos.

I submit, gentlemen, that as a matter of plain common sense, any large chain of theatres should establish a Department of Projection, entirely apart from everything else. This department should be placed in COMPLETE charge of ALL matters pertaining to motion picture projection. Its head should be subject to no one's orders except those of the Big Boss himself, though he should be required to co-operate, so far as is practicable, with the various theatre managers. The responsible head of this department should be titled Supervisor of Projection, and should be paid a liberal salary—a salary sufficient to attract a really high grade man—and should be selected with the utmost care.

He MUST be a man who the men under him can and will respect. He MUST have a thorough knowledge of both practical projection problems and THEORETICAL PROJECTION PROBLEMS. In other words he MUST know projection both from the practical and theoretical viewpoints. He MUST be thoroughly HONEST and capable of withstanding all efforts at what amounts to bribery, which may take many forms. In other words he must be willing to accept his salary as his full remuneration, and have the courage to REFUSE ALL OTHER FORMS OF REMUNERATION. In addition he MUST have the energy necessary to work hard to succeed in his position and PROVE to the Big Boss that his appointment was a right move.

BUT if the Big Boss does all this, and then compels the Supervisor of Projection to run to some under official to have every little jim crow order he issues, or any order for that matter, O Kayed—well, that's that and the whole thing falls of its own weight.

I have said he should be obliged to "co-operate with the theatre managers so far as is possible." Just what do I mean by that? Well, I mean that co-operation should be had up to the point where the theatre manager's ideas interfere with the excellence of the thing the patrons will see upon the screen. Right there it should cease, and projection take the preference, except that after the Big Boss has had the matter laid before him (if it really be a matter of considerable importance from the viewpoint of the theatre manager), if he thinks the excellence of projection should give way, then it may do so.

My view in this is that the views and orders of the Supervisor of Projection should NOT be subject to countermand by some understrapper official, but ONLY by the Big Boss himself. I have used this term "Big Boss" merely as a convenient way of designating the real head of the theatre chain, whoever it may be.

Summed up, this all means that it is up to the Big Boss to select a Supervisor of Projection in whose judgment, knowledge and experience he can repose confidence to the extent of backing him up when arguments come, as come they will until theatre managers as a whole come to an understanding that neither inefficiency (waste), or faults in projection can or will be tolerated. That the paying public has the RIGHT to demand and to receive, so far as is humanly possible, a perfect rendition upon the screen of the programme they have paid good money to see.

My experience is that in almost every case where the Supervisor of Projection has been tried, it has been compelled to labor under unsurmountable difficulties, some of which have been outlined above. To succeed, two things are eminently necessary as a basis, viz: A salary sufficient to be attractive to a really high grade man, and to stop any desire to eke out poor pay by the acceptance of "presents"(?) or anything else from those interested in the sale of projection supplies; (b) Sufficient authority to make his orders really effective.

Bluebook School—Answers 256 to 260

Question No. 256—Explain exactly what is meant by "arc voltage drop." What does it represent?

In looking through the replies I find the following have given evidence of a satisfactory understanding of this matter. Harry Dobson, Toronto, Ontario; Glenn G. Wallace, Muskegon, Michigan; G. B. Bennewitz, Sioux Falls, So. Dakota; C. H. Hanover, Burlington, Iowa; W. C. Whitt, Red Bluff, California; G. L. Doe, Chicago, Illinois; F. H. Moore, Taunton, Mass.; S. F. Cooley, Manchester, New Hampshire; Walter Johnson, Champaign, Illinois; T. R. Guimond, Mobile, Alabama, and Charles C. Colby, Santa Fe, New Mexico. Several new names this time. Hope they stick.

Bennewitz says:

Arc voltage drop is drop in the potential between the tips of the electrodes of an electric arc. It represents the drop in potential due to overcoming the resistance the current encounters in passing through the arc stream between the carbon tips.

Which is brief, not correct and not very explanatory. I have printed it merely to show how easy it is for a man whom I personally know knows better to make an error.

Wallace says:

In the last set of questions answered, one of them asked for an explanation of the arc, and we learned that the arc offers comparatively high resistance to the passage of the current. We know that when current is forced through resistance by pressure (voltage—E. M. F.), voltage is consumed in the process.

It is easy to understand, therefore, that the resistance of the arc stream, combined with that of the positive crater and negative tip, will cause a drop in voltage when the voltage forces current across the arc, and this is what is called "arc voltage drop," or arc voltage. It is presumed to consume the entire impressed voltage.

The drop in voltage caused by the various elements of the arc is set forth on pages 391-392 of the Bluebook, where it says:

The various elements of the arc offer resistance in the proportions indicated by the following. Taking for example a 60 volt D. C. arc, we find the voltage drop caused by the various elements thereof to be as follows:

Positive crater causes a drop of 35 volts.

Negative carbon tip causes a 10 volt drop.

Arc stream causes a 15 volt drop.

This indicates to us that the positive crater offers 58 per cent. of the total resistance of the arc, hence causes 58 per cent. of the total drop in voltage. The negative crater offers only 17 per cent., and the gas stream 25 per cent., which gives us an understanding of the reason why the positive crater becomes so very much hotter than the negative, why it burns away much the faster of the two (carbons being alike) and why it is very much the more brilliant of the two.

To sum up, the "Arc voltage drop" is the difference in voltage between the upper and lower carbon of the lamp. It is the amount of pressure, as measured in volts, necessary to, and used in forcing the current against the resistance of the combined elements of an electric arc.

There, you old Dakotian, take a slant at that, darn you. I'll personally vouch for the fact that you knew all that. Well, why in 773H (upside down and use your imagination for that one) did'n y' say so???

Doe, who frankly says that "Doe" is a nom de plume, and gives satisfactory reasons for not wishing his real name to appear, says:

Arc voltage drop is in reality the voltage necessary to force the current against the resistance of the various parts of the arc—the gas stream, the positive crater and the negative tip where a D. C. arc is used, or the two craters when it is an A. C. arc.

The theory of it is this: with a D. C. arc taking current from a 110 volt circuit through rheostats, the voltage impressed on the rheostat is 110, less such slight loss as there may be in overcoming the resistance of the circuit wires. I am assuming a 110 volt generator pressure.

If the arc were connected directly to the line, without any rheostat, when the carbons were brought together, all the resistance opposed to current flow would be the resistance of the lines between the generator and the arc, which, in effect, really would mean a "dead short," or short circuit.

Were it possible to strike an arc going under this condition, then all the resistance to current flow would be that offered by the arc and the circuit wires, which would probably be not much in excess of an ohm or an ohm and a half. This would of course immediately heat everything to redness, and "burn things up." Mind you I don't mean one could start an arc under a dead short. I'm just trying, in my very poor way, to explain what the theoretical condition would be if it were possible to do it. Fuses are not considered.

To overcome this, a rheostat is placed in series with the arc. A rheostat is a device offering high resistance to the passage of current flow, and when current is forced by E. M. F. against resistance, voltage is consumed exactly in proportion to the amount of the resistance.

In a projection arc we will want a certain definite number of amperes of current, and it will require a certain definite E. M. F. (voltage) to overcome the resistance of the various elements of the arc, and force number of amperes desired across.

The rheostat is designed to use up, or consume all the line voltage except just sufficient to force the number of amperes desired across the arc against its resistance, and the resistance of the arc is presumed to use up, or consume all the remaining voltage not consumed, or used up by the rheostat, hence there is presumed to be a drop in voltage across the arc of the entire voltage not used up in the rheostat, and that is what we call the "Arc voltage drop." Incidentally a voltmeter reading across the rheostat terminals, plus a reading of the same instrument across the arc terminals will equal the voltage impressed upon the rheostat.

Gosh, I'll say those two answers cover the subject something more than fairly well. It is too bad that Doe cannot write under his own name when he can pull stuff like that.

Question No. 257—What is meant by "carrying capacity" as applied to an electrical conductor? Just what does it represent?

Hanover says:

When the carrying capacity of a wire is spoken of, it means the capacity, in amperes, which it is permitted to carry under the rulings of the authorities as set forth in the National Electric Code. I am not sure, but believe these limits (limits of carrying capacity) are fixed by the American Institute of Electrical Engineers.

Carrying capacity is fixed, as I understand it, at the number of amperes an electrical conductor of commercial copper will carry without exceeding a fixed, given rise in temperature, which same is below the temperature rise one may detect by sense of feeling. It may therefore be said that if a wire is perceptibly warm to the touch (except from heat due to other things than current) it is overloaded, hence working beyond its capacity.

Colby says:

Carrying capacity of a wire is the volume, or amount of current, as measured in amperes, an electrical conductor will carry without causing a perceptible rise in the temperature of the conductor. It is the number of amperes any conductor of standard cross section is approved to carry by the National Electrical Code. Carrying capacity represents the limit of safety in the matter of conveying current for any electrical conductor.

Cooley says:

Carrying capacity, as applied to an electrical conductor, means or indicates the greatest number of amperes of current the conductor may safely carry. In ordinary everyday use an electrical conductor means a wire, or more properly still, the wires of a circuit. These wires are for the purpose of conveying or carrying electricity from one place to another. When we speak of the "carrying capacity" of a circuit we mean the amount, volume or quantity of current, as measured in amperes, that may be allowed to flow through or over the circuit with safety, which amount has been determined by the Underwriters and is set forth in the tables on pages 70-71 of the Bluebook.

Question No. 258—Tell us just why it is essential that motion picture projectionists understand electrical action thoroughly.

Bennewitz says:

There is a constant tendency to increase the already large amount of electrical equipment in theatre projection rooms. In many theatres this equipment already costs well up into the thousands of dollars. The projectionist is in direct charge of this equipment. He is responsible for the efficiency at which it will operate, and unless it does operate efficiently there will be more or less loss—usually "more." The projectionist must be able to detect faults in this equipment, make intelligent adjustments of its various parts and, in emergency, make temporary repairs.

It requires no argument to prove the fact that the projectionist cannot possibly do these things unless he understands electrical action.

Whitt says:

The projectionist must handle electricity through wires and many sorts of equipment. He must handle it as power, as incandescent light and as a naked arc. He must handle it as heat in some cases, and must handle magnetism. He must convert it by means of mercury arc rectifiers, and through motor generator sets. He must transform it from one voltage to another, and to do all this well and efficiently he must possess a thorough knowledge of its action.

Doe says:

A projectionist must understand electrical action for exactly the same reason a doctor must understand medicine, a brick mason must understand handling mortar and brick, an engineer must understand the action of steam, or a pilot the tides of the ocean. If he or any one of those named does not understand the action of the thing he is handling, he cannot possibly use it to the best advantage, and thus work well and efficiently with the equipment supplied him. He must understand it because unless he does he is NOT a projectionist, but only part of one.

Which last is, if you ask me, saying considerable in a relatively few words.

Question No. 259—What is necessary to a competent understanding of electrical action?

Whitt says:

To shorten the story I'll just say: "Study and experiment."

Doe says:

To understand electrical action one must thoroughly understand the underlying principles which govern the action. For instance, one must not only merely know that a "ground" causes certain things to happen, but he must know WHY it causes them to happen. Once possessed of that knowledge he is able to trace out any action due to a ground. One must not only know that an incandescent globe lights when the switch is closed, but one must know exactly WHY it lights—what causes the light—why the filament becomes white hot—why it does not burn up and all about it, if one is really to understand electrical action as applied to incandescent lamps.

It is the firm grounding in underlying principles that constitutes the real knowledge of electricity or anything else.

Which, I hope you will all agree with me, is the REAL answer to the question.

Question No. 260—Give us your idea of what electricity is.

Hanover says:

You have asked merely for our view as to what electricity is, but even that is hard to

Dixie Cup Service Also Pays a Profit

If DIXIE Cups and vendors really were an expense the laws prohibiting the common drinking glasses might be a matter of some concern to motion picture theatres.

But since they actually pay a profit there is an added incentive for making available to your audiences this service which they use so constantly and appreciate so much.

The DIXIE penny vendor operates silently — another advantage appreciated by the theatre owner.

Complete information upon request.

compose. I personally would define electricity as an intangible, invisible force which is without weight or anything else manifest to the human senses except effect.

We cannot, I think, see electricity, though we can see the visible or invisible thing heated to incandescence by its action. We cannot feel electricity, but we can feel its effects in various ways.

My own definition or description, rather, of it would be: An invisible, intangible force, having neither visibility nor weight, but possessed of tremendous power, which it may be caused, by the use of proper appliances, to direct to the service of mankind.

This editor believes we all ought to compliment Brother Hanover on the above. I have never myself seen electricity described in a way which it seems to me was as really complete.

Bennewitz gives us a look-see at the scientific side of it by saying:

As to just what electricity is, no one knows. I am inclined to side with those who have taken the following view. Electricity is the thing of which every tangible thing is made. By this it is meant that everything we see and feel around us is made of minute particles or corpuscles of negative electricity, named "electrons," and of similar minute nuclei of positive electricity. All experimental evidence is in favor of this "electron" theory and, so far as I know, no valid argument has been raised against it. Therefore until some one is able to either prove or disprove this theory, we must continue working with something the exact nature of which we are unable to explain to the satisfaction of the world at large.

Frankly, while I have known of this theory, which is the product of researches by some very eminent scientists, it's entirely too much for me to even speculate upon. Maybe it is all true—maybe not. Meanwhile I know that when I push a switch shut something I can't see or understand gets busy and does certain things which I perfectly well knew it was going to do when I shut the switch.

Dobson says—and I feel sympathy with him:

The Good Lord knows! Since the advent of radio, and the various things which have been tried with it, such as receiving messages without aerial, with the set locked inside a steel vault—well, I personally am not sure that any one knows what is happening in any electric circuit.

Leavenworth, Kansas

Dave Motyok, Leavenworth, Kansas, has the following to say:

A short time ago I purchased a Richardson Handbook of Projection (Bluebook) for six dollars. It seemed quite a lot of money then, but I now wish to report to you that I am thoroughly satisfied with the purchase.

May I now ask you a question? I am thinking of becoming a projector operator, and wish to know whether or not there is a union scale for motion picture projectionists. Have questioned a number of local projector operators, but their answers vary widely, hence I have come to you for information.

If you mean is there a different scale for "machine attendants" or "operators," and for motion picture Projectionists, then the answer is no. If you mean is there a wage scale for all, then the answer is that in all cities where the I. A. T. S. E. and M. P. M. O. has organized the men there is a minimum wage, usually varying according to whether the theatre runs day and evening, or evening only, and according to the size and importance of the theatre. By "minimum wage" I mean that there is a scale below which no member of the union may work. There is no maximum wage. In other words, there is nothing to prevent a man from securing an advance over the minimum scale, and in fact many high class men do that very thing.

To my surprise, upon looking the matter up I find that there is no Motion Picture Projectionist local in Leavenworth, and investigation showed that there had been difficulties encountered in the attempt to form one, the City of Leavenworth being covered by the Kansas City, Kansas, local, until such time as it has a local of its own.

May I say to the exhibitors of the City of Leavenworth that opposition to organization of the men merely, in the long run, operates to hinder your own progress? Those who are largely successful in any line of human endeavor keep abreast with modern practice, and modern practice in just about every walk of life includes ORGANIZATION. Why, gentlemen, even the bankers have their union, and so do the exhibitors. Question the right of either of those bodies of estimable gentlemen to organize into a union (they don't call it "union," but that is exactly and precisely what the "Exhibitors' League" and the bankers' organization is just the same—nothing more and nothing less than a UNION of exhibitors and of bankers) and they would be highly indignant, and ready to FIGHT all and sundry for what they would resent as an imposition and an infringement of their personal liberty and rights, in which attitude they would be perfectly right.

Do the exhibitors of Leavenworth think that keeping the projectionists working as individuals, and presumably therefore more or less "under the thumb" of their employers, is beneficial to them, the exhibitors, even supposing the plan to result in low wages? If so, I say to you you are in error. LOW WAGES, SERVILITY AND SHEER ABILITY OF THE EXHIBITOR OR THEATRE MANAGER TO WORK HIS OWN INDIVIDUAL WILL UNQUESTIONED DOES NOT MAKE FOR HIGH GRADE RESULTS ON THE SCREENS OF YOUR THEATRES, And it is high grade results which pay dividends in the end.

I freely grant you that the union is NOT perfect. I freely grant that it very frequently does things which ought not to be done, BUT I defy any exhibitor or theatre manager to (A) justify himself in denying to his projectionist the right to organize with his fellows, when he himself freely and very properly exerices that very right by belonging to an exhibitors' league; (B) to in this day and age deny the right of the men working under him to collective bargaining, which right is now generally recognized as a RIGHT all over the entire civilized world.

Mind you, this department holds no brief from the motion picture projectionists' organization (The I. A. T. S. E. & M. P. M. O. of the U. S. and C.) or from the Exhibitors' League. It stands ONLY for what it believes to be RIGHT, and what it believes to be for the best ultimate good of the motion picture industry. Many times it has unhesitatingly called projectionist organizations (local unions) to account when they have done things this department believed to be wrong, or when they have tolerated things which this department firmly believed not to be for the best interests of either the men, the exhibitor or the motion picture industry. In so doing it has made many enemies, and some very bitter ones, too. However, that fact does not count. This department merely regards the making of enemies as unfortunate, when it becomes necessary to make them in the course of what it conceives to be its plain duty.

Undoubtedly there will be exhibitors in Leavenworth who will take issue with this department and its editor, and object to "interference" with "local conditions." To them I would merely say that it is NOT a local condition, because such things to a greater or less extent affect the motion picture industry as a whole. I ask them to look at the matter from a viewpoint of FAIRNESS, and to question themselves as to what real difference there is in them objecting to the formation of the motion picture projectionist organization in their city and the motion picture projectionists of Leavenworth objecting to the formation of an exhibitors' league in that city.

It is not altogether a question of what you want or don't want, gentlemen, but a question of FAIRNESS. If a local union is formed, and you, as exhibitors, enter into the spirit of the thing and deal with that organization as you would deal with any other business organization, then I venture the assertion that the time will shortly come when you would not go back to the old order under any consideration. But if a union is formed and you start right in looking for a BATTLE, then of course there probably would be trouble, and if you get licked you would richly deserve it, because you would not have acted with good sense, and in accordance with modern practice.

Great railway systems, through their highest officials, deal with the unions. Great building contractors all over the country and their UNIONS (They don't call 'em unions, but that's what they really are) do the same thing. Why, even city and state governments deal with the unions, so WHY SHOULD NOT YOU????

Read and Ponder

The following was clipped from an editorial in the Sunday New York American. The projectionist will do well to read and ponder upon it. There is plenty in motion picture projection to keep the mind of any man busy for YEARS, yet many men expect to master it in a month or two, and the queer part is they think they have mastered it in that time. They do not even begin to scratch the surface of things, when they quit cold. They quit because they are LITTLE MEN. They are unable to comprehend the fact that motion picture projection is a complicated process, calling for a wide range of expert knowledge. They learn to "operate a machine" and that, for them, ends it all.

Ask such men of the characteristics of screen surfaces and they gape at you. Ask them of any one of a dozen other equally important things connected with projection, and they just plain don't know. They "operate a machine." Beyond that any pay day, there is nothing. The man who really masters all the details of motion picture projection will some day be in a most excellent position to reap substantial reward. The clipping reads:

"He who knows a little of everything, but nothing COMPLETELY, remains a LITTLE MAN.

"These are the days of specializing. Knowledge, industry, science, all wide branches of human effort are too big to be completely mastered by any one human mind.

"Pick out the thing that interests you, the thing for which you are FITTED, make yourself MASTER of that one department. And you will always find a place in the world, a good reward.

"Don't be like the little man rowing the boat in this picture. He will go SOME distance, but he won't go FAR."

Good photography plays no small part in making a picture popular. It has a definite box office value.

EASTMAN POSITIVE FILM

—does justice to the cinematographer's skill. It carries all the quality of the negative through to the screen.

And you know when the picture is printed on genuine Eastman Film—the identification "Eastman" and "Kodak" in black letters in the margin tells you.

EASTMAN KODAK COMPANY
ROCHESTER, N. Y.

Shea Building $2,000,000 Picture Theatre in Buffalo; Seats 4,000

MICHAEL SHEA'S 1925 Christmas present to the city of Buffalo, N. Y., is going to be a $2,000,000 motion picture theatre with a seating capacity of 4,000, a magnificent temple of amusement comparing with the finest theatres in he world and in which will be incorporated innovations, novelties, comforts and conveniences that will set a new standard in the entertainment world.

The entrances will be on both Main and Pearl streets, a grand foyer running from the entrance to the auditorium across the rear of the house to Pearl street. The front of the theatre will be elaborate in design, rising almost 100 feet.

Entering a vestibule, 22 feet by 30 feet, from Main street through five double bronze doors one will come to a ticket office placed in the center of the vestibule, which will be of marble, six feet by five feet by seven feet high. Large frames will be placed in the marble walls of the vestibule. Five more bronze and leaded glass doors will lead from the vestibule into the lobby which will be 80 feet long and about 30 feet wide. The walls of the lobby will be of ornamental scagliola. There will be a terrazzo floor with brass strip divisions. Large arches will extend up each side of the lobby and the walls will be large mirrored windows. The grand marble staircase will lead to the first balcony floor from the rear of the lobby to the right, going in from Main street. Under this staircase will be the manager's office.

The stage will be 32 feet deep with a 66 foot opening and a proscenium height of 50 feet. There will be a lift for an orchestra of 50.

Going up the grand staircase from the lobby patrons will find themselves on a lavishly furnished foyer extending around the entire rear of the house. Also there will be a promenade around the lobby into which one may look down through massive arches. This promenade will also serve as a lounge.

The projection booth will be one of the finest as well as the most up-to-date in the country. It will be located at the top of the rear of the balcony. It will be 34 feet long and 12 feet wide and will be equipped with several of the latest type projection machines, spotlights, stereopticons, etc. The length of throw will be 134 feet.

There will be a private projection room for the use of the management and this will be as completely equipped as possible. There will be a nursery for the children, where mothers may leave their kiddies in charge of a nurse. The nursery will be furnished with toys.

Mr. Shea has been studying theatres throughout the world for several years and delayed building the Buffalo, until he was sure it would be the last word in theatre construction. As it is the intention of Mr. Shea to give greatly improved presentations to the pictures, great care has been given to the stage and its equipment.

Ritz Theatre Is Opened in Cleveland by Ambassador

ANOTHER high-class neighborhood theatre has been opened in Cleveland—The Ritz. It is operated by The Ambassador Amusement Company, which concern is also building a house on Superior avenue, near East 127th street.

The Ambassador Company comprises Henry H. Lustig, president and general manager, Sandor Klinger, vice-president; Oscar Stotter, secretary, and Morris Berkowitz, treasurer.

The Ritz is located at 978 East 123rd street, a busy section in a thickly populated residence section. The house has 1,200 seats, and was erected at a cost of $150,000, by Al Janowitz, a local architect who has made a specialty in building theatres. The exterior is an attractive combination of brick and hollow tile. The ticket booth is very decorative and relieves the simplicity of the elevation. All 1,200 seats in the auditorium are on one floor. The theatre is equipped with a ten foot stage so that specialty numbers and vaudeville acts can be presented upon occasion. The interior decorations are particularly pleasing. Blue, ivory and old gold have been tastefully combined to give an air of refinement to the theatre.

One of the outstanding decorative features of the auditorium is a frieze of carved rails, back of which colored lights have been placed. When the house is in a semi-darkness these lights harmonize with the side bracket fixtures and produce a novel effect. The walls above this railing are soft pastel shades in panels, each decorated with a dainty French design. A soft wistaria shade predominates in these panels; this hade is duplicated in the heavy velour stage curtain, and the torchere lamps which flank on either side.

The foyer is carpeted with heavy velour. Leading from this foyer are rest and smoke rooms for both ladies and gentlemen.

The projection room is large and airy, with conveniences of all kinds for the projectionist. Two motiograph de luxe projection machines have been installed by E. E. Oliver. Oliver also supplied the diamond bead screen. Peerless McAuley low intensity arcs are also installed. Lighting is both direct and indirect. Heating and ventilating systems are of the latest and most approved type. As would be consistent with this type house, communicating telephones, vacuum cleaning system and maid service is supplied. No comfort either for the patron or for those operating the theatre in any capacity has been omitted.

The Ritz offers three changes of program each week, with daily matinees. Prices range from 10c for children to 25c top. Features, comedies, news reels and a novelty will comprise a program. It is the intention of the management to run a serial Saturday afternoon.

The Ambassador Amusement Company's other house, to be known as the Ambassador, under construction, is located on Superior avenue at East 127th street. This theatre will be as large as the Ritz. It is the intention of this company to build, acquire, manage and own a circuit of the highest class picture houses in Cleveland and its suburbs. The Waldorf, formerly operated by Messrs. Lustig and Berkowitz, will, in the future, be operated by this organization. An $18,000 Wurlitzer organ has been installed in the Ritz. The Ambassador will have a like one. Novelty organ programs will be featured in each of these houses.

Building Is Begun on New Haven Theatre For Arthur Friend

The recording of deeds at New Haven, Conn., on May 8 marked the conveyance to The 70 College Street Corporation, of which Arthur S. Friend is President, of the large plot on College street, a small portion of which was formerly occupied by the Rialto Theatre. The plot is directly across the street from the Taft Hotel and the Shubert Theatre, and abuts on the rear side of the Hyperion Theatre.

Work was begun coincidentally with the recording of the deeds, and the plans filed with the Building Department show that Mr. Friend projects the erection of a five-story store and office building occupying the entire front of the premises, which is within a few feet of the length of a New York City block, and the erection of a 3,000 seat theatre. Although the plans show a fully equipped stage, it is understood that Mr. Friend plans .o use the theatre for motion pictures.

Hugh Tallant and Arland W. Johnson, who together have been responsible for more than one hundred and fifty American theatre buildings, are the architects. Among Tallant's most notable work in New York are the New Amsterdam, Hudson and Lyceum Theatres, and the Brooklyn Academy of Music.

The interior of the New Haven Theatre will mark a departure from the old time theatre architecture. It is understood that Mr. Tallant has worked out an elaboration of the interior decoration scheme of the big assembly room of the Harvard Club in New York, one of the most beautiful assembly rooms in the country. The front building, when completed, will be the largest office building in New Haven.

The bond issue of $660,000 has been underwritten by New Haven bankers, and constitutes the largest issue ever underwritten in Connecticut.

Aschers Add to Chain

Ascher Brothers are still adding new houses to their circuit and have leased for fifteen years the 2,000-seat theatre now going up at 59th and Kedzie avenue, Chicago. O'Connor, Burke & McDonnell, builders, expect to have the house ready for opening in December. Ascher circuit will pay about $40,000 a year rental for the new house and a name will be selected by contest in the near future.

This makes two new houses for the Ascher company during the past ten days as they announced the closing of a lease for a new house that is to be built on Sheridan Road near Irving Boulevard last week.

New Loew House

Marcus Loew opened his new theatre in Harrisburg, Pa., last Monday night. A special train carried a group of stars, including Jackie Coogan and his dad, Barbara LaMarr, Ben Finney, Louise Glaum, Johnny Walker, Frankie James and some thirty others.

Gentlemen:

We are pleased to tell you that the Robert-Morton Organs which you have installed for us at several theatres, are giving entire satisfaction.

At the Plaza Theatre particularly, we cater to a very discriminate audience, this theatre being located in what is known as the social centre of New York, and being attended by people of prominence in the social and cultural activities of the city.

Many of our regular patrons are leaders in the musical world, and it is an accomplishment to please them with our musical offerings. We are pleased to say that the Robert Morton organ is responsible to a large extent for these results.

Very truly yours,

The National Board of Review of Motion Pictures

70 FIFTH AVENUE

NEW YORK CITY

To PATHE EXCHANGES INC.

Gentlemen:

We wish to advise you that the majority comment on your photoplay THE BLACK CYCLONE reviewed by The National Board of Review on APRIL 20, 1925 was as follows:

ENTERTAINMENT VALUE EXCRPTIONAL EDUCATIONAL VALUE UNUSUAL

ARTISTIC VALUE: Dramatic interest of story VERY STRONG Coherence of narrative GRIPPING Acting REMARKABLE FOR ANIMALS Photography EXCELLENT Technical handling SKILLFUL AND IMAGINATIVE Costuming (if period production) Atmospheric quality—Scenic setting FINE Historical value (if period production)

MORAL EFFECT SHOWS ANIMAL COURAGE AND FIDELITY OF INSPIRING KIND.

GENERAL COMMENT: THIS IS A REMARKABLY INTERESTING PHOTOPLAY, WITH HORSES IN A WILD STATE ON THE RANGE FOR ITS PRINCIPAL ACTORS. IT HAS THRILL, LOVE, ADVENTURE - ALL THE QUALITIES OF INTENSE DRAMATIC ACTION. PICTORIALLY IT IS OFTEN SUPERB. THE PICTURE HAS BEEN SELECTED BY THE NATIONAL BOARD'S COMMITTEE ON EXCEPTIONAL PHOTOPLAYS FOR AN APPRECIATIVE REVIEW IN THE COMMITTEE'S BULLETIN "EXCEPTIONAL PHOTOPLAYS".

THE FUNCTIONS OF MOTION PICTURE REVIEW.

The critics of the motion picture advise regarding morally objectionable elements before they are presented to the public. They bring to the picture the judgment of the typical audience. They appreciate the necessity of liberty of speech and liberty of creation. Under no circumstances must these be curtailed. The critics must give full liberty to ideas presented through the drama, matters of propaganda, historic interpretation, tragedy, comedy, current events, etc. At the same time society, which is being amused, entertained or inspired, must be given the right to register ethical convictions. The National Board of Review through its members aims to perform this service for society with broad-mindedness, liberality, and even-handed justice. It avoids enforcing personal opinions. It does not believe in coercion. It searches diligently for fundamental convictions and renders decisions which it is convinced will have broad public support. Though it is a voluntary extra-legal body having no legal power resident in itself, its decisions become effective through the crystalization of public opinion regarding the treatment of the subjects represented, and which it seeks to gauge and reflect through the cooperation of official and non-official correspondents of the National Board of Review in all parts of the country

NOTE:

ENTERTAINMENT VALUE—This term applies to all that which is entertaining or interest-holding.

EDUCATIONAL VALUE—This term applies to pictures that are instructive in science, industry, travel, and the presentation and interpretation of great classics, or that are illustrative of customs of people and ways of living of different classes of society past and present.

MORAL EFFECT—This applies to the moral effect of the picture either consciously or unconsciously produced.

ARTISTIC VALUE—This term is interpreted broadly to include the acting, the drama itself, the stage settings, artistic out-door scenes and scenery, the appropriateness of the production to the story treated, the costuming, and the absence of incongruous elements.

ALL GOOD. JUST RIGHT AMOUNT OF HUMOR TO MAKE IT INTERESTING. ENJOYED IT AS MUCH AS ANY PICTURE IN A LONG TIME.

GREAT PICTURE. WE WANT MORE LIKE IT.

FAIL TO SEE WHERE ANY PART MAY BE IMPROVED. DIFFERENT FROM USUAL RUN OF PICTURES.

A DELIGHTFUL ONE-IN-A-HUNDRED PICTURE. TITLES FINE, CAST SUPER-FINE. IRENE RICH SUPERBLY SINCERE.

ESPECIALLY LIKED SCENES BETWEEN WILLARD LOUIS AND CLARA BOW AND MR. LOUIS' SOBER COMEDY STUFF.

GOOD, CLEAN, FUNNY, WHOLESOME. IRENE RICH AND PLAYERS ARE ALL GOOD ACTORS AND GIVE A GOOD ENTERTAINMENT.

VERY INTERESTING. NO DRAG—AND REPLETE WITH HUMOR. IRENE RICH LOVELY AND BERT LYTELL NEVER BETTER IN HIS LIFE.

Hundreds of Cards Like This Were Received

The Producer of the picture you just viewed is making a sincere effort to furnish the best entertainment possible. You can, if you will be so kind, materially assist by answering the questions below and placing the card in the mail.

1. What part appeals to you most? The comedy sketches were very well played and not overdone.

2. What parts were uninteresting or tiresome? No part was over-played or over-acted. Very good directing.

3. I. (liked) ~~disliked~~ the picture as a whole. Why? Every foot or scene of the picture gave action and interest.

While this picture is not fully completed, it is our intention to remedy it according to the impression the picture had on you.

General Remarks: If the parts not yet screened are as full of entertaining action and still as interesting as that shown, my review is: the best picture Warner Bros. ever produced.

FOX NEWS SCORES REMARKABLE BEAT

Although the Kentucky Derby was run Saturday afternoon at Louisville, it miraculously appeared in the Fox News Sunday night at all the Broadway houses, or within twenty-four hours of the actual finish of the great classic.

This "beat" was recorded even earlier in Chicago, where the pictures were seen at the Sunday matinee performances.

So far as can be ascertained, none of the other news reels has yet included this event despite its great appeal.

As a matter of fact, even regular photographs had not, at the time we went to press, been received by the newspapers. It has been necessary for sporting departments of the dailies to obtain cut-outs of the Fox News and thus have photographs made of the horses.

MOVING PICTURE
WORLD

Founded in 1907 by J. P. Chalmers

There's a Fight Coming!

A WISE man once said that the battle always goes to the general who overestimates the enemy's strength; defeat is the portion of the commander who underestimates his opponent.

There is going to be a battle in this industry of ours.

And if the advice of The Man Sitting in the Middle is worth anything, here it is:

Don't underestimate the other fellow's strength!

Either side can take that advice. Both sides have men who need that advice listed in their ranks.

THERE is a tendency among some few independents—exhibitors and distributors—to feel that the speeches, the funds, the pledge cards, the "high-powered executives" and the field men combine to mean a battle already won.

There is a strong feeling among the leaders of the producer-distributor-exhibitor group that we have seen "just another convention." A brief flurry of words, some few dollars spent in aimless ways, a split over the honors—and again discord in exhibitor ranks.

Both sides are wrong.

The predominant exhibitor strength realizes that there is work to be done by men thinking in terms of PICTURES and PLAYDATES, to be done by men who will put harmony above all considerations.

The wise producer-distributor-exhibitor may as well realize now that sales resistance is being set up. Sales resistance costs dollars. And it doesn't take many dollars of sales loss to change black ink into red.

THE man on a pedestal who is inclined to a superior pity for convention results will do well to realize that if nothing else happened at Milwaukee—the gathering did produce UNITY.

Unity is a formidable weapon.

Properly directed it will win any battle.

What commanding officer is going to be so foolish as to go into battle convinced that it is an IMPOSSIBILITY for the other fellow to have, to hire, or to enlist PROPER DIRECTION?

Show him to me and I'll show you the fellow who is going to sue for peace.

First in the Field!

Speaking Freely

Reports from Chicago have it that Representative Gorman, of Illinois, is quoted as declaring he will introduce at the next session of Congress a resolution calling for an investigation of trust phases of the motion picture industry. One of the first results of the Milwaukee convention. And likely to go through. Because, following the Associated Press treatment of the exhibitor convention, there is an immense body of public opinion that wants to know "What's it all about?" When the public wants an answer it welcomes investigations. And investigations have a bad habit of hurting those aimed at from the very moment they are announced.

The pot is boiling. Yessir!

One of the remarkable things about Milwaukee is the fact that neither exhibitors nor independents had a "high-powered publicity expert" delegated specifically to the job, yet they managed to show new wrinkles in getting aboard the A. P. wires.

Shucks, they're all press agents in this business. Except a few who carry the title.

Those mysterious Federal Agents who appeared at Milwaukee created quite a stir. But less the issues become confused it must be remembered that the principal concern of these men is the operation of Film Boards and present arbitration methods. Don't get the idea that the Department of Justice has turned loose on a wild expedition of investigation on behalf of independents.

Incidentally, let it be remarked that the high-light of the convention to most of the exhibitors present was the discussion of arbitration by Joseph Seider, president of the New Jersey unit. Grievances against the so-called Big Three are varied and scattered. In New York it's Loew, in other spots Paramount, in still others First National.. And in some corners of the country there are alleged independents who come in for a good share of cussing. But Film Boards and Arbitration make a combination into which all the exhibitors could sink their teeth. It made for discussion that was specific, definite, and business-like. If it had not been necessary to adjourn sometime the delegates would still be shooting questions at Seider—who answered them as only a man who knows his subject can answer rapid-fire interrogations.

Checking up on the stunts at Milwaukee. F. B. O. wins the prize with the pillow case idea. Inscribed "Sleep Over F. B. O.'s proposition." Created no end of talk. Fact is, we first heard of it from Clyde Eckhardt, who thus became one of the few film men in our knowledge who is willing to give the other fellow credit for a good idea.

Universal's showing was more of a circus. Bands, paraders, brooms, and all the old-time accessories.

First National gave a ham and egg party, importing a famous chef in the person of Frederico de Breecrow. A good time was had by all.

Something else that should go on the records. With all the talk about the Big Three, and all the supposed contempt of said Big Three for said talk, First National was the only one wise enough to have a man on the ground. And if you don't think the act of courtesy to the exhibitor organization, the show of interest, the deed of salesmanship, paid—you should have heard some of the conversations we heard between Eddie Eschmann and various prominent theatre owners. Especially, if names will help, his hearty congratulations to Harry Davis on his oratorical powers. After the congratulations he buckled down to business—with an interested lobby crowd listening in. That's playing the game every minute.

That may be the last good word we will say for anybody for some time. This seems to be the season for editors to open up brick yards and start throwing the product. We want to get in the game just as soon as we can work up a real busy hate complex against somebody or other.

Passed Paul Mooney on the street the other day. On the run—to a gymnasium. Doesn't look as though he needs one. Desn't look as though he ever did have la grippe.

The line forms on the right. Nominations for "high powered executives" are in order. The exhibitors are looking for one. The independents are looking for one. Both are going to back up their choices with subordinate "high powered executives." Don't rush, boys!

That's an indoor sport these days. Discussing the eventual choices for high-powered seats. The consensus of opinion is that the only man really capable of holding either of the jobs is the fellow who is talking to you.

Arthur James was a welcome visitor at the convention. Looking younger and chippier than we have seen him in years. Which reminds us—if it was not taking so long to write this page of scattered scintillation this week we would be present at the luncheon the A. M. P. A. is tending its past exalted ruler.

If an exhibitor Rip Van Winkle returned to earth this week and viewed the line-up announced by Producers Distributing Corporation for the coming season he could be pardoned for exclaiming, "All right, I'll book those Paramount pictures. I've played those stars and directors." Look the list over. It holds P. D. C. right up to the plane of big dough and class product that "Charley's Aunt" boosted it to. You can paste it in your hat that there are any number of exhibitors who are going to find this means of showing their organization loyalty and still giving their audiences the expected names—DeMille, Rod La Roque, Agnes Ayres, and so on.

An editorial from the Film Renter of London that comes to our desk show that E. W. Hammons is waking them up over there too on the proposition of properly diversified programs properly advertised.

One of the fine things at Milwaukee that has passed without notice was the self-sacrifice of Joe Walsh, president of the Connecticut unit, in spontaneously withdrawing his name from the Board of Directors in the interests of harmony. Joe found two men on from Connecticut and readily accepted that excuse to step down and let in the necessary representative of the Allied.
—R. E. W.

What Has Happened to The U. C. I.?

By
W. Stephen Bush

THE question is often heard in and out of Italy: What has happened to the "Unione Cinematografica Italiana?" the famous U. C. I. of yesteryear. Is it still alive? What has become of its stock and its stockholders?

There is a lesson of no small import in the fate of this company. The story ought to be usefully interesting far beyond the confines of Italy. When one remembers the great and enviable part played by the Italian film industry in the past, the subject of the U. C. I. and its ultimate fate assumes a new and most instructive aspect.

There are conflicting stories about the present organization, which still retains its old corporate name. According to the one version the U. C. I. is still a vital and going concern with definite prospects. The stock of the company is held almost exclusively by two big Italian banks. When a sorry climax seemed to have been reached about a year ago, the banks put a man of their selection in charge of affairs. Very little has been done since then. The new "Quo Vadis," the last production of note to come from the studios of the company, was practically finished when the appointment of this administrator was announced. No serious attempt has been made to produce on a schedule.

Buying Theatres, Films and Exchanges

It is admitted that the concern has a heavy supply of unsold or unsalable films. This fact of course has not affected the value of the stock any too favorably. On the other hand, the company is now reaching out for theatres and exchanges and is also buying films, most of them of American origin. Thus it has purchased "The Two Orphans," now running in the principal cities of Italy. Critics of the company and among them some film experts claim that the corporation is carrying a heavy load of liabilities—the amount being stated variously at from five to ten million dollars. This burden has not been lightened in any perceptible degree.

Several attempts have been made to interest American capital in the resurrection of this company. As one shareholder put it to me: "We need the American fist and the American energy." I know that at least one big American concern looked the situation over and then decided to keep its hands off. However this may be, the story of the U. C. I. shows that every attempt to monopolize the film industry must even in a small country like Italy fail in the end. It has been proven here that even when strong banks stand solidly back of the combination it cannot last. The saddest part of it is that it has demoralized production in a country which by nature and the gifts of its people should still retaina high rank in the film markets of the world.

American Films Still Predominate

A shout of triumph has lately been heard in all the offices of the European trade press and even in the daily papers. It was a shout of triumph and exultation evoked by the marked improvement of European films fully told in one of my recent letters. The Germans especially are singing and dancing with feverish joy. Listen to them: "Paris, London, New York, Rome and even Moscow is resounding with the praises of our films. The world is ours." Improvement in the quality of films is a matter of international congratulations. In the meantime I notice that the billboards in the principal cities on the Continent still tell the continued story of American predominance and supremacy. Berlin is no exception to this rule.

A Parisian film fan publication, "Cine Pour Tous," recently invited its readers to send in their votes for what they considered the most popular feature of the last twelve months. Out of a total of 7169 a majority were cast for the French film, "Koenigsmarck." Other popular films were "Kean" and "Imperial Violets." Two of these three films were indicated in Moving Picture World six months ago as the outstanding successes of Europe.

Theatre Devoted to Advertising

An inventor of Genoa claims to have discovered a process for a successful illusion of the stereoscopic element in the films. Dr. Stephen Marcus of Zurich, connected as an author and director with French film enterprises, says the invention has been proven practical. There are strong rumors that Douglas Fairbanks is interested in the proposition and that he may try it out in his next picture.

A theatre frankly devoted to advertising is an experiment that is being tried in Berlin in connection with the Great Advertising Fair which has just opened in that city and will run into the early part of May. Just now the film division of the theatre is playing a minor part, but the idea and its possibilities are interesting. It is proposed later to present comedies and dramas which consist entirely of more or less cleverly concealed advertising. Admission entirely free of course.

Three outstanding first-runs made by German producers here and there with the assistance of American stars and directors are "The Golden Calf" (Henny Porten and Angelo Ferrari), "The City of Temptation" and "The Way to Strength and Beauty." The first feature is well directed and well acted but it unfolds itself in an emphatically German atmosphere. The second has for its star Julianne Johnson; scenario by Sir Philip Gibbs, directed by Walter Niebur. The subject presents nothing new or sensational. The atmosphere of Constantinople, which is the city of temptation, is fairly convincing. The last named of the three is classed as educational and is remarkable for artistic direction and an extremely frank display of the male and female form. The object, according to the producers, is to promote the care and proper exercise of the human body. Most of the scenes are taken against a classic background such as a Greek gymnasium, a Roman bath, a tale of mythology, etc. There are something like six reels and it must be said that the German censors have dealt very gently with the film. The first presentations drew big crowds.

New Productions of Interest

Leon Mathot, creator of the filmed version of Don Juan, lectured recently on his work. It appears that he eliminated the more lurid parts of the immortal theme. There are no church-yards and duels with venerable ghosts. The Spanish hero of tradition does not lead an altogether blameless life according to censorship standards (see regulations of Maryland, Pennsylvania and Kansas) but he has improved vastly in his conduct.

In two of the best picture houses in Berlin a six-reel film was shown recently illustrating the life of New York. It was more than a scenic—it really gives an insight into all the habits and miracles of Gotham. The film was very well received. It has what may be called "spectator interest." A series like this showing the great cities of the world would take a load off the encyclopedias and the text books of the classes in geography.

Pierre Benoit, the French author, whose novel, "Koenigsmarck" furnished the scenario for the big film of that name, has just published another work called "Les Puits de Jacob" (The Wells of Jacob). A French film company, seeing possibilities in the new story, has secured the filming rights and will begin work on it at once. Edward Jose, not unknown to Americans, will be the director. The exteriors are to be taken in Rumania and in Jerusalem. To get the atmosphere of a real ghetto of the middle ages some of the cities in the Balkans will be visited. There such things are said to exist to this day.

Molière's immortal "Tartuffe," with Emil Jannings in the titular part, to be directed by F. W. Muranu, will be an early release of the Ufa. Here is a truly international subject. As I understand it the scenario does not follow the Moliere story in all its details, but rather seeks to present the type of hypocritical reformer which is a common complaint of all civilized humanity—a type which has even been discovered in the membership of censorboards on both sides of the water. The original "Tartuffe" was bitterly fought by the censors of that day and it took nothing less than a royal decree to get it on the stage.

The Paris Press Bureau of the League of Nations has sent out the following official communication:

The International Film Congress which was proposed to the League of Nations by its "commission internationale de co-operation intellectuelle" will take place in Paris, Monday, June 22, Tuesday, June 23, and Thursday, June 24. The Congress will be presided over by Professor Julien Luchaire, the film expert of the League of Nations. The following American dirctors have been officially invited: D. W. Griffith, Rex Ingram, Charles Chaplin, E. Lubitsch, Maurice Tourneur, Cecil B. De Mille, George Fitzmaurice, Harley Knowles, Victor Seastrom, Allan Dwan, Raoul Walsh, Wallace Worsley, Marshall Neilan, Fred Niblo, Eric von Stroheim, Sidney Olcott, James Cruze and Herbert Brenon. A very ambitious program has been outlined of which I will speak in greater detail in my next letter.

Every picture theatre in Italy is closed today (April 22) as a protest against the action of the Society of Authors and Composers, who have claimed royalities which in the opinion of the theatre owners are unreasonable and oppressive.

Mix Has Tough Time Resting in Europe

By Sumner Smith

SOMETHING must be done about it. Here are all our perfectly good movie stars going over to Europe for vacations, and the populaces of London, Paris, Rome and other distant points won't give them a minute's peace. Truly, as the poet said, it's hell to be famous. Mary and Doug got all mauled over in London, and Charley Chaplin had a few tough moments himself too, and now Tom Mix, looking for relaxation away from the studios, comes back saying, "Please put me to work on a picture for I sure need a rest."

"Rescuin' beautiful girls and heavin' swarthy villains over cliffs is child's play to what I've been through," says Tom. "All I remember of Europe is a sea of faces bobbin' up and down like a lot of corks, and my hand is so sore from mittin' everybody that I couldn't pull a trigger if I tried."

Now if America joined up in the League of Nations something might be done about it, but at present the situation looks hopeless. The only remedy seems to be a set of false whiskers and a duster.

Tom had a terrible time. Sure, he met European dignitaries, but he seems most of all to have been impressed by that tremendous crowd which demolished a taxi in which he was sitting, and that other big crowd which separated him from his wife.

"In Brussels," he said, "we were marooned in the railroad station for an hour and a half. The chief of police had twenty men with him, but the crowds swept them away like nothing at all. I grabbed the baby and pulled my wife into the station master's office. We got inside just in time. A minute later they had broken the window tryin' to get a peek at us."

Even going over on the Aquitania it was the same. Tom had just time enough to size up the ocean as "one place that's goin' to last for a long, long time" before he had to climb the rigging up into the crow's nest for a "breathing spell from the well meanin' folks on board who followed us all around."

"I'm going to have my heart and eyes examined as soon as I get back home," he remarked, "because I sure think they have been damaged. The heart attack took place when we arrived in London. I was sitting in a taxi with the baby on my lap when I noticed the chauffeur was driving on the wrong side of the road. I was about to holler at him when I see another taxi comin' towards us like lightnin.' I shut my eyes and held tight to the baby, figurin' our trip was comin' to a sudden end, but nothing happened. When I got to the hotel I found out that they drive on the left instead of the right as they do over here. My, my, I can still feel that thrill I got."

"And what hurt your eyes?" he was asked.

"The Follies Bergere in Paris."

Tom next told of his visit to the Lord Mayor of London.

"He offered me a glass of port wine and was very much surprised when I told him I didn't drink. We had a little talk and then his major domo came in and dressed him up in a robe with gold cords so that he could go to court to try some tax cases. I told him I would have considered it an honor to be fined by a judge all dressed up like he was, and we had a good laugh. Then I went to the Tower of London and they showed me spots and places where kings and queens had been executed. They never waited until sunrise in those days, did they?"

The crowds that greeted him in London, he said, were the most tremendous he had ever seen. It was a continual struggle to get in and out of the hotel. At one time a woman pressed a wrist watch into his hand. Later she called at the hotel and begged Tom to keep it because, she said, his pictures had given her only son much pleasure.

"They all wanted autographs," explained the western star. "I found it was impossible to sign all the books they brought me, so I had a lot of cards printed and I signed the cards. I gave away more than 6,000."

Before he finally reaches the West Coast, Mix will make a flying trip to several cities. These include Boston, Montreal, Toronto, Milwaukee, Chicago, Detroit, Cleveland, Buffalo, Pittsburgh, Washington, Baltimore, Philadelphia, Atlantic City, Cincinnati, Indianapolis, St. Louis, Kansas City and Omaha. Then, back at the studio and making a picture, he can rest.

The Significance of Milwaukee

By Sydney S. Cohen

THE most significant result achieved at the convention of accomplishment just ended at Milwaukee was UNITY. Unity of Theatre Owners to a degree never before dreamed of. Unity of purpose of an extent that augurs well for the future of the entire industry.

This convention was a convention of Principles rather than of Personalities as so many previous gatherings have been. Business Principles of the soundest sort brought this truly representative body of Theatre Owners together, and they checked Personalities at the door, so that no discordant note could mar the harmony of the proceedings.

The M. P. T. O. A. has always been a united body at heart and in purpose—Milwaukee was the scene of the final cementing of the "ties which bind." Now, as never before, we present a united and impregnable front, and stand equipped and ready to bear our full share of responsibility in the burdens of the industry.

Theatre Owners were given the realization that it was in nowise necessary to either give away their theatres for fear that they would be ruined otherwise, or to sell an interest in businesses built by their time and effort.

Milwaukee put a stop to the usual stampede of Theatre Owners "to get in out of the wet" by rushing sheeplike, to buy film in vast quantities—before it is made—from the very companies who are using their (the Theatre Owners') money for their destruction. Our slogan was "Save Your Play Dates" and we have done just that. The unbusinesslike and pernicious practice of selling early in May product not available until late August at the earliest and at least half of the number not available until January, February and March of the following year—product concerning which the seller Knows Nothing, in most instances, save tentative titles—has been halted for the immediate present at least, and this year there will be no repetition of the practice of securing written options on the bulk of a Theatre Owner's play dates on the part of one or two companies to such an extent that many meritorious Independent pictures are kept from his screen by reason of the fact that he is tied up for months to come with no alternative save to play off those pictures which he has bought blindly. Thus denying Producers and Distributors of Quality pictures an opportunity to secure an adequate financial response to enable them to carry on.

The Theatre Owner now realizes that he may expect an ample supply of quality pictures from Independents—and by Independents he means those producers who do not use his money to operate theatres in opposition to him, their customer, and rent their product to him only after they themselves have skimmed all the cream therefrom. There is no monopoly possible where brains or inventive genius is concerned, and the Theatre Owner no longer looks for quality pictures solely from some two or three sources. At least half a dozen producing concerns who do not operate theatres will make, and have made, pictures for this coming season which will far transcend in merit most of the recent output of the so-called aristocrats of producers.

In line with their decision to place all of their workings up on a sound business basis a Bureau of Trade and Commerce has been established with which Independent Producing and Distributing companies—one National Company—have become affiliated, and negotiations are now being concluded with several others. The Theatre Owners have also arranged to have the Board of Directors develop in each regional zone facilities for better service to theatre owner and exchange alike, by appointing paid business managers who will be not only points of contact but who will render services of a nature hitherto only hoped for.

A recommendation was also made for the establishment of a Court of Appeals in re: arbitration cases, said Court to consist of five members, two theatre owners, two exchange representatives, and one unbiased party, preferably from another industry. This is being done to prevent any injustice being done to any Theatre Owner or Distributor by Arbitration Boards in any exchange center.

Every move made at Milwaukee was made with the avowed purpose of advancement, and we feel that the purpose has been achieved. We sought Unity—and Unity is an accomplished fact. We endeavored to instill our own abiding confidence in Independence into our fellow theatre owners, and we have succeeded beyond our wildest dreams. We tried to put on a firm business basis our entire proceedings, and our sterling associates justified our faith in them by using the brains God gave them—those same brains which they have successfully used in developing their personal business enterprises—and giving us the benefit of their counsel and support.

So, united, confident and businesslike, we approach the problems confronting us with the firm hope that Milwaukee will prove to have been the turning point of the Industry, from which, hand in hand, the Theatre Owner and Producer will go forward, with a better understanding—with more assurance of dividends for them both—to heights of success which neither could scale without the other. And being thus united to be freed forever from the fear and dread of domination or destruction at the hands of any one or two "all powerful" producing, distributing and exhibiting companies.

Milwaukee Ammunition Will Be Fired by New Directorate in Two Weeks

R. F. ("PETE") WOODHULL
New president of Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America. He was formerly chairman of the national organization's board of directors.

M. P. T. O. A. Independence War Regime Hinges on Chieftains' Conclusions in New York Meet—Will Name General Manager

By TOM WALLER

THE bullets were made at Milwaukee. The targets are up on the horizon. The shooting for marksmanship starts within the next two weeks when the directorate of the M. P. T. O. A. will meet in New York City in its first executive session under the new regime.

At that meeting the board will complete the roster of new officers. Primarily, it will pick a high powered man to fill the newly created national organization post of general manager. The woods are full of names but the one that seems to be most mentioned for the job is that of Attorney Nathan Burkan.

Under this executive will come zone managers. How many of these there will be is not known at the present writing. It is generally understood, however, that there will be sufficient to cover all of the salient points in the country to carry out the convention's edict of boosting independence.

As was announced at Milwaukee after the convention had gotten well under way and after unity had taken the stellar role, $400,000 was pledged by independent producers and distributors to promote this movement to establish an invulnerable relationship among independent exhibitors and independent producers. The practical facilities for such a relationship will be further strengthened by the M. P. T. O. A.'s Bureau of Trade and Commerce, exhibitors reason.

The accomplishment of this objective points will tend more than anything else to bring about an equasion of quality product, in the opinion of Joseph Seider, one of the new directors.

"It isn't a question of money," this director declared to Moving Picture World, "with many of the independent producers. It is a matter of getting theatres to play their product. With present indications and the brilliant things accomplished at Milwaukee these independent producers and distributors are facilitated with a material incentive.

"What does that mean? Simply this: It forbears that the money which they have and which they were afraid to put into product in the past will go to secure the best scripts, the best stars and the best directors. This step in itself will start real competition in the production field which can only be resultant in an absolute equasion of quality product. It will make impossible a condition where a few companies can rule with utter supremacy because they have the stars and the stories the public wants.

"As the situation has been in the past some of these independent producers have had only a forty per cent demand for their pictures. They should have a percentage in this respect of at least 70 or above. By exhibitors using judgment in filling their playdates this proper percentage will be realized. When it is reached these producers will need no further assurance and the real bidding for the material which goes into quality product will commence.

"This situation will naturally reduce the quality of the 'Big Three.' It will put the independent exhibitor on a par from the box office angle with the theatre which is playing 'Big Three' programs. But the main thing it will do will be to insure the independent ex-

"Off Again; On Again; Finnegan"

REPORTERS and plain ordinary observers who found themselves trying to keep up with political events at Milwaukee Thursday evening found themselves in the position of a toad on a hot griddle. In the afternoon thirty-odd nominations had been made for the Board of Directors, from whom twenty three were to be elected with two places held open for Allied representations. That seemed to settle things. Then from ten o'clock till midnight the wires sizzled with a statement signed by Allied leaders to the effect that they were walking out on the show. "In the morning we will meet and lay plans to enter every state in the Union and perfect our own organization," summed up the attitude. Then a morning of caucusing, scurrying about, and manoeuvering. Finally: "We'll give you ten places" from the Cohen group. "All right. We'll name five now and five later," responds Allied. "What's the joker? Why wait till you get home to name five? Name them all now" counters the M. P. T. O. And so it was settled.

The members of the Board of Directors who will meet within two weeks to form a definite plan of action follow: Glenn Harper, California; A. A. Elliott, New York; Sydney S. Cohen, New York; Harry Davis, Pittsburg; L. M. Sagal, Connecticut; John A. Schwalm, Ohio; A. Julian Brylawski, District of Columbia; Frank A. Keeney, Pennsylvania; Nathan Yamins, Massachusetts; Joseph M. Seider, New Jersey; Eli Whitney Collins, Arkansas; J. J. Harwood, Ohio; J. H. Whitehurst, Maryland; Fred C. Seegert, Wisconsin; E. M. Fay, Rhode Island; Fred Dolle, Kentucky; M. E. Comerford, Pennsylvania; L. B. Wilson, Kentucky; Jake Wells, Virginia; W. W. Watts, Illinois, from the M. P. T. O. A., and the following from the Allied state organizations, who now become members of the board of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America—A. A. Kaplan, Minnesota; J. Miller, Illinois; Charles N. Than, Illinois; J. C. Ritter, Michigan; W. A. Steffes, Minnesota; R. R. Biechele, Kansas; H. A. Cole, Texas; Glenn Cross, Michigan; G. C. Rice, Iowa and A. C. Zering, Indiana.

The election of "Pete" Woodhull as President of the M. P. T. O. A. by the unanimous vote of this Board of Directors brought Milwaukee to a happy conclusion.

F. P.-L. Confirms Purchase of Gordon's New England Chain

THE Famous Players-Lasky Corporation this week confirmed the report that it had acquired the holdings of Nathan H. Gordon and Max Shoolman in Olympia Theatres, Inc., which operates 38 theatres in the New England States. Under the provision of the contract, Famous Players has agreed to purchase the interest of Gordon and Shoolman's associates upon the same terms and conditions as those under which they acquired the minority stock. The sale is effective July 15.

Famous Players-Lasky Corporation through its subsidiary, New England Theatres, Inc., have been associated in the operation of some of the theatres involved in the Olympia Theatres, Inc. The theatres and property involved in the transaction are:

Scollay Square, Washington Street, Central Square, Allston, Fields Corner, Codman Square, Province Building, and Uphams Corner Strand of Boston; Lynn Olympia; Gloucester Olympia; Chelsea Olympia; New Haven Olympia; New Bedford Olympia; Harvard, North Cambridge; fifty per cent. of the Maine and New Hampshire Theatres Company; Empire, New Bedford; Olympia, Brockton; Capitol, Allston; City Theatre Building, Brockton; Colonial, Haverhill; and the following properties in Salem: Maynes property, Pingree property, Federal Theatre, Salem Theatre, Empire Theatre, Newton Theatre and Union Square Theatre.

Great Attendance Expected at International Film Congress

By Stephen Bush

THE program of the International Film Congress to be held in Paris on June 22, 23 and 24, contemplates three full working days which, according to present plans, may be increased if the necessities of the situation should seem to require such a step. The program is divided into four main heads embracing a great variety of questions. Among them may be mentioned proposed measures for an increase in the number of films of an educational character, making use of the screen as a means of civilization, enlightenment and the promotion of good will and better understanding of the nations.

The question of historical films comes in for special consideration. It is proposed to create boards of historical experts who are to guard against historical inaccuracies or against wilful perversions of history. Means and ways are to be considered to keep historical films on the highest possible artistic level and to promote the production of them as much as possible. Another head of the program deals with the theory problem of censorship. There is to be a discussion of this subject in all its phases. The congress does not want a censorship which will interfere even in the slightest degree with the freedom of artistic expression.

The feasibility of creating an international supervision of films of the first rank, with a view of securing the greatest possible artistic and technical perfection, will be discussed on the first day of the congress. The second day of the congress will be largely devoted to considering the possibilities of international film bureaus which are to be part of the administrative functions of the League of Nations.

This, of course, opens up a very interesting vista of possibilities. The congress wants such a bureau to be built upon a basis of voluntary and intelligent co-operation. The expenses of maintaining such a bureau are to be shared on a basis of fifty-fifty by the League of Nations and the producers adhering to such a program and willing that such a bureau should be permanently established. The organization of such a bureau would, of course, take some time, but the congress hopes to lay the foundations. Other questions deal with the relations between artists and producers and authors and producers.

In addition to the directors of the various countries to be invited, the scope of the congress will allow producers, scenario writers, theatreowners and representatives of film men's organizations to participate in the deliberations. As to the permanent organization of the congress nothing definite has as yet been decided. The French government extends its famous generous hospitality to the film industry of the world and as a proof of its good will has placed the great hall of the Sorbonne at the disposal of the delegates. The more important nations which have promised to send representatives are France, the U. S. A., Germany, Italy, Great Britain, Sweden, Spain, Austria and Czecko-Slovakia.

In many ways, of course, all this will be pioneer work and it is difficult to predict the value or importance of the congress. There is little doubt, however, that the foremost men of the film world will be gathered in Paris and that above all things Europe and America will become better acquainted and find out where they may benefit by intelligent co-operation and an exchange of ideas. Acceptances of invitations are arriving at the Paris headquarters every day.

With more than a dozen new theatres underway or projected for Chicago and its suburbs since the first of the year, the past week brought three more to light. Of these latest, the big house projected is another for the Ascher circuit that will cost $1,000,000, it is said, and seat 2,880 people. Architect J. E. O. Pridmore is drawing the plans for the house that is to go up on the west side of Sheridan Road. The Aschers are reported to have paid Ready, Cormack & Strauss $148,000 for the site.

The plans call for six stores and offices on the second floor of the structure. A fully equipped stage will be a part of the new theatre and presentations, vaudeville and motion pictures will be on the program. No name has been selected as yet and it is planned to rush work on the project so as to open about January 1.

This will give the circuit two new houses this year as the house going up at Lawrence and Harding avenue is expected to be ready for occupancy by late Fall.

Another theatre, as announced last week, is to go up on Irving Park boulevard near Central Park avenue and William F. Kallenbach, the owner, is reported to have plans drawn for a house that will cost in excess of a quarter of a million. Abe Gumbiner, of the Gumbiner circuit, also gave out plans for the improvement of the northwest corner of Irving Park boulevard and Sheridan Road, which he owns, and Ready, Cormack & Strauss will handle the property for him, according to their announcement.

BREAK GROUND FOR BIG FILM BUILDING IN LOS ANGELES

With the turning over of the first spadeful of dirt by A. L. Gore and a group of prominent men assisting in the ceremonies, the formal ground-breaking for the erection of a great new film exchange building in Los Angeles took place this week. This building will be devoted exclusively to the motion picture industry, being planned as offices of the various local film exchanges and affiliated businesses which require a certain type of building for the conduct of their operations. It will accommodate all the film exchanges in the City of Los Angeles, providing ground-floor space suitable for each exchange requirement and with suitable rear entrance to facilitate deliveries.

Union Abroad

Arthur Loew, Manager of the Foreign Department of Metro-Goldwyn announced this week that negotiations with Edgar Costil, managing director of the French Gaumont have been consummated providing for the amalgamation of Metro-Goldwyn with Gaumont in France, Belgium, Switzerland, North Africa, Egypt, Syria and Palestine.

The deal has united the forces of Metro-Goldwyn and Gaumont in the operation of the Gaumont theatres and exchanges in these territories.

$50,000 Check Fulfills This Week Milwaukee Pledge of Independents

First Materialization of Conclave Plans to Be Followed by Larger Sum and Bigger Organization—Optimistic Statements

THE presentation of a check for fifty thousand dollars to the united exhibitor organizations before the close of this week—thus carrying out the pledge made at Milwaukee—is the first definite action of the Independent Motion Picture Producers' and Distributors' Association following the return from the convention city. The next is the completion of plans to raise a greater sum among the members of the greatly enlarged association to strengthen the cooperation planned between the I. M. P. P. D. A. and the theatre owners.

There are no strings to the check, no "ifs" or "ands." It is delivered into the control of the M. P. T. O. A. as part of the fund to be spent by that organization "for propaganda to keep independence for independents."

The cash typifies the spirit of enthusiasm brought back to New York by the independents and the enthusiastic outlook foreseen by those men over the prospects for an organization that now includes fifty producers and over a hundred exchanges in its membership. To back that enthusiasm a few had definite play dates—bookings—to talk about.

The prospect of the early engaging of a high powered executive to co-ordinate the organization's strength and direct its co-operation with the exhibitor groups is very strong.

Statements secured by Moving Picture World during the week reflect the independents' view of the results achieved at Milwaukee. They follow:

Sam Warner
Warner Brothers

Whether the convention resulted in the success predicted for it remains to be seen. But I do know that from one angle alone—acquainting the exhibitors with independent product they can rely on—it was a huge success. When have the exhibitors been able to tell at this time of the year just how many independent pictures would be available for the season ahead?

Before the convention no exhibitor booking in the independent field knew exactly just what product could be obtained for their playdates. Through the efforts of Sydney Cohen, they found when they reached the convention hall there was some 800 independent pictures assured them for the coming season. If it developed nothing else but this, the convention was worth while.

From Warner Bros.' standpoint it certainly was a big success. The exhibitors learned several things about our product, namely, that there would be forty pictures for next season, that the output would be distributed through the Warner sales force, that there had been no affiliation with any theatres or booking combines and that the Warner Bros.' product for 1925-26 remains unsold and is open to anyone who wants it.

So from the angle of getting acquainted first hand with our product and other independent product, I should call the convention a big success and considerable praise is due to the men who got behind it and made it so.

J. G. Bachmann of P. B. Schulberg Productions

The convention that has just terminated has, I think, brought producers and exhibitors into a closer understanding. It has been of real benefit insofar as it has afforded them a chance for the sane discussion of their common problems. The men who came to Milwaukee came in a spirit of co-operation and all the branches of the industry represented there have benefited by the mutual contact.

The serious issues touched upon during the conclave are questions that cannot be settled in four days or four months. What progress was accomplished lies solely in the wider perspective gained by all concerned.

The biggest problem—the survival of the independent theatreowner and the survival of the independent producer—was, of course, the subject one heard on all sides. I feel that the convention strengthened the faith of each in the other. Every exhibitor I talked to showed not only a willingness but an enthusiasm for the independents' product. His conservativeness in holding his playdates will react to the advantage of the independent producer who can successfully show Mr. Exhibitor that he has quality pictures as good as those offered by the producers who would like to force him out of business.

I believe absolutely in the sincerity of those theatreowners who assured me that they would stand behind us with their playdates. On the strength of that belief B. P. Schulberg Productions is undertaking with confidence the biggest program it has ever attempted.

If the industry can maintain the spirit of the Milwaukee convention throughout the coming season, its benefits will be real and far-reaching.

Los Angeles Deserves It

If Los Angeles can only display one tenth of one per cent. of the pep and enthusiasm in their welcome to convention delegates next year as they displayed at Milwaukee in gaining the coveted assignment—then they'll have to rewrite the Hospitality Dictionary. Glenn Harper's Boosters arrived on the scene with their own band, a bevy of pretty orange grove maidens, and odd carloads of oranges. They were here, there, and everywhere—under the skilful stage management of John Quinn. There wasn't a doubt in the mind of any visitor from the moment he stepped off the train that Los Angeles would be the scene of the next convention. And Los Angeles it will be.

Harrison Asks Hays to List Houses Owned by Producers

Below is published a copy of a letter dated May 18 and addressed to Will Hays by P. S. Harrison, of Harrison's Reports:

Many complaints that have reached me from exhibitors who have at some time or other come before a Joint Arbitration Board give me reason to believe that the exhibitor representatives on these boards are often managers of producer-distributor controlled theatres.

In reading over a copy of the rules that are on file in your office as part of the Standard Exhibition Contract, I note that under Article I—Election of Board of Arbitration—the following.

"The Board of Arbitration shall consist of six persons, three of whom shall be members of the Film Board of Trade, called distributors' representatives, and three of whom shall be proprietors or managers of theatres in the zone where the Film Board of Trade is located, called exhibitors' representatives; provided, however, that in no event shall such exhibitors' representatives be managers of theatres owned or controlled by producers or distributors."

Feeling that it is your desire to have the exhibitors assured that the Joint Arbitration Board trials are conducted on a manner above suspicion, I am prompted to request that a list of theatres owned, controlled or booked by the various producer-distributor members of your organization be made public at the earliest possible date.

Such an act on your part will, I am certain, remove the growing suspicion of bias that now exists in the minds of exhibitors throughout the country, and bring about a renewed confidence and readier co-operation in the work of arbitration.

I am sending a copy of this letter to each of the editors of the trade publications so that, when the list is prepared, it may be given the widest possible publicity, thus affording such exhibitors as are brought before these boards an opportunity to exercise their contract right of challenge.

structive work or accomplished more good than the one just held in Milwaukee. If the policies and ideas suggested there are put into operation and carried through it will be of great benefit to the entire industry. As a general rule there is much talk and many threats of what will be done at conventions of this sort and in most cases it simply turns out to be what is termed "hot air."

At Milwaukee, so far as I could see, this was not the case. There was a determined effort to do good work, politics were kept out of it and the leaders of the theatre-owners saw to it that their work was not in vain and that the future of this business was at stake with all else to be disregarded.

To those who so successfully fought the battles of the exhibitors and to those who conducted the campaign in behalf of the independent producers and distributors all praise is due. They had a tough job, they met it with force and a strong front and really accomplished things.

The Milwaukee convention will go down in the history as one of the most successful ever held, and I predict that the business done there will have a far-reaching effect and eventually be of benefit to us all.

Louis Weiss

It is an excellent sign for the motion picture industry when producers, distributors and exhibitors can get together in one room to discuss amicably and without prejudice their common problems. The very willingness of all parties to sit quietly in the face of a common danger and hear all three sides of the same story at once is the greatest factor in the settlement of those same problems.

It is to me a source of great satisfaction that the many exchanges entered into the ranks of the I. M. P. P. D. A., where they will be joined with the producers for their own protection as well as that of the producers.

These get-together movements can only work for the eventual benefit of the exhibitor. He has been asked so often to give support to the independent producer so as to keep an open market with its consequent healthy competition, and when producers and exchangemen give evidence of a reliable supply of good product as they are now doing they will find that the exhibitor is only too willing to play the game with them.

The very best evidence of good-will and the desire to settle common problems is shown in the fact that both the producers and the exchangemen gave, not resolutions or promises, but put their own hard cash down on the table for a fund to carry on the work they started at the convention. When men are willing to pay money they mean business.

Independence cannot be stifled!

Independence will go on in production, because production requires a spark of creative genius, and no single group of individuals can create and supply either the volume or the variety of product to satisfy the public's fickle taste for motion pciture entertainment.

Independent exhibition will go on, because the individual theatreowner can give his theatre independent enterprise and personal showmanship with which the theatre combine, under long distance management, cannot compete.

continued, and I feel for a certainty that these exhibitors mean real business.

We independents will make bigger and better pictures—genuine box-office product of merit so long as we have the exhibitors with us. The exhibitors realize, too, that their chances of survival are increased when they book the Independent Producers' Product.

Some of the biggest stars are anxious to play for the independents. Besides, present-day independents have been schooled with the best of the big exhibitors and they know the picture business.

It's for the betterment of the industry to back the independents!

Jesse J. Goldburg
Independent Pictures Corp.

For the first time in the motion picture industry, the independent producer and distributor in co-operation with the independent exchange manager have evidenced a sincere and permanent disposition to co-operate. For the first time in the history of the industry there has been formulated a solid working agreement, not alone amongst the independent producers, distributors and ex-

Independent distribution will go on, because distribution involves service and service comes from organization and spirit.

During the year that has just passed, the independent factors have faced and surmounted more apparent obstacles than in any single season since the industry fought its way out of threatened monopoli²ation of patent ownership.

The most certain evidence that independence cannot be stifled is the fact that the whole industry has been awakened by the problems of the last year to the seriousness of conditions—an awakening which has aroused independent enterprise and individual initiative as all important factors in the fight against monopoly.

Jack Cohn
Columbia Pictures Corp.

The present-day exhibitor will make any producer sit up and take notice. I have never seen a body of exhibitors which appeared more determined to get together with the Independent Producers than these men, he change men on the one hand, but also in co-operation with the theatreowners of America.

We all had brought home to us the lesson that the salvation of our end of the business, and the preservation of our integrity and our investment, rested only in that co-operation that should act as a permanent bulwark against the encroachment of those who seek to corral or monopolize the industry to the exclusion of those who have devoted a substantial portion of their lives to the upbuilding of the business itself.

The exhibitors of the country are quite satisfied that the making of worthwhile and good motion pictures can never rest in the hands of a chosen few, but that the independent producer is in a better position to serve the theatres of America with the kind of product that the public wants, provided that the independent producer is assured of a proper outlet and booking for his product. They realize that the independent producer at times is in a far better position to produce the right kind of pictures as compared with those who maintain large institutions where personal contact between executives and employees is hardly possible.

The Milwaukee Convention sounded the emancipation of the independent distributor. It sounded the death knell of monopoly. It gave courage to those who heretofore lacked courage in their battle with the so-called trust.

W. E. Shallenberger
Arrow Pictures Corp.

The net result of the Milwaukee Convention of the Independent Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America can be summed up in one brief phrase: It was an unqualified success. We have achieved complete unity on a progressive program against monopoly and for business freedom. Our Association, since the admission thereunto of the state rights exchanges throughout the country, is now fully organized, fully representative and absolutely harmonious.

Because of the enthusiastic co-operation rendered by the newspapers, we have been enabled, via their columns, to place our cause before the people of the United States. We have taken the public into our confidence, and in this course we propose to continue. For there is monopoly, there is oppression, there is a closing door. And now that we have a united force with which to combat these evils, we can make our fight secure in the knowledge that public sentiment with us 100 per cent.

Fully co-operative, our organization has placed itself squarely on record with the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, backing up their practical plan with its practical cash. Incidentally, to the I.M.P.P.D.A. goes the honor of leading the way toward a practical solution of the problems which heretofore harassed the industry

The Milwaukee Conventions will go into history as high-lights of progress. They demonstrate conclusively the hard-headed business sense and the desire for fair play on the part of all concerned. Furthermore, they represent a definite committment to the cause of Independence—first, last and all the time—in the motion picture industry.

METRO-GOLDWYN DECLARES DIVIDEND

The board of directors has declared a quarterly dividend of 1¾ per cent on the preferred stock of the company, payable June 15, 1925, to stockholders of record at the close of business May 29, 1925.

HARRY WARNER DENIES RUMOR

Persistent reports circulated in Milwaukee that Warner Bros. were about to become affiliated with Metro-Goldwyn were denied by Harry M. Warner in a telegram to the New York office of the company sent just before he left Los Angeles last Sunday for the east. The rumors became current on the second day of the convention and caused Warner Bros. no little annoyance.

N. C. CONVENTION IN JUNE

At a meeting of the board of directors of the North Carolina M. P. T. O. held in Charlotte last week, June 22 and 23 were named as the dates of the annual convention, and Wrightsville Beach, N. C., as the place. The meeting was called for this purpose, and also to make temporary arrangements for the carrying on of the organization's work since the death of their president, Colonel Henry B. Varner, of Lexington, N. C.

Al Smith's Greeting

Governor Alfred E. Smith of New York State did not forget exhibitors when they convened in national convention at Milwaukee. He sent the following message to Sydney S. Cohen at the Hotel Wisconsin and it was read at the convention banquet:

"Best wishes for successful outcome of convention. Congratulations and greetings to picture exhibitors. You know how I value their co-operation and that I have their best interests at heart."

Three Months' Income of Skouras Bros. Is $58,979

The net income of Skouras Brothers Enterprises, Inc., for the first quarter of 1925, ended March 31, before deducting federal income taxes but after deducting interest and depreciation and expenses, was $58,979.17.

The board of directors at their meeting on May 16 declared the regular quarterly dividend of 75 cents a share of the 25,000 shares of Class A no par value stock. It is payable August 1 to stockholders of record of July 25. This dividend will total $18,750.

The board approved the contract with the Boaz-Kiel Construction Company for the general work on the New Ambassador Theatre and office building, which will cost $5,500,000.

Document Carefully Compiled by Jos. Seider Attacking Uniform Contract and Urging Court of Appeals Is Well Received

THE Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., come in for some implied criticisms at the hands of Joseph M. Seider in his report on arbitraton boards, made at the Milwaukee Convention. He points out that negotiations on the Uniform Contract have not been completed, calling the document a "one-way street," and details its history. His report takes its first exception to a section of Clause First, which provides that in the event any pictures are released by the distributor during the next succeeding contract season, the exhibitor "shall accept, pay for and exhibit them at such later date." The complete report:

It has been agreed that Clause First shall be changed to provide for the year commencing with the playing of the first picture under the contract instead of a specific date as heretofore. A sentence has been added to specify the season by year. On the balance of this Clause there has been no agreement.

The contract now provides that in the event any pictures are released by the Distributor during the next succeeding season, the Distributor shall be obliged to deliver and the Exhibitor shall accept, pay for and exhibit them at such later period.

This is obviously unfair. The Exhibitor purchases a picture or pictures expecting them to be released within a specified period. He relies upon having them available. If the film is not released, he is put to hardship and perhaps expense. We contend that in the event the photoplay is released during the succeeding season the Exhibitor shall have the OPTION of accepting the picture at such later period. And we contend that the Distributor shall be BOUND to deliver such picture or pictures during the next succeeding period and not leave the option with the Distributor as now provided. How simple it is for a Distributor, upon finding a production above the average to withhold release and then re-sell this production, perhaps under a different title, for any multiple of the original price.

Clause Third will be changed to provide that in the event of loss or destruction of film, the Exhibitor shall pay at the rate of 4c per foot for the first reel and the actual laboratory cost for the balance, instead of 6c per foot as now provided. The Distributor wants to add that the Laboratory Bill shall be accepted as the cost. This is purely a question of fact and should be decided by the Arbitration Board.

In Clause Fifth the failure of the Producer to make or deliver to the Distributor (in most cases himself) should not relieve the Distributor from delivering the contracted picture to the Exhibitor.

It is our contention, but the Distributors do not coincide, that the word "intention" shall be eliminated in both places in Clause Seventh where it appears. Where the Distributor is entitled to relief he has the right to it forthwith, but the provision is made in this Clause that the Exhibitor must first prove intent upon the Distributor's part before he can receive relief. We also request the Exhibitor be relieved of giving immediate notice in writing of his exercising his option to terminate the contract during the continuation of the Distributor's defaults specified as provided in this Clause. The Distributor has no such obligation.

Clause Eighth is the all important one of the contract. It provides for selection and designation of play dates.

The proposed changes that have not been disputed in this Clause are:

Notice of Availability has been changed from three weeks to two weeks. The giving of a new notice of Availability in cases where the picture is not available on the dates asked for by the Exhibitor, has been eliminated and in its place substituted the provision that the picture must be open to the Exhibitor at the first available dates, not earlier than two weeks or later than six weeks after the exhibition dates first selected by the Exhibitor.

Here is the rub. Experience has shown that the majority of claims for the Arbitration Boards to decide arise from the Exhibitor's failure to book the pictures he purchases. This is not the Exhibitor's fault. The fault can truly be charged to this Clause Eighth of the contract.

A second or subsequent run theatre invariably must buy his pictures in groups. When he calls for play dates, they are not available because of the failure of the first run theatre to book his dates or because the first run had not been sold or the Distributor withholding release in the particular territory. The Exhibitor is forced to scramble for pictures immediately available and he has to buy more blocks. He has been forced into an overbought condition. Before he could play off the pictures he has been compelled to add, the first groups become available and the Distributor clamors for play dates which the Exhibitor has not to give. The result is heartaches, overbuying and arbitration cases.

We forcefully urged that in such cases, where the theatre is forced in order to remain open to buy these additional pictures because the product he had first contracted for is not available, that he be relieved at his option from the first contract.

Upon our request it has been agreed to add a clause, providing that the photoplays shall not contain any advertising that the Producer thereof is compensated for directly or indirectly.

We object to Clause Twelfth which provides that we must advertise each plotoplay as a Paramount, Metro-Goldwyn or whoever the Producer may be and that we must adhere to the form of announcement contained in the Producer's advertising.

Also Clause Thirteenth, which provides for our paying a government tax which may sometimes be imposed. And Clause Fifteenth which tells us the minimum we are permitted to charge even though we do not play percentage. And also the Sixteenth Clause, which says we must lease all advertising matter from them. It has been agreed that the Percentage Clause Fourteenth be written so that it provides that payment shall be made the day following the close of the engagement and that in the event it is for more than seven days, payment shall be made at the end of each week or fraction thereof.

Clause Seventeenth is the Deposit Clause. Of course, we want it out. As a compromise we offered that a receipt be given upon the payment of a deposit, that 6 per cent interest be paid thereon and that such payment be subject to the laws in the respective States wherein the deposits or advance payments are paid, which provide for the segregating and trusteeing for safety. The payment should apply to the last picture played. The Distributor consents to issuing the receipt but not the other conditions.

Clause Eighteenth—the procedure, under this clause at present, is that an application for a contract becomes a contract only after it had been accepted by the home office of the Distributor within a specified period.

We suggested that this be reversed; that a contract be a contract subject to disaffirmance by the home office of the Distributor within the specified period. This the Distributors' attorneys at first consented to, but later qualified their acceptance by providing that the contract be considered a contract if signed by the branch manager and in addition be subject to disaffirmance by the home office within the specified period.

We are better off, in preference to this addition, with the present procedure. We now have the right to recall or withdraw our application any time before its acceptance.

The proposed schedule of Distributors is as follows:

Albany	10	New Haven	10
Charleston	15	Oklahoma City	20
Chicago	15	Philadelphia	10
Dallas	20	St. Louis	15
Detroit	15	Seattle	20
Kansas City	15	Jacksonville	15
Milwaukee	15	Boston	10
Butte	30	Charlotte	15
N. Y. City	7	Cleveland	15
Peoria	15	Des Moines	15
Portland	30	Indianapolis	15
San Francisco	20	Los Angeles	25
Little Rock	20	Minneapolis	20
Atlanta	15	New Orleans	15
Buffalo	10	Omaha	15
Cincinnati	15	Pittsburgh	10
Denver	20	Salt Lake City	20
El Paso	25	Washington	10
Louisville	15	Memphis	15
N. New Jersey	7

We urge that the number of days in the schedule just read be reduced.

Clause Nineteenth, the Arbitration Clause, has virtually not been touched. The only changes are that both parties may mutually agree to have their dispute heard in another city, and the very important change: that of eliminating the minimum amount the Board can assess against an Exhibitor in the event of his failure to submit to arbitration or comply with the decision of the Board of Arbitration. This means the Board of Arbitration and not the Film Club or Board of Trade must fix the maximum amount that the Distributor may request as a deposit and it gives the Board of Arbitration the power to waive any additional deposit if the case, in their judgment, warrants such exception.

In addition, there are a number of ethical provisions which will be printed on the contract which your Committee has approved and which it urges you to respect.

The rules, referred to in the Arbitration Clause of the Contract, provide for the appointment of the arbitrators and the rules and procedure of the Arbitration Boards.

These rules make of arbitration a purely collection medium for the Distributors and the Arbitration Board a collection agency.

The arbitrators should not assume the functions of a Court of Law. They are neither qualified nor empowered to so function.

The purpose of arbitration is to avoid litigation and the theatre owner involved in a dispute should have the right of definitely and in fact chosing fifty per cent of the members of the Arbitration Board who will arbitrate his particular case.

Evidence should not be limited by rules. All matters pertaining to the dispute involved should be allowed to be brought out; as, for instance, a pamphlet or press book in which the Producer makes representation as to the quality of his pictures, which in our opinion is very important evidence, should be considered by Arbitration Boards.

Provision should be made for the refunding of expenses incurred by the theatre owner who receives a verdict in his favor in a matter of arbitration. Very often the theatre owner is compelled in order to defend himself in a matter that has no merit.

The present contract is so unfair, so one-sided and the method of carrying out the Board's verdict is confiscatory. I know that $10,000 was paid to a reputed firm of attorneys to draw the arbitration clause, but it appears it was paid so that the illegal procedure should have the semblance of legality. No firm of lawyers can make an Arbitration Board both the judge and the sheriff. It is vicious to have the power to close a person's theatre for failure to comply with the ward of a Board of Arbitration, any part of which he may not have had the right to appoint and the arbitration proceedings having been based on a contract which he has had to sign against his better judgment and wishes through not having the choice of any other course.

The independent producers should compete with the present system by setting up in addition, their own arbitration system and tribunal, founded on service and a square deal.

If a contract is agreed upon and approved by this organization, it should be retroactive so that our members in purchasing their new year's product shall have the assurance that it will be under the terms and conditions that are finally agreed upon.

Your committee recommends that a Committee of five members be appointed by the Board of Directors to serve for the ensuing year. This Committee be empowered to consummate a mutual and equitable approved standard exhibition contract.

If this is accomplished, this committee shall form with the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors and the Independent Motion Picture Producers & Distributors of America, an Arbitration Committee.

This Arbitration Committee shall with a like number of Distributors constitute a Court of Appeals with power to review such disputes that are referred to it by local Arbitration Boards to prevent any injustice being done to either side in any local or xechange center.

We further recommend with the provision that if an equitable contract is arranged, that this organization assumes the supervision of the Exhibitor's side of the Arbitration System.

That this organization establish and maintain an Arbitration Bureau which shall tabulate records and decisions and shall keep every Arbitration Board, each local and subdivisional unit and their counsel fully advised of decisions in every matter and in every territory.

Mr. Lichtman will return early in the Fall to complete arrangements for important production activities which he will direct.

Manitoba Film Men Resent Statements by Local Mayor

A STRONG delegation representing the exhibitors and exchange officials of Manitoba conferred with Mayor Webb of Winnipeg this week regarding statements he had made before a gathering of the Council of Women in Winnipeg. The film men put the question up to him squarely as to his stand toward moving pictures and, in reply, the official declared that what he had intended to mean was that a warning was necessary for the motion picture producers; that if the picture shows were not watched they would become as harmful as "the old bars" or "the dope traffic."

Several speakers in the deputation took Mayor Webb to task for his comment, pointing out that his remarks had hurt the business. Explanations followed and Mayor Webb promised, it is said, to write to the newspapers explaining his exact opinion regarding the moving picture situation.

"Let us have a censorship that will raise the tone so that there will be nothing shown that will affect the moral status of boys and girls," said Mayor Webb. "The bars would not have been put out of business, only the people got sick of the way they were conducted and wiped them out."

D. E. Fisher, manager of the Garrick Theatre, Winnipeg, and president of the Manitoba Moving Picture Exhibitors Association, and A. S. Clatworthy, Vitagraph manager in Winnipeg, declared that frequently the theatre staged beautiful performances but received little support from the public. Many times producers had brought out features that were artistic, high-toned pictures only to find them commercial failures because they lacked "punch."

Mayor Webb declared that the censor board should be made up of women who had three or more children of their own but a number of speakers rose to the defense of the Manitoba Board of Moving Picture Censors.

Mr. Clatworthy declared that mothers with three children would not find the time for picture censoring. George Graham, manager of the Classic Theatre, Winnipeg, said that he had taken pictures out of his theatre when he considered them harmful. Mr. Graham believed that the screen had more influence than the pulpit but he had had troubles over "religious" pictures, however.

George Law, of the Universal exchange, declared that Manitoba had the soundest film censor board on the whole continent, while Walter F. Davis, manager of the Metropolitan Theatre, also had high praise for the Manitoba censors. H. N. Jernberg, manager of the Province Theatre; H. Morton of the Gaiety and C. A. Meade of the Lyceum Theatre, also spoke.

PARAMOUNT DISTRIBUTORS RETURN HOME

Carl P. York and Walter Le Mat, proprietors of the Liberty Film Company of Stockholm, Paramount distributors in the Scandinavian countries, sailed for home on the Paris on May 16, following a month's visit in the United States. Messrs. York and LeMat attended the International Paramount Conventions in New York and Los Angeles, following which they concluded arrangements with E. E. Shauer, director of the foreign department of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, for an extensive sales and exploitation campaign for Paramount Pictures in Sweden, Denmark and Norway during the coming year.

Secretary of Labor Davis Pens Strong Endorsement of Greater Movie Season

Incorporations

Last week's crop of motion picture companies sprouting in New York state along with the spring weather, totaled just seven, with only one of the number possessing any capitalization to speak of, this one embarking with $150,000 capitalization. The companies receiving their charters from the secretary of state, following their incorporation, were: Shilling Motion Picture Productions, $150,000, C. B. James, H. Shopson, William Shilling, New York city; Anita Stewart Pictures, Inc., $20,000, Andrew Bellanca, D. O. Decker, S. S. Braunberg, New York city; The Song of the Suds, Inc., $20,000, George Pfeil, Herman Ellison, Brooklyn; Saul Sigelschaffer, New York; Revel-Art Productions, Inc., $10,000, R. Alexander, Roy Gould, F. Perrone, New York city, while the capitalization of the following was not stated; John C. Terry, Inc., H. Cohn, Edward M. James, Celia Shakin, New York; Advance Trailer Service Corporation, L. Joffe, L. A. Naftalison, J. A. Sarafite, New York; Acme Booking Offices, Inc. O. S. Moran, Agnes McNamara, J. J. Hahn, New York city.

Quebec Censors Okay Outright 1414 of 2171 Films

According to the official report of the Quebec Board of Moving Picture Censors, headquarters at Montreal, for the fiscal year ending April 30, the Board had an exceedingly busy 12 months.

The official statistics of the work showed that, during the year, the Quebec censors examined all told 2,171 film subjects, comprising 6,639 reels of celluloid of approximately 1,000 feet each. The report indicates that 1,414 subjects were accepted by the board without any modification, this being almost exactly two-thirds of the year's total. The 1,414 pictures which were passed without change of any kind represented 2,685 reels of film—or 40 per cent. of the total footage.

The number of moving picture subjects which were rejected on first showing was 234, but it is pointed out that the Quebec Board ultimately passed 218 subjects which had been reconstructed or revised under the direction of the Board, the revisions being done by the exchanges. The censors themselves made desired changes in 523 film subjects altogether, modifications being made by the censors themselves in some 24 per cent. of the total submitted for examination.

Announcement was made that a great many of the pictures which had been reconstructed by exchanges under orders of the censor board had previously been rejected by the board but approved when resubmitted after changes. The actual number of pictures finally condemned during the year is not definitely stated in the published report.

"Count on Me", He Writes Hays—Governors of Massachusetts, Rhode Island and Maine Also Pledge Support

COUNT on me to encourage the success of Greater Movie Season! I hope the celebration will be all that you anticipate for it."

Secretary of the Department of Labor, James J. Davis, has gone on record as an enthusiastic supporter of Greater Movie Season which Will H. Hays, president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc. is inaugurating; and capping the offers of assistance the project has evoked from national associations, the Governors of Massachusetts, Rhode Island and Maine have forwarded hearty official endorsements.

"Ten years ago we thought that the moving pictures of that day were just about as near perfection as it was possible to make them," stated Secretary Davis. "But I happened to be in the theatre the other night when a news reel was shown, a part of which was an Easter parade in Washington a number of years ago. Sandwiched in with the pictures produced in the last month or so the effect was almost startling."

"The Greater Movie Season ought to be an inspiration," he continued. "The pictures are unquestionably getting finer every season, not only in the physical and mechanical details but in the quality of entertainment they provide. The theatres which are best patronized are those which are showing only the very highest type of plays educationally, inspirationally and morally as well as mechanically."

Governor Alvan F. Fuller, of Massachusetts, wrote from the Executive Chamber in Boston:

"The Greater Movie Season, with its promise of finer and better pictures should interest the millions of motion picture patrons throughout our country. Every advance in this wonderful field of entertainment with its wide scope for public influence and good, should be endorsed and encouraged so that we may have pictures that appeal to the best in the hearts and minds of those who do the world's work, and to those who are soon to step into the ranks and continue the work. The best movies are those furnishing a pleasant memory which can be recalled in moments of leisure."

Governor A. J. Pothier, of Rhode Island, wrote:

"I am glad to say that I can heartily endorse the campaign for a Greater Movie Season, to be inaugurated next August. Motion pictures if properly produced and exhibited have a great educational feature especially to the young of our country. This campaign to produce better pictures, I am sure, will be a great success."

Governor Ralph O. Brewster of Maine:

"Every good citizen viewing the increasing unsettlement that is abroad in our land must be deeply concerned with any movement that will make for cleaner and better motion pictures, because of the profound influence the moving picture theatre is today exerting upon the development of our youth. To the extent that your organization and your efforts contribute to this improvement you are entitled to the commendation of every official and every citizen concerned with the things that are of good report."

Under those auspices, Greater Movie Season should command immense public interest throughout New England and when the national field campaign gets under way gubernatorial endorsements in every state cooperating with the Hays organization are confidently expected.

The Associated Advertising Clubs of the World, in convention at Houston, Texas, heard Greater Movie Season cited as a stimulant to all business appealing to popular taste, in the course of an address by J. Homer Platten, treasurer of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc.

"The men who write copy for national advertisers will be quick to utilize the pulling power of motion pictures as a theme of popular appeal," said Mr. Platten, "and just as they weave into their illustrated copy turkeys at Thanksgiving time, they may use illustrations of motion picture theatres in their advertising around the first of August. For example, the cigarette manufacturer might show in his twenty-four sheet poster, a man lighting a cigarette with a motion picture theatre sketched into the background and possibly the words, 'Greater Movie Season' lettered in. The clothing manufacturer could present his new fall styles showing the men leaving a motion picture theatre. The possibilities are immeasureable when the intensified public interest in the screen aroused by the industry's campaign is considered."

An active membership of several millions is represented by the organizations that already stand pledged to support and participate in Greater Movie Season. The immediate effect of this will be to bring to theatres people who do not customarily attend, and with every producer and exhibitor effort turned towards providing the best possible screen entertainment during August, much will be accomplished not only in silencing criticism of motion pictures by people unfamiliar with them, but also in converting the irregulars into constant patrons by sheer merit of performance.

Thousand Exhibitors Already Signed to Laemmle's Complete Service Plan

Universal Announces Details of Revolutionary Method of Aiding Small Town Showman —Lowest Rate Is $1 a Reel

A REVOLUTIONARY sales plan inaugurated by Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Pictures Corporation, as a means primarily of helping the small, one, two and three-night a week exhibitor to stay independent, is announced by Universal. It is a Complete Service Plan by which complete Universal service will be supplied to any exhibitor at a rate commensurate with what he can afford.. The weekly service is offered as low as $1 a reel, actually less than the accepted figures, for distribution costs $1.05 a reel.. The plan has been gradually put into effect in various exchange territories during the past eight weeks and has met with extraordinary enthusiasm and success. Almost 1,000 exhibitors have applied for the service, to date.

The Universal statement concerning the new plan is as follows:

"Carl Laemmle has taken another far-reaching step in the interests of the small exhibitor. It is the inauguration of a Complete Service Plan by which any exhibitor may get complete film service at a heretofore unprecedented service fee. In the case of the small, one, two and three-nights-a-week houses, the service may run as low as $1 a reel if necessary. This cost actually is less than the accepted distribution cost of $1.05 a reel.

"The Complete Service Plan is Laemmle's latest step in the continuation of his 'live and let live' policy. It is proof positive that he is on the level with the exhibitor and that he means to take every possible step necessary to keep the small theatre open and the small exhibitor independent.

"The Universal chief recently proved his assertion that Universal's theatre purchases were for outlet only by offering to sell Universal product over the head of any Universal house, and even to sell any Universal theatre itself, providing he were assured an outlet for Universal pictures in the community involved. Another recent development of the Laemmle 'white treatment' policy was the inauguration of a Cost Plus 10 Per Cent. basis for selling Universal pictures. The new Complete Service Plan marks a new phase of Laemmle's willingness to make extraordinary concessions for the welfare of the exhibitors whose good-will and success have been close to his heart during his entire picture career.

"The Universal service under the new plan includes the Universal Jewels of The Signal Tower' group and the first White List, now being released. It includes the western features in the 1924-1925 productions made with Hoot Gibson, Jack Hoxie and William Desmond. It includes the six serials released during the past season down to "The Fighting Ranger," now being released. There also are fifty-two Century Comedies, among them Wanda Wiley comedies, Edna Marion comedies and two-reelers with other stars. The one-reel comedies in the service number fifty-two in all, including the "Hysterical History" comedies. There also are fifty-two two-reel western featurettes, the five Baby Peggy Specials, six "Fast Stepper" two-reelers and the last two series, including twelve pictures, of 'The Leather Pushers.'"

The first public announcement of the plan, which has been under way for eight weeks, was made by Mr. Laemmle in his talk before the M. P. T. O. A. members in convention at Milwaukee last week His speech dealt with Independence and he alluded to the Complete Service Plan as another evidence of his own independence, of his desire to keep exhibitors independent and as an assurance that the theatres he had been forced to buy would never be used as a weapon against his own customers.

The Universal sales innovation is regarded by film men and exhibitors as one of the most startling changes in sales policies since the early days of the industry. Universal exchangemen and sales executives have been working on the plan since the middle of March.

About that time, Laemmle sent three representatives into the field to learn the attitude of exhibitors towards the idea. Lew Metzger, manager of Universal's Kansas City office, traveled in the middle west territory. W. P. Truog, assistant sales director, traveled in another section of the Mississippi valley, and Julius Singer, Mr. Laemmle's personal representative and a veteran Universal exchange manager, covered the east.

The enthusiasm on the part of the exhibitors approached by these men prompted Mr. Laemmle to inaugurate the plan in several exchanges late in April. Earl Johnson, of the Strand Theatre, Brookfield, Ill., was the first exhibitor to take the service. That was on April 24. Ten days later Laemmle flashed word to all Universal exchanges to inaugurate the new system.

The statement continues:

"A new department has been created in the Universal home office to handle the plan. Metzger has been relieved of the Kansas City office and brought to New York to be supervisor of the new department. Mr. Laemmle is highly enthusiastic over the way the plan is working out.

"Merchandising is the keystone of Universal's new sales idea. It is applicable to all classes of theatres and is regarded as of inestimable value to the small theatre man—the man, for example, who runs the theatre as a side-line. Investigation has proved that many exhibitors desired to buy film on the merchandising plan. They have neither time nor opportunity to preview films. They want the guarantee of a company such as Universal, with Carl Laemmle's thirteen years of "fair-play" pictures and policy, behind their buying.

"The majority of the small theatre men are exhibiting under much the same conditions of ten years ago, except that they have had to cut corners in order to meet increased film rentals. Some of them have cut down on their short product in order to make profits, or perhaps they use old film. They are finding themselves in a tighter place with each succeeding season.

'The Complete Service Plan will save their skins. They will be able to get a complete service at a remarkable price and at the same time be able to improve their programs and increase their profits.

"Mr. Laemmle wants to keep the good will of the small exhibitor. He wants to prove to them that he is fighting their fight. He is willing to gamble at a break-even price, and even at a sacrifice, rather than to let the small theatre man be driven out of business.

"Universal wants to sell to the exhibitor the way he wants to buy. Investigation has proved he wants to buy 'wholesale at cost' and so Universal will sell 'wholesale at cost' to him. Carl Laemmle's success has been built upon the welfare and good-will of the exhibitor. He fought for them and at their head in the old days, and he is now ready to give back the Universal corporation in the fight to help the independent stay independent in an honest and independent way. He remembers the old days."

Letters to the Editor

WEISS BROTHERS'
ARTCLASS PICTURES CORPORATION
Fifteen Forty Broadway
New York

Robert E. Welsh,
Moving Picture World.

Dear Mr. Welsh:—I have noticed on page 466 of the May 23rd issue of the Moving Picture World, you have printed an article which states that F. B. O.'s new picture "Druscilla With a Million" is being booked at the Capitol and that this is the first Independent picture to be booked in that theatre in two years.

Knowing your desire to have all reports in your paper as accurate as possible, we are taking this occasion to state that the foregoing is not quite correct in that a Weiss Brothers' Artclass feature entitled "Between Worlds" ran for seven full days commencing July 6th, 1924, at the Capitol Theatre.

We are enclosing herewith a herald and program in regard to this presentation.

We hope that you will understand that this is in no way a criticism of F. B. O. or of yourself since the statement was no doubt made in good faith.

We trust that you will find opportunity to correct this, and remain

Yours very truly,
ARTCLASS PICTURES CORPORATION,
By LESLIE G. SCHAUMANN,
Publicity Director.

Coming and Going

Arthur A. Lee, president of the Lee-Bradford Corporation, returned May 18 on the S.S. Adriatic from a six weeks' trip abroad.

E. B. Hatrick, general manager of International Newsreel and vice-president of Cosmopolitan productions, sails on Saturday (May 23) for an extended trip through Europe in the interest of both the organizations of which he is the executive head. Hatrick expects to be abroad about six weeks. During that time he will visit the offices of International in London, Paris, Rome and Berlin.

Arthur H. Sawyer, supervising director of Sawyer-Lubin productions, is enjoying a short vacation in Boston.

Sam Spring, the newly elected secretary-treasurer of First National Pictures, and E. Bruce Johnson, manager of the company's foreign department, left New York this week for the West Coast. They expect to be gone about three weeks.

George Hackathorne returned to New York from personal appearances in Buffalo and Rochester and then went to the West Coast.

Jack White has gone to Hollywood after a vacation and business trip in Europe and New York.

Harrison Ford is in New York from the West Coast to play in "Lovers' Quarantine."

Peggy Hopkins Joyce, who will make one picture for P. A. Powers, left this week for Hollywood.

I. E. Chadwick returned to New York from Milwaukee on May 16 and left that night for Hollywood.

Lillian Gish and her mother have gone to the Metro-Goldwyn lot in the West.

Glenn Hunter is back from Holland.

William Desmond is visiting in New York.

Burton George, director, has returned from Europe.

Peggy Hyland has arrived in New York from the West Coast. She made the trip by water.

Maurice Barber, general manager of the Cinema Finance Corporation, is in New York for two weeks.

J. G. Wainwright of London is in New York with the prints of four pictures made abroad.

Walter Le Mat and Carl York of the Liberty Trading Company, Paramount's Swedish distributors, have sailed for home.

James V. Bryson, managing director of the European Motion Picture Corporation, which is Universal's English organization, is in New York.

Ike Blumenthal, general European manager for Paramount, has sailed for abroad.

J. L. Hawkinson has returned to New York after a picture-making trip in connection with Grantland Rice's "Sportlights."

Henry Hathaway has come on from the West Coast to help Paul Bern in the direction of two Paramount productions.

J. A. Levinson, here from the West, plans a European trip next month.

Julius Stern, Century Comedy president, and his brother, Abe Stern, vice-president, are in New York from the West Coast.

C. S. Bernhard, a London exhibitor, is in New York.

Without Bankers' Aid Lesser Sees Coast Status Imperiled

"Los Angeles, Cal., is in danger of losing many of its most important motion picture producing units unless immediate action is taken among the bankers of Southern California towards centering more of their attention on the financing of Motion pictures," declared Sol Lesser, secretary of the West Coast Theatres, Inc., following his return to the Coast from New York City. Lesser and M. Gore, president of the big theatrical circuit, attended the semi-annual meeting of the First National Pictures, Inc.

While in the east, Lesser and Gore were in conference with many of the nation's foremost producers, and it was at this meeting that the former was not only re-elected vice-president and à director of First National Pictures, Inc. but was elected a member of the executive committee.

"I have been asked many times recently as to the possibility of many of the larger producing companies centering the major part of their producing activities in and around New York City," declared Lesser, "and I am anxious to sound a warning to Southern Californians at this time that such moves are being seriously contemplated largely because the big companies want to produce near the financial centers.

"I see an urgent need for Southern California bankers to enter into the financing of motion picture production on a greater scale, thus making Los Angeles a great financial as well as producing center, which will automatically keep these units and their producing activities here."

Plan Arbitration

The board of directors of the M. P. T. O. A. will call a meeting in New York to consider a plan of arbitration with producers and distributors arising out of "unfair competitive methods," as witness the following resolution adopted at the Milwaukee convention:

"Resolved, That this convention approve, endorse and support most vigorously a plan to extend the principles of arbitration to grievances of exhibitors against producers and distributors arising out of their inability to secure service of film because of the unfair competitive methods of circuits and chains of theatres owned by these producers and distributors, and also because of the inability of theatre owners to secure film for the operation of their theatres, because of the unfair competitive methods of circuits and chains of theatre operators, and to that end the board of directors meetin conference in New York City with the representatives of the producers and distributors for the purpose of drafting an agreement embodying such plan."

FOX WINS IN COURT

Another victory has been scored by Fox Film Corporation in its fight to protect the public and exhibitors from misleading posters and other advertising material encroaching on the name of its Western star, Tom Mix. Only a few weeks ago a firm calling itself "Arthur J. Mix Productions" was fined for contempt in violating an injunction issued by the Superior Court of Los Angeles. Now the United States District Court for the Southern District of California has issued a permanent injunction restraining the "William (Bill) Mix Productions," in a similar respect.

Barney Allen Terminates His Eventful Career At Toronto

By W. M. GLADISH

THE passing has been recorded at Toronto, Ontario, of a figure that once was wellnigh supreme in the moving picture sphere of Canada in the death last week of Barney ("Ben") Allen, father of Jule, J. J., Herbert and Sol. Allen, who climbed to prominence in theatre and film exchange circles only to have disaster overtake him practically at the height of his eminence. Starting as the proprietor of a store show in Brantford, Ontario, 14 years ago, the late Ben Allen eventually became the head of Allen Theatres, Limited, with headquarters at Toronto and ultimately acquired control or ownership of 55 moving picture houses throughout the Dominion. The Allens even invaded the United States, erecting the gorgeous Allen Theatre at Cleveland, Ohio, and they also secured an option on a historic theatre in the heart of London, England.

At one time it was their avowed intention of operating a world-wide chain of moving picture theatres in Canada, the United States, various countries of Europe and through the British Empire. Ben Allen made various trips to England and Europe with this end in view and also made one trip around the world—but rapid expansion led to the final collapse of the enterprise three years ago when Allen Theatres, Ltd., went into the hands of the receiver at Toronto, the physical assets in Canada being secured by Famous Players Canadian Corp., of which N. L. Nathanson is managing director.

Ben Allen was born in Pennsylvania but moved to Canada at a fairly early age, becoming a naturalized Canadian. After establishing a chain of store shows in Western Ontario, Ben Allen and his sons moved to Calgary, Alberta, in Western Canada, where, in 1914, they built the first of the large and impressive exclusive moving picture palaces. This was soon followed bp other large new houses and then the Allens returned to Eastern Canada where they established their head office at Toronto.

For years they operated the Famous Players Film Service, Limited, an important film distributing organization controlling Paramount and other releases in Canada. They also organized British Films, Limited, Toronto, for the purpose of handling British releases in the Dominion. All their companies went by the board, however. The principal management of important enterprises was directed by two of the sons, Jule and J. J. Allen, who are said to be now interested in an independent film exchange in Canada and other recent ventures.

Exports of Film Increase 32,000,000 Feet in Year

EXPORTS of motion picture films from the United States for 1924 showed a gain in quantity of nearly 32,000,000 linear feet over 1923. According to figures just issued by the Department of Commerce, 170,347,342 linear feet of positives and 8,100,264 linear feet of negatives, valued at $6,081,917 and $1,319,859, respectively, were sent abroad in 1924, as against 1923 figures of 138,656,880 linear feet of positives valued at $5,417,745, and 8,268,590 linear feet of negatives, valued at $996,336.

Each grand division of the world showed a gain in its imports of positives from the United States. The outstanding feature here is that American exports of positives to Europe rose from about 29,000,000 feet in 1923 to over 53,000,000 feet in 1924—a rise of nearly 100 per cent. Eleven out of twenty-six European countries—among these England, France, Germany, Austria, Belgium and Sweden—more than doubled their imports of positives from the United States.

The United Kingdom alone was our largest market, taking over 22,500,000 feet in 1924, as against 11,066,000 feet the year before, this 1924 figure representing over 80 per cent. of the amount which was imported by the whole of Europe in 1923. France, as our second largest European market, took a little over 8,000,000 feet of positives as against about 4,000,000 feet in 1923, and Sweden crowded out Germany for third place with 4,100,000 feet in 1924 as against a little over 2,000,000 feet in 1923. Germany incidentally just about doubled her imports of positives with 3,693,000 feet in 1924 as against a 1923 total of 1,354,000 feet.

Exports of positives to Latin America climbed from about 45,000,000 linear feet in 1923 to somewhat over 47,000,000 linear feet in 1924. The gains here were fairly well distributed. Argentina continued as our largest Latin American market for these—her total of nearly 14,000,000 feet for 1924, as compared with 1923 figures of just over 11,000,000 feet, giving her fourth position among the markets of the world. Of other Latin American countries Brazil came second with 8,380,000 feet, a slight decline from 1923, while Mexico and Cuba stood third and fourth. These with about 5,500,000 feet and 4,500,000 feet showed consistent gains over last year.

Considerable gains were recorded in exports of positives to the Far East, the 1924 figures showing slightly over 45,000,000 linear feet as against 40,734,000 linear feet in 1923. Over 60 per cent. of this rise was due to greatly increased imports of these by Japan —about 9,500,000 feet for 1924 in comparison with 6,300,000 feet for the previous year. This incidentally gives Japan the position of fifth in the export markets for positives from the United States.

Australia, of course, remains as our largest Far Eastern market and third of all our export markets, withover 18,500,000 feet in 1924. This figure, however, is a decline of about 200,000 feet from 1923. Other Far Eastern markets which showed up well were New Zealand, China and British India, in the order named. These all had totals of over 3,000,000 feet—slight gains over 1923.

Of the other markets of the world Canada remains second—next to the United Kingdom with 19,620,000 linear feet of positives as against 19,071,914 linear feet in 1923. British South Africa for the first time passed the 4,000,000 footage mark in 1924, a gain of nearly a million feet over the previous year.

Out of slightly over 8,000,000 feet of negatives exported in 1924, Europe took nearly 7,000,000 feet. About 5,000,000 feet of these were divided between the United Kingdom and France—about 3,500,000 to the former and nearly 1,500,000 to the latter, as against about the same figure for 1923 in the case of the United Kingdom and again of about 500,000 feet for France. Germany came third, Italy fourth and Sweden fifth with totals of 783,000 feet, 657,000 feet and 385,000 —these being gains of about 75 per cent., 110 per cent. and 600 per cent., respectively, over 1923.

For Latin America a decline from over 2,000,000 feet to 540,000 feet in imports of negatives from the United States took place, due almost entirely to a large decline in imports of these into Mexico and Argentina, this decline being 1,400,000 feet to 25,000 feet for the former and 628,000 feet to 150,000 feet for the latter. In the Far East a gain of from 338,000 feet to 558,000 feet was shown. Here Japan boosted her imports of negatives from the United States from 62,000 feet to 336,000 feet—this being sufficient to account for the entire gain.

Films Worry Lords

American films have England in a quandary. Not only are they attracting the populace to the detriment of British producers, but Far East races are demanding of English clothing and boot manufacturers from whom they buy that the clothing and boots resemble those worn by American movie actors.

This situation, which has been a moot subject in England for several months, recently became a source of argument in the House of Lords. Lord Newton asked for a departmental inquiry, saying that the percentage of foreign films shown in London amounts to 95 per cent. and in the whole empire to 99 per cent.

He found it "practically impossible" for British producers to compete with Americans, as "American films, whether owing to their good or bad qualities, seem to attract audiences more magnetically than British." It wouldn't be so unfortunate a situation, he charged, if American films weren't mostly "rubbish." Another complaint, and a serious one, was that through films America is advertising herself in a trade way to great advantage.

Viscount Peel replied that probably nothing short of prohibition could make the British producers' position secure, but that such a drastic action might not be welcomed by the public.

Police Use Camera to Get Evidence

Motion picture cameras were used by state police at Williamantic, Conn., in an effort to photograph striking mill employes suspected of throwing stones at the gates of the American Thread Company's plant. Determined to obtain evidence, the police trained several cameras on the crowd at the gates and thereafter peace reigned.

ANOTHER ST. LOUIS ROBBERY

Albert J. McGinness, publicity manager for William Goldman's Kings Theatre, St. Louis, and Miss Margaret Johnson, an office employe of the theatre, were held up in Forest Park at 10:30 a. m. on May 18 by four armed men and robbed of $1,700, the receipts of the theatre for Saturday and Sunday. This was the third recent experience of the Kings Theatre with robbers. On September 8, 1924, William Goldman was kidnapped by two armed men and forced to return to the theatre from his home. There the bandits attempted to get the safe combination from him. On September 24 the safe of the theatre was cracked and $700 taken

Koplars, St. Louis, Now Defendants in 2 Actions

On May 12 Alexander Lichtman filed a new suit against Harry Koplar and the Metropolitan Theatres Corporation for $49,000 which he alleges is due him for securing the Orpheum Circuit as a lessee for the St. Louis Theatre. This action replaces a similar suit which Lichtman filed several weeks ago, but which his attorneys later withdrew in order to include some new points.

Lichtman alleges that he was retained to find a leasee for the theatre and opened the negotiations with the Orpheum circuit and as a result of his efforts the house was leased to a subidiary of the Orpheum Circuit for $100,000 a year and 50 per cent of the net profit for a period of ten years. He claims that he was offered $50,000 for his services but has only been paid $1,000.

David Sommers, president of the Metropolitan Theatres Corporation on Tuesday, May 12, in a deposition before Special Commissioner Leo S. Rassieur gave his version of the manner in which the theatre corporation secured title to the site of the St. Louis Theatre, Grand boulevard and Morgan street, from William Goldman.

Goldman several days ago filed suit in the St. Louis Circuit Court asking $250,000 damages from Sommers, the Metropolitan Theatres Corporation, Harry Koplar, Sam Koplar and Sam Hamburg, Jr. In his petition he alleged that he was induced to convey title to the theatre site to Sommers and later to release a claim he had to $50,000 of the preferred stock and a block of common stock in the theatre company and also to a $25,000 a year job as manager of the house for a term of years, and now finds himself "frozen out" of the project which he conceived.

Sommers deposition was given behind closed doors in Rassieur's offices in the Federal Reserve Building. It is understood that Sommers entered a general denial of Goldman's charges.

Southern Metro-Goldwyn Holds Enthusiastic Sales Meet

NEW ORLEANS, La. (Special)—C. E. Kessnick, Southern Division manager for Metro-Goldwyn, and the personnel of his four fast stepping offices concluded a three days sales convention here last week that your correspondent is ready to stack up against any similar gathering in the country for enthusiasm and pep. The 1925-26 product of the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer organization was Mr. Kessnick's topic of discussion and the response of the "boys on the firing line" to the array of titles and stars that will provide their next season's ammunition forecasts action and plenty of it.

What particularly impressed the sales heads from south of the Mason and Dixon line was the strong proportion of completed pictures, definite casts and other information contained in the roster of information on product presented by Mr. Kessnick. "This is the season," said "Jimmy" Briant, popular local manager, "When the man with definite facts to sell will finish far ahead of the man who has to stake his talk on mere titles and production hopes." And that seemed to be the sentiment echoed on all hands. "More stars than there are in the heavens" is also a slogan that is due to spread like wildfire.

"Louis Mayer is at work on what I firmly believe to be the greatest schedule of production that any organization in this business has ever offered the exhibitor," declared Mr. Kessnick. "Everything in the list is of special calibre, every picture of the sort needed by box offices in these days of strict competition and shopping patrons."

Among those present at the three days of concentrated business-like sessions were the following: C. R. Beacham, Atlanta manager, L. Conner, New Orleans manager, Leslie Wilkes, Dallas manager, and E. D. Brewer, Oklahoma City manager.

Gleichman Focuses Fight on Famous; Drops Kunsky Suit

PHIL GLEICHMAN, former lessee of the Broadway Strand Theatre, Detroit, whose suit against the Famous Players Lasky Corporation, opened in the Wayne County Circuit Court May 14, won the first technical victory when Judge Frank Lamb denied a motion made by the defendants that the case be removed to the U. S. Federal Court.

Petition for removal of the case came following the opening statement of Gleichman's attorneys, who sprung a surprise when they stated that the suit against the John H. Kunsky Theatres would not be pressed. This left only the Famous Players Company, a New York corporation, as defendant and on that ground the request was based.

Gleichman claims that in 1919 the Famous Players Company entered into a contract with him to give him exclusive first run rights to all pictures released by the concern for a period of five years. He charges that at the end of three years, the defendant abrogated the agreement and turned the pictures over to the Kunsky Theatres here. Gleichman is seeking a settlement based on the earnings of the pictures in the Kunsky theatres. Inasmuch as the remainder of the contract included the release of such big moneymaking pictures as "The Covered Wagon," and other specials, the suit assumes unusual importance.

It was revealed that during the three years of 1919, 1920 and 1921, gross receipts amounting to $994,338 were taken in at the box office of the Broadway Strand. It is expected that further testimony will bring to light further authentic information regarding the enormous sums paid annually in Detroit and other American cities for admission to motion picture theatres.

Projectionist Saves Fans from Big Fire

Telesphore Bourque, projectionist at the Strand Theatre in Somersworth, N. H., averted a panic when the film he was showing caught fire and started a blaze that destroyed the theatre building and two adjoining structures on Saturday night, May 16. The total loss is $100,000.

When Bourque's attempts to smother the film blaze failed he rushed to the rear of the theatre and calmly told the audience a fire had started, but that there was no immediate danger. All reached the street safely. Bourque suffered burns about the arms and hands in his efforts to extinguish the burning film.

hibitor his independence and keep the circuit wolf away from his door."

Exhibitors reason that the unification brought about at Milwaukee is not just a flurry caused by present conditions in the industry. They calculate that it is one of permanency. A late dispatch from the World's Kansas City correspondent is particularly interesting in this respect. It follows:

"Whether or not the M. P. T. O. Kansas-Missouri will affiliate with the M. P. T. O. A. will be known at a meeting of the directors in Kansas City June 8. R. R. Biechele, president; Fred Meyn, manager of the Pershing Theatre, Kansas City, Kans., and Maurice Jencks of the National Theatre Corporation, who were officially appointed by Biechele as representatives at the Milwaukee convention, will make a report to the directors on the national convention and recommend the future attitude toward the national body.

"As Kansas was among the pioneers in the Allied States Organization, the merged Kansas-Missouri body does not intend to go back into the fold of the M. P. T. O. A. in any care-free manner. A copy of the minutes of the national convention will be read to the M. P. T. O. K.-M. directors and perhaps two days consumed in reaching a decision, despite the fact that the majority of exhibitors in Western Missouri and Kansas are favorable to linking arms with the national body.

"'Will the East continue to predominate in the ranks of the M. P. T. O. A.? Will petty politics still reign supreme?' Those are two questions which, if M. P. T. O. K.-M. officials believe can be answered in the negative, will be the deciding factors in the re-affiliation of Kansas and Missouri.

"'Allied has been too inactive. Two national bodies cannot function individually for the interests of the industry.'

"Those two statements one hears on all sides on Kansas City's Movie Row, making it rather safe to predict that unless the M. P. T. O. K.-M. representatives gained a gloomy outlook at the national convention that Kansas and Missouri will become a part of the national organization on June 8."

WANDA WILEY ON WAY EAST

Wanda Wiley, the leading star of Century Comedies, is on her way to New York City for the first trip East she has ever made. While in New York she will see the sights, do the shops and probably make several personal appearances in metropolitan theatres which feature her comedies. This is Miss Wiley's first extended vacation since she entered the screen world two years ago. For the past two weeks she has been at her home in Kerrville, Texas.

Special Meeting

A meeting of the members of the Buffalo and Albany zones of the M. P. T. O. of N. Y. has been called by President Walter Hays for Tuesday, June 2, at 12 o'clock, in the Onondaga Hotel, Syracuse. The board of directors will meet Monday evening, June 1, at eight o'clock, in the same hotel in Syracuse.

SELLING the PICTURE to the PUBLIC

EDITED BY EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Make Your Plans Now for a Celebration On the Fourth of July in Your Section

ALTHOUGH the Fourth of July is some distance away, it is none too early to start planning for your celebration. Unless you have a big downtown house you can get more good-will out of a celebration than almost any stunt we know of. Get busy at once, put it over big, and you'll still be collecting on your efforts when Christmas rolls around again.

Roughly, there are two sorts of celebration. Some managers have scored a tremendous hit with a family party. The better scheme, however, is to enlist the entire town, or your section of a city's suburbs.

The family party is purely a one-man affair, and is useful where you know practically all of your patrons. The house is closed down, a grove is hired, light refreshments are provided and a series of games for prizes arranged. It's your treat and every patron and prospect gets a free ticket. This has been worked by many managers, with real profit, but it is relatively expensive.

Wake the Town

The better plan is to agitate for a community celebration. It's bigger, more showy and more impressive, and at the same time it will cost you less money, though perhaps it will take up more of your time.

Get after the Chamber of Commerce, the business lunch clubs and all civic organizations. Interest them in a big celebration. Show them that you can bring business into town.

Probably they will all agree that it will be a great thing, and will promise co-operation, but you can figure yourself lucky if you can find three or four real workers to back up your efforts. You should know the merchants and be able to tell in advance just who you can count upon. Put these men at the head of the important committees, but give every man a place on some committee even though you may know they will not work.

Give Them Something

You will find that the best scheme will be to hold the celebration to the business section instead of taking it out to the fair grounds or some picnic grove. That is always a mistake in a business celebration. Keep the crowd down by the stores. Many of them will be shut up, but they will have special window displays, and the restaurants, confectioners, drug and cigar stores and similar concerns can make some money. It's going to be spent anyway. Let them get it but point out to them that they should give a part of the receipts in the form of larger than average donations.

Then get something to make it worth while for the crowd to come. Get the authorities to close a street. It may not be possible to close the main thoroughfare, though often a detour can be arranged for automobiles, and where this is possible, it should be done.

Get up a program of games. Include running races from sprints to medium distances, and run all the way down to scooter and roller coaster races for the kiddies. Put in some comedy stunts, potato races, three-legged races and the like. Sprinkle these through the program to give the necessary comedy relief.

Formal Exercises

Arrange a formal program of exercises, addresses by prominent men, singing of patriotic songs as solos and in chorus. This can be given in the public square, if you have one, or in your theatre, if it is large enough. Keep this section short; not more than 45 minutes, and make it as snappy as possible.

If you have a paved street, provide for open-air dancing in the afternoon and evening. Have two bands, if possible, to provide for plenty of music. The band does not have to be large. A couple of good cornets will mark the time for the dancers. Perhaps you can split the local band.

Get Side Shows

Get the Ladies Aid societies to put up booths for the sale of refreshments, and if possible get them to go in for other forms of diversion. You can rig up a lot of home-made devices that will give as much entertainment as can be found at Coney Island.

A little experimenting will show you the exact slant to give a row of water pails to encourage baseballs to jump out, then give three balls for a nickel and prizes to those who can make two or three balls stay in.

Nails driven into a board can be made the targets for small curtain rings, or a diamond shaped hole in a barrel, little larger than will permit a ball to pass through, will keep a lot of ball fans busy. Keep away from wheels or other gambling devices. They make money, but invariably they excite unfavorable comment. You can arrange for the prizes from some carnival supply house, getting the stuff on consignment.

You Must Hustle

Most of this stuff you will have to look after yourself. The others may be willing, but they will look to you to put over the entertainment devices. Be prepared to do a lot of work, and work well in advance, and you'll put over a celebration that will be the talk of the county, and whenever they think of the good time they had, they will think of you and your house. It's work, but it is work that will bring you a lasting return, if you put it over in a big way. Get all the merchants to advertise the event, get the paper to contribute extra space, and perambulate the outlying districts with your own car, not once, but several times, advertising your current shows, as well. Put all you have on the ball and then put over a "hot" one straight through the center of the plate.

Generally it takes a novel by a well known author to get the larger newspapers, but The Fighting Ranger has been placed by Universal with a string of newspapers in the large cities including the New York Telegram-Mail and the Philadelphia North American. Naturally these papers will advertise on their delivery trucks, which will make it nice for those who have the Adventure picture booked.

DRESSING A THREE

The figures of Milton Sills and Viola Dana were cut from a three-sheet and mounted on compo board. This was placed in front of a shadow box in which was a backing of palms and sky and a bit of landscape. The latter was painted in, but the clouds were made from cotton and the palms were dried palms dyed green. Blue lights gave illumination at night.

Set near the theatre it had many times the value of a straight three-sheet; indeed, Schade credits it with selling more tickets than he could have disposed of with full page ads.

Helped Lincoln

Using an essay contest for school children to put over Abraham Lincoln at the Majestic Theatre, Austin, Texas, E. B. Roberts gave prizes of $10 and $5 for the best compositions.

In addition the handsome lithograph of Lincoln used for a lobby display was awarded the school to which the prize winner was accredited. This roused the general interest of the schools, and an announcement card on the picture gained further attention for the lobby display.

Production Hints from Edward L. Hyman

Managing Director, Mark-Strand Theatre, Brooklyn

Four musical presentations and three film subjects made up the show, of which "Chickie" was the feature picture. The latter was 83 minutes long, a special Mothers' film was 5 minutes long and the Topical Review took up its accustomed 8 minutes. The four musical presentations requiring 29 minutes, bringing the full show up to 2 hours and 5 minutes.

The overture was "Selections from the Mikado," with the following lights: large stage-foots and borders in blue; 2 orange Mestrum floods from the dome on the orchestra; gold draw-curtains closed across the production stage and lighted by 2 orange and 2 deep blue arch spots; mirrow mosaic vases in the windows picked out by lemon spots. Eight minutes for the overture.

A duet for violins, by Victor Herbert, was played by the concert master and one of the violinists, the two standing to the left of the conductor. The duet is unnamed, having been composed by Herbert for the first violin who was his concert master at Willow Grove. Lights: orange spots used for the overture dimmed out and 2 baby spots of orange from the sides dimmed up, picking out the two violinists; all other lights named above for the overture were kept. Duet required 3 minutes.

"A Tribute to Mother" was the name of the five minute film subject, the idea for which we gave to a representative producer to work out. It was scored with appropriate selections and closed with the solo, "Little Mother O'Mine," sung by soprano standing in the orchestra pit.

Harry Breuer, xylophone soloist of the orchestra, played "Canadian Capers," with lights as follows: 2 light blue Mestrum floods from the booth on the orchestra, amber spot on Breuer from the dome; metaline draw curtains closed across small production stage; blue foots and borders of the large stage. Solo took up 4 minutes.

After the Mark Strand Topical Review came "A Spanish Fiesta," running 14 minutes. The setting was a Spanish garden with a neutral blue back-drop with transparent stars. A five-foot wall ran across the stage in front of which were 2 large blossom trees at either side. Other properties included stone bench, bushes and strings of lanterns. The numbers ran as follows: "Bolero," danced by the ballet; "Mi Nina," sung by soprano; "Chiquita" by tenor; then a tango by premiere danseuse and partner; "En Cuba" sung by contralto; "Mexican Dance" by the ballet and "La Espagnola," sung by baritone. The lighting was dominated by light blue, lemon, amber, red and orange. There was change of costume for each of the 7 incidents in this presentation.

Added Babies

John J. Friedl, of the Palace Theatre, Dallas, Texas, added baby things to his fashion show, basing the display on Shakespeare's ...en Ages of Man, and took his imaginary heroine from the cradle to the altar in a succession of scenes which were staged in conjunction with a leading store. The idea was first run through in film and then shown in life, 42 persons being used in the presentation.

It was hooked to The Swan for no particular reason other than that was what he happened to have booked.

A SPECIAL CANOPY WAS BUILT OVER THE LOBBY OF THE LIBERTY FO R SALLY

On the left is the lobby of the Liberty Theatre, Portland, Ore. On the right is shown the inner side of a curb line structure, connected with the building by a fabric canopy, and decorated with cutouts and special paintings. This was something new in Portland, and it attracted no end of attention, making an impression that had a real cash value at the box office.

Model Airplanes for The Air Mail

Model airplanes, not more than three feet in length, toy store planes barred, was one of the big stunts used by H. J. Gould, of the Hippodrome Theatre, Fort Worth, to put over The Air Mail. Prizes of $5, $3 and $2 were awarded by army aviators for the best models and the three prize winners were on display in the lobby during the run of the picture.

These can be seen at the base of the display, which does not do justice to the design, for the backing was painted to suggest the plane coming head-on through the clouds. Loss of the color values makes the backing too flat to carry over the suggestion. The propeller was motored, and a railing built to keep the spectators from bumping into the blades and getting hurt.

Small planes were suspended in the upper lobby and as these were motorized they kept flying in circles, the current coming through the cables used to suspend them.

It made a flashy display that had them looking all day long.

Gould made a ten strike when he announced that the house would send the winner of the local marbles contests to Atlantic City to compete in the finals. This was a tie up with the press, which printed the entry blank and gave a column or more a day, always with mention of the theatre's cooperation. As a good will stunt, this would be hard to beat.

MODEL AIRPLANES WERE USED FOR THE AIR MAIL

The planes at the base of the display were the winners in a model airplane contest at the Hippodrome Theatre, Fort Worth, Texas, on the Paramount picture. Small planes, motored, flew about the upper lobby. You can see three in the picture.

Good Throwaways

For So This is Marriage H. C. Farley got out a four page throwaway with only "A Warning" in red letters on the front page. Inside the copy read:

"Unless matters change, the marriage institution is bound to wreck. See So This Marriage, with Lew Cody, Conrad Nagel, Eleanor Boardman, and you'll find out in the most unusual way."

There followed the dates and the house, the latter being the Empire Theatre, Montgomery, Ala.

Selling Salome

The most effective stunt used by E. D. Turner for Salome of the Tenements at the Imperial Theatre, Asheville, N. C., was a series of two-inch boxes reading "Hit me, hurt me, yell at me, but don't condemn me," with the title, house and date. E. D. Turner had these scattered so that at least one was run on each page for several days in advance, and it contrbiuted materially to the increased business.

Sold a Paper

Howard Waugh, of Loew's Palace Theatre, Memphis, permitted the News-Scimitar to publish a daily coupon permitting children to see Janice Meredith at a reduced admission. As most of the children were escorted by adults who paid the full price, the reduction really meant increased cash receipts.

The tie up was based on the value of the historical scenes in the play and the newspaper carried a daily double column head over a story picking up one of these incidents for especial mention.

Rugged

Borrowing the cream of the stock of a local dealer in rugs gave the Majestic Theatre, Austin, Texas, a fine lobby for The Thief of Bagdad at the cost of a fair sized credit card. The famous flying carpet was represented by a rug made for Ben Hur Temple, Mystic Shrine, and carrying the scimeter and crescent emblem of the order, which fitted nicely with the local of The Thief. This was suspended by wires to form a canopy over the doorman's head, and attracted unusual attention.

Runs a Series

One manager who does not believe that advertising in advance hurts current business is the head of the Gilger Theatre Norwalk, O. A series of displays are run and often the coming is as well displayed as the current offering. Recently an advertisement for The Silent Watcher was run alongside one of the same size for For Sale, which was the current attraction. It did not hurt the business on For Sale and it did help the other play.

Added Torches

Earl Settle followed the usual red lobby idea for The Inferno at the Capitol Theatre, Oklahoma, but he added a touch of his own. At show times red torches were burned on the marquise roof which reached far up and down the street.

His best lobby bet was a six sheet, made translucent and lighted from behind with red lamps.

WHAT YOU CAN DO WITH A RAILROAD COMPANY

It's what Carruthers & Archibald, of the Strand Theatre, Pocatello, Idaho, did with the Union Pacific on The Thundering Herd. Any railroad is willing to talk See America First on the eve of the vacation season and will gladly give co-operation.

Novelty Teasers Gathered the Coin

Nothing is better than an occasional teaser campaign, but one lonely little column inch does not constitute a teaser campaign. If you start in to tease, it pays to get them excited.

Col. Fred Levy figured he could sell "If I Marry Again" on teasers, and he went at it in a way that brought a few quarts of extra quarters to the box office of the Kentucky Theatre, Lexington, Ky.

Friday before the opening he started to put out 10,000 cards one and one-half by four inches, printed both sides with "If I Marry Again?" In addition to the question mark after the title there were the same marks above and below the centre of the title. The Sunday a week before the opening he took a two fours with the same copy, and on Monday he followed with four inch singles in both papers, but read, "There's a lot of them to pick from If I Marry Again," and the other announced "It will be a blue-eyed sweet child, etc." The same space was taken Tuesday, but this time the copy read, "I'll sure watch my step the next time," and "I'll keep all the cash in the bank." This was in advance of the card teasers.

He put out 3,000 marriage licenses, or rather the folded sheet looked like a license, but inside it was a display ad.

That would have satisfied most men, but the Colonel was not half through. He put out twelve gross of small bisque dolls, each hung by the neck to a card reading: "If I marry again shall it be a blonde or brunette?" Even better were several hundred cards typed with "I am looking for a woman with this color hair If I Marry Again." This was printed over to the right and through a double slit on the left was thrust a generous sample of the henna tint desired. It is safe to say that not one of these was thrown away. And finally he put out 14 gross of doll-size wedding rings with "Wear this lucky ring and you'll never be confronted with the problem—What will I do If I Marry Again?"

It was one of the best teaser campaigns ever planned, and it simply had to get the money. There was no keeping them away, though of course no one tried to. It was the sort of campaign that brought back dollars for pennies, but that's the sort of showman Levy is. He's been that way for a long time.

Free Tickets Were Circulation Scheme

Working a variant of the classified ad stunt, Allen S. Glenn, of First National publicity, got sixteen two-column front page stories in a New York daily newspaper, and all but one of these were printed in red ink. And he got a gross of about ten pages of inside stuff along with it.

If you live in the Metropolitan district perhaps you didn't see it, but Allen was only playing for 900,000 of the population, and he went into the Bolletina Della Sera.

If you simply must know, that's an Italian language newspaper, about the largest in the city.

Glenn figured that Quo Vadis, made in Italy by an Italian company and mostly with Italian players, would appeal to people of that nationality. The newspaper had a large list of non-subscribing prospects. It picked from that list a certain number of names each day. If the owner of the name saw the announcement, he collected two tickets to the Lyric where Quo Vadis was then showing. If you didn't see your name you were likely to be sold on the newspaper's glowing praises of the production and you bought seats. It helped the business at the Lyric very materially, and it helped the newspaper.

If you have an Italian language paper you can work the same stunt. If you have none, you can at least get out an Italian throwaway.

Two Pages

Getting two co-op pages on The Golden Bed was Ollie Brownlee's best stunt on the De Mille production. The first page announced the contest and the second named the winners, with the same advertisers each time since each merchant was permitted to give prizes to all who solved the none too difficult puzzle.

This involved the distribution of a considerable number of tickets, but not as large a number as might be supposed and their cost by no means equaled with the house got in additional advertising.

Milked the Public

Tying Oh, Doctor to a milk company, the Columbia Theatre, Seattle, had fake prescriptions for the bottles prescribing a quart of milk a day and a look at the Universal picture. Some 10,000 pasters were used.

The laughing head of Denny was cutout for the lobby and back of it was a loudspeaker connected with a microphone which relayed the audience laughs to the skeptical.

And if that didn't work they hired a calliope from a circus wintering in town and sent that around the streets, properly bannered. Naturally they did the business.

LILIES AND HAT BOXES TYPIFIED EASTER AT THE HOWARD

Howard Price Kingsmore staged a fashion show for The Dressmaker From Paris, and offered 25 girls in a gorgeous pageant, with specially written songs and all the trimmings. The cutouts under the marquise are especially attractive. Study the picture.

Howard, Atlanta, Has Fashion Show

Howard Price Kingsmore, of the Howard Theatre, Atlanta, made a fashion show his big appeal on The Dressmaker from Paris. A number of local shops cooperated in supplying the fashions, and for three weeks in advance a trailer advertised for models. These were recruited from the well to do, and their standing enabled Kingsmore to crash the society columns with stories of their engagement and pictures showing them being put through their paces.

The musical director worked on a special score, with original music for a set of one-stanza songs written by Ernest Rogers, of the Atlanta Journal. These served to introduce the girls in a series of old time styles, each stepping from the pages of a book as a tenor sang about the period she represented.

Following came a regular two-part fashion show, with a dancer to bridge the costume changing waits.

All of the merchants who supplied the show gave elaborate displays in their stores, and also took newspaper spaces. The general lobby idea was to combine fashions and Easter with lily cutouts and hat boxes, as shown in the photograph.

Paints Tracks from Cutout Locomotive

C. B. Blake, of the Blake Amusement Co., Louisville, Ky., passes along an idea that has worked unusually well in selling the Universal serial, The Fast Express, at the Savoy Theatre.

A Universal Release

THE PAINTED TRACKS

This cutout locomotive front was designed for the launching of the serial, but instead of being sent into the discard, it is brought out every Tuesday, when a fresh chapter is shown, and it holds interest to the serial as no other stunt ever has done. You see the engine and you know that the serial is showing again.

The design is painted on flat compoboard and is set about four feet in front of the box office, the latter serving as the cab. A 6 volt battery supplies an automobile spot light which is used as the headlight.

The tracks and ties are painted on the sidewalk in water color, and the doorman, who shows in the picture, is dressed as an engineer in overalls and jumper.

This can be worked on any play, but it is good for a long run on the serial.

Is One Too Many?

Getting five thousand bags and as many candy kisses from a local confectioner, Mr. Stelling had the bags, which already bore the store imprint, done on the reverse for Richard Dix in Too Many Kisses. The catchline was "A Kiss from Richard Dix" and at the bottom was a kicker for the store reading: "Meet your friends at the Elite. Quality. Service. Courtesy."

A small printing bill and the trouble of stuffing the bags represented Mr. Setilling's expense. It was a highly profitable investment.

Bobtailed Title

A semi teaser worked very successfully for the Jefferson Theatre, Springfield, Mass., on He Who Gets Slapped.

Louis W. Richmond fairly smeared the town with placards carrying merely "He?" Just two letters and a question mark. After they had been up three days, he plastered the front of his theatre with a lot of similar cards, bringing the idea straight to the house. Adding posters with the full title gave the explanation. The stunt helped get over an awkward title.

Mr. Richmond also used the press book stunt in which prizes are given for the best filling in of a clown's face. Naturally a clown make-up will particularly intrigue the children, making it better than the average drawing contest.

PLENTY OF WILDNESS IN THIS SEATTLE WILDERNESS

The banner design on Love's Wilderness in the Strand Theatre, Seattle, was continued to the floor level with painted doors. Note the combination cutout and still frame in front of the box office. It gives an excellent effect and is cheap.

Played Lone Hand On Mme. Sans Gene

Madame Sans Gene came to the Strand Theatre, Syracuse, so close to release that there was no material available, and Walter D. McDowell told Cliff Lewis to do the best he could.

Cliff's first stunt was a herald, which was tied to the Strand's weekly broadcasting on Friday nights. If you can get the cuts, you don't need a station. The front is mostly taken up with a cut of a microphone with a cable running to the right hand edge of the page. In the remaining space is "Station STRAND Theatre broadcasting an important announcement to." The last word is set close to the right hand margin. Opening up the four pager, you find that the cable runs up on this side to a loud speaker. A "you" completed the first page sentence and follows with the announcement of the showing. Done on news print, the cost was very small, yet the effect was very good.

Then Cliff economized his newspaper work by giving the friendly Syracuse Journal a single pass for each three-time classified ads. and the paper did most of the advertising without cost to the house, while the singles mostly brought one or more paid tickets with them.

For a window Cliff tied a shoe store to the Cinderella stunt, with a handsomely decorated window, and a hat store offered the Gloria Chin Chin, because it looked something like one of the lids Gloria wore in the story, a still being put in evidence to prove the point.

His prologue was Robespierre, played under red, white and blue lights, with a French flag fading up on the screen just before the main title ran. It cost nothing, and it got a hand every show.

Ace Beery used circus proportions for his campaign on Quo Vadis at the Circle Theatre, Indianapolis, and the answer was a queue two blocks long at the opening performance.

His lithographic display included 80 24-sheets, with smaller sizes in proportion, and his newspaper spaces were enlarged. The libraries gave out 20,000 book markers.

MAKING CAPITAL OF THE OLD CLOTHES STUNT ON JACKIE

For the presentation of The Rag Man at the Rialto Theatre, Columbus, Ga., J. Wright Brown offered free admission, the opening day only, to any child who would bring a donation. After being shown in the lobby the bundles went to the poor.

Visiting Cards

Using the "personal" calling card idea first worked on Gloria Swanson, D. Roscoe Faunce, of the Strand Theatre, Birmingham, Ala., capitalized the fact that Dorothy Sebastian hails from Birmingham.

He used a calling card with an imitation engraving face, but the back was printed up with the message instead of carrying it in handwriting, which would have made it doubly effective. The message ran: "Hello folks!" It's great to be back in my old home town. Come around to the Strand next week (March 30-April 4). I have a leading role in Sackcloth and Scarlet. Dorothy."

These were slipped under doors and into letter boxes and gave a particular emphasis to the fact that the very clever "bad" sister in Sackcloth and Scarlet.

Old Clothes Were Rag Man Tickets

J. Wright Brown didn't care if the old clothes stunt had been done to death on Jackie Coogan's earlier pictures. It fitted The Rag Man, so he advertised that on the opening day any child bringing a bundle of old clothes could have free admission, to the Rialto Theatre, Columbus, Ga., the idea being to get in a bunch of kids who would go out and talk about the play.

These bundles were stacked in the lobby at the foot of a cutout of Jackie in this play, and a card explained that these were a donation of the children to the Salvation Army.

After the run the clothes were turned over to the Army for distribution to the needy.

For his prologue Mr. Brown used a small boy who climbed out of a barrel. After a pantomimic tour of the stage to discover eavesdroppers, he took from the barrel a bundle of old clothes from which he produced a violin, playing several selections.

As the youngster was a pupil of the leader, and glad to get stage experience, the prologue cost nothing, and added materially to the effect of the presentation.

Specially Announced

Two thousand cards were sent out by the Strand Theatre, Tampa, Fla., announcing the return to the screen of Nazimova in Madonna of the Streets. It was all that was necessary to put the business over the top.

No little credit should go to the wording and typography of the card, for George B. Peck wrote careful copy and then had it set in a style that harmonized with the general idea. It was so attractively done that it impressed the recipient. Precisely the same copy slapped out in machine lines and poorly printed would have had a reverse effect.

Special stress given the fact that this was her first showing in three years was the chief selling idea.

Puts a House Ad in the Fashion Section

Leo G. Garner, of the Columbia Theatre, Bristol, Tenn., did a nice bit of constructive work the other day when he invaded the fashion section of the local paper. The paper had in preparation a special section for Spring fashions and merchant ads, and Mr. Garner came in with a three sixes in which he pointed out that the Columbia not only followed the fashions in entertainment, but offered a daily fashion show in that the fashions were anticipated by the picture producers. This last is so much the better of the two appeals that we think it would have paid to have elaborated this idea in the entire space. It's a little late for Easter now, but you can get in on any fashion supplement with the argument that producers have to keep ahead of the styles to anticipate the coming designs and that often the picture of today shows the fashions of tomorrow. An argument like this at a time when women have their attentions centered upon fashions will be worth more to the house than the most glowing advertisement for one particular feature. It's a good idea to hammer upon this angle now and then even though you have no fashion show to pin it to. Work it whenever you know a picture shows more than usually elaborate dressing.

Woodeny Cuts Are a Turpin Handicap

Some of the cuts on Tom Mix in Dick Turpin are good, but the Temple theatre, Birmingham, Ala., seems to have picked out the poor ones. Neither Dick nor his lady friend convey the suggestion of dash and romance in this four elevens layout, though the galloping horse shows some action, which is more than can be said for the figure of Mix over on the right. Most of the sales were made on the copy rather than on the cuts, with a nice display for star and title and a careful "Not a Western Picture" to advise those whose classical education has been neglected. Two of the sections repeat criticisms from the New York papers, while a third tells that "Dick Turpin was such a sensational riot at the Piccadilly Theatre on Broadway until it was held over for a second week." "That it was" would be better than "until it was" which suggests a second week flop. But Nat Royster backed this with a good general campaign with two airplane distributions of throwaways and a special story in the sports section of one of the papers contrasting the prize fight in the picture with the more polite affairs of today. The best part of this layout is that the various elements are held well apart, so they all stand a better chance of being read than where they are thrown together into a mass of jumbled type that repels the eye. Most of Royster's work shows this handling. The space always looks readable. You don't look at it with a mental "Gosh! Do I have to read all that?" and yet he gets a lot of talk into all his displays. He has a new house to put over and often he will take a considerable space for house talk that really helps more than undue stress upon any single picture. It's much better to sell a year-round house than a three-day or a week stand picture.

Another Example of Good Small Reverse

Here is a good small reverse in its original size. It comes from the Strand Theatre, Des Moines. Here the lines are not lost through too small a letter because only the "Universal-Jewel" is too small to be read without trouble, and the comedy and news reel are carried in type below. There is no objection to reverse where it does not obscure the lettering, and where the black is strong enough to give the white lettering the proper display. There is no excuse for reverse of any sort in a paper where the press work yields a grey or where the ink is so greasy that the oil discolors the white paper, but with good press work the reverse will get a nice display for a small advertisement, and help along a larger one. This seems to be a press book cut with the top cropped to let in the signature. Softening the cut edge with a coarse file might have helped a little, but it is good just as it stands. Of course softening the edge would not have sold any additional tickets to Smouldering Fires, but getting out the best possible effect will sell tickets in the long run in that it helps to create a tradition of excellence for the house. That is where the finer details help. They do not make for direct sales.

A Universal Release

Cuts Should Match Style of Offering

There may be something amusing in a train wreck, but we don't believe that a gigantic smash conveys the idea of a screaming comedy, and the two sides of this display from the Alhambra Theatre, Milwaukee, do not seem to hitch up well. The wreck scene does not give any suggestion of what the text declares to be "the funniest love story ever screened." The type copy is good, and that's a fine cut of a train wreck, but together the cut and copy are oil and water. The cut should be saved up for the next big railroad drama and a comedy cut used to put over Excuse Me. There are plenty of good comedy cuts available on this subject and a train wreck is about the last thing this side of a funeral that should be selected as illustrative material. Of course there was a lot of other advertising to offset this one cut, but why use the cut, anyhow.

A Metro-Goldwyn Release

Here's a Good One from Los Angeles

Not wanting to swell anyone's head, we want to remark that this space on The Dark Swan is one of the best things to come from

Los Angeles since they found oil. Most Los Angeles spaces are crowded because space costs so much money they seem to feel that every square sixteenth of an inch must be used. Here there is plenty of white space, but there is more than that. White space alone would not make this good. It is the space plus the layout plus the copy. And the remarkable part is that it is almost entirely hand work. Only the signature of the Rialto Theatre and the direction line at the bottom of the right seem to have been set with type. The rest is all lettered, but so well done as to suggest type. The idea in lettering has not been to be "artistic" through the use of scraggly letters, but to be certain that the lines fell where they were wanted, and the lettering has been done exceptionally well. When hand lettering can be so well done, hand work is an advantage. The trouble is that very few artists can letter well, and the worse they are the more they letter. Perhaps they feel the subconscious need of practise. This is only 55 by 2, just a shade more than four inches, but it's a gem in its way.

A Warner Brothers' Release

UNUSUALLY GOOD

Rochester Gets Good All Type

ONE WORD TITLES HELP

On the other hand the smaller houses get along with six or seven column inches and do well. Where they all take about the same space they get the same results as they would if all took quarter pages. This space for the Piccadilly on Sandra is 50 lines by two or about a 3½ inches double column. With only a one-word title to get over a nice display is achieved at a small cost. But about half the time the printer sets the sub-lines in all caps, and then the result is not so good, but here is a nice sample to show your own printer if you use about this size. Note that holding in the lines just below the title gives a better display to the players who run from side to side. If the lines in between also ran from rule to rule, the display would flop. The contrast between the different lines is what helps display in small compass, but be sure to have the more important line the longer and do not run two long lines next each other.

Jazz Sales Talk for Fast Worker

That should bring in a lot of money and they'll go out satisfied. About the only suggestion to be offered is that a reduction in the size of the type between Denny and the title would have given a better display to his name and would not have hurt the appeal of the support. The cut is rather too large, but Indianapolis theatres seem to feel that anything smaller than a three tens will be fatal, and they make it nice for the newspaper publishers.

seen, but it seems to have an immense auditorium. In addition to the blanket ad for the twelve houses, most of them take an additional space for their programs and the Rojo advertises the twelve reel picture at 5:30, 7 and 9 o'clock, which would seem to be hitting it up to some speed. Generally the blanket ad does not run more than a quarter page, but the Hawk gets a full half page and the combination gives plenty of cut space in which to get the idea over. The title is much better rendered into Spanish than Jackie Coogan's The Rag Man, which has been translated "The Vagabond," the title evidently giving the suggestion of a ragged man rather than a junk man.

Don't be ashamed to use the other fellow's stunt—if it made money for him.

Hal Roach Offers the Remarkable Horse Rex in Another Film That Should Break House Records

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Chalk up another hit to the credit of Rex, the magnificent black horse that scored such a success in "The King of Wild Horses." Hal Roach, who sponsored the first production, is now offering this remarkable animal in "Black Cyclone," which is also released through Pathe and we predict for it a trail of pleased audiences that spells box office records for it is the kind of picture which should appeal to every class of patrons.

No matter how intelligent a horse is there is naturally a decided limitation to the situation in which he can be used, and there are, therefore, certain points of similarity in the two productions, but this won't make those who saw the first picture like it any less, and in fact we feel sure that they will all want to see this animal again.

Rex is really and truly the star of this picture, but he shares some of his laurels with two other clever horses, The Lady, his leading woman, and The Killer, cast as the villain; and to a lesser extent with three human beings in similar roles, whose story closely parallels that of the horses from the romantic angle, for the story is really a romance. The human beings and their affairs have been subordinated and are only interesting because of the way in which their experiences affect the story of the horses.

We see Rex first as a fuzzy little colt, deprived of his mother, then as an inquisitive half-grown horse that gets into trouble, then as a full grown wild horse and follow his selection of a mate, his fight with the villain for her and his defeat. Here the human hero enters and saves Rex from death in quicksand and Rex repays him by saving him from the attack of a mountain lion and finally allowing the hero to ride him to the rescue of the girl, and with the defeat of the villain, Rex gets renewed courage and conquers his villain in a corking fight.

There is a tremendous lot of human interest in this picture, if such a term can be used in connection with animals. Anyway the picture arouses strong sympathy and admiration and unusual interest in all who like animals, and who does not?

Fred Jackman, who handled the other picture, also directed this one and his work has the marks of genius. You are convinced that Rex is the wild horse he portrays, the way he puts over his story is truly remarkable, and the effect has been further enhanced by an admirable lot of subtitles. Mr. Jackman has not forgotten comedy relief which is furnished at times by Rex himself, by a bear stung by bees, and above all by a nondescript little donkey that seems disgusted with the romance, nor even the final close-up which the horses and human lovers share.

While the horses occupy the centre of the stage we must not overlook the work of Guinn Williams as the hero. Here is a rider for you. No finer horsemanship has ever been seen on the screen that in the climax where after being thrown several times, he mounts Rex bareback, without saddle or bridle, and rides furiously across the plain. Here is a ride that will thrill the most jaded and should bring applause from the fans. For that matter, not only did it get a hand on blase broadway, New York, at the Capitol Theatre, but the entire picture was generously applauded at its closing.

There is too much other good stuff in this picture to mention, but we want to say that we do not recall any picture in a long time that gave us more genuine enjoyment than "Black Cyclone' and we believe most people will feel the same way about it.

Story

Rex, a wild horse, was born out on the plains and when still a little colt his mother was killed by a rattlesnake. He grew up into a magnificent animal and soon mated with a highborn horse, The Lady. Together they wandered into a valley in which there was a herd presided over by The Killer, an old fighter. They fought for The Lady, and The Killer overcame Rex. Bleeding, he waded into the water and, caught in quicksand, had ceased to struggle. The Hero, who was in hiding as the Villain's gang was hunting him, head Rex's cry of trouble and rescued him. The Lady managed to escape but was followed by wolves and was about to succumb to their attack when Rex drove them way. Rex was grateful to the Hero and returned in time to save him from the attack of a mountain lion. The Girl came to warn the Hero but was overtaken by the Villain, who saw his chance. The Hero pursued but the Villain killed his horse. Rex came to his aid and mounting Rex bareback the Hero caught up with and finally vanquished the Villain. Rex then brought The Lady to the Hero and while the Hero and Girl embraces the two horses rubbed noses as a sign of affection.

McGowan Introduces Amusing Comedy in Story of Big Brother Type Starring Franklyn Farnum

Franklyn Farnum's newest picture for release through Independent Pictures Corporation presents him in the role of an older brother who continually sacrifices himself for a younger brother who is weak-willed and always getting into trouble, but who is his mother's favorite.

The story involes the attempt of a Mexican gang leader and cattle smuggler to secure control of a desirable ranch owned by the two boys. During the course of the action the younger one believes he has killed a man and escapes across the border where he forgets his sweetheart and becomes fascinated with a vamp. The older brother to show the falsity of this woman prepares to elope with her and thereby causes the girl he really loves to turn against him, but of course, he wins out in the end.

There is considerable action of the type common to Westerns including a scene where the hero is dragged across country tied to a horse. Much of the action, however, takes place around a roadhouse in Mexico and it is hard to tell sometimes just what it is all about as the overlapping of the different plans and schemes cause confusion. One of the best points to this picture is the comedy contributed by the director J. P. McGowan who appears in the nondescript role of the hero's companion. While there is nothing novel, and in fact all of Mr. McGowan's work is on a familiar sort, it should be good for a number of smiles.

The Lassen ranch near the Mexican border is coveted by Vertugo, a Mexican line running because of the fine watering facilities for cattle, and he persuades Dick, a weak-kneed lad, to sell his interest. Dick's brother Tom stops the deal as the ranch is in his name. Vertugo continues to try and get the ranch and in a fight Dick shoots one of his men. Believing he has killed him, he escapes over the border and seeks Vertugo's protection. The boy's mother is ill and Tom and Dick's sweetheart, Edith, go to Mexico and Tom finds the boy has been ensnared by Rita, an adventuress. To show her up, Tom arranges an elopement with Rita, which Dick and Edith witness. Vertugo, enraged, as his plan has again gone astray, drags Tom behind a horse, but Tom's servant, Tough, rescues him. In the meantime Dick has been shot trying to protect Tom from Rita, and the shock reawakens his manhood, so he tells Tom that Edith really loves him. Tom is bashful, but Tough forces him at the point of a gun to go to Edith and all ends happily.

Fast-Moving and Interest-Holding Crook-Reformation Melodrama Proves Evelyn Brents Best for F. B. O.

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Apparently those responsible for the selection of Evelyn Brent's stories are satisfied that her forte lies in the portrayal of roles in which she starts out as a clever lawbreaker and then goes straight, and certainly she has demonstrated in the pictures already released through F. B. O. in this series that she is an able delineator of characters of this kind and can make them unusually convincing.

Miss Brent's newest picture "Alias Mary Flynn" is about the best of the lot so far and should prove thoroughly entertaining to all who like crook stories. No effort is made to inject mystery but in its place there is an abundance of human interest, fast action and well established sympathy.

This picture starts out with a jewel robbery and a clever escape in which she hides in an elderly man's car. He endeavors to persuade her to go straight and it seems as if the story had settled down to one of reformation and romance in which the old man's son, the district attorney, figures as the prospective husband. Good human interest and sympathy are deftly established here. A new and interesting note creeps in with the old man's disclosure of the fact that he wandered from the straight and narrow path in his youth and from then on the picture takes on the aspect of fast moving melodrama.

This part of the picture has been cleverly developed and is excellent melodrama, with an intermingling of plot and counter-plot that keeps things humming and holds the interest tensely. These situations include the decision of the girl to meet a gang of jewel thieves and get the jewels to save the old man from exposure. Following this there is a slight anti-climax but the interest is again revived by the murder of a jewel collector and the arrest of the old man for the crime. Then follows the successful attempt to establish his innocence by the girl who believes the assassin will return for the jewels and who traps him when he appears.

There is also good comedy relief in the character of a chauffeur who was formerly a jailbird and one of the best bits comes at the most tense moment of the picture where he calmly fells the escaping murderer as he leaps through a window and then makes a wise crack about it.

With all of this material it would seem that this feature would run seven or eight reels, but the action has been handled with such snap that it has all been put into 5559 feet.

Miss Brent has been given thoroughly capable support with handsome Malcolm MacGregor as the hero, Gladden James as the villain and John Gouch as the comedy chauffeur. William V. Mong gives a fine and thoroughly human characterization of the elderly benefactor. While the story is of a conventional type it has been handled so well and with such snap that we believe the average patron will enjoy this picture.

Piccadilly Charlie and a girl thief steal jewels and in making a getaway the girl takes refuge in John Reagan's car. Through his influence she goes straight and he finally consents to her marriage with his son Tim, the assistant district attorney who does not know she has been a crook. It develops that Reagan aids criminals as he strayed from the narrow path himself in his youth. Forbes, a jewel collector, gets in trouble over gems he hires thugs to steal and threatens Reagan if he does not aid him. Reagan has given the girl the name of Mary Flynn, and Mary to help Reagan recovers the jewels but hides them. In looking for them, Piccadilly Charlie kills Jason Forbes but as Reagan is found with the body he is arrested. Reagan tells his son all about his own youth and of Mary's past and together they plot to trap the murderer when he returns for the jewels. The scheme works and Reagan is exonerated. Mary and Tim find happiness together.

Irene Rich Has Good Opportunities for Effective Emotional Work in New Warner Production

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

A novel by the celebrated writer Harriet Beecher Stowe furnishes the basis for the Warner Brothers production "My Wife and I" in which Irene Rich is starred with Huntly Gordon playing opposite.

The theme concerns a couple whose twenty-fifth wedding anniversary is approaching. The husband becomes enamoured with a typical modern gold-digger and this threatens to wreck their happiness.

For most of the footage the picture is straight domestic drama but toward the finish melodrama comes to the fore with a situation in which the son comes very near shooting his own father and is saved by the timely appearance of the wife who deflects his aim.

The melodramatic portion is speedy enough and gives the picture a fast if rather conventional finish, but too much deliberation is used in the early development. Much footage is employed in character building and minor details so that the unfolding of the plot is delayed, and consequently the interest sags, and once the idea of the story is unfolded the denouement is fairly obvious.

The idea of having both father and son infatuated with the same woman, unknown to each other is not altogether convincing and coincidence plays a prominent part in the climax in having the son who has waited calmly for several months suddenly become crazed with jealousy and determine to kill his unknown rival just as his father visits the girl. This as well as some of the other situations, such as the dropping of the note and the wife finding it, are rather too theatric to register with strong dramatic effect. In putting over the idea of great wealth, the director, too, has seen fit to use sets which far exceed in size even the enormous rooms that are familiar to picture patrons.

The entire cast does good work but to Irene Rich falls the largest honors, and one of the strongest points to the production is the opportunity afforded her in the scene where she discovers her husband's love affair to do effective emotional work. We know of no actress who is a greater artist than Miss Rich when it comes to registering delicate emotional shading by slight changes of facial expression. She gives the impression of actually living the role.

The theme is interesting and due to Miss Rich's fine performance and good support the picture should prove entertaining; however, the story drags in the earlier reels and generous cutting would strengthen it as an audience attraction.

Stuart Borden becomes infatuated with Aileen Alton, who is only interested in him as long as he spends money lavishly on her. He runs up so many bills, that his father, though a millionaire, refuses to honor any more and denounces the girl, who proceeds to throw Stuart down. Through a mutual friend, Aileen meets Stuart's father and soon has him in her toils and he begins to neglect his wife on the plea of business. She accidentally discovers a letter from Aileen. The Bordens celebrate their twenty-fifth wedding anniversary on the date of Aileen's birthday party, and piqued because Borden cannot get there she goes to his home and he meets her outside, promising to come later. In the meantime Stuart, enraged with jealousy, is awaiting her return. Mrs. Borden has seen Borden kiss Aileen and tells him things cannot go on that way. He says he will leave for Europe and goes to bid Aileen goodbye. Stuart calls Aileen, who refuses to talk to him. He rushes out with a pistol and Mrs. Borden follows, arriving just in time to prevent Stuart from shooting his father. Borden begs his wife's forgiveness and they begin all over again.

Paramount Version of Play Has Good Comedy and Human Interest but Unsympathetic Ending

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Under the title "Welcome Home" Paramount is presenting as the newest James Cruze production an adaptation of the stage play "Minick" by Edna Ferber and George S. Kaufman.

The story is a domestic comedy drama and as was to be expected from two such accomplished writers there is a lot of good material in this picture. The idea on which it is built is the manner in which a modern household consisting of man and wife is upset by the coming of the husband's father, to live with them. He insists in butting into everything and while well-meaning proves meddlesome and makes the wife's lot almost unbearable.

The situations are cleverly developed and logical and the characters human. There is some excellent comedy growing out of the situations. Women especially will sympathize with and appreciate the plight of the troubled wife whose house is upset by the old man and his cronies as she is about to give a party. There is good psychology in the development of the situations.

The story is clean with no sex situations and no love triangle and depends on its human interest and especially characterization, for it is essentially a character study with very little drama.

On the other hand, while the characters are human and plausible, and there are people like the Prouty's who under the same conditions would act just as they do, it

W. W. Farley Negotiating for Northern New York Theatres

Apparently bitten by the "chain bug," W. W. Farley of Albany, president of Farash Theatres, Inc., operating four theatres in Schenectady, and head of the Terrace City Amusement Company, with seven houses in Yonkers, is negotiating for the Community Theatre in Catskill, the Gateway in Little Falls, and the Liberty in Herkimer, three of the most modern and beautiful houses in this section of the state. The deal has been under way for a week or more, and Mr. Farley admits that there is a strong probability of his taking over the Catskill house in the near future. This house has been run by M. E. Silberstein, owner of the daily paper in Catskill, while the Gateway in Little Falls is being run by Robert Wagner, an old-time showman. The Liberty is run by Charles Moyer.

Although Mr. Farley emphatically denies that he is working towards the establishment of a chain of houses, the fact remains that his company is in control of the situation in Schenectady, and it was only a month or so ago that he bought the Warburton Theatre in Yonkers, a 1,000-seat house located in a building which has no less than 46 offices and two stores. Mr. Farley has plenty of the coin of the realm and is branching out faster than anyone in this section other than the Schine brothers.

There is a peculiar situation, from the standpoint of the picture theatre, in Mechaniesville. The Schine boys are planning to lease a 1,000-seat house which will be built within the next few months, while William Benton of Ballston, with houses already in Saratoga and Plattsburg, plans to erect a new theatre in Mechaniesville upon the site recently purchased from Louis Buettner. Fourteen Mechaniesville business men met last week and with a capitalization of $150,000 incorporated and purchased property on Park avenue, where a house 60 feet wide and 170 feet deep will be built and immediately leased to the Schines for a period of fifteen years. The house will be completed and opened in October.

The Mark Strand in Albany believes in telling the people what's ahead of them. Coming attractions include "The Charmer," "Soul Fire," "The Shock Punch," "Chickie," "Man and the Maid" and "Quo Vadis." Some of these will run a straight week and others will split.

Quite a nice little delegation of exhibitors from this part of the state made up their minds at the last moment to journey out to Milwaukee. William Shirley of Schenectady left on the Twentieth Century on Monday night from Albany, while William Smalley, Meyer and Louis Schine and William Benton went out on earlier trains.

George Roberts, who makes Albany his home, but who looks after the Berinstein chain of houses in Elmira, Troy, Albany and Schenectady, has come to the conclusion that lawyers cost money. Mr. Roberts never had much trouble in his life and as a rule has been successful in fighting shy of the legal fraternity. Several months ago, however, while in a sleeper on his way back from Elmira to Albany, he had his pocket picked of something over $100. Through a lawyer, Mr. Roberts presented his claim to the railroad and was later reimbursed. And now comes the sad part of the tale. The lawyer's bill for "services rendered," which consisted, it is said, of a letter to the company, amounted to just $65.

Louis Buettner, who has been operating theatres in Mechanicsville, Cohoes and Hudson Falls, has disposed of the Star in Mechanicsville to W. D. Tweedy, a coal dealer in that city, who will take over the house on June 6. There is a rumor to the effect that negotiations are also pending with other parties for the Cohoes and Hudson Falls houses, which would seem to substantiate Mr. Buettner's frequent assertions that he will retire.

Patiently waiting for the "hot dog" season to open, John Mattice, who runs the Novelty in Middleburg, finds that the days are dragging and that the county fairs are still many weeks away. Mr. Mattice is really the "Hot Dog King" of the county fairs of New York State and makes the rounds every year. As he fattens his patrons so does he fatten his own bank account.

Bob Wagner of the Gateway in Little Falls is always on the lookout to do a friend a good turn. And so when Mr. and Mrs. Theodore L. Rogers, the former a State Assemblyman, leave for the West Coast the last of this month to attend the Shrine conclave they will carry a letter from Mr. Wagner that will give them the entree to Hollywood.

Mr. and Mrs. Harry Hellman, who run the Royal in Albany, are back home from a trip to New York.

According to a report, Famous Players is negotiating for the Hudson Theatre in Schenectady, a downtown house now playing stock and which would give the company a long desired opening in the Electric City.

These are the sort of days, with daylight saving, automobiles and balmy weather, that were described the other night by Ollie Stacey, owner of the Majestic in Albany, as the kind where people take to their automobiles and leave exhibitors far, far behind —in their bank deposits.

Is Albany to have another new theatre? Parties refusing to divulge their names or intentions have been securing options during the past few days for the Belvidere Hotel property and adjoining buildings, in the downtown section of the city. On account of the number of buildings on which options have been secured, there is a report to the effect that a new theatre may shortly be announced.

If you ever happen to be included in a party which numbers L. L. Connors, a well known exhibitor of Cambridge, just ask him to sing a song or two. Mr. Connors has a splendid voice and is in constant demand at lodge and other gatherings. In addition to his house in Cambridge, he also has one in Granville and one in Salem, constituting what is commonly referred to as "the subway circuit."

Harry Berinstein of Elmira dropped into Albany during the past week, but as usual his stay was a short one. Harry doesn't fancy the hills of Albany, and while his visits are few and far between, his stays are generally as short as he can make them.

Mr. Allen was in town during the week with a crew of three salesmen on a cheese selling drive. His house will close to one day a week during the summer, but people will continue eating his cheese.

Bill Smalley of Cooperstown, running true to form, has added another house to his chain, making fifteen all told. The latest is Shaul's Opera House in Richfield Springs, which will go over to the Smalley management on July 1. Mr. Smalley admits that "there will be others."

Uly S. Hill of Troy, Abe Stone of Albany and Louis Buettner of Cohoes served on the Arbitration Board last week, but it was a short session, lasting only thirty minutes or so. Differences between exhibitors and exchanges are now becoming so few and far between that there isn't much work for the Arbitration Board to do.

That a West Side picture house is to be built in Rochester is a rumor strongly current in Kodak Town. Financial backing has been obtained, according to the report, and negotiations started for a site in Main street west, beyond the Buffalo, Rochester, Pittsburgh office building at South Washington street. Although the names of Chester and Paul Fenyvessy, owners of the Strand, and William A. Calihan, manager of the Regent, have been linked with the plan, these men have denied any connection with it. The proposed theatre will seat 3,000. Several weeks ago the Fenyvessy interests announced a plan to erect a large theatre in William street, Rochester.

Marjorie Spring, ticket seller at the Central Park Theatre, a north Buffalo community theatre, was arrested the other day on a charge of selling tickets to minors. James Hyan, a ticket taker, was arrested on the same charge. A year ago Carolyn Darrow, who owns the house, was fined $25 on a charge of selling tickets to children under 16.

E. G. Dodds, former manager of the State Theatre in Corning, N. Y., has gone to East Rochester where he has taken charge of the Rialto. He has been succeeded in Corning by Walter H. Smith of Hornell. Vermont

The Opera House in Rockingham was destroyed by fire which swept the town hall building, causing a loss of $150,000.

Pittsburgh

Sam Gould, who conducts three theatres on the North Side, Pittsburgh, on May 11 took over Jacob Kaiser's West End Theatre, which Mr. Kaiser has controlled for eleven years. The house will close shortly for extensive remodeling and enlarging. The capacity will be increased from 300 to 700. William W. Clark, formerly manager of the Rivoli in East Pittsburgh, will manage the West End.

Spear Marousis of the Penn Theatre, New Castle, is a proud daddy for the first time, the newcomer being a girl. Both mother and daughter are doing fine and the World extends sincere congratulations.

Bennett Amdur has had a classy new electric sign hung in front of his Garden Theatre on the North Side. The sign is of the vertical type and is thirty-six feet high. The word "Garden" is the only one on the sign, while around it there runs vari-colored "chaser" lights.

The Arcade at Morgantown, W. Va., oldest picture house in the city, closed for several weeks, has reopened under the active management of Roy Garee, acting for the owners of the theatre, George W. John of this city and Jessie M. Jackson of Washington, D. C. The leasehold of the former management expired April 1 and since that time repairs costing $10,000 have been made by John, who has directed the work for rehabilitating the structure and has worked out the organization of the management under the owners' operation.

John Perino, for some time owner of the Olympic at Arnold, has sold the house to William Millburn, the new owner having taken charge on May 11. The house was immediately closed and the new owner had his grand opening on May 16. Mr. Perino, who has other business interests in Arnold, plans a four months' vacation trip to his old home in Italy.

The Royal at Beckley, W. Va., owned by the Allegheny Theatre Company, will be closed during the summer and completely rebuilt. The Royal is one of a chain of five theatres operated by the Allegheny Theatre Company.

Avery Little of Bramwell has opened a new picture theatre at Princeton, W. Va.

Arkansas

R. R. Gallagher and Fred Sharp have leased the Stanford Theatre at Horatio, Ark.

A new tent has replaced the Gem Theatre at Blytheville, Ark., which was destroyed by fire recently. It seats 1,000.

St. Louis

Deeds of trust of the New St. Louis Theatre, Grand boulevard and Morgan street, St. Louis, and the proposed Ambassador Theatre and office building at Seventh and Locust streets were filed on May 12. The St. Louis Theatre deed secures a bond issue of $800,000, while the Ambassador bond issue is for $4,500,000. Skouras Brothers Enterprises during the past week awarded the general contract for their $5,500,000 theatre and office structure to the Boaz-Kiel Construction Company. Work will get under way immediately.

The Lehr Construction Company of St. Joseph, Mo., has started work on the new theatre for the P. & D. Theatre Company at 19th and Howard streets, St. Joseph. The house will be one story and basement, 50 by 134 feet, and cost about $25,000.

D. J. Wolpert, architect, Jonesboro, Ark., has finished plans for the new house for the Jonesboro Amusement Company, E. W. Collins, manager. The structure will cost $100,000 and be two stories high. It will contain a parquet, balcony and gallery. There also will be a full sized stage, ten dressing rooms, two rest rooms and two offices. It will be Spanish in type and of reinforced concrete, brick and terra cotta construction.

The name of the Fine Arts Theatre, Brownsville, Tenn., has been changed to Metro Theatre.

C. W. McCutcheon of Sikeston, Mo., has taken over the Home Theatre, Blytheville, Ark., and the Midway, Fornfelt, Mo. He also has houses in Sikeston, Charleston and Illmo, Mo.

Because her lease has expired, Mrs. Catherine Young, widow of William Young, is forced to close her Easton-Taylor Theatre, St. Louis. The owners claim they plan to remodel into a commercial garage structure. Several weeks ago Mrs. Young closed her Euclid Theatre at Euclid and Easton avenue and had been devoting her entire time to the Easton-Taylor. It is a hard blow to her to be forced to close the second theatre, as under her management the house had developed into a very profitable institution.

The Empress Theatre, Haiti, Mo., again is under the management of J. L. Dorris. Other houses that have changed hands recently are: New Theatre, Ozark, Mo.; Lyric Theatre, Petersburg, Ind.; Palace Theatre, Lawrenceville, Ill. The latter house was taken over by G. R. Rentler. In anticipation of the new competition Mrs. Curley B. Gould has announced that she will reopen her Phoenix Theatre in August. The house is being decorated for the grand opening.

Out-of-town exhibitors seen along Picture Row this week included, C. H. Tuttle, Desloge, Mo.; C. W. McCutcheon, Sikeston, Mo.; J. C. Cotter and wife of Moberly, Mo., and Dr. C. A. Tetley of Elvis, Mo.

Kansas

C. R. Wilson, owner of the Liberty Theatre, Liberty, Mo., who has been acting as official membership solicitor in the Missouri territory for the M. P. T. O. Kansas and Missouri, will be recalled next week in accordance with a plan of the association to send C. E. Cook, business manager of the organization, on a tour of the territory. Mr. Cook, who will cover all of Kansas and Western Missouri, will devote one week to the territory and then back to the office for a week, maintaining such a schedule until the task is completed.

Hardly had the new Central Theatre, a suburban house of Kansas City, opened its doors the other day until the sale of the house was announced. The theatre was purchased by Gregg & Crandall from Jack Tiller of McCook, Neb., for $12,000.

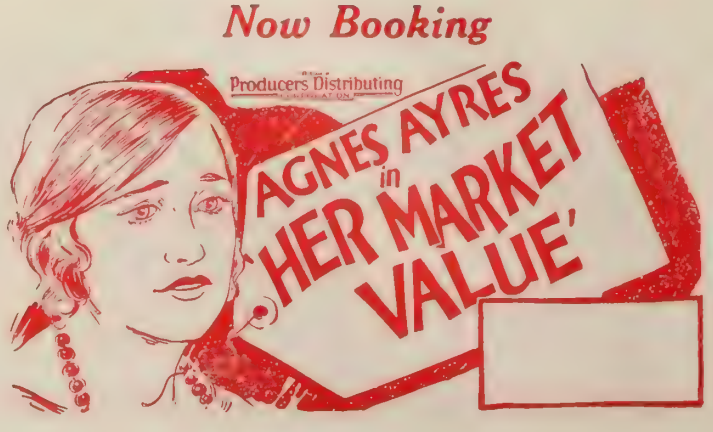
Joe Cooper, veteran exhibitor of Kansas, had a hard day in the district court at Wichita, Kans., last week. Ten days in jail for contempt and the loss of a $38,500 verdict to C. C. McCollister, his ex-partner in theatrical enterprises, was the sum total of his trouble. The contempt charge followed a personal attack by Mr. Cooper on Mr. McCollister's attorney, Sam B. Amidon, Democratic national committeeman for Kansas, just after the case went to the jury.

The continued steady patronage at the Tackett Theatre, just over the state line in Oklahoma from Coffeyville, Kans., has convinced J. B. Tackett, owner, that he made no mistake in building outside his state on virtually a prairie to thwart reformers who opposed Sunday shows.

The following openings, closings and changes of management of theatres in the Kansas City territory have been announced: Bogue Theatre, Bogue, Kans., closed, following a fire which partly destroyed the house; Crooks Theatre, Howard, Kans., purchased by F. B. Osborn; Star Theatre, Holten, Kans., purchased by H. Hagenmaier from H. Koch; Royal Play House, Grain Valley, Mo., reopened after having been remodeled, now under the management of P. D. Peal.

A. E. Jarboe, owner of the Royal Theatre, Cameron, Mo., contends that it always pays to have a staunch friend in the editor of your home town daily newspaper. The other day scores of students paraded up and down the streets of Cameron in an effort to attract attention to a school show in opposition to the Royal, even ballyhooing directly in front of the Royal. A front page editorial in the Cameron Progress not only turned the tide in Mr. Jarboe's favor, but forever banned the ballyhooing of school shows on the streets.

Among the out-of-town exhibitors in the Kansas City territory last week were: F. G. Weary, Farris Theatre, Richmond, Mo.; Laurence Brenninger, Topeka, Kans.; S. A. Andrews, Gem, Olathe, Kans.; Tom McGruder, Elite, Iola, Kans.; G. L. Rugg, City Hall Theatre, Robinson, Kans.; C. M. Pattee, Pattee Theatre, Lawrence, Kans.; Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Christian, Beyer Theatre, Excelsior Springs, Mo.; S. E. Wilhoit, Jefferson, Springfield, Mo.



Louisville

Announcement is made of a sale by the Walnut Amusement Company, operating the Walnut Theatre on Walnut street, between Fourth and Fifth, for $150,000, under an arrangement whereby the Walnut Theatre will be continued by the old owners under a lease until February, 1929. The company did not divulge the name of the purchaser, who asked that it be withheld for the time being, he having bought it as an investment. The theatre has been running combination picture and vaudeville bills and has been operated by the same interests which have controlled the Strand, Alamo, Broadway chain and, in all, some twelve or more theatres in Louisville. Besides the theatre the building contains several stores and offices. Adolph Reutlinger of the Walnut Amusement Company reported that the company would continue its shows as heretofore under the lease arrangement.

News of the Chicago Territory

Another new theatre was opened last week in Chicago and the Lynch Circuit, Inc., which will operate the new Manor Theatre on West North avenue, reported record-breaking attendance for the opening week. Jack Lynch will give the new house his personal attention. Quite a few of the boys from Film Row were on hand for the opening festivities. Jack Miller led a bunch of the members of the Exhibitors Association to attend the big event. Many floral tributes from friends in the trade were displayed in the theatre foyer, showing the high regard in which the Lynch organization is held in this territory.

The big event of the week at the McVickers Theatre, Chicago, was the coming of Paul Ash and his jazz musicians from the Pacific Coast for an extended engagement at the house, taking the place of Spitalny and his symphony orchestra, who had played at the house since its opening as a de luxe picture theatre.

According to the report from the South Side film circles Andrew Karzas, the theatre and dance hall magnate, and Cooney Brothers have got together for mutual protection. Cooney Brothers head the National Theatres Corporation that controls the New Capital Theatre, Stratford and other well-known houses on the South Side, while Karzes has the Woodlawn Theatre at 853 East 63rd and a couple of big houses being built on the North Side.. It is reported that Karzas sold Cooney Brothers a half interest in the Woodlawn, which is one of the best known picture theatres in the Englewood and University districts.

The Chicago Theatre, Chicago, will have Creatore as a guest musical director for the coming week, coming from the Tivoli where he led the symphony orchestra this week. The Capital is showing "The Crimson Runners," with a personal appearance of Priscilla Dean the star, that brought capacity business. The Riveria packed them in with a "Take-a-Chance" week, while the Patheon of Lubliner & Trinz held them out with Cantor Josef Rosenblatt as a headliner. The Roosevelt opened with "The Lost World" for the local premiere and the Stratford reported good business with the Miami Jazz band and several other stage features.

Eight hundred thousand dollars in gold was paid to Ida K. Notz and Miss Florence Kranz by Eitel Brothers for the site of the New Orpheum Theatre and Hotel building on Randolph street, Chicago. The site covered by the transaction fronts 120 feet on Randolph street and 127 feet on Wells street.

With the building of the new Marks Theatre at Sheridan Road and Devon, Chicago, and the foundation going in for the Ure Theatre Building on Howard avenue, leased to Balaban & Katz, the film situation for the independent houses in that part of the city becomes a big problem. With Evanston theatres competing for films with the independent theatre men of the North Shore, they have a four cornered fight on hand.

Both Meyer and Louis Marks of the Marks Circuit spent several days at French Lick Springs tuning up their golf averages, so they will be ready for all comers in the film league before long.

The Savoy at Springfield, Ill., lost $600 last week when burglars broke into the house.

Mrs. L. W. Rodgers will start construction on a new house at Carbondale, Ill., seating in excess of 1,000.

Another new picture theatre for Danville, Ill., being erected by Charley Pyle and Bill McNeven of Champaign. It will seat 600. It has one of the best locations in that city, right next to the Plaza hotel.

George H. Webster, who has been booking acts for Lubliner & Trinz, has organized the Webster Company with a capital of $12,000 to book acts for picture theatres. Three members of Lubliner & Trinz are associated with him in the venture, namely, Joseph Trinz, Joseph Stern and Samuel Lubliner. The new company will also make a specialty of pre-entations for theatres.

Another theatre is projected for the Howard avenue district, as the northeast corner of Howard and Paulina street has been sold to a syndicate for $350,000. Work will begin at an early date, it is reported.

Chicago theatre owners are much interested in the projected 33 1-3 per cent. increase in burglary insurance rates, as the risk in handling money taken in at the box offices has increased materially during the past several months. The hold-up men have become very bold, as witness the recent hold-up of the cashier of the Roosevelt Theatre.

S. J. Gregory and Company circuit has plans for improvements in several of the houses. So far this year they have opened new houses at La Grange, Ill., with Frank Evans as managing director, and the Indiana Theatre at Indiana Harbor under the direction of Michael J. Kozacik. This house seats 1,200.

Cincinnati

Cincinnati is to have the largest and most pretentious movie house in this section of the country, according to plans which have been drawn by a Chicago architect for the Cino Theatre Company. The company has just been incorporated by Ben Heidingsfeld, Cincinnati attorney heavily interested in other theatre ventures in this city, and I. Libson, who controls all of the first-run houses in the downtown district. The new house, which will be built on the site of the old Stag and Honing hotel properties, at the corner of Fifth and Vine streets, at a cost of $1,000,000, will follow closely the design of the Cincinnati Capitol Theatre, originally an Ascher house but recently taken over by the Libson interests. The site was at one time the property of Paramount, who intended building a theatre but subsequently abandoned the idea.

Ohio contributed two of her native sons to the directorate of the M. P. T. O. A. at Milwaukee, namely, John Schwalm, president of the Jewel Photoplay Company, Hamilton, and manager of the Rialto Theatre in that city, and J. J. Horwitz, who controls a string of theatres in Cleveland and vicinity.

H. J. Walters, who operates the Andover Theatre, Andover, Ohio, has acquired the Pleasurette, Burton, Ohio, and renamed it the Opera House. At Cadiz, Ohio, E. M. Long and sons have opened a modern movie house seating 500, with space for 150 additional seats if necessary.

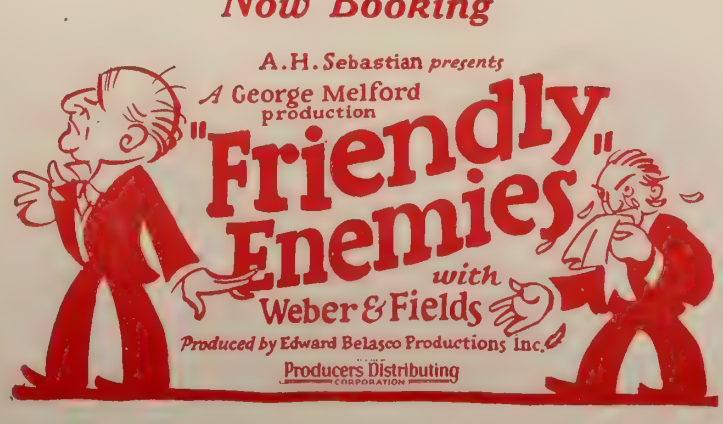
A scene in Charlie Chaplin's latest production, "The Gold Rush," soon to be released by United Artists.

"Madame Sans Gene," originally shown at the Capitol Theatre, Cincinnati, for two weeks, was brought back for another week's showing. "Sally," after showing at the Lyric for one week, was held over for the second week. At the Lyric, "Charley's Aunt" created an attendance record for a three weeks' run and is being given a return showing at the Strand. All of the houses mentioned belong to the Libson chain in Cincinnati.

Two new theatres, both community houses, are to be opened in Cleveland. One is a part of the recently constructed Ivanhoe Square building in fashionable upper Euclid avenue. It has just been leased for fifteen years to the Ivanhoe Theatre Company at an annual rental of $12,500, with provisions for a maximum rental of $17,500 during the latter years of the lease. The house seats 1,000 and will open the latter part of May. The other theatre is the Cedar-Lee and will be a part of the $250,000 Cedar-Lee building for which a permit was recently granted. This house will not open before fall.

Burglars recently entered the Kaypee Theatre, Mt. Gilead, Ohio. They secured $10 from one of the drawers in the office and also took a typewriter.

Recent building activities include a lodge, theatre and office building which will be erected by the Pythian Temple Society, Columbus, Ohio, at the corner of Mt. Vernon and Talmadge avenues. Coldwater, Ohio, will also have a new house to cost $60,000.



San Francisco

The Herbert L. Rothchild Entertainment, Inc., which conducts the California, Granada, Imperial and Portola theatres on Market street, San Francisco, has purchased the Strand, 965 Market street, and will add this house to its chain on July 1. Two separate deals were involved in the purchase, each depending upon the other. From the Boyd Investment Company it secured the property, which has a frontage of 137 feet on Market street and a depth of 170 feet to Stevenson street, and from the New York and San Francisco Amusement Company it secured the lease of the theatre, with all its equipment and furnishings. The house seats 1,670.

Herbert L. Rothchild, head of the amusement company, entered the picture field a little more than twelve years ago when he secured an interest in the Portola. This house proved a wonderful success and resulted in the building of the California. Later the Imperial was taken over and finally the Granada was built three years ago. The organization has first call on all Paramount productions, all Fox pictures and all Universal pictures. A contract was recently signed whereby it will show all the products of United Artists.

Charles M. Thall, who was recently appointed to the position of assistant general manager of West Coast Theatres, Inc., in charge of the Northern California division, has assumed his new duties at San Francisco. He comes from a family long connected with the amusement business in this city, his father, Mark Thall, in partnership with the Belasco interests, having built the old Alcazar Theatre which stood on the site of the present Union Square Theatre. Charles M. Thall has filled many positions in the local field, including those of exploitation manager for First National, director of publicity for the Warfield and Tivoli theatres and booking manager for West Coast Theatres, Inc., of Northern California.

A theatre seating 1,200 and costing $150,000 will be erected on Mission street, at Olive, San Francisco, by George Lagomarsino, and will be operated by the Golden State Theatre & Realty Corporation. The transaction was handled by J. R. Saul, who specializes in theatre transfers. This is the sixth new theatre to be announced by this circuit within a week. The others are a $250,000 house in the Sunset district; one at San Pablo avenue and Stanford boulevard, Oakland; one at Park boulevard and East Eighteenth street, Oakland; one at East Fourteenth street and Thirty-eighth avenue, Oakland, and one at Pacific Grove.

Joel C. Cohen, president of the Hawaiian Amusement Company, Ltd., Honolulu, T. H., who has been spending some time at San Francisco, plans to leave shortly on a trip to New York. The company has eight theatres in the Hawaiian Islands.

L. E. Doane, who recently succeeded R. R. Boomer as manager of the Cameo Theatre, Universal's San Francisco house, has eliminated the girl show and straight pictures are again being featured. Mr. Doane had been connected with this theatre as assistant to Mr. Boomer about six months.

Plans have been completed for the erection of a picture theatre seating 750 on property owned by Joseph Marino at Martinez.

West Coast Theatres, Inc., have arranged to lease the White Theatre at Fresno, Cal., and alterations to cost $50,000 are planned.

The State Theatre, Oakland, Cal., will shortly commence the policy of presenting Pantages vaudeville in connection with screen features. Edward A. Smith, manages the theatre.

Thieves recently played a mean trick on the orchestra of the Strand Theatre, Alameda. Two men entered the pit after the matinee performance and carried the bass drum from the theatre. When H. W. Nasser, the manager, asked what they were doing with it they told him they were going to fix it. They never returned.

Denver

J. J. Goodstein, pioneer exhibitor of the Denver territory, announces plans for a new $150,000 theatre to be erected in Pueblo, Col. Mr. Goodstein now operates the Palm Theatre of Pueblo and the New Longmont Theatre of Longmont, Col. Full details of this project will be announced within a short time.

B. B. Hinman of the Gem Theatre, Durango, Col., announces the sale of his theatre to Mrs. J. O. Taylor, a newcomer in the exhibition business although a well known resident of Durango.

Otto Baccheci of Baccheci Brothers, owners of the Pastime Theatre, Albuquerque, N. M., is in the city on a joint pleasure and business trip. Mr. Baccheci is arranging for his new product while the family is enjoying the sights in and around Manitou, Col. He will join his family and return to Albuquerque the early part of the week.

Harry Nolan, veteran exhibitor of the Denver territory, has returned from the Milwaukee convention with plenty of interesting news. Harry has completed a trip not only to Milwaukee but to Chicago, New York and other eastern points.

W. A. Seaman, former owner and operator of the Star Theatre, Ft. Lupton, Col., has opened a new theatre in Brighton. It will be known as the Seaman Theatre. From the results of the first week's business it looks as though a very successful season is in store.

Other exhibitors who were visitors in Film Row during the past week are: Eiez and Hickox, Isis Theatre, Boulder; R. V. Mallory, Rialto Theatre, Brighton; Frank Fairchild of the K. & F. Amusement Company, and M. C. Gerhart of the Empress Theatre, Ft. Collins.

Seattle

Sherman Combs, well known theatre builder of the Pacific Northwest, died at his home in Seattle last week. Mr. Combs built the Alaska Theatre, now J. & V.'s Strand; the Clemmer, now the Columbia, and the Winter Garden, in which he was financially interested. Mr. Combs enjoyed a wide circle of friends who mourn his passing.

May is proving a good month for theatre openings. G. F. Bessenger opened his Madrona Garden in Suburban Seattle on May 9. F. W. Graham staged the opening of his new house in Shelton, Wash., the next week. F. W. Groesbeck followed this with his New Theatre on the fifteenth, and F. G. Abbott presented his thoroughly renovated and remodeled Dream Theatre, Sedro Woolley, on the thirteenth with a formal opening marked by all the excitement of a first night.

Louis Goldsmith of the Society Theatre staged a special program for the school children in his district with "The Country Kid" as the feature on a well balanced bill. The show was conducted by the school as a reward for a number of "drives" conducted by the children, such as a paper drive to raise funds, etc. Goldsmith donated the theatre for a week day matinee and arranged the show at no cost to the school. This is worthwhile co-operation and at the same time discourages the use of projection in the schools as an opposition to his theatre. Whenever the school conducts an educational program with films Goldsmith operates their projector for them. He has the young folks and school authorities in his district working with him and for him, as a result of his co-operative attitude.

Ushering in Mothers' Day, the Strand presented "My Son" with an attractive and appropriate prologue. Manager Finkelstein extended the courtesies of the house to the entire personnel of the U. S. S. Colorado during the day.

The Film Theatre, Craigmont, Idaho, was closed during the week. F. A. Smith was manager. Other reported closings were: the Liberty, Estacada, Ore., A. J. Teyerabend, manager, and the house in McKenna, Wash., operated by C. V. Lotz. The latter, it is understood, is only a temporary closing during a smallpox epidemic.

Detroit

The Broadway Strand Theatre, operated by Universal, has made another change in managers. This time J. A. Carrier of Chicago succeeds H. S. Ansley, who has returned to New York to carry out other duties for Universal.

Brightmoor, Detroit suburb of tiny homes and all of them practically of the same design, is to have a theatre in keeping with the town's rapid growth. A 2,000-seat house to cost $150,000 is under process of erection to be ready for opening in the fall.

So many rumors have spread through Detroit and Michigan connecting the Chicago firm of Fitzpatrick & McElroy with purchases of theatres throughout the territory that the company has made a printed denial of any such proceedings.

Elwyn Simons, who recently disposed of his interests in two theatres in Adrian to Fitzpatrick & McElroy, is now managing the Caldwell Theatre at St. Joseph, Mich.

H. S. Gallup, general manager of the Delft Theatre Enterprises, which cover several cities in the upper peninsula, writes from the Orient that he will return this month.

After a speckled career in pictures, vaudeville, combination, musical comedy and straight stock, the Isis Theatre in Grand Rapids, which once was a foremost first-run house, has again returned to an exclusive picture policy. It is now in control of the Consolidated Theatres, Inc.

Associated Exhibitors

GOING UP. (5,886 feet). Star, Douglas MacLean. A very good light comedy for six reels and good comedy in seventh would vote it a fair picture. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Audience appeal, ninety per cent. Farmers and town people town of 800. Admission 10-25. Firkins & Laws, Crystal Theatre (200 seats), Moravia, Iowa.

RACING LUCK. (5 reels). Star, Monty Banks. Good program picture with lots of comedy. Opened here rather slow as Banks was not known, but the attendance increased every day. Tone, good. Sunday, no. Special, no. Good audience appeal. All classes city of 15,000. Admission 15-33. Ed. Malhiot, Manarch Theatre (450 seats), Medicine Hat, Alta., Canada.

F. B. O.

CLOUD RIDER. (5,070 feet). Star, Al Wilson. An aeroplane stunt picture which also contains a good plot which makes it a most interesting program. Good enough for any house, but small and mddium sized towns eat up this type of picture. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Audience appeal, one hundred per cent. Mixed class town of 1,200. Admission 10-25. John McGill, Community Theatre (500 seats), Port Orchard, Washington.

O. U. WEST. (5,000 feet). Star, Lefty Flynn. Good western of the program variety, will please the western fans. Tone, good. Sunday, no. Special, no. Audience appeal, sixty percent. Small town class town of 300. Admission 10-25. Roy E. Cline, Osage Theatre (200 seats), Osage, Oklahoma.

RANGE TERROR. (4,738 feet). Star, Bob Custer. Good program western with splendid condition of film and fine photography to assist in putting it across. Custer can be developed into a fine outdoor actor if properly directed as he has a pleasing personality and is a skilful rider. Somewhat slow in places. Tone, fair. Sunday, no. Special, no. Fair audience appeal. General class town of 1,000. Admission 10-25, 15-35. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

RANGE TERROR. (4,738 feet). Star, Bob Custer. Another very good western from this star will more than please the average western fans. Buy the entire series you can't lose. Print new. Tone, good. Sunday, no. Special, no. Very good audience appeal. All classes in big city. Admission ten cents. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre (298 seats), Baltimore, Maryland.

TEARING THROUGH. Star, Richard Talmadge. This will compare with the rest of the Talmadges very well. Has action, comedy, and plenty of stunts which is what the fans want. There may be some people who do not like this star but they do not live in this part of the country. Tone, good. You bet it has audience appeal. Small town class town of 300. Admission 10-25. Roy E. Cline, Osage Theatre (200 seats), Osage, Olkahoma.

THAT DEVIL QUEMADO. (4,720 feet). Star, Fred Thomson. Another one for Fred Thomson to go over strong. A story which gives the star plenty of chance to do his stunts, and Silver King is there also. Action and comedy good. Tone, good. Special, no. Strong audience appeal. Working class city of 100,000. Admission 10-15-20. W. C. Budge, Comedy Theatre (275 seats), Jamaica, New York.

THAT DEVIL QUEMADO. (4,720 feet). Star, Fred Thomson. A splendid picture. One that everybody will like. You can't go wrong with the "Thomsons." Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Good audience appeal. Town and country class town of 1,700. Admission 10-20, 15-37. Herbert Tapp, Hippodrome Theatre (450 seats), Sheridan, Indiana.

THERE'S MILLIONS IN IT. Star cast. F. B. O. must have lost a bet with the producer for this is a very ordinary foreign made picture. One which was a substitute for another picture to us. A fine one for radio manufacturers. Tone, good. Sunday, no. Special, no. Audience appeal, forty per cent. Farmers and town people, town of 800. Admission 10-25. Firkins & Laws, Crystal Theatre (200 seats), Moravia, Iowa.

THUNDERING HOOFS. (6,915 feet). Star, Fred Thomson. One of this star's best. Everyone seemed very well pleased. The horse Silver King is almost human. Will go big with western fans. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good audience appeal. Family and transient class city of 65,000. Admission 10-15. R. K. Covington, Bijou Theatre (500 seats), Fresno, California.

THUNDERING HOOFS. (6,015 feet). Star, Fred Thomson. Two days to good business. Believe this fellow will build up. General class city of 35,000. Admission 25-35. C. D. Buss, Strand Theatre (700 seats), Easton, Pennsylvania.

WHITE SIN. Star, Madge Bellamy. Here is a whiz of a picture. Went well. Many favorable comments. Madge is well liked here. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Audience appeal, ninety-six per cent. Farm class town of 200. Admission 15-30. Robert W. Hines, Hines Theatre (150 seats), Loyalton, South Dakota.

YANKEE MADNESS. (6,680 feet). Star cast. A good program picture with plenty of action but not a great deal to it. Tone, okay. Sunday, no. Special, no. Audience appeal, fifty per cent. Family and transient class city of 65,000. Admission 10-15. R. K. Covington, Bijou Theatre (500 seats), Fresno, California.

YOUTH AND ADVENTURE. (5,000 feet). Star, Richard Talmadge. Up to his standard and you know what that means. Action and thrills galore. The only fault I have to find is that he is always doing some impossible stunts. Good bet for small towns. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good audience appeal. All classes town of 3,000. Admission 25-35. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

First National

ANNA CHRISTIE. (7,631 feet). Star, Blanche Sweet. As fine a production as any theatre would care to run. Acting the best I have ever seen. Should please everyone. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Good audience appeal. Town and country class town of 1,200. Admission 10-25. C. R. Seff, New Radio Theatre, Correctionville, Iowa.

CHRISTINE OF THE HUNGRY HEART. (7,500 feet). Star, Florence Vidor. Of this picture will say "much adoo about nothing." Good acting, but the story lacks good moral tone. Five reels would cover it nicely. Tone, poor. Sunday, no. Special, no. Appeal, sixty per cent. General class, city of 500,000. Admission 10-20. William T. Meeks, Silliman's Murray Theatre (740 seats), Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

CLASSMATES. (6,983 feet). Star, Richard Barthelmess. Dick Barthelmess came back in this one which can be classed as an extraordinarly good program picture. Am unable to see why a few West Point scenes should be place this production in the 'special' class but First National charged us a special price and we made no money on this very excellent picture which is suitable for a date in any house in the U. S. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special in some places. Strong audience appeal. General class town of 1,000. Admission 10-25, 15-35. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

FLIRTING WITH LOVE. (6,926 feet). Star, Colleen Moore. Far below the "Perfect Flapper," "Painted People." Not the kind of story one little town audience wants to see. Many more (or just one more) like this and Colleen will cause a big flop at the B. O. Was oversold on this one and made too small a profit.

Another thing: Small town audiences don't want the hero to be the highbrow type of doctor that Tearle was compelled to play. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, not here. Not much audience appeal. General class town of 1,000. Admission 10-25, 15-35. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

LADY. (7,337 feet). Star, Norma Talmadge. A great picture but a flop at the box office for some reason. Personally I think it is Miss Talmadge's greatest achievement. Al. Hamilton, Rialto Theatre, South Norwalk, Connecticut.

POTASH AND PERLMUTTER IN HOLLYWOOD. (6,750 feet). Star cast. Very funny picture and pleased my audience. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Good audience appeal. Town and country class town of 1,700. Admission 10-20, 15-37. Herbert Tapp, Hippodrome Theatre (450 seats), Sheridan, Indiana.

PERFECT FLAPPER. (7,000 feet). Star, Colleen Moore. This is plenty good. Drew well and pleased them all. Cast good. Colleen Moore is it. This is as good as any. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good audience appeal. Town and country class town of 1,200. Admission 10-25. C. R. Seff, New Radio Theatre, Correctionville, Iowa.

SALLY. (8,636 feet). Star, Colleen Moore. Here is one of the finest productions that has ever been offered to the exhibitors. It is the best box office stimulator since "The Sea Hawk." Grab this one boys, it's a clean-up. Tone, fine. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Audience appeal, one hundred per cent. Best class. Al. Hamilton, Rialto Theatre, South Norwalk, Connecticut.

SANDRA. (7,905 feet). Star, Barbara LaMarr. Very weak, not much to it. A Mitchell, Dixie Theatre, Russellville, Kentucky.

SEA HAWK. (12,045 feet). Star, Milton Sills. Great picture. One of the best you will make no mistake in booking this one. I made no money on account of home talent shows but those that came said great. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Good audience appeal. Small town class and farmers town of 600. Admission 10-20, 10-30. H. W. Batchelder, Galt Theatre (175 seats), Galt, California.

SELF MADE FAILURE. (8 reels). Star, Lloyd Hamilton. Good cast. Good picture but light stuff. Some good laughs. Hamilton and Alexander good. Makes a pretty fair offering. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good audience appeal. C. R. Seff, New Radio Theatre (250 seats), Correctionville, Iowa.

SO BIG. (8,501 feet). Star, Colleen Moore. An exceptionally good picture of a mother's love and devotion to her son, showing the versatility of Colleen to portray any character to perfection on the screen. William T. Meek, Silliman's Murray Theatre (740 seats), Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

SUNDOWN. (9,000 feet). Star cast. Very good picture but no drawing power for me. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Good audience appeal. Town and country class town of 1,700. Admission 10-20, 15-37. Herbert Tapp, Hippodrome Theatre (450 seats), Sheridan, Indiana.

TARNISH. (6,821 feet). Star, May McAvoy. I didn't see this one myself but from reports it just about got by and that's about all. So you may judge for yourself. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Average audience appeal. All classes town of 3,000. Admission 25-35. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

Fox

ARIZONA ROMEO. (4,694 feet). Star, Buck Jones. Good western but little tame for my Wednesday crowd. They like plenty of rough stuff. Buck is one of my best drawing cards. All classes town of 4,000. R. L. Nowell, Idlehour Theatre (210 seats), Monroe, Georgia.

CIRCUS COWBOY. (6,400 feet). Star, Buck Jones. Good action picture and the circus scenes makes it different. A good buy. Tone, good. Sunday, no. Special, no. Audience appeal, eighty-five per cent. Farmers and laborers town of 343. Admission 15-30. J. M. Patterson, Little Gem Theatre (250 seats), Hunter, Arkansas.

DICK TURPIN. (5,224 feet). Star, Tom Mix. Tom always pulls for me and this was no exception. Different from his usual type, it pleased a capacity opening crowd, consisting of people from all over the State attending the K. of P. convention. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Very good audience appeal. Mixed class town of 1,200. Admission 10-25. John McGill, Community Theatre (500 seats), Port Orchard, Washington.

EYES OF THE FOREST. (5 reels). Star, Tom Mix. Although this is an old picture it shows Mix in some great stunts. It is full of action and sure to please. Tone, good. Special, no. Good audience appeal. Working class city of 100,000. Admission 10-15-20. W. C. Budge, Comedy Theatre (275 seats), Jamaica, New York.

GOLD HEELS. (6,000 feet). Star cast. This picture drew fairly well on Saturday but it is not the big picture Fox claims it is. Town and rural class town of 2,500. Admission 10-25. O. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho.

HEARTS OF OAK. (5,326 feet). Star, Pauline Stark. Slow moving Fox production with two super-human men as heroes. No villain in the story, consequently the plot was "flat" and the story draggy, although the acting by main characters was excellent. Fine film and excellent photography made up, in a measure, for weakness of story. Did not draw. Tone, fair. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair audience appeal. General class town of 1,000. Admission 10-25, 15-35. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

HOODMAN BLIND. Star cast. Another one forced on me to get what I wanted in other pictures. A little above a program picture. Rental twice too high. No profit for me, a loss. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair audience appeal. Farmers and merchants town of 1,650. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

IT IS THE LAW. (6,000 feet). Star cast. Lost money on this one. Pretty good picture, however. It's hard to put Fox pictures over as they have no popular stars. My patrons demand these. Have lost on every Fox special so far. All classes town of 4,000. R. L. Nowell, Idlehour Theatre (210 seats), Monroe, Georgia.

LADIES TO BOARD. (6,112 feet). Star, Tom Mix. Ran on Saturday night. Is good offering besides this is real good and should please those who want light stuff. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Good audience appeal. Town and country class town of 1,200. Admission 10-25. C. R. Seff, New Radio Theatre (250 seats), Correctionville, Iowa.

MAN'S MATE. (6 reels). Star, John Gilbert. Quite ordinary and failed to get them in. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Mediocre audience appeal. Agricultural class town of 1,200. Admission 10-25. L. M. Zug, Rialto Theatre (380 seats), Jerome, Idaho.

MAN WHO CAME BACK. Star, George O'Brien. Personally I was a little disappointed in this picture. Not that it is no good, because it is a fine production. It gets too rough in spots. Town and rural class town of 2,800. Admission 10-25. Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho.

MILE A MINUTE ROMEO. (4,800 feet). Star, Tom Mix. A picture well liked by everyone. Mix makes me money in anything. Tone, good. Sunday, no. Special, no. Audience appeal, ninety per cent. Farmers and laborers town of 343. Admission 15-30. J. M. Patterson, Little Gem Theatre (250 seats), Hunter, Arkansas.

MY HUSBANDS WIVES. (4,500 feet). Star, Shirley Mason. Very good program picture which pleased all who saw it. Tone, all right. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good audience appeal. Mixed class town of 1,200. Admission 10-25. John McGill, Community Theatre (500 seats), Port Orchard, Washington.

NET. Star cast. A fair mystery picture but the story is very highly improbable. I might say impossible. Will get by if your audience isn't too critical. Tone, okay. Sunday, no. Special, no. Fair audience appeal. Family and transient class city of 65,000. Admission 10-15. R. K. Covington, Bijou Theatre (500 seats), Fresno, California.

NORTH OF HUDSON BAY. (6 reels). Star, Tom Mix. Fair picture. Not up to standard. Showed to capacity house. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, fair. Working and better class town of 1,200. Admission 10-30. C. R. Seff, New Radio Theatre (250 seats), Correctionville, Iowa.

OH, YOU TONY. (6,802 feet). Star, Tom Mix. A humdinger from Mix. A little old but print was in good shape. Small town class town of 1,500. Admission 10-25. T. W. Cannon, Majestic Theatre (315 seats), Greenfield, Tennessee.

PAINTED LADY. (6,938 feet). Star cast. Pretty good production. A Fox special that seemed to please my patrons. Town and rural class town of 2,500. Admission 10-25. O. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho.

SIX CYLINDER LOVE. (7 reels). Star cast. Shooting on about one cylinder. They call it a special but is positively one of the weakest pictures I ever ran. The story what there is of it is flat. No entertainment value whatever. Tone, okay. Sunday, no. Special, no. No audience appeal. Family and transient class city of 65,000. Admission 10-15. R. K. Covington, Bijou Theatre (500 seats), Fresno, California.

STAR DUST TRAIL. (4,686 feet). Star, Shirley Mason. Very good little program picture. Tone, fair. Sunday, no. Special, no. Audience appeal, sixty per cent. Farmers and laborers town of 343. Admission 15-30. J. M. Patterson, Little Gem Theatre (250 seats), Hunter, Arkansas.

TROUBLE SHOOTER. (5,702 feet). Star, Tom Mix. Tom always pulls and pleases. This is the last of last year's product. I am satisfied with Fox pictures. Especially Tom Mix productions. Town and rural class town of 2,500. Admission 10-25. O. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho.

TROUBLES OF A BRIDE. (4,915 feet). Star cast. Title misleading and is a drawback to picture. The picture will please eighty percent. Small town class town of 1,500. Admission 10-25. T. W. Cannon, Majestic Theatre (315 seats), Greenfield, Tennessee.

Metro-Goldwyn

ALONG CAME RUTH. (5,000 feet). Star, Viola Dana. Did not see this myself, but my audience came out very well pleased, and that is the most important angle. Friend wife said it was fine. Tone, all right. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good audience appeal. Mixed class town of 1,200. Admission 10-25. John McGill, Community Theatre (500 seats), Port Orchard, Washington.

BROKEN BARRIERS. (6,717 feet). Star cast. Fair. Very good cast, though this one does not compare with the others from Metro-Goldwyn. They certainly have wonderful productions. All show great care in casting and directing. Tone, good. Neighborhood class city of 15,000. Admission 10-15. Ulysses Ponsant, Bijou Theatre (500 seats), Waterville, Maine.

EAGLE'S FEATHER. (6,500 feet). Star, James Kirkwood. A western story which will please; not a lot of cowboy stuff but a drama of the west. Firkins & Laws, Crystal Theatre, Moravia, Iowa.

GREAT DIVIDE. (7,811 feet). Star, Conway Tearle. Four days to big business. A very satisfactory picture. Liked by the masses. General classes city of 35,000. Admission 25-35. C. D. Buss, Strand Theatre (700 seats), Easton, Pennsylvania.

GREAT WHITE WAY. (10 reels). Star cast. A very pleasing picture which made us money and has a good box office appeal which is something about seventy-five percent. of super productions, lack for small towns. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Audience appeal, ninety per cent. Farmers and town people town of 800. Admission 10-25. Firkins & Laws, Crystal Theatre (200 seats), Moravia, Iowa.

HE WHO GETS SLAPPED. (6,613 feet). Star, Lon Chaney. A very good picture, but very sad. We packed them in for this one. Sorry we didn't run more than two days. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Audience appeal, one hundred per cent. All classes town of 7,500. Admission 10-30. Mrs. Jules Perronet, Tujunga Valley Theatre (300 seats), Tujunga, California.

HE WHO GETS SLAPPED. (6,613 feet). Star, Lon Chaney. An altogether different picture from the usual run of photoplays, with Chaney as a broken hearted clown entertaining his audience by continually being slapped by his fellow actors. The picture is a tragedy as Chaney dies in the last reel. The picture is full of pathos and sentiment and worth seeing. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Audience appeal, eighty-five percent. General class city of 500,000. Admission 10-20. William T. Meeks, Silliman's Murray Theatre (740 seats), Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

HIS HOUR. (6,300 feet). Star cast. Very good. Wonderful acting by Aileen Pringle and John Gilbert. Tone, good. Special, yes. Neighborhood class city of 15,000. Admission 10-15. Ulysses Ponsant, Bijou Theatre (500 seats), Waterville, Maine.

HUNGRY HEARTS. (6,540 feet). Star cast. I ran this one last July, and had so many favorable comments on it that I tried it again and it made good. It is an excellent and very entertaining picture. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good audience appeal. Family and transient class city of 65,000. Admission 10-15. R. K. Covington, Bijou Theatre (500 seats), Fresno, California.

ROUGHED LIPS. (5,150 feet). Star, Viola Dana. Just a common program picture. Lacking a little of the pep of most of this star's pictures. We heard no comments or kicks but had a good comedy with it. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Audience appeal, sixty per cent. Farmers and town people town of 800. Admission 10-25. Firkins & Laws, Crystal Theatre (200 seats), Moravia, Iowa.

SILENT ACCUSER. (5,883 feet). Star, Peter the Great (dog). A wonderful picture featuring Peter the Great who pursues a murderer with relentless ferocity and eventually compels him to confess, thereby exonerating his accused master. A thriller and interesting. General class city of 500,000. Admission 10-20. William T. Meeks, Silliman's Murray Theatre (740 seats), Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

SO THIS IS MARRIAGE. (6,300 feet). Star, Eleanor Boardman. Nothing to rave over. Rather draggy. Scenes in natural colors are very beautiful. Would class it as an average program offering. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair audience appeal. All classes town of 3,000. Admission 25-35. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

TESS OF THE D'URBERVILLES. Star, Blanche Sweet. Audience liked it though very tragic. Happy ending surprised me. Tone, good. Special, yes. Neighborhood class city of 15,000. Admission 10-15. Ulysses Ponsant, Bijou Theatre (500 seats), Waterville, Maine.

TRUE AS STEEL. (7 reels). Star cast. Here is one fine picture while it did no business to speak of for me. It was no fault of the picture. Society yes, but held the interest throughout its seven reels and pleased those who came. Tone, good. Sunday, doubtful. Not a special. Audience appeal, one hundred percent. All classes town of 2,900. Admission 10-25, 15-30. A. E. Andrews, Opera House (496 seats), Emporium, Pennsylvania.

Paramount

AIR MAIL. (6,976 feet). Star, Warner Baxter. Good picture with good thrills and story although it lagged in places. It did not draw for me as I had one of the poorest weeks of the season. There was an athletic tournament against it. It was better than the usual Paramount. Tone, good. Sunday, no. Special, no. Fair audience appeal. All classes, city of 15,000. Admission 15-33. Ed. Malhiot, Monarch Theatre (450 seats), Medicine Hat, Alta., Canada.

A MAN MUST LIVE. (6,116 feet). Star, Richard Dix. Good picture. Richard good star here. Showed Monday and Tuesday to poor crowd. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good appeal. Working and better class town of 1,200. Admission 10-30. C. R. Seff, New Radio Theatre (250 seats), Correctionville, Iowa.

A MAN MUST LIVE. (6,116 feet). Star, Richard Dix. A very good program offering Should please Dix fans. Nothing big but will please the average audience. In my opinion Dix is a comer. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good audience appeal. All classes town of 3,000. Admission 25-35. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

BORDER LEGION. (7,045 feet). Star, Antonio Moreno. A real western. The best picture you can get for the small town and Saturday night besides being a Zane Grey story. Will please nearly everyone. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good audience appeal. Town and country class town of 1,200. Admission 10-25. C. R. Seff, New Radio Theatre (250 seats), Correctionville, Iowa.

BORDER LEGION. (7,045 feet). Star, Richard Dix. Picture seemed to please my audience. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good audience appeal. Town and country class town of 1,700. Admission 10-20, 15-37. Herbert Tapp, Hippodrome Theatre (450 seats), Sheridan, Indiana.

BORDER LEGION. (7,045 feet). Star, Antonio Moreno. Fine western. Should make anybody lots of money. Good picture for Saturday. Don't be afraid to step on it. Made more on this one and "North of 36" than on any others. All classes town of 4,000. R. L. Nowell, Idlehour Theatre (210 seats), Monroe, Georgia.

BORDER LEGION. (7,045 feet). Star cast. A right good attraction which played to better than average business by considerable. Special, yes. Good audience appeal. Agricultural class town of 1,200. Admission 10-25. L. M. Zug, Rialto Theatre (380 seats), Jerome, Idaho.

BORDEN LEGION. (7,045 feet). Star cast. A picture that drew well at the box office and seemed to please majority. I would not class it as a super special, but it will get the business and that's what we need. Town and rural class town of 2,500. Admission 10-25. O. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho.

CITY THAT NEVER SLEEPS. (6,087 feet). Star, Ricardo Cortez. This is a fine picture. Pleased well. Cast good. Cortez is better to by notion than Valentino. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good audience appeal. Town and country class town of 1,200. Admission 10-25. C. R. Seff, New Radio Theatre (250 seats), Correctionville, Iowa.

CITY THAT NEVER SLEEPS. (6,087 feet). Star, Ricardo Cortez. Good program picture. Fair tone. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Audience appeal, ninety per cent. Working and better class town of 1,200. Admission 10-30. C. R. Seff, New Radio Theatre (250 seats), Correctionville, Iowa.

CODE OF THE WEST. (6,777 feet). Star, Owen Moore. This is a fine western being on a par with "Wanderer of the Wasteland." Pleased my crowd ninety per cent. It has a new cast and in that way disappointed the ten per cent. as they expected to see Holt and Lois Wilson and that usual Zane Grey production cast. Charles Lee Davis, Grand Theatre, Pierre, South Dakota.

COVERED WAGON. (9,407 feet). Star, Ernest Torrence. We can add nothing. However, we think it has had its day and unless you are careful in booking, you will lose money. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Good audience appeal. Farmers town of 442. Admission 10-25. John C. Leveck, Benoit Auditorium (100 seats), Benoit, Mississippi.

CROWDED HOUR. Star, Bebe Daniels. Good war story with lots of action, will please majority. Tone, good. Special, no. Good audience appeal. Mixed class, town of 1,800. Admission twenty-five cents. Fred S. Widenor, Opera House (492 seats), Belvidere, New Jersey.

DANGEROUS MONEY. (6,864 feet). Star, Bebe Daniels. I was well pleased with this picture and my patrons felt the same way. Town and rural class, town of 2,800. Admission 10-25. Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho.

DANGEROUS MONEY. (6,864 feet). Star, Bebe Daniels. A dandy comedy drama presenting flapperism and high life in spots, with a sprinkling of humor furnished by Tom Moore. A picture that will make any audience forget their troubles. General class, city of 500,000. Admission 10-20. William T. Meeks, Silliman's Murray Theatre (740 seats), Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

DANGEROUS MONEY. (6,864 feet). Star, Bebe Daniels. Bebe very pretty in this one. Tom Moore also good. Very nice production. Pleased but failed to pull. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good audience appeal. Family and student class town of 4,000. Admission 10-25. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre (600 seats), Decorah, Iowa.

DEVIL'S CARGO. (7,080 feet). Star, Pauline Starke. A good program picture. Action not probable as it is almost impossible. Drags in many places and agony seems prolonged. Tone, fair. Sunday, no. Special, no. Fair audience appeal. All classes city of 15,000. Admission 15-35. Ed. Malhoit, Monarch Theatre (569 seats), Medicine Hat, Alta., Canada.

DEVIL'S CARGO. (7,080 feet). Star, Pauline Starke. A fine picture of California in the gold rush days and one that has action as well as acting. Wallace Beery and William Collier fine. Sunday, no. Special, yes. Fine audience appeal. Oil field class town of 1,000. Admission 10-25. H. E. Schlichter, Liggett Theatre (600 seats), Madison, Kansas.

DEVIL'S CARGO. (7,080 feet). Star, Pauline Starke. Good feature. Pleased majority. Plenty of action throughout. Tone Good. Special, no. Good appeal. Mixed class, town of 1,800. Admission twenty-five cents. Fred S. Widenor, Opera House (492 seats), Belvidere, New Jersey.

DRESSMAKER FROM PARIS. (7,080 feet). Star, Leatrice Joy. This is one of the most entertaining pictures I have run this season. It did a nice business for me and I am rating it one hundred per cent. It could be bigger but it couldn't be better and you can advance admission on it and please everyone. This is particularly good for the small town crowd. It will make your people laugh at their neighbors as the types will fit into any small community. Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, South Dakota.

DRESSMAKER FROM PARIS. (7,080 feet). Star, Leatrice Joy. Be sure and book this one. It's a money getter, in any theatre. Passes features that will please every type of fan. Comedy for the men. Fashions galore for the ladies as well as the men at times, a darn good story and lavishly presented. Did one of the biggest week's business in many weeks for me. All classes city of 95,000. Admission 40-50. Guy A. Kenimer, Arcade Theatre (1,152 seats), Jacksonville, Florida.

DRESSMAKER FROM PARIS. (7,080 feet). Star, Ernest Torrence. This is one of the most universally satisfying pictures I have ever shown. It has a lot of small town comedy in it that makes it go strong in the small town. This is a picture that I did not raise admission prices on that would have stood it. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Universal audience appeal. Town of 3,200. Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, South Dakota.

LILY OF THE DUST. (6,811 feet). Star, Pola Negri. Rather poor. In this town, Pola is about done. If they would only give her some decent stories, she might draw but now she isn't worth a nickel to me. I seldom gross rental on any of her pictures. Tone, poor. Sunday, no. Not a special. Poor audience appeal. Mixed class town of 3,000. Admission 25-35. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

LILLY OF THE DUST. (6,811 feet). Star, Pola Negri. Just an ordinary program picture which I paid the price of a special for. Don't advertise this one big for it's just another picture. Tone, fair. Specials, no. Audience appeal, sixty per cent. Industrial class town of 6,000. Admission 10-30. L. O. Davis, Virginia Theatre (750 seats), Hazard, Kentucky.

LOCKED DOORS. (6,621 feet). Star, Betty Compson. Another fair program and that is all. Nothing but a picture. Tone okay. Special, no. Audience appeal sixty per cent. Industrial class, town of 6,000. Admission 10-30. L. O. Davis, Virginia Theatre (700 seats), Hazard, Kentucky.

MANHANDLED. (6,998 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. A picture that everyone liked. While not her best picture, it pleased most of my audience, though small. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fine audience appeal. Town and country class, town of 1,800. Admission 10-25-35. Herbert Tapp, Hippodrome Theatre (460 seats), Sheridan, Indiana.

MANHANDLED. (6,998 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. About as good as this star has released of late. Our people liked it. Did about what we have been doing, so cannot call it extraordinary as a drawing card. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Good audience appeal. Better class, city of 14,000. Admission 10-35. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre (700 seats), Jonesboro, Arkansas.

MEN. (6,544 feet). Star, Pola Negri. Very good picture, but she doesn't draw very much for me. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Good appeal. Miners and farmers town of 600. Admission 10-25. John Russell, Russell Theatre (250 seats), Matherville, Illinois.

MEN AND WOMEN. (6,223 feet). Star cast. This is not a Richard Dix starring vehicle but he is the only one in it that means anything at the box office. He has an unfortunate part and does his best with it but does not get far. Title fairly good but picture does not generally please. Tone fair. Special, no. Poor audience appeal. General class, city of 18,000. Admission forty cents. Ben L. Morris, Temple Theatre, Bellaire, Ohio.

Now Booking

MERTON OF THE MOVIES. (7,655 feet). Star, Glenn Hunter. This might have been a big stage hit, but it is by no means a screen hit. Heard many unfavorable comments from my very best class of audience. Viola Dana saves it from utter ruin. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good audience appeal. All classes, town of 3,000. Admission 15-25-35. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

MERTON OF THE MOVIES. (7,655 feet). Star, Glenn Hunter. Above heads of lots of people, but very good in spite of that. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Audience appeal seventy-five per cent. Small town class, town of 1,000. Admission 10-35. S. G. Harsh, Princess Theatre (249 seats), Mapleton, Iowa.

MERTON OF THE MOVIES. (7,655 feet). Star, Glenn Hunter. Some liked it. Some didn't. I think Paramount miscued in trying to make a picture out of it. Business below average on a two-day run. A. E. Andrews, Opera House, Emporium, Pennsylvania.

MISS BLUEBEARD. (6,453 feet). Star, Bebe Daniels. A knockout. A great comedy drama that makes the most sober laugh. Not a special but a good picture. Tone okay. Sunday, okay. Special, no. Good audience appeal. General class, town of 3,200. Admission 10-30. Krieghbaum Brothers, Char-Bell Theatre (800 seats), Rochester, Indiana.

MY AMERICAN WIFE. (6,061 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. This pleased all who saw it. It's a good buy. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Audience appeal, one hundred per cent. All classes town of 806. Admission 10-20. W. A. Herndon, Liberty Theatre (250 seats), Valliant, Oklahoma.

NEXT CORNER. (7,081 feet). Star cast. Oh, boy. If you have this booked you're in for an awful shock. After seeing Dorothy MacKaill in "Mighty Lake' A Rose" you'll think there are two stars with the same name as she is entirely different in this one. We just announced this and had a poor crowd both nights and glad of it. Some pretty hot scenes in this. The picture sure put Dorothy in bad with my patrons. We must have been snoozing when we bought this. Town of 440. Admission 15-25. Kenneth V. Thompson, M. W. A. Theatre, Hancock, Wisconsin.

NORTH OF 36. (7,908 feet). Star cast. Here is a real one. Very near as good as "Covered Wagon." Book it and play it up at advanced prices. Town of 3,500. Admission 10-30. A. C. Gordon, Star Theatre (450 seats), Weiser, Idaho.

OPEN ALL NIGHT. (6,867 feet). Star, Viola Dana. Another one of those "filthy forties." Nothing to it. Should never have been made. This is one of the things wrong with movies. Tone rotten. Not suitable for Sunday. Special, no. No audience appeal. Small town class, town of 1,000. Admission 10-35. S. G. Harsh, Princess Theatre (249 seats), Mapleton, Iowa.

PETER PAN. (9,593 feet). Star, Betty Bronson. Tied up with school, but was one of the biggest flops ever here. Delightful little picture but no one wanted to risk a quarter on it. Tone fair. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Audience appeal questionable. Small town class, town of 1,000. Admission 10-35. S. G. Harsh, Princess Theatre (249 seats), Mapleton, Iowa.

PETER PAN. (9,593 feet). Star, Betty Bronson. Kid picture too long by their rule but well acted and for the children good but don't think it will make a hit with the older folks in any place. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Audience appeal, fifty per cent. Small town class and farmers town of 600. Admission 10-20, 10-30. H. W. Batchelder, Galt Theatre (175 seats), Galt, California.

PETER PAN. (9,593 feet). Star, Betty Bronson. Well acted and splendid photography. It did not appeal to the adults and had to depend on the children. Did fair business for me. Ed. Malhiot, Monarch Theatre, Medicine Hat, Alta., Canada.

PRIDE OF PALOMAR. (7,494 feet). Star cast. As good a picture as one could ask for of this kind. Peter B. Kyne's story was quite faithfully transferred to the screen and the result was a picture of nearly one hundred per cent. audience appeal. It's a real small town picture. Tone, fair. Optional for Sunday. Merchants and farmers town of 440. Admission 15-25. Kenneth W. Thompson, M. W. A. Theatre, Hancock, Wisconsin.

RACING HEARTS. Star, Agnes Ayres. Still another one from Paramount that pleased the audience first rate. A dandy racing story that keeps you wide awake all the way through. The climax was a roof lifter. This picture was made "just purposely for us." Tone, good. Town of 440. Admission 15-25. Kenneth V. Thompson, M. W. A. Theatre, Hancock, Wisconsin.

SACKCLOTH AND SCARLET. (6,732 feet). Star, Alice Terry. Beautiful scenery in reel one. Acting very fine of both women. Interesting story with heart appeal. A picture that should please anywhere. The rental too high for here, therefore profit too small. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Good audience appeal. Farmers and merchants town of 1,650. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

SAINTED DEVIL. (8,633 feet). Star, Rudolph Valentino. In my opinion Valentino is a dead one. This picture failed to please the majority. Is altogether too long and drawn out. If you have it booked, don't boost it too much. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Poor audience appeal. All classes town of 3,000. Admission 15-25-35. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

SALOME OF THE TENEMENTS. (7,017 feet). Star, Jetta Goudal. Rotten. Nothing but Jewish propaganda. If you have this shelve it. You'll be sorry if you don't. No tone. Sunday, no. Special, no. No appeal. Oil field class town of 1,000. Admission 10-25. H. E. Schlichter, Liggett Theatre (600 seats), Madison, Kansas.

SIDE SHOW OF LIFE. (6,511 feet). Star, Ernest Torrence. Pretty fair but my patrons do not like Torrence in a picture like this. Opinions divided. Pleased about fifty per cent, I believe. Business poor. Tone okay. Sunday, okay. Special, no. All classes, town of 4,000. R. L. Nowell, Idlehour Theatre (210 seats), Monroe, Georgia.

SWAN. (5,889 feet). Star, Frances Howard. A picture for the larger towns but not for small towns. A high class sophisticated comedy that will only please the high brows. Tone, okay. Sunday, no. Special, in city. Fair appeal. Oil field class town of 1,000. Admission 10-25. H. E. Schlichter, Liggett Theatre (600 seats), Madison, Kansas.

THUNDERING HERD. (7,187 feet). Star, Jack Holt. This is a wonderful picture and one that should make money in any place. It pleased one hundred per cent here and seventy-five per cent. of my people liked it better than "The Covered Wagon" as there is more action in this one. Tone, good. Sunday, no. Special, yes. Audience appeal, one hunred per cent. All classes city of 15,000. Admission 15-35. Ed. Malhiot, Monarch Theatre (569 seats), Medicine Hat, Alta., Canada.

TONGUES OF FLAME. (6,763 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. This is a fair picture. It has a little too serious a tone to please the general run of fans. No humor in it. Below the average of Meighan but even at that a good picture. Tone, good. Special, no. Town of 3,2000. Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, South Dakota.

TONGUES OF FLAME. (6,763 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. A very good melodrama showing Indians being cheated out of their reservation. A late war scene, shooting, fighting. The burning of a town and unusual love romance make this picture very interesting. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Audience, appeal, eighty per cent. General class city of 500,000. Admission 10-20. William T. Meeks, Silliman's Murray Theatre (740 seats), Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

TOO MANY KISSES. (6,750 feet). Star, Richard Dix. This is a dandy comedy. One that will please the vast majority of picture fans. It may not be ranked as one of the best pictures of the year but it will rank as one of the ten per cent with me. Tone, good. Sunday yes. Special, no. Town of 3,200. Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, South Dakota.

TOP OF THE WORLD. (7,167 feet). Star,

John Golden, the producer of the famous stage play, "Lightnin,' and John Ford, the man who will direct the screen version of the play, taken at the William Fox West Coast Studios, where "Lightnin'" will be filmed.

Anna Q. Nilsson. Many fine comments on this and went over better than a lot of specials. Work of the cast excellent. African Veldt story. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Fine audience appeal. H. E. Schlichter, Liggett Theatre (600 seats), Madison, Kansas.

TRAIL OF THE LONESOME PINE. (5,695 feet). Star, Mary Miles Minter. Another little program picture that surprised us at the box office. We couldn't get heralds on this one and thought business would be poor, but the title did the trick and the picture seemed to give good satisfacion, thought I consider it only fair. At any rate, play it for your own benefit. Kenneth W. Thompson, M. W. A. Theatre, Hancock, Wisconsin.

WOMAN WITH FOUR FACES. (6,700 feet). Star, Betty Compson. Here's another Paramount picture that kept our audiences in delightful suspense. It's one of those pictures that make you sit well forward in your seat. Not a special but a good picture and that's all we desire. Merchants and farmers town of 440. Admission 15-25. Kenneth W. Thompson, M. W. A. Theatre (150 seats), Hancock, Wisconsin.

Producers' Dist. Corp.

FLAMING FORTIES. (5,770 feet). Star, Harry Carey. This picture gives Harry Carey a good chance to show his talent. The action is fast. Many comedy scenes. The audience enjoyed the picture. Tone good. Special, no. Good audience appeal. Working class, city of 100,000. Admission 10-15-20. W. C. Budge, Comedy Theatre (275 seats), Jamaica, New York.

FLAMING FORTIES. (5,770 feet). Star, Harry Carey. Another very good action picture from Carey should please all his followers. Print good. Tone okay. Sunday, no. Special, no. Good audience appeal. All classes in big city. Admission ten cents. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre (298 seats), Baltimore, Maryland.

HOLD YOUR BREATH. (5 reels). Star, Dorothy Devore. Very interesting picture. Thrills galore. Will pay you to run it. Tone good. Sunday, no. Special, no. Good audience appeal. Town and country class, town of 1,700. Admission 10-20, 15-35. Herbert Tapp, Hippodrome Theatre (450 seats), Sheridan, Indiana.

TIGER THOMPSON. (5,700 feet). Star, Harry Carey. Good western. Some good stunts and plenty of action, with some comedy situations worked in. I would say book it most any place if they like outdoor pictures. Good tone. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good audience appeal. Small town class and farmers, town of 600. Admission 10-20, 10-30. H. W. Batchelder, Galt Theatre (175 seats), Galt, California.

WELCOME STRANGER. (6,618 feet). Star, Florence Vidor. Used this picture as a benefit for the Senior class, E. H. S., and it certainly went over fine. Lots of good comments. I cannot attest to its drawing power as the Seniors sold the tickets and packed them in for our night. Word of mouth advertising should draw, for two nights. Tone fine. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Audience appeal eighty-five per cent. All classes, town of 2,900. Admission 10-25, 15-30. A. E. Andrews, Opera House (496 seats), Emporium, Pennsylvania.

WISE VIRGIN. (5,950 feet). Star, Patsy Ruth Miller. A pleasing light comedy drama containing some amusing scenes. Nothing exciting but a nice evening's entertainment. A good comedy with two-reel western or news reel in conjunction will produce a well balanced show. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Audience appeal sixty-five per cent. General class, city of 500,000. Admission 10-20. William T. Meeks, Silliman's Murray Theatre (740 seats), Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

WISE VIRGIN. (5,981 feet). Star cast. Not so good for me. It was one of those society dramas made in the studio and never did appeal to many of the so-called fans. I should rate this one as a very weak sister. No tone. Sunday, no. Special, no. Audience appeal fifty per cent. All classes, town of 2,900. Admission 10-25, 15-30. A. E. Andrews, Opera House (496 seats), Emporium, Pennsylvania.

United Artists

AMERICA. (14,000 feet). Star cast. Personally I thought this good entertainment. Patrons, however, were very much divided in their opinions. Business not up to expectations. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Agricultural class, town of 1,200. Admission 10-25. L. M. Zug, Rialto Theatre (380 seats), Jerome, Idaho.

John Golden, New York theatrical producer, looking over the William Fox West Coast studios with Miss Alma Rubens, who probably will be given the leading feminine roles in the screen versions of one or two of the Golden stage successes which will be produced under the Fox banner.

THIEF OF BAGDAD. Star, Douglas Fairbanks. Wonderful picture. In fact among the greatest ever produced at any time. It failed to draw for me, however, but no fault of the picture. I'll run it again later. Town and rural class, town of 2,800. Admission 10-25. Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho.

WHITE ROSE. (11 reels). Star, Mae Marsh. This should make a good program show for almost any house. It did not draw very strong here, nor was the print up to the standard either. Tone okay. Special, no. Good audience appeal. Better class, town of 4,500. Admission 10-15. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (404 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

Universal

BUTTERFLY. (7,472 feet). Star cast. This type of picture does not go well in small towns. Too much jazz and high life. Not a small town picture. Personally I did not like it. Town and rural class, town of 2,800. Admission 10-25. Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho.

GAIETY GIRL. (7,419 feet). Star, Mary Philbin. This is a Jewel that classifies as a fair picture. It has something different in plot that gets it recommendation, but it looks like a cheap picture. Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, South Dakota.

HUNCHBACK OF NOTRE DAME. (11,000 feet). Star, Lon Chaney. Played two days to poor business. This is a wonderful production. Chaney's work as the "Hunchback" was great. The rest of the cast was excellent. Here is the rub: It did not draw for us. We played it at twenty-five cents admission against two ordinary program shows at the opposition house at ten cents. He had the crowds and we starved. As I said before, this is a wonderful show but the people in this town did not take to it at all. This town did not appreciate it at all. This has been a lesson to me. The average run of people in this town don't want shows of a very high artistic appeal. They want hokum and stuff that don't make them think. I take my hat off to the "Hunchback of Notre Dame" as being a wonderful picture in my personal estimation. Better class, town of 4,500. Admission 10-15. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (404 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

HURRICANE KID. Star, Hoot Gibson. Good old Hoot. A dandy western that pleased everybody who saw it. Town and rural class, town of 2,800. Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho.

K—THE UNKNOWN. (8,146 feet). Star, Virginia Valli. A fine show that pleased the older folks. It did not draw the youngsters due to the title and the posters did not show any action on them. Print okay. Tone good. Not a special. Fine audience appeal. Better class, town of 4,500. Admission 10-15. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (404 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

OH DOCTOR. (6,501 feet). Star, Reginald Denny. Not so good as the usual Denny. It did not appeal as my crowds kept getting smaller. Even Saturday was not as good as usual although there was nothing special on outside. Tone fair. Sunday, no. Special, no. No appeal. All classes, city of 15,000. Admission 15-33. Ed. Malhiot, Monarch Theatre (450 seats), Medicine Hat, Alta., Canada.

OUTWITTED. Star, William Desmond. Slow moving. Somewhat disconnected secret service story that was cracked up to be one of the swift moving pictures of the season. All actors did fine in this picture and really deserve a better type of story. Was glad to see Grace Cunard in this picture as it had been a long time since seeing this old favorite of the writer's. Tone fair. Sunday, no. Special, no. Poor audience appeal. General class, town of 1,000. Admission 10-25, 15-35. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

RIDE FOR YOUR LIFE. (5,510 feet). Star, Hoot Gibson. A fair western. An impossible story and one which would fall flat if it were not for the star. Not up to Hoot's best, but better than most of his non-western pictures. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Audience appeal ninety per cent. Farmers and town people, town of 800. Admission 10-25. Firkins & Laws, Crystal Theatre (200 seats), Moravia, Iowa.

SIGNAL TOWER. (6,774 feet). Star, Virginia Valli. Very good picture, but didn't draw very well because we played it on Easter Sunday. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Audience appeal eighty per cent. All classes, town of 7,500. Admission 10-30. Mrs. Jules Peronnet, Tujunga Valley Theatre (300 seats), Tujunga, California.

Here is Buck Jones, all excited over real bargains he has just discovered—new-laid eggs, twelve cents the dozen; creamery butter, nine cents the pound, and shoes, the every-day kind, for $1.50 the pair, and fine Sunday-go-to-meeting patent leathers for $3.50 the pair. No, he is not asleep, nor yet dreaming. It's all there, in a copy of the San Francisco Examiner, which he has just picked up in a cave—on location, in Daggett, Cal. But the date of this paper, dear reader, is January 5, 1896, before Bryan ran for President the first time. Buck nearly lost his eyesight before he saw the date.

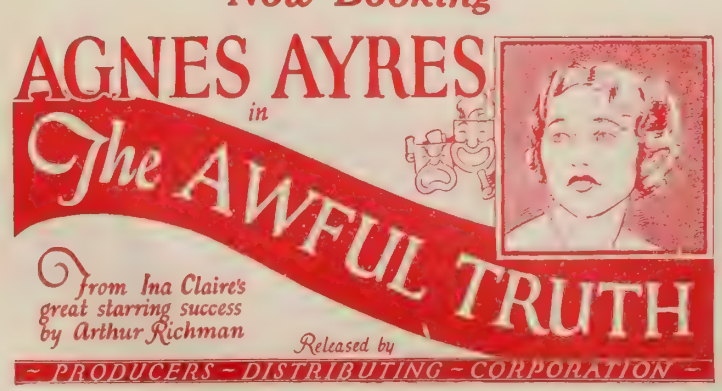
Vitagraph

CODE OF THE WILDERNESS. (7,000 feet). Star cast. Good western. Some action and comedy; somewhat different from the average western. Those that saw it said good, but I was up against a home talent school show, so anyone in a town of this size doesn't need to be told the result. Small town class and farmers, town of 600. Admission 10-20, 10-30. H. W. Batchelder, Galt Theatre (175 seats), Galt, California.

PAMPERED YOUTH. (6,640 feet). Star, Cullen Landis. Just a fair program picture and sold as such. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair audience appeal. Oil field class, town of 1,000. Admission 10-25. H. E. Schlichter, Liggett Theatre (600 seats), Madison, Kansas.

TWO SHALL BE BORN. (6 reels). Star cast. A good one that holds the interest from start to finish. The title doesn't have the pull that the picture deserves. Fair audience appeal. Small town class, town of 1,500. Admission 10-25. T. W. Cannon, Majestic Theatre (315 seats), Greenfield, Tennessee.



Warner Bros.

AGE OF INNOCENCE. Star, Beverly Bayne. This is a fine picture. A little spicy, cast good, and acting fine. Should draw well on account of name. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good audience appeal. Town and country class, town of 1,200. Admission 10-25. C. R. Seff, New Radio Theatre (250 seats), Correctionville, Iowa.

BROADWAY BUTTERFLY. (7,705 feet). Star cast. Name didn't draw much, although the picture is good. Ran only one day. I think it pleased well. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good audience appeal. Town and country class, town of 1,200. Admission 10-25. C. R. Seff, New Radio Theatre (250 seats), Correctionville, Iowa.

CORNERED. (7,500 feet). Star, Marie Prevost. Here is a mystery picture and crook story that you shouldn't overlook. It has everything together with wonderful acting on part of entire cast. Will go any place. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Fine audience appeal. Family and transient class, city of 65,000. Admission 10-15. R. K. Covington, Bijou Theatre (500 seats), Fresno, California.

Clara Bow, as she appears in "Kiss Me Again," the Ernst Lubitsch production for Warner Brothers, soon to be released.

MY WIFE AND I. Star cast. Warner Brothers should be presented with the Brown Derby for this one, as a masterpiece of nothing; this is it. It is terrible. No appeal. Best class. Al Hamilton, Rialto Theatre, South Norwalk, Connecticut.

ON THIN ICE. Star cast. A nice little crook drama that pleased Saturday audiences very well. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Audience appeal good. Best class. Al. Hamilton, Rialto Theatre, South Norwalk, Connecticut.

WHERE THE NORTH BEGINS. (6,200 feet). Star cast. A wonderful picture; if you have not run it buy it and boost it to the sky. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Special, nearly. Audience appeal ninety per cent. Farmers and laborers, town of 343. Admission 15-30. J. M. Patterson, Little Gem Theatre (250 seats), Hunter, Arkansas.

Comedies

BREAKING IN. (Educational). Star, Benny Leonard. This series started off fine. Has anything beat in fight pictures I have ever had. Should be a good drawing card. Leonard is a real fighter. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good audience appeal. Town and country class, town of 1,200. Admission 10-25. C. R. Seff, New Radio Theatre (250 seats), Correctionville, Iowa.

FRESH START. (Educational). Star, Lige Conley. Old but, like old wine, it is better than some new stuff. Jack White makes 'em good not now and then but always. Good appeal. Small town class, town of 1,500. Admission 10-25. T. W. Cannon, Majestic Theatre (315 seats), Greenfield, Tennessee.

GIRL AND THE GANGSTER. (Pathe). This one about the best of this series. If you must buy the series to get this one, lay off; very poor entertainment. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

HOLD EVERYTHING. (Educational). Star, Bobby Vernon. This is an exceptionally good comedy that brought plenty of laughs. The best Vernon I have ever had. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Good audience appeal. Town and country class, town of 1,200. Admission 10-25. C. R. Seff, New Radio Theatre (250 seats), Correctionville, Iowa.

HOOKED. (Educational). Star, Lloyd Hamilton. Better than some of the previous Hamiltons we have played. Here's one that kept them laughing from start to finish. Come on with some more like this, Lloyd, and the fans will begin to renew their acquaintance with you. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Strong audience appeal. General class, town of 1,000. Admission 10-25, 15-35. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

IS MARRIAGE THE BUNK? (Pathe). Star, Charlie Chase. Another Chase comedy which pushed him up the ladder of success in his coming two-reel subjects. Book a Chase comedy to make 'em laugh. Print new. Suitable any time. Great audience appeal. All classes in big city. Admission ten cents. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre (298 seats), Baltimore, Maryland.

KICK OUT. (Educational). Star, Lige Conley. An unusually good comedy; in fact all Mermaid comedies are above average. Good appeal. Small town class, town of 1,500. Admission 10-25. T. W. Cannon, Majestic Theatre (315 seats), Greenfield, Tennessee.

LOVEMANIA. (Educational). Star, Al. St. John. The first St. John that had a real good plot and that didn't have a monotonous repetition of stunts. Here's a real good comedy that will keep any house in a tumult of laughter. Give us more like this, Educational, and you will put Al St. John back on the map. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Excellent audience appeal. General class, town of 1,000. Admission 10-25, 15-35. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

SEEING NELLIE HOME. (Pathe). Star, Charles Chase. We are reporting this because it is the best one-reel we have ever run. Pathe has the short subjects. Farmers, town of 442. Admission 25-10. John C. Leveck, Benoit Auditorium (100 seats), Benoit, Mississippi.

SHIPSHAPE. (Educational). Star, Cliff Bowes. A pippin of a Cameo one-reeler. The best we have had in quite some time. Print was so new that the wax on sprocket holes came off during projection. Tone okay. Good audience appeal. Better class, town of 4,500. Admission 10-15. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (404 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

SLIPS AND SLACKERS. (Vitagraph). Star, Larry Semon. Put the damper on this one. War-time stuff. "Nuf ced." Print new. All classes in big city. Admission ten cents. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre (298 seats), Baltimore, Maryland.

THREE FOOLISH WEEKS. (Pathe). Star, Ben Turpin. They might rave over this star elsewhere but not here; they consider him very poor entertainment. Print bad, which made it worse. No audience appeal. All classes in big city. Admission ten cents. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre (298 seats), Baltimore, Maryland.

WEAK KNEES. (Educational Cameo Comedy). Star, Virginia Vance. I think that this is as good a single reel comedy as I have ever run, for it sure registered up the laughs. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Good audience appeal. Small town class, town of 300. Admission 10-25. Roy E. Cline, Osage Theatre (200 seats), Osage, Oklahoma.

WHY GLOBE TROTTERS TROT. (Educational). Have used several Hodge Podge but this is good beyond all doubt. Fair appeal. Small town class, town of 1,500. Admission 10-25. T. W. Cannon, Majestic Theatre (315 seats), Greenfield, Tennessee.

Kathlyn Williams as "Huldah" in "The Wanderer," an R. A. Walsh production for Paramount.

WHY HURRY? (Educational). Star, J. Adams. A peach, a pippin! A humdinger of a Christie for our house. There were regular shouts of laughter at the stunts pulled off in this comedy. Tone okay. Good audience appeal. Better class, town of 4,500. Admission 10-15. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (404 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

WHY HURRY? (Educational). Star, Jimmie Adams. Uproarious comedy that had the floor quaking. Lots o' comedy in this pair of reels and Jimmie Adams held up his past rep for bringing out the guffaws. This scream is well worth a date in any house that has a strong desire to do a little rib tickling. Put it on the screen, then hear them shout their heads off. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal one hundred per cent. General class, town of 1,000. Admission 10-25, 15-35. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

Short Subjects

GO-GETTERS No. 11. (F. B. O.). Star, George O'Hara. This series and this episode went over fine; as well as all the others. If "The Pacemakers" are as good as these I will have no fault to find. No tone. Sunday, no. Appeal eighty per cent. All classes, town of 2,900. Admission 10-25, 15-30. A. E. Andrews, Opera House (496 seats), Emporium, Pennsylvania.

GREAT DECIDE. (F. B. O.). Star, Alberta Vaughn. This is the fourth of the "Pacemakers" and is a dandy; in fact the best one I have run so far. Plenty of comedy and action. If the remaining eight chapters are as good as this one I sure will not have any kick coming. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Good audience appeal. Small town class, town of 300. Admission 10-25. Roy E. Cline, Osage Theatre (200 seats), Osage, Oklahoma.

PATHE SPORTLIGHT. (Pathe). Star cast. "Sporting Rythm." If you are not playing these one-reelers you don't know what you are missing. They are great little fillers for any program. Sunday, yes. Good audience appeal. All classes in big city. Admission ten cents. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre (298 seats), Baltimore, Maryland.

FELIX MENDELSSOHN. (Jas. Fitzpatrick). A feature in one reel that will back up any exploitation you may give it. This is the best novelty I have ever played. If you have music lovers, get this series quick. Best class. Al. Hamilton, Rialto Theatre, South Norwalk, Connecticut.

FOX NEWS No. 56. (Fox). Boys, I am going to throw another fit about Fox News. If you haven't played 'em, start with this issue and you'll be surprised. "Honest." Sunday, yes. Good audience appeal. All classes in big city. Admission ten cents. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre (298 seats), Baltimore, Maryland.

Independents

BEAUTIFUL SINNER. (State Right). Star, Eva Novak. We used this for our Saturday show with "The Go-Getters" series No. 11 and were well pleased. The picture has lots of action, based on the secret service, and therefore will satisfy the Saturday crowd. Very pleasing business for our day. Fair tone. Sunday, no. Special, no. Appeal eighty-eight per cent. All classes, town of 2,900. Admission 10-25, 15-30. A. E. Andrews, Opera House (496 seats), Emporium, Pennsylvania.

BORDER INTRIGUE. (Goldburg). Star, Franklyn Farnum. Farnum is dead in this town, consequently this picture fell flat. However, where the star is popular this picture will go over good as it is the best, so far, of the series and there is enough action in the story to make 'em sit up. Tone fair. Sunday, no. Special, no. Weak audience appeal. General class, town of 1,000. Admission 10-25, 15-35. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

BREAKING IN. (State Right). Star, Benny Leonard. Don't expect to get another "Fighting Blood" series when you buy this series, but they are good two-reel fillers and should please the majority. Print good. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Fair audience appeal. All classes in big city. Admission ten cents. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre (298 seats), Baltimore, Maryland.

HORSE SHOE LUCK. (Aywon). Star, H. B. Warner. A western picture with a story that does not lag. Full of action and comedy. Audience enjoyed it all. Tone good. Special, no. Good audience appeal. Working class, city of 100,000. Admission 10-15-20. W. C. Budge, Comedy Theatre (275 seats), Jamaica, New York.

IN HIGH SEAS. (State Right). Star, Kenneth McDonald. Not up to this star's standard but will please the majority. Don't let this report stop you from buying. They are worth running. Great for the small town. Tone okay. Sunday, no. Special, no. Good audience appeal. All classes in big city. Admission ten cents. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre (298 seats), Baltimore, Maryland.

OUT OF MY WAY. (State Right). Star, Leo Maloney. Here is a crackerjack two-reeler. More action than in the average five-reel feature. Wonderful shots of auto race. Neighborhood class, city of 15,000. Admission 10-15. Ulysses Ponsant, Bijou Theatre (500 seats), Waterville, Maine.

POISON. (William Steiner). Star, Charles Hutchison. Average feature. Nothing new. Good tone. Neighborhood class, city of 15,000. Admission 10-15. Ulysses Ponsant, Bijou Theatre (500 seats), Waterville, Maine.

RARIN' TO GO. (Artclass). Star, Buddy Roosevelt, Jr. Good western picture and the kind they like in small towns. Tone fair. Sunday, no. Special, no. Audience appeal eighty per cent. Farmers and laborers, town of 343. Admission 15-30. J. M. Patterson, Little Gem Theatre (250 seats), Hunter, Arkansas.

RIP ROARIN' ROBERTS. (Weiss Brothers). Star, Buddy Roosevelt. Much better than his others. Plenty of action. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Neighborhood class, city of 15,000. Admission 10-15. Ulysses Ponsant, Bijou Theatre (500 seats), Waterville, Maine.

ROMANCE AND RUSTLERS. (Arrow). Star, Yakima Canutt. Up to the usual western and a little better. This star if handled right will, in my way of thinking, make another "Mix." Print new. Tone okay. Sunday, no. Special, no. Good audience appeal. All classes in big city. Admission ten cents. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre (298 seats), Baltimore, Maryland.

SHIELD OF SILENCE. (Steiner). Star, Leo Maloney. While this is not a bad picture, Leo Maloney has made better ones, and while it is not a knockout, it will get by. Tone good. Sunday, no. Special, no. Not much audience appeal. Small town class, town of 300. Admission 10-25. Roy E. Cline, Osage Theatre (200 seats), Osage, Oklahoma.

SPEED. (Banner). Star cast. At last a real picture made for an every-day audience. This is a picture about people that you meet every day. A story that is a pip. No high society bunk in this. It sure makes one feel good to run a picture like this. Tone good. Sunday, good. Lots of audience appeal. Small town class, town of 300. Admission 10-25. Roy E. Cline, Osage Theatre (200 seats), Osage, Oklahoma.

SPEED SPOOK. (C. C. Burr). Star, Johnny Hines. A good picture that will please the masses and make you money. Tone good. Sunday, no. Special, no. Audience appeal ninety per cent. Farmers and laborers, town of 343. Admission 15-30. J. M. Patterson, Little Gem Theatre (250 seats), Hunter, Arkansas.

WHO WOULDN'T TAKE CHANCES WITH THESE GIRLS?

Buster Keaton took only "Seven Chances" in his new Metro-Goldwyn feature comedy of that name, but from the appearance of this flock of girls you would think Buster might have increased the number by seven or eight more. "Seven Chances" is a Joseph M. Schenck presentation through Metro-Goldwyn, based on Roi Cooper Megrue's stage success.

F. B. O.'s "Lilies of the Streets" To Be Given Wide Exploitation

AN unusually far reaching exploitation campaign is being launched by Nat G. Rothstein, F. B. O.'s director of publicity, advertising and exploitation, on "Lilies of the Streets," the police picture which was made by Belban Productions and sponsored by Mary E. Hamilton, New York's first policewoman, based on actual experiences of wayward young girls with whom Mrs. Hamilton has come in contact during her police work.

Police officials throughout the United States have been cooperating to the fullest with the F. B. O. forces and with Mrs. Hamilton to bring the picture to the attention of every intelligent man, woman and child in the United States.

Captain Grant Williams, prominently connected with Police Headquarters, and known as the foremost finger print expert in the country, is one of the many well known police officials who has identified himself with the exploitation of the production. At a recent showing of the picture at the Olympic Theatre, in Brooklyn, New York, Captain Williams made a short address on crime and its prevention, and the important part played in the detection of criminals by finger prints. He received an unusually enthusiastic ovation, and repeated his talk at several other Brooklyn picture houses.

Thousands of throwaways have been distributed throughout Greater New York, and cards have been placed on the bulletin boards of every factory and department store in New York and Brooklyn, bringing the production to the attention of thousands of factory workers and department store employees.

"Lilies of the Streets" is an original story by Elizabeth J. Monroe, a young woman who has been prominently associated with Mrs. Hamilton in police work. The scenario is the work of Harry Chandlee, while Joseph Levering directed. Johnnie Walker and Virginia Lee Corbin are co-starred, with Peggy Kelly, Irma Harrison, Dorothy Cummings, Wheeler Oakman, Mrs. Hamilton and Miss Monroe prominent in support.

George Walsh with Theda Bara

George Walsh, Chadwick's athletic star, will join the cast of "The Unchastened Woman," in which Theda Bara is starred, immediately on completion of "Blue Blood," his current production. James Young is directing this Louis K. Anspacher play for Chadwick.

"Rush" Warner Product

Four Features Completed and Four Are in Work

Work on Warner Bros.' productions for release on the coming year's schedule is off to an extraordinarily good start. Four pictures have been finished, while four others are in work. Two were completed this week, an announcement from the executive offices in New York reveals.

Charles A. Logue's "Below the Line," one of the two just completed, is quite in keeping with the superior quality of the cast. This includes, besides the marvelous dog actor, Rin-Tin-Tin, June Marlowe, John Harron, Charles ("Heinie") Conklin, Victor Potel, Gilbert Clayton, Pat Hartigan and Taylor Duncan. Herman Raymaker directed the production, with Irving Asher assisting, and John Mescall in charge of the camera work.

The other on which the final "shots" have just been taken is "The Wife Who Wasn't Wanted," from Gertie Wentworth James's engrossing novel. Irene Rich, the star, has the support of Huntly Gordon, John Harron, June Marlowe, George Pearce, Edward Peil, Gayne Whitman, George Kuwa, Wilfred Lucas, Gertrude Astor, Elinor Fair and Don Alvarado. James Flood, assisted by James Townsend, directed, with John Mescall as head cameraman.

Change Title on Terris Film

Associated Exhibitors issued an announcement this week that the title "His Buddy's Wife" has been definitely chosen for the Tom Terris feature production which has heretofore been publicized by that organization as "My Buddy's Wife."

"His Buddy's Wife" is a picturization of the widely read story by T. Howard Kelly, which was published in Smart Set Magazine. The picture was filmed under the personal direction of Tom Terris.

Chadwick to Start New Special

With the completion of the screen adaptation of Denman Thompson's well known stage play, "Sunshine of Paradise Alley," on which Josephine Quirk has been working for two months, Chadwick Pictures Corporation will start work on this production shortly. Edmund Lawrence, who has been associated with the company for several months in an advisory capacity, is in New York with Mr. Chadwick conferring on this production. It is understood that negotiations are now being completed for a prominent star who will play the title role.

Since Wanda Wiley, pretty Century Comedy star, had the motorcycle accident which laid her up in a hospital for several weeks, she believes in keeping close to the ground. "The higher you are, the harder you fall," is her motto. That's why she now confines her speeding to an underslung flivette.

Earle C. Kenton Signed As New Warner Bros. Director

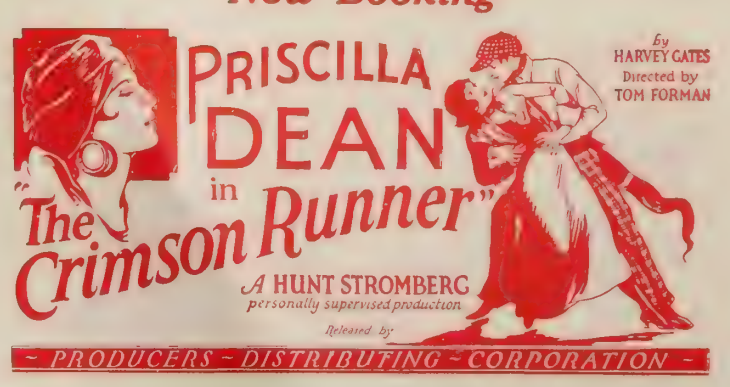
EARLE C. KENTON'S debut as a Warner Bros.' director is to be made with one of the big outdoor stories on this company's enlarged program. Kenton's signature to a contract was procured by Bennie Zeidman, associate executive to Jack L. Warner, in charge of production work on the West Coast. He is well known for his laugh pictures, including "Down on the Farm" and "A Small Town Idol." His successes, however, are confined to no particular theme, but cover a wide range.

Announcement is made also of the signing of Charles ("Heinie") Conklin to a long-term contract, following the success of his work in "Below the Line," which has just been finished. He has been assigned to an important role in "The Pleasure Buyers." Irene Rich heads the cast.

Production work is now in progress on Warner Bros.' "The Wife Who Wasn't Wanted," under the direction of James Flood. The cast includes Irene Rich, Huntly Gordon, John Harron, June Marlowe, George Pearce, Edward Peil, Gayne Whitman, George Kuwa, Wilfred Lucas, Gertrude Astor, Elinor Fair and Don Alvarado. This picture is to be an adaptation of Gertrude Wentworth James's popular novel.

Casting for forthcoming Warner productions is proceeding rapidly. Otto Hoffman has been engaged to play McTish, Francis J. McDonald will have the role of Pooch, and Pat Hartigan has been cast as the Swede, in "Bobbed Hair," the dazzling story which, the composite work of twenty popular writers, has proved one of the fiction sensations of the present year.

Otis Harlan has been assigned the role of Mr. Joffrey in "The Limited Mail," with Monte Blue, and E. J. Ratcliffe will play Colonel Annesly in "The Man on the Box."



Herman Jans Reports Progress

Many Big Outdoor Scenes Completed on "Married?", First of New Series

Herman F. Jans, president of Jans Productions, Inc., on his return from the Milwaukee convention, reported that George Terwilliger and the unit making the first of his new series of productions, "Married?" had completed many of the most important outdoor scenes and that the feature would be finished so far as the actual shooting was concerned within the next ten days or two weeks.

The "Married?" company spent several days last week at Ausable Chasm, New York, and reports have it that some unusually thrilling stuff was photographed there. Among other stunts filmed was the daring swimming of the rapids by Evangeline Russell, who plays an important role in the production in support of Owen Moore and Constance Bennett.

Mr. Terwillliger has now taken his company to the Glendale Studios at Glendale, Long Island, where the interiors will be filmed. Mr. Jans announces that some particularly elaborate sets have been constructed by Tec-Art. These were made while the company was on location, so that all was ready to shoot when they returned.

The latest addition to the cast of "Married?" is Daniel Nakarenko, one of the most noted Russian actors now in this country.

Langdon's Feature Comedy

Camera Work Completed at Mack Sennett Studios

The Pathe Home Office has received word that Harry Langdon has completed his work before the camera in "His First Flame," the first feature-length comedy Langdon has produced under the Mack Sennett banner.

Langdon, his director, Harry Edwards and Arthur Ripley, scenario chief, have transferred their attention from the stages to the cutting and editing rooms.

With the inimitable personality of Harry Langdon at the head of a cast composed of players who have been closely associated with him in his Pathe comedies for a year past, Mack Sennett is making promises that "His First Flame" will be one of the strongest comedy features to have been produced by him, even including the popular "Mickey" and "Molly O!" both of which added laurels to his genius as a producer.

Completing "Lovers' Island"

"Lovers' Island," a forthcoming Henri Diamant Berger picture for Associated Exhibitors, featuring Hope Hampton, James Kirkwood and Louis Wolheim, is now in its last week of production at the Diamant Studios, in Fort Lee, N. J.

"Lovers' Island" is an adaptation for the screen of a story written by T. Howard Kelly for Smart Set Magazine, which revolves around the simple life of fisher-folk. The supporting cast of the production is headed by Ivan Linow, Douglas Gilmore, Jack Raymond, Flora LeBreton, Flora Finch and Gaby France.

Hollywood Signs with Associated

Word has been received from the Associated Exhibitors home office to the effect that Edwin L. Hollywood, the well-known director, was signed to supervise the filming of a new series of four productions. The director is now considering for adaptation four popular stories by prominent authors and expects to begin production this month.

would seem that the weakness of the picture lies in the fact that they are not typical or representative. Consequently while interesting as a character study we do not believe that the average spectator would feel that the story strikes home, that his father is like Old Man Prouty or that he would act as the son and daughter do.

The development of the story brings about a situation where the familiar happy ending for all concerned would be inconsistent if not logically impossible. At the same time, not only does the ending seem an anti-climax but we believe that the majority will feel disappointed at having the old man go to a home for the aged even though he feels he would be happier there. The picture does not show the reaction of the son and daughter when they discover this fact. The manner in which this is brought about in the screen story is rather unconvincing for it would seem very easy to have moved to a larger apartment.

Luke Cosgrave has the leading role and while his portrayal of the old man is good it seems somewhat superficial and he does not succeed in making you feel the depth of the character. The best performance in the picture is Lois Wilson's very human and true portrayal of the wife, and Warner Baxter does good work as the husband

Despite its many good points, the disappointing and somewhat abrupt and unfinished ending will probably operate against it with a lot of people.

Cast

Old Man Prouty.....Luke Cosgrave
Fred Prouty.....Warner Baxter
Nettie Prouty.....Lois Wilson
Jim Corey.....Ben Hendricks
Lil Corey.....Margaret Morris
Miss Pringle.....Josephine Crowell
Based on play, "Minick," by Edna Farber and G. S. Kaufman.
Scenario by Walter Woods and F. McGrew Willis.
Directed by James Cruze.
Length, 5,909 feet.

Story

The Prouty household is thrown in confusion by the sudden arrival of Fred's father, who has come to live with them, forcing them to give up an engagement for that evening. As soon as the old man gets to the house he begins to unset the orderly procedure and to irritate Fred Prouty's wife who bears with him as patiently as possible. Matters come to a climax when he brings two of his old cronies in as Nettie Prouty has all fixed up for a meeting of a swell club. The old men litter up the place and eat all the sandwiches. But to make matters worse Old Man Prouty keeps butting into the meeting, finally breaking it up. Nettie's nerves give way and she quarrels with Fred and says either she or the old man must go. The Old Man finally visits his cronies at the Old Man's home and is so pleased that he decides to go there. Fred and Nettie dissuade him, but when he overhears Nettie say to a friend that she is expecting a baby and don't know how they will manage as they need his room, he slips away to the Home leaving word that the old must make way for the new.

"Daughters Who Pay"

Reviewed by Sumner Smith

"Daughters Who Pay," a Banner Production, depends for its chief appeal upon melodrama. The story is thrilling, the acting adequate and the suspense well sustained, so plausibility may be dispensed with. The principal characters are a business woman and a Russian Broadway dancer, who are one and the same person; an erring brother, a rich man's son and numerous radicals and secret service operatives. The common theatrical trick of extolling the poor girl and using the actress for a villainness goes by the boards here; in fact, both of them, being the same girl, get the best of treatment.

Marguerite de la Motte has the double role and by the successful use of make-up and by good acting prevents discovery of the dual identity until the story gives it away. John Bowers plays the rich man's son in love with the Broadway actress and gives a sincere performance. The remainder of the cast is equally good.

The title refers to the modern woman who, at the death of her father, becomes the head of a family in place of the son. In this case the son was a weakling who stole from his employers, and his sister's efforts to save him from prison without disclosing her Broadway career, closely linked with secret service work, start the plot moving. Thereafter it is a love story with melodramatic counter-plot supplied by the dangerous radicals.

"Daughters Who Pay" should prove satisfactory entertainment for audiences not too highly sophisticated, which are more interested in fast-moving action and colorful characters than in plausibility.

Cast

Margaret Smith / Sonia Borisoff .....Margaret de la Motte
Dick Foster.....John Bowers
Henry Foster.....J. Barney Sherry
Serge Oumansky.....Bela Lugosi
Maid.....Alyce Mills
Story by William B. Laub.
Directed by George Terwilliger.
Length, 5,800 feet.

Story

In an effort to save her brother from prison, Margaret Smith goes to Henry Foster, millionaire business man, from whom Bob Smith stole. Foster refuses to aid her. Dick Foster, Henry's son, is in love with Sonia, an exotic Broadway dancer. Margaret apparently meets Sonia on leaving the Foster home, and Sonia promises the millionaire that she will give up Dick if he is lenient toward Bob Smith. Sonia keeps her word by making love to Serge Oumansky, a Russian radical, before Dick and a crowd of radicals with whom she associates. She insults Serge when Dick leaves. The reds lure her to a lonely house to kill her, but Dick intervenes. The reds again corner her in her apartment but secret service men arrest them. Margaret Smith and Sonia are revealed as the same person and as an agent of the secret service. Dick and she marry.

"Marvels of Motion"

(Red Seal—Magazine—One Reel)

This reel is divided into several sections, all of which analyze different types of motion. These include a man in a hurdle race, two dancers in action, a tiny little girl dancing and doing cartwheels, a dog jumping and Harry Houdini performing card tricks, together with trick photography showing a cow which becomes elongated and telescoped and disappears into nothing, runs, stops, and shimmies. With the exception of trick printing in some of the scenes with the cow, slow motion, stop motion and reversed motion as well as scenes in which the motion effect is given a cumulative effect by a series of photographs merging into each other, have all been employed with good effect and make this a reel that should entertain the majority. Probably the most interesting from a popular standpoint are the scenes which show the cleverness with which Harry Houdini performs his card stunts.—C. S. S.

"Baree, Son of Kazan"

Vitagraph's Production of Curwood's Appealing Story of a Dog Should Please the Majority

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

So successful was James Oliver Curwood's dog story, "Kazan," that he wrote a sequel, "Baree, Son of Kazan," which also proved popular. The former story was filmed several years ago, and now "Baree, Son of Kazan," has reached the screen as a David Smith production for Vitagraph, starring Anita Stewart.

Characteristic of Mr. Curwood's stories, the action is laid in the far Northwest, the Hudson Bay country, and is marked by the ruggedness and virility of the surroundings. While the dog, Baree, furnishes the title and has an important part in the action, it is really the human beings in the picture who have the principal roles. In this respect it is not essentially a dog story although the dog adds greatly to the interest and appeal.

The story follows considerably along the general lines of stories of this type; however, there is good suspense and a tenseness to the action, and this, together with the fact that the plot has been given twists which keep the spectator guessing as to what will happen next, sustains the interest well.

Anita Stewart gives a good performance in the leading role and we do not recall having seen her look more attractive. The supporting cast is thoroughly capable and the dog that handles the title role is intelligent and gives a good account of himself, particularly in some remarkably handled scenes where he springs a couple of steel traps by himself without getting caught.

Another feature of this picture is the beautiful backgrounds, which have been finely photographed. "Baree, Son of Kazan," is a good story of the Northwest and with the added appeal of the dog, which, by the way, has not been made to do any stunts that stretch the credulity, should prove a good attraction for the majority of patrons.

Cast

Nepeese .....Anita Stewart
Jim Carvel.....Donald Keith
Pierre .....Joe Rickson
McTaggart .....Jack Curtis
Baree .....Wolf (a dog)
Based on story by James Oliver Curwood.
Directed by David Smith.
Length, 6,803 feet.

Story

Jim Carvel's father is killed and the guilty man freed because of insufficient evidence. Jim takes the law in his own hands and shoots the murderer. Believing he has killed him, he escapes to the Canadian Northwest and hides. He comes upon a puppy in the wilderness and in chasing him falls and breaks his leg. He is found by Pierre and his daughter, Nepeese, and they become fast friends, but Jim continues his wanderings. McTaggart, the factor, desires to marry Nepeese, but she will not have him. He plans to lure Pierre away and attacks Nepeese. Pierre is not deceived and in a fierce fight McTaggart kills him. Nepeese runs away and to save herself jumps off a cliff into the water. Carvel finds an injured member of the Mounted Police and nurses him to health and is informed that the man he thought he killed recovered and confessed. Carvel, returning to seek Nepeese, finds the puppy, Baree, now fully grown, caught in a trap, releases him and takes him home. In the spring Baree wants to go back to his old home. Jim lets him do so, and they come upon Nepeese, who has been rescued by an Indian, so all ends happily for Jim and Nepeese when Baree attacks McTaggart and puts him out of the way.

THE PEP OF THE PROGRAM

NEWS AND REVIEWS OF SHORT SUBJECTS AND SERIALS

"Curses"

(Educational—Comedy—Two Reels)

Al St. John in his newest comedy for Educational has sprung a new one, for this is a broad burlesque on the thrilling melodramatic type of serials, even to being divided into episodes and carrying over the suspense in the middle of a thrill with the subtitle, "To be continued next week." Numerous situations familiar to serials and easily recognized by the fans have been travestied and naturally under the circumstances Al appears not as the hero but as the "cruel" villain who is after little Nell. The locale is in the Northwest, the villain attempts to get the "papers," a murder is committed, the hero comes to the girl's rescue, and the bad men kill each other. Nell is tied to a big saw frame and when the hero fails to arrive, the saw vainly attempts to cut her in two. The pair is caught in clutching claws and the hero tied so a sneeze will cause a huge rock to crush him. He sneezes again and the rock rolls back up hill. A lot of cleverness has been used in burlesquing the situations, and the two reels contain a number of good laughs and chuckles. Everyone, except the serial fan who takes his serial so seriously he objects to having it kidded, should enjoy this comedy.—C. S. S.

"Good Morning, Nurse"

(Pathe—Comedy—Two Reels)

A flivver that can carry twice its weight is a feature of "Good Morning, Nurse," a Mack Sennett comedy with Ralph Graves in the lead. The comedy moves along at a rattling good pace and should provide ample amusement for any audience. Graves assumes the role of a young millionaire who has an obsession for cleanliness. He examines his food through a microscope then he sprays it with a disinfectant. His nurse decides it is time to convert him to the ways of real men. He sends home his chauffeur and climbs behind the wheel of a flivver. A huge creature—the nurse's uncle—plops himself in the front seat and the little car careens from side to side. At the hunting grounds there are many ludicrous caperings which all wind up with a violent thunder storm. The party, very wet and disgruntled, starts home. The return trip provides quite a few thrills when the brakes give way and the car several times narrowly misses the edge of precipices.—T. W.

"Hot Times in Iceland"

(Pathe—Cartoon—One Reel)

Noah's Ark goes on a north pole expedition in "Hot Times in Iceland' a cartoon by Paul Terry. The farmer is the only human being aboard and he gets considerable bumping by the animals, among which are specimens of prehistoric vintage. The cartoon is comically entertaining.—T. W.

"Slick Articles"

(Universal—Comedy—Two Reels)

Hilliard Karr and Billy Engle in this Century Comedy are cast as two impecunious artists who aid a maiden in distress. In gratitude she poses for them and helps them try and sell pictures to her wealthy father. The pictures are stolen and when the real owner appears there begins a regulation chase scene which ends in the pair being lured into a jail attached to a motorcycle. There is a clever bit of slapstick in which a fish lifts the rowboat from the water and twirls it around and a novel scene shows the girl by means of a unique costume posing for one of the comedians as a dancer and the other as a society woman at the same time. Most of the action is of a familiar sort and as a whole this comedy offers average entertainment value.—C. S. S.

"Dude Ranch Days"

(Pathe—"Sportlight"—One Reel)

How members of the tenderfoot class are welcomed on some cattle ranches in the West is the subject of "Dude Ranch Days," a Grantland Rice "Sportlight." The ranch portrayed in this one-reeler specializes in the accommodation of tourists, thus Rice's title. Cowboys roping steers, life in cheery sitting rooms where log fires blaze, and lots of sunshine and mountains make this presentation smack of the wholesome outdoors.—T. W.

The House of FEATURETTES

"ROXY" plays "Daisy Bell" (On a Bicycle Built for Two) a Ko-Ko Song Car-tune, week of May 24th, Capitol Theater, N. Y.

Stanley, Philadelphia, plays "Ko-Ko Trains 'Em" (Out-of-the-Inkwell) same week.

To list all first run exhibitors playing Ko-Ko Song Car-tunes and Out-of-the-Inkwells would be a "Who's Who in Filmdom."

"Hello Goodby"

(Educational—Comedy—Two Reels)

Jack White's newest Mermaid Comedy for Educational presents Lige Conley in a dual role, as a fortune-hunting foreign prince and as Customs Inspector whom he bribes to take his place to elude conspirators who threaten his life. This furnishes the material for the action which concerns efforts of the prince to elude these swarthy persons. Much of the action occurs on the steamship pier and there is familiar and well-handled slapstick followed by fast action in a well-handled chase scene. The climax comes during a mask ball which the conspirators attend. While White's cleverness in devising comedy situations is evident throughout, it is particularly noticeable in a scene that will mystify and entertain, in which a cat chases a canary and the bird finally rides on the cat's back. Another good scene shows the hero and his valet diving through a window onto a mattress that is painted on a billboard. This comedy should thoroughly amuse slapstick patrons.—C. S. S.

"Ask Grandma"

Grandma turns out to be a real sport in "Ask Grandma," featuring the "Our Gang" youngsters. Little freckled faced Mickey has a role quite novel for him—that of the carefully washed and starched son of a mother who would wax strong in the community's society. How Grandma plays the part of boxing instructor and football coach for this natural kid in unnatural attire will provide any audience with a lot of fun.

Grandma's coaching gets Mickey into condition to "lick" the child bully of the neighborhood. The fight is exciting as well as comic, with Grandma leaning out of a second story window egging her protege on to victory. The gang furnishes the crowd of kid spectators who prove themselves enthusiastic fight fans. The picture although entertaining and a good bet for any house, is not quite so actionful or clever as some of the other "Our Gang" comedies.—T. W.

"Two Poor Fish"

(Educational—Cartoon—One Reel)

Props, the busy little character in the Earl Hurd Pen and Ink Vaudeville cartoons distributed through Educational, who seems called upon to do all sorts of things of an unusual nature, is instructed to go out and catch fish for a trained seal in this number. This reel is filled with amusing action in which Props has an awful time trying to catch the fish which continually elude him. Finally he lands on a floating target and the seal catches a bomb that is about to explode. Props races to get away and the seal keeps up with him. Finally the bomb explodes and both are buried in a shower of fish. There are only two substitles, and its main fault is that some of the action is held longer than necessary.—C. S. S.

"Daisy Bell"

(Red Seal—Song Car-tune—One Reel)

In the second of the series of Song Car-Tunes Fleischer's familiar little cartoon clown, Ko-Ko, leads a cartoon quartet singing the old song, "Daisy Bell," or as it was better known a generation ago, "On a Bicycle Built for Two." As in the previous number, the words appear on the screen and a moving dot keeps up with the tune played by the orchestra. When the chorus is reached this dot is replaced by a figure of a man who jumps from word to word doing funny stunts finally ending in riding away with his bride on a bicycle built for two, followed by a troop of children on little bicycles. This is a novelty and the handling of the chorus is good for a number of laughs. It should prove to be a pleasing offering.—C. S. S.

"Locked Out"

(Universal—Comedy—One Reel)

This is one of the most amusing of Universal's "Sweet Sixteen" comedies featuring the youngsters, Arthur Lake and Olive Hasbrouck. There is a real plot here that has been smoothly developed with an eye to laughs, although there is no especial originality in the idea. Arthur has a date with Olive, but father hides his clothes. Arthur takes father's new suit and climbs in Olive's window. Her father takes him for a burglar. He escapes but tears his trousers. Next day, father wears the suit and is arrested as the thief. It is all straightened out and the respective fathers give both Arthur and Olive a good spanking. There are a number of laughs and plenty of action in this reel.—C. S. S.

"Sit Tight"

(Educational—Comedy—Two Reels)

Literally, as well as figuratively, a fast start has been given to this Christie Comedy with a series of scenes in which before the star, Jimmie Adams, appears, the havoc he wrought with his high-powered auto is shown. It develops that he is racing to get his sweetheart so that he can meet his uncle in time to win $10,000. It is a chase comedy from start to finish for after he gets the girl, the motorcycle cop overtakes him and from then on it is a wild dash to meet uncle and elude the guardians of the law, ending in a police court with uncle, sweetie and everybody put away for thirty days, postponing the wedding. Speed is the keynote of this comedy and while there is nothing new in the idea, it has been smoothly developed and filled with amusing stunts that should please the average audience.—C. S. S.

"The Teaser"

Laura La Plante and Pat O'Malley Immense in Corking Universal-Jewel Comedy Drama

Reviewed by Sumner Smith

"The Teaser" scores as distinctly entertaining. This Universal Jewel co-starring Laura La Plante and Pat O'Malley is a corking comedy drama that should please any type of audience. Director William A. Seiter has given a more or less conventional story unusual treatment, particularly in placing the camera, and this fact, coupled with excellent acting, makes the picture far and away better than most of its kind, good though they are.

The story concerns the adoption of a flirtatious, ignorant girl by wealthy people, her affairs with some forty or fifty men and her love for a breezy cigar salesman who does everything wrong at a conventional social function.

Seldom has Miss La Plante appeared to better advantage, partly, perhaps, because Pat O'Malley is beside her. The two constitute a great comedy team, but the whole cast is so uniformly good that the two stars do not walk away with all the honors. Hedda Hopper is excellent as a society woman, Wyndham Standing effective as a society man and Frank Finch Smiles, in the role of a butler, impresses as one of the best supporting comedians seen in a couple of years. He could be used to advantage in any comedy drama.

The tempo of the picture is perfect. It begins at a rapid pace and moves swiftly throughout the entire length. There is no need to cut a single foot of the 6,800. And it may be said without much exaggeration that there is a good laugh every ten feet, or a bit of pathos as a relief from the fun-making.

Typical of Selter's ingenuity is his introduction of the rural Commercial House. The scene is shot from the sidewalk through the glass into the lobby of the hotel. Traveling men, cigars aslant in their mouths, are lolling in the leather chairs and watching the passersby. A girl passes, the camera catches her reflection in the glass and the men are all attention. They subside as a man goes by. There are about five good laughs in this one scene. The best scene is the social function. Here it is all O'Malley. He gives the girl silk stockings, dances like an Indian and loses his reserve collars. Your theatre ought to rock with laughter when this goes on the screen.

Story

Ann Barton, scion of a wealthy family, has to work as cigar-counter girl in a village hotel. She falls in love with James MacDonald, a breezy, flashy salesman. An aristocratic aunt adopts her, James messes things up socially and Ann and James part company. Ann vamps all the men, gets into compromising situations, gets out of them by pointing the finger of suspicion at other people and generally revenges herself on the aunt for exposing James to ridicule. James in the meantime educates himself and wins Ann after a new meeting.

THE FIRST RUN

PRESENTATIONS – PROLOGUES – MUSIC

Edited by Colby Harriman

Exhibit of Presentation Art.

LAST week an announcement was made to all producers in First Run Theatres requesting them to send in photographs of their best presentation and prologue productions which would form the nucleus of a Traveling Exhibit anent such work.

This idea is a good one, and while it will not bring any direct monetary results, it is another step in securing recognition from the patrons of the theatre relative to the importance of this part of the program structure.

The purpose underlying this action is primarily one of publicity, a dignified introduction to one of the most attractive forms of theatrical production. Locally, the producer has secured the plaudits of his patrons, but little is generally known of the intensive artistic programs pursued throughout the nation and in other countries. Acquainting the public with the work being done in other theatres, the high degree of the stage novelties attained, the artistic advancement in scenic design, costume interpretation and colorful lighting treatment are all worth while.

To successfully accomplish this plan it is necessary that the producers lend their cooperation. Photographs of the sets, or scenes, together with any other photographic material, such as costume plates, sketches, etc., are needed. The size of the sketches and photographs need not be standardized as this can be adjusted in mounting the pictures for the exhibit. If possible, two photographs of each scene submitted are requested.

The exhibit will consist of groups of individually mounted photographs and groups on screens. The producer and artist will be given full credit in connection with the showing of his work. No partiality will be shown, the work of the leaders will be exhibited identical with that of the more limited producers. There is no political move back of the idea, but the honest desire to procure sufficient subject matter to constitute an unbiased and unprejudiced exhibit of the presentation art. The exhibit is open to all producers in First Run houses throughout the country, a special invitation being extended to producers in other countries.

The present plan is to exhibit the collection in lobbies or mezzanines of the leading theatres. Managers who are interested in securing this attractive display may communicate directly with the editor for booking dates. To meet the demands and more adequately serve it has been suggested that the exhibit be grouped into four sections. This arrangement will permit a more general exhibition and not limit the value of same.

Photographs are being received now and it is the wish of this department that all subject matter be recorded within thirty days.

Another Color Organ.

ATthe Kiel Music Festival in June, color music, which has already been presented under various conditions in New York, will be shown for the first time in Germany under the direction of a well known Hungarian pianist, Alexander Lasslo. This musician has been working for many years on the problems of translating sounds into colors. He has constructed an instrument which matches the notation by graduations of color. He has invented a parallel color for all the notes and it is his boast that he can play Beethoven or any other composer on his instrument and translate him on the screen in terms of rhythm, form and color.

The inventor is indeed fortunate in having valuable data and experimental shop notes to consult. The past few years have brought forth a number of "color organs" but all have lacked the "elusive something" to popularize them. There have been three distinct exhibitions of what the "best" devices could do demonstrated by three inventors. The fault dominating these color dispensing machines is that the inventor advances some notion attendant to its showing which brands it as another impractical idea, because he contends that the color device should predominate, "that music isn't necessary," "that some day there will be theatres built where only the colors will be revealed, all other agencies eliminated." It is perfectly permissible to prophecy and catch the veil aside giving us a glimpse into the unborn tomorrows but the theatre is not the place where iconoclastic ideas can be propounded. The theatre is the logical laboratory for the development of such ideas as relate to the synchronization of color and music as these two elements are closely allied and devices sanely arrived at which emphasizes the proper interpretation of music with color, and color with music, will be popularly acclaimed. To present new ideas and treatments it behooves the sponsor to proceed carefully and intelligently. Man is seldom interested in anything that is vague and undefinabe unless it has a basic principle which he does understand and is magnetic enough to arrest his interest.

A little book published a few years ago by a professor of one of our largest art schools gives a comprehensive parallel of the proper color for all musical combinations in all keys. This work has been invaluable to many in the proper color treatment for musical features.

From all indications the lay mind is still pretty well content with color combinations analogous to the pictorial beauty of earth and sky in all their infinite coloring and unlimited variety. Any really important move in creating what must be more or less of a new art (this color pictorial blending and motion with a musical base or interpretation) must have the idea of natural effects as the basis on which to build toward anything really new, which will have a permanent value at the same time.

Individuality in art is developed through sincerity. Believe thoroughly in yourself and your ideals. Art more than anything else reveals the personality of the artist, and just as every human being is different than any other, so can your work be entirely your own creation.

A Moving Picture World Presentation

Complete working plans of the presentation suggested herewith, including blueprints, color charts, costume plates, music cue sheets, and other necessary information, are prepared for each subect. The folios are available for IMMEDIATE DELIVERY without charge to any producer or exhibitor engaged in actual production work, and desiring to avail himself of the Colby Harriman suggestions.

"KWAN-YIN RITUAL DANCE

A Chinese Festival Dance Symbolic of the Spring Season

A "Moving Picture World" Presentation Devised by Colby Harriman

THERE is an extreme fascination in certain rituals of Far Eastern faiths, which have survived the centuries. Certain rites attendant to Buddhist worship are particularly attractive, among them, the "Kwan-yin Ritual Dance," where the fairest virgins display their bodily graces and charms before the shrine of this mighty "Bodhisattva."

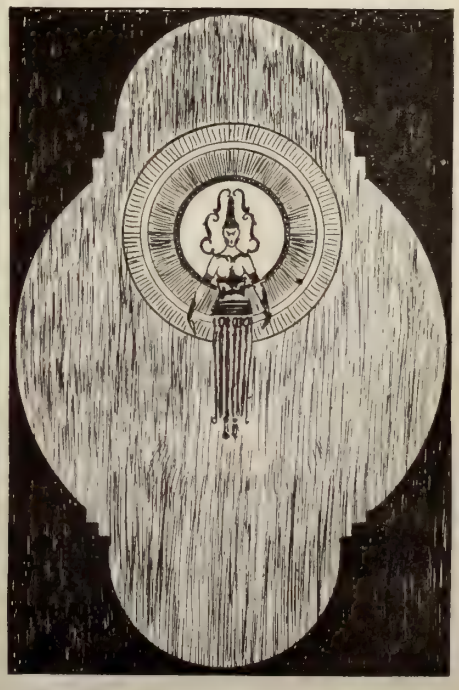
The locale of the shrine together with a brief description of the rite can be thrown on the screen with a trailer or slides.

The action concerns itself with the temple or monastic shrine on the Island of Puto, which is one of the small islands in the Chusan Archipelago, separated from the other islands by a stretch of water known as the "Sea of Lilies." Many legends cling about the place, and a certain beauty and religious peace is found at the shrine of the patron saint of the island, "Kwan-yin" —the incarnation of divine love and pity, she having refused to enter paradise, so that, remaining on the sad earth, might be attentive to the tears and prayers of humanity and depart from the mortal habitation only when the Starry Gates have closed behind the last sinner and troubled hearts.

When the blossoms appear on the trees, the fairest maidens make a pilgrimage to this shrine and perform a dance in adoration of the goddess, offering her the emblems of the lilies which are protective agencies, according to legend, of the island and its shrine.

The sketches above depict a section of the temple, or before the inclosure of the saint's abode. Two large square columns are right and left of the center opening. In the center, a scrim is painted with the emblem of the dragon guarding the treasures beyond. A black drop is hung back of the scrim to give body to the design painted on it. The dragon is painted in gold and blue, against a green-ivory background, with red flames, painted at sides. The flames are accentuated with a flame effect which operates on the face of the scrim. The balance of the setting in the foreground is either black patent leather or canvas painted black and shellacked. The inner side of the columns are highlighted with a deep red, and from the outer sides, and off on right and left, green is thrown. A canary spot from the bridge defines the dancing area, which can be toned down with two other spots carrying an amber medium.

Four or six girls dressed in long white silk Chinese costumes, which are lined with green, enter from right and left carrying the emblems of the shrine, large lily-leaves and lily-buds mounted on gilt bamboo rods. They enter slowly to the booming of a gong off stage, followed by a chanting of men's voices in the distance, in a weird but rythmic monotone. As the dance reaches the climax, a large incense bowl is placed center, and the dancers kneeling in obesiance beseech the goddess to appear and bless them. The rumbling notes of varied drums preceeds the appearance. The lights come up gradually from the back of the scrim, as the backing is taken away, revealing the form of the goddess apparently suspended in the air. A large gold halo, glittering in the light is back of the figure. A spangled drop is used as a backing and as a covering for the platform she is on. The costume of the goddess is silver, the disc motif in gold and the spangled background treated with greens. The dazzling scene can be very effectively accomplished with attention to lights. The goddess becomes animated, begins a slow dance movement as the girls who are kneeling before the shrine, slowly arise, letting their shrouded coats drop from them as they appear revealed, transfigured by the goddess, their bodies a mass of jewels, all over tights covered with silver spangles. The music off stage becomes more animated as the dance mounts to a frenzied finale, the goddess disappearing in darkness at the finale as the flame effects on the center piece are brought in and the lights come up revealing the protecting dragon, the dancers whirling in mad gyrations before the flaming shrine.



First scene depicting the shrine in the Temple of Kwan-yin. The set is placed in two. The Symbol of Protection (Dragon) is painted on a scrim.

The second scene is set back of the scrim, the Goddess being revealed as the lights are brought up. The entire setting is very colorful.

Big First Run Presentations

CAPITOL THEATRE
New York City

Featured Picture: "Black Cyclone" (Hal Roach)

Music

Program is dedicated to visiting French Canadians on their 75th international convention. Capitol Grand Orchestra conducted by David Mendoza rendered "Pyramids" (Liberati) as overture feature. Pietro Capodiferro, Solo Trumpeter.

Moment Mozartesque

S. L. Rothafel has devised a presentation which is marked particularly for its dignity, and the gradual ascendancy of its action towards an artistic climax. The setting consists of a long panel window of French Colonial type at center, which is dressed with net curtains drawn at the bottom, backed with a sky drop with a tree motif in silhouette between the window and the sky backing. The setting on either side of the window consists of the red plush which carries off. A spinet is placed right, a gilt tapestried settee center in front of window, gilt and tapestried armchair left to dress. Red foots tone the setting, with canary, light blue and amber from the sides; two candelabra torcheres are placed up right center and left center. A large crystal chandelier hangs from center. The lamps on the candles of the torcheres and also in the clusters on the chandelier are dipped in amber. The characters are dressed in the French court costume and present an attractive appearance against the dark background as the lights from the sides tone the light costumes of the various players. The various characters group themselves around the set during the rendition of the following program, the action ending with the dance number: Malvine Gardner Spinet and Vlado Rolitsch, Violin—Doris Niles and Ballet Corps, Ruth Williams, (a) Largetto (b) Minuet (c) An Ariette.

Lieutenant Gitz-Rice

Mr. Rothafel gives this popular soldier-composer and one of the latest additions to his "gang" an excellent introduction to his audiences. Gitz-Rice singing and plays his own compositions assisted by Thomas Cowan and Arthur Lang and the Male Ensemble of twenty-four. A scrim drop upon which is painted two large French colonial windows with drapes and a panel with a mural design in the center in a frame similar to the casings of the window. Gitz-Rice is seated extreme right at a large grand piano. A large table is placed at left center and plain chairs to dress. The men assisting are dressed in tuxedos. For the finale, the "Canada, My Home" song, the act is given a scenic punch which is emphasized by the spirited music and the manner in which the number is put over. The lights on the set back of the scrim come up revealing a mountainous exterior on the edge of a cliff overlooking a wooded valley. Cut drop is hung in two which represents a brush-strewn incline, the right end of the drop runs on to center as a narrow row and left of center the ground line shoots up to about 12 feet and then gradually trends off to left. Cliff effect is accentuated with a trunk of a large tree visible at the top of the cliff left center. Back of the drop are set pine trees against a sky drop tinged green and mixed with canary. A large red sun is hung up visible over the edge of the cliff. Purple with a mixture of blue and red is used as highlighting for sun effect.

MARK STRAND THEATRE

Featured Picture: Johnny Hines in "The Crackerjack" (C. C. Burr)

Music

Excerpts from "The Chocolate Soldier" (Strauss) are given as the overture feature by the Mark Strand Symphony Orchestra, Carl Edouarde, conductor. Kitty McLaughlin sings the "My Hero" number.

Gypsy Life

Joseph Plunkett creates excellent atmosphere with a very simple setting in his cycle of Romany numbers. The setting is an exterior resembling a section of a gypsy camp. About ten set trees with sapling trunks and green leafed tops are set in a semi-circle across stage. Several bush and foliage set pieces are used upstage to dress and mask; a blue cyclorama completes the scene. A striped tent is placed right with a campfire over which a kettle is suspended on a stick tripod. The various characters are dressed as a Romany maiden enters from Amund Sjovik and Male Ensemble sing "Gypsy Love" by Lehar. Pauline Miller dressed as a Romany maiden enters from the tent right and sings another Lehar composition "You're in Love," accompanied by the Male Ensemble, and a wild spirited "Gypsy Dance" featuring Mlle. Klemova and M. Daks, completing the action. Canary and amber on the sides with green shot in highlighting tree tops, filter through the leaves casting mottled shadows on various characters, forming an artistic blending when the various artists work downstage in amber and canary flood. For the dance number three canary spots from overhead are brought on to flood stage. Blue border on cyc.

RIVOLI THEATRE

Featured Picture: "Welcome Home" (Paramount)

Music

Rivoli Orchestra plays "Thirteenth Hungarian Rhapsody" (Liszt) with Hugo Riesenfeld and Willy Stahl, conducting. This is followed with another popular Riesenfeld Classical Jazz.

"Katherina Everywhere"

An unusually interesting stage number is offered this week showing how the popular song, "Oh, Katherina" would be sung and danced in Vienna, the Orient, Hungary, Vienna and in Spain. For this number John Wenger, art director, has provided appropriate settings for the five different scenes. Blue floods the closein curtain as two slides announce the presentation, the locale of the various scenes and that it is presented by the Rivoli Ensemble, the lyrics written by Morris Ryskind. A male singer and two girls as dancers dressed in the costumes of the succeeding characters precede each scene in front of a red plush hung in one, sing the song in fashion characteristic of the country: (a) "In Vienna." A tab drop about 10 feet wide painted with a tapestried subject design is hung center with black plush to carry off. Two compo-board candelabras with spiral standards are placed right and left of the tapestry. Three girls and three men dressed in Viennese ballroom costumes; amber from the sides highlights and dancers. (b) "In the Orient." Black plush drop hung back, two large brass brazieres on metal standards up right and left with incense rising from them. A couch covered with ornately designed material is up center upon which reclines a man dressed in oriental costume. A dancer, in black lace and spangled costume which is barely visible, renders an excellent oriental dance. Red foots with canary and amber from the sides are used. (c) "In Hungary," Black plush hung back. Three large square lantern fixtures hung down in one with streamers of vari-colored crepe paper hung from a batten down about midway. Figured set pieces resembling box trees and made of compo-board are placed extreme right and left. Canary, white and amber are used in the toning of the set. Six dances are used; the three men being dressed in Hungarian officer's costume. (d) "In Venice." This is the most attractive of the sets. A black border with legs hung back forming an arch through which is visible the end of a large gondola decorated with accordion type Jap lanterns against a canopy of light figured material. A sky backing is toned green blue, rippler is used on a water row upstage; a large spile is up right. Quartette is grouped at pier which is suggested by a step running across stage with a lady seated in the gondola. A festoon of lanterns of the type similar to those used on the gondola are hung down in one. These lanterns are in vivid tones. Foreground is subdued in its lighting treatment; the ambers, blues and reds being centered on the area upstage. (e) "In Spain." A drop hung down in one resembling the grandstand of an arena as seen by the bull fighters. A box in which certain Spanish characters are standing is placed left. The various members of the Ensemble are dressed in Spanish costume and enter for a spirited Spanish dance. One of the characters deftly portraying the role of a "bull" the antics of this serious miened dancer resulted in much amusement to the audience, and a happy finish to a very clever idea.

RIALTO THEATRE
New York City

Featured Picture: "Baree, Son of Kazan" (Vitagraph)

Music

"Zampa" by Herold is the overture played by the Rialto Orchestra with Emanuel Baer conducting. Riesenfeld Classical Jazz follows this number. Betty Paulus, Mezzo Soprano, sings, "You Are Free" from "Appleblossoms," (Jacobi-Kreisler), "Love's First Kiss" by Dorothy Foster is the love theme played as an orchestral accompaniment for the picture.

Dolores Farris

This popular little dancer is featured this week, clad in a very attractive dance costume which causes her to appear as a cameo in the dark toned setting. Black plush hung back with long streamers of tinsel hung full length about one foot apart across the face of the drop. Two flat set pieces, cone shaped trees painted with blues and greens on compo-board are right and left. Blue to tone with canary amber and white to highlight.

CAPITOL THEATRE
Chicago

Featured Picture: "The Crimson Runner"

Francis A. Mangan has arranged an attractive program for this week which includes as the overture feature by the Capitol Grand Orchestra conducted by Albert E. Short, two numbers (a) "The Fortune Teller" (Herbert) and (b) "An Operatic Nightmare" (Short). Lorna Doone Jackson appears in a number entitled "Carmen" with an ensemble, the ballet and Spanish dancers. A four part presentation follows entitled "Revue in Comics" which is (a) "In The Alley," (b) "Before the Curtain," (c) "On the Street," (d) "In The Forest." Banks Kennedy, the organist, presents a feature "Playing Baseball." Miss Priscilla Dean and assisting company appear in person and enact a scene in the fifth reel of the picture.

STRATFORD THEATRE
Chicago

Featured Picture: "The Dressmaker From Paris" (Paramount)

The Stratford Versatile Orchestra with Edouard Peerigo conducting present as overture feature "Oberon" (Weber) and Classical Jazz "Yearning" (Short). The divertissements include, "Blue Bird Land" which introduces (a) "The Blue Birds' Cage" and a soprano soloist, (b) "The Whistling Blue Bird," a whistler, (c) "In The Forest," six dancers as blue birds. Egbert Van Alstyne, a composer of popular songs appears with Clem Dacy and James Jordan. Bert Earle and Girls present a Triple Saxophone Quartette. Sherman, Van and Hyman do a comedy act, and Leo Terry at the organ presents "Weather, Whether or Not."

EASTMAN THEATRE
Rochester

Featured Picture: Gloria Swanson in "Madame Sans Gene" (Paramount)

The overture featured played by the Eastman Theatre Orchestra with Frank Waller conducting is "Robespierre" (Litolff). This seems to be the proper orchestral introduction to the picture as it reflects so many moods characteristic of the feature. Quoting from the program anent the overture "Aside from the original object (the aforesaid musical composition) to supply a fitting musical introduction to a drama of the same name, this tone poem reflects a splendid picture of the famous hero of the French people, imbued with majestic greatness and sketches with brilliant tonal color. The introduction, in ominous minor mood and sharp disonances, furnishes a realistic background in which the political troubles and rebellious voices of the Parisian mob, as well as the distinctive characteristics of Robespierre, are strikingly pictured. The following Allegro Impetuoso embodies various ideas, such as personality, struggles and ambitions of this most influential leader of the French Revolution. The downfall of the mighty leader amidst the shouts and rejoicings of the people is illustrated by the introduction of the Marseillaise. The overture has gained a lasting position among great works of its kind and its musical worth and value place it on a par with the most famous of descriptive compositions." The organ recital with Robert Berentsen at the console renders selection from "Monsieur Beaucaire" (Rosse).

COLONY THEATRE
New York City

Featured Picture; (Third Week) "Friendly Enemies" (Producers Distributing Corp.)

Music:

Selections from "Mlle. Modiste" (Herbert) is the overture feature played by the Colony Melody Masters under the leadership of Dr. Edward Kilenyi and E. Charles Eggett. For the organ solo, John Priest, at the console, plays "Rustic March" (Boex).

Divertissments:

J. De Rosa has arranged a trio of vaudeville attractions in presentation garb which are popular with the audiences.

1. "Snowbound in the Sahara," a novel scenic creation featuring Ben Blue, a sensational eccentric dancer who executes some excellent steps in skating fashion. A white drop is hung in one, and by manipulating a specially designed piece of lighting equipment, painted masks and snow and water effects, the scene is silhouetted in color on the drop. The scene depicts a mountainous region with a patch of water in the center. A deep blue sky, and a vari-colored landscape with pinks, greens, yellows and white in the scheme. The snow effects and an occasional water ripple are very effective. The idea as developed by Mr. De Rosa is excellent for presentations where multiple scenes are used or area limited.

2. Frederick Brindley. This popular tenor renders a song number in a special setting. A deep umbre tree motif with large trunks on either side, the branches interlacing forming an arch through which a dull gray blue sky is visible. A scrim is hung in one, the drop in two. The singer, dressed in a Romany costume, stands at center before a glowing campfire. He is highlighted from left with canary.

3. La Bernicia. This excellent dancer appears in a cycle of dances from the "Days of 1861 to 1925," assisted by Olga Morselli, violinist, and a gentleman at the piano. The set consists of a fabric drop hung back, with an arched opening, and two artistic scenes painted in panels on either side of the opening. A medium platform fills the opening, with three small steps leading down. The platform and steps are covered with a striped material in light tones. Fabric backing. Two legs down stage for returns are black with a gold flower design. The setting is toned pink and blue, with magenta and amber to highlight for the sides. A grand piano is down right center. Attractive costumes are worn by the dancer, the violinist appearing in a beautiful evening gown with rhinestone design in color, the pianist in tuxedo. White and canary spots to work.

No Presentation Can Be Better Than Its Mechanical Equipment

Riesenfeld Musical Suggestions:

A few suggestions by Hugo Riesenfeld, Managing Director of the Rivoli, Rialto and Criterion theatres, New York City, relative to sure fire vocal and instrumental solos.

"In the case of instrument solos—violin and 'cello—the selections include:

VIOLIN: "Gypsy Airs".....Sarasate
"Souvenir" .....Drdla
"Meditation" from "Thais".....Massenet
"Humoresque" .....Dvorak

and different Kreisler arrangements.

'CELLO: "The Swan" .....St. Saens
"Kol Nidre" .....Bloch

"There is one number which can be especially well adapted for the French horn, 'Berceuse' by Goddard.

"In passing it might be mentioned that it is well to remember that the public still likes cornet and trumpet solos.

"For vocal solos experience has proved that the following selections seem to call forth the most applause. I have not discriminated between operatic arias and ballads in this list:

COLORATURA SOPRANO SOLOS:

"Cara Noma" from "Rigoletto"...Donizetti
"Polonaise" from "Mignon".....Thomas
"Thou Charming Bird" from "The Pearl of Brazil" .....David
"Ah, fors' e Lui," from "LaTraviata".Verdi
"Lo, Hear the Gentle Lark."

LYRIC SOPRANO SOLOS:

"Song of Songs" .....De Moya
"Oh, Dry Those Tears .....Del Riego
"Sweethearts" from "Maytime"..Romberg
"Sweetest Story Every Told" .....Stutts
"When You and I Were Young, Maggie"
"Roses of Picardy" .....Wood
"I Hear You Calling Me"
"Somewhere a Voice Is Calling"
"Gianina Mia," from "The Firefly"..Friml
"Prince Charming" .....Lehman
"Love Sends a Little Gift of Roses"....
.....Oppinshaw
"Elegie" (with violin or 'cello obligato)..
.....Massenet
"Melody of Love" from "Gypsy Love"..
.....Lehar
"Chansonette" .....Friml
"Happy Days" .....Strelezki
"Serenade" .....Schubert

CONTRALTO SOLOS:

"My Heart at Thy Sweet Voice" from "Samson and Delilah" .....St. Saens
"O Don Fatale" from "Don Carlos"..Verdi

TENOR SOLOS:

"Tommy Lad" .....Margitson
"Celestia Aida" .....Verdi
"Vesti la Guibba" from "Pagliacci".....
.....Leoncavallo
"Ah, Moon of My Delight" .....Lehman
"Dear Old Pal Of Mine" .....Gitz Rice
"Mother Machree"
"The Old Refrain" .....Kreisler
"The Trumpeter"

TENOR ARIAS FROM:

"Martha" .....von Flothow
"Il Trovatore" .....Verdi
"Rigoletto" .....Verdi

BARITONE AND BASS SOLOS:

Prologue from "Pagliacci".....Leoncavallo
"Brown October Ale" from "Robin Hood"
"Keep the Home Fires Burning"
"My Song Is of the Sturdy North".German
"Cavatina" from "Faust" .....Gounod
"Toreador Song" from "Carmen"....Bizet
"Volga Boat Song"
"Big Bass Viol"
"Rocked in the Cradle of the Deep"
"When the Bell in the Lighthouse Rings"
"Where My Caravan Has Rested"
"Armorer's Song" from "Robin Hood"..
De Koven

"We have discovered that American audiences are showing a constantly growing preference for songs in their own language. They want to be able to understand what is being sung. For this reason every conductor and producer should insist that the artist have a distinct pronunciation. In winning appreciation for a vocal number, clear pronunciation is half the battle."

Costumes Of Net

For a special revue or dance number, inexpensive costumes can be made of net. The following notations will assist the costumer.

For each costume, purchase two yards and a half of large mesh curtain net and color with two packages of dye selected. After dyeing stretch the net on a frame so that the dye drys evenly.

Fold the net so as to cut out the largest size circle possible. Then cut another circle from the center whose circumference is about equal to a high waist-line. The bodice is shaped by carefully laying a brassiere on the net and using it for a pattern. Shoulder straps and bindings are made of bright colored ribbon.

The circular skirt is folded in half. Each side has a band of raffia trimming about two and a half inches wide, made by weaving six or seven strands of colored raffia through the net mesh. A panel seven inches wide on the middle front of the skirt is marked by weaving a band of two colors of raffia in the same way, seven inches apart. A placket six inches long opens the back of the skirt. A strip of hook and eye tape sewed on the back of the bodice and the skirt makes an easy fastening.

The costume may be decorated with vivid colored raffia. Unusual flowers or medallions are made by folding five or six strands of raffia to a length of six or seven inches. Two little bundles of contrasting colors thus folded are crossed and fastened at the crossing with a strand of still another color of raffia, the remaining end of which is wound in and out around the center crossing. The end is fastened on the under side with a heavy needle. When a large flower is made another cross is laid or superimposed on the first one and the fastening strand of raffia used to bind the two crosses together by weaving it in and out between the eight sections. The looped ends of each section are cut and fluffed like a pom-pom to give the flower softness. These flowers or medallions are scattered over the skirt, back and front and tacked on the under side. Smaller ones are used for trimming on the bodice and hat.

The colors of raffia used are purple, cerise red, grass green, orange and yellow.

The foundation of the hat, which can be of various shapes but a tubular style suggested, is a strip of buckram as long as the head measurement and three quarters of a yard wide. It is rolled so as to make the top slightly larger than the headband. Basting holds the joining together. Bright toned muslin or crepe paper may be used to cover the buckram before the net used in the costume scheme is stretched over it. Two thicknesses of the net are stretched over the top of the hat and over-handed on with a strand of raffia. A lining that fits snugly on the head is sewed inside the hat and a piece of hat elastic added. This balances the hat on the head and makes it easy to carry. The flower trimming and the band of colored ribbon are sewed in place before the lining is secured.

Posters for Presentations

Jay Weaver, whose artistic posters are weekly attraction bait in the lobby and street frames of the Mark Strand Theatre, New York City, enjoys not only the distinction of being the first poster artist to specialize in high-grade posters for motion picture theatres but also as an originator of posters exploiting several special presentations by Joseph Plunkett, managing director of the Mark Strand. Weaver brings to his work the creative ability of a scenic specialist together with the finished art and technique of a portrait artist.

New Stage in New York Rivoli

John Wenger is preparing plans under the supervision of Hugo Riesenfeld concerning the enlargement and alteration of the stage at the Rivoli Theatre. The addition to the present stage is necessary owing to the elaborate plans being made for stage productions to be presented during the summer months.

Two Governors and Many Mayors Guests on Metro's Trackless Train in New England

BOSTON'S reception of America's First Trackless Train has surpassed every other reception thus far accorded the Metro-Goldwyn special on its transcontinental trip. The crowds in front of City Hall when the train drew up at the steps for Mayor Curley were so large that newspaper men found it impossible to get close-ups of Mayor Curley as he sat in the cab of the engine.

A motorcycle escort cleared the way for the special on its trip through the principal streets through cheering crowds. The train then called at the State House for Governor Fuller, who boarded the special with other celebrities and enjoyed a tour about the city through enthusiastic crowds. The Governor's enthusiasm over the Trackless Train found expression in the remark that he would adjourn any session at the State House at any time the special called for him.

The train then visited Loew's Orpheum and there attracted immense numbers of people. A similar ovation greeted the special before Loew's State Theatre. On the following morning over 150 important exhibitors inspected the train and endorsed the special's trip as the greatest promotion innovation in the annals of motion picture exploitation. Prominent space was accorded the train's visit by all the Boston papers.

The tremendous ovation accorded the special in Boston completes a series of phenomenally enthusiastic receptions tendered the train all along the way from New York into Massachusetts. Mayor Keating and city officials greeted the train in Stamford at the head of an enormous crowd of people. At Norwalk all work was suspended for half an hour at the famous Knapp hat factory in order that the thousands of employees might inspect the train. A motorcycle escort met the special at the city limits of Bridgeport and conducted the train to City Hall, where Mayor Behrens boarded it and rode through the principal streets.

Mayor Behrens conferred the freedom of the city on its crew. The townspeople of New Haven also went wild with enthusiasm over the Trackless Train. Mayor Fitzgerald and other celebrities received the train in New Haven, where the train was parked for an hour before the Hyperion Theatre, showing Lillian Gish in "Romola." It is estimated that over 150,000 people inspected the train in these cities. Newspapers accorded the special's visit generous space.

At Branford the town siren blew a fifteen minute welcome. The train was received with enthusiasm at Madison, Guilford, Clinton, Westbrook, Saybrook, Lyme and Norwich. The special's entrance to the square in New London was greeted by cheering crowds and a fanfare of automobile horns. Enthusiasm ran high beyond expectations in New London, and was exceeded only by the enthusiasm demonstrated in Providence, R. I.

Over 100,000 people lined the streets in Providence, cheering and shouting and waving. No event in the history of the city, it was said on all sides, had aroused so much public interest. Six motorcycle traffic cops and four mounted police cleared the way for the special on its tour through the principal streets. The Mayor, the Chief of Police and Commissioners were guests of Metro-Goldwyn on this tour.

Governor Porthier and his staff inspected the train at the State House and posed for photographs, and the special was later given a tremendous send off. Riverpoint and Onleyville were visited, and on the journey to Boston brief calls were made at North Attleboro, Walpole and Norwood, at all of which stops the train was received with immense acclaim.

Louis B. Mayer, vice-president of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and production head of the corporation, started back to Hollywood last week after a visit East. He remained over in Chicago to greet the Midwest showmen.

Louis B. Mayer, vice-president in charge of production for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, was tendered a royal reception on his visit to his old home town, Boston, last week. He was met by crowds of his friends at the train and, led by a band, escorted to the Copley-Plaza, where an elaborate luncheon was tendered him. In the photograph, left to right, Vic Morris, Loew representative in Boston; Tom Spry, Mrs. Louis B. Mayer, Mr. Mayer and their two daughters, the Misses Edith and Irene.

Matt Moore to Star

"Three Weeks in Paris," Gregory Rogers's mirth-provoking story, has been selected as the next starring vehicle for Matt Moore and the next big comedy special by Warner Bros. Dorothy Devore, Willard Louis, Helen Lynch, Gayne Whitman, John Patrick and Frank Bond, each a favorite in comedy, will have important roles.

Jackie Will Make Two More for Metro-Goldwyn

An agreement is pending whereby the Metro-Goldwyn Distributing Corporation will handle the Jackie Coogan productions for the coming year. This agreement is expected to be signed soon.

Jackie will make two productions. The first will be "Old Clothes," by Willard Mack, a sequel to his original story, "The Rag Man," in which Jackie appeared recently with great success. The second has been temporarily entitled "Dirty Face." Both productions will present Jackie in type of role which first brought him fame—that of "The Kid."

Lasky Lays Out Paramount's Program Before Coming East

SATISFIED that all details for the most ambitious production program ever mapped out by Paramount are perfected, Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, left Hollywood last week for New York. Before leaving he completed the last of a strenuous series of conferences with directors, stars and writers which have occupied almost fourteen hours of every day for the last three weeks, and also made known Paramount's latest production plans.

One of the most important announcements made by Mr. Lasky was that Betty Bronson of "Peter Pan" fame will be starred in "The Golden Princess," which is based on Bret Harte's "Tennessee's Partner." Neil Hamilton, new Paramount leading man, obtained by arrangement with D. W. Griffith, will make his first trip west to play opposite Miss Bronson. Clarence Badger will direct.

In order to confer with Mr. Lasky on the production of "The Vanishing American," which will be made a big Paramount special, Zane Grey, the author, and Lucien Hubbard, one of Paramount's production editors, rushed up from Red Lake, Arizona, where "Wild Horse Mesa" is being filmed.

"There is a feeling at the studio which I fully share," stated Mr. Lasky, "that in 'The Vanishing American' Zane Grey has provided us with the greatest literary work of his career and in the hands of William K. Howard it is destined to be another screen epic. It is the final chapter in the dramatic story of the Red Man's last stand.

"Another of our big undertakings will be the James Cruze production of 'The Pony Express.' I firmly believe this will be equally as great as 'The Covered Wagon.'"

Mr. Lasky conferred with Pola Negri about her next production, "Flower of the Night," which will be made in Hollywood upon completion of "The Crossroads of the World," scheduled for production at the Paramount Long Island studio.

Several pictures in the editing stage occupied Mr. Lasky's attention. Among them are "Light of the Western Stars," produced by William K. Howard; the James Cruze production, "Marry Me," and "Paths to Paradise," co-featuring Betty Compson and Raymond Griffith, which was directed by Clarence Badger. Upon Mr. Lasky's return to New York he will view "Lost—A Wife," which William de Mille brought to New York for final cutting and editing.

Mr. Lasky also found time to supervise filming scenes of several photoplays, including Raoul Walsh's lavish production, "The Wanderer," the screen version of the biblical story of "The Prodigal Son" which Mr. Lasky predicts will make new screen history; Zane Grey's "Wild Horse Mesa," directed by George B. Seitz and co-featuring Jack Holt, Noah Beery, Billie Dove and Douglas Fairbanks, Jr.; "Not So Long Ago," a Sidney Olcott production with Betty Bronson and Ricardo Cortez in the leads; "A Son of His Father," Victor Fleming's production of Harold Bell Wright's novel, featuring Warner Baxter, Bessie Love and Raymond Hatton; Gloria Swanson's "The Coast of Folly," which Allan Dwan is producing, and "Rugged Water," Irvin Willat's production of Joseph Lincoln's story, with Lois Wilson, Warner Baxter and Wallace Beery in featured roles.

Olcott Begins New Picture

Sidney Olcott has begun work upon "Not So Long Ago," with Betty Bronson and Ricardo Cortez, in the Paramount studio in Hollywood. "Not So Long Ago" is a charming comedy of life in New York during its most picturesque and romantic period. As in "Little Old New York," also directed by Mr. Olcott, the picture has the same opportunity for introducing famous people and places.

Who will shortly begin work on his first Paramount picture, "That Royle Girl."

Completing 'Sally of the Sawdust'

Winter having relented sufficiently to clothe the trees and shrubs near New York with foliage suitable to his needs, D. W. Griffith has resumed the shooting of "Sally of the Sawdust," which features Carol Dempster, W. C. Fields and Alfred Lunt, and for which only the exteriors remained to be filmed.

Griffith reassembled his production unit at the Paramount Long Island studio, where the interiors were made, and with the cast and equipment hit the trail for the wide open spaces of Syosset, L. I., and Greenwich, Conn., to complete the outdoor scenes.

Signs Five-year Contract

The double announcement that Director William K. Howard has been signed to a five-year contract with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and that his first assignment will be the making of "The Vanishing American," which is to be one of Paramount's greatest efforts during 1925, was contained in a wire received from Jesse L. Lasky in Hollywood.

All of Paramount's resources and facilities will be thrown into the filming of "The Vanishing American," which is Zane Grey's new and powerful story of the crumbling of the Red Man's empire.

Goldbeck Preparing New Play

Willis Goldbeck, who wrote the adaptation for Herbert Brenon's "Peter Pan," has been engaged to prepare another of Sir James M. Barrie's plays for screen production by the same director, according to an announcement from Paramount. "A Kiss for Cinderella," which nine years ago served as a vehicle for the final stage triumph of Maud Adams, will be put into production soon by Herbert Brenon.

Seitz Begins First Production

At the Red Lake, Arizona, ten miles from the nearest civilization, at Flagstaff, George B. Seitz, Paramount director, has started making the outdoor scenes of "Wild Horse Mesa." This is Zane Grey's latest story of the rugged West, of wild horse hunting and capturing, of horse thieves, Indians, perils, drama and romance.

"The Best Picture I Have Seen in Five Years"—Roxy

"BLACK CYCLONE," the new Hal Roach feature starring Rex, the wild horse, has received very high praise from S. L. Rothafel, of the Capitol Theatre, New York, who gave this Pathe release its premiere presentation the week of May 17, at the big Broadway theatre.

Speaking to his radio audience of a million or more through WEAF and six allied broadcasting stations on Sunday evening, May 10, Mr. Rothafel was heard to say:

"I do not as a rule say this about pictures playing the Capitol Theatre, but I say to you now that the picture that is to be presented at this theatre next Sunday is the best picture that I have ever seen in five years, and I would like to have all of you see it. It is entitled 'Black Cyclone' and is the story of a wild horse."

Exhibitors throughout the country who play "Black Cyclone" should reap the benefit of Mr. Rothafel's enthusiastic praise and recommendation of this Hal Roach feature as the chain of radio stations broadcasting the popular showman's talk covers a very broad extent of territory. The stations sending out the Capitol Theatre talk in addition to WEAF, New York, are:

WJAR, Providence, R. I.; WEEI, Boston, Mass.; WCTS, Worcester, Mass.; WCAP, Washington, D. C.; WCAE, Pittsburgh, Pa., and WWJ, Detroit, Mich. Mr. Rothafel further commended "Black Cyclone" to his patrons in the house program:

"I like this picture—I like it as well as any picture I've seen in a long, long while."

Further announcement of the coming of "Black Cyclone" to the Capitol Theatre was published in the program as follows:

"'Black Cyclone,' the Hal Roach feature which comes to the Capitol next week, is the story of Rex, a wild horse, a flashing black of great power, an ebony streak in the sunlight. He was born in the wild lands, self-raised and self-taught, for a rattlesnake bite had deprived him of his mother while he was still of tender age. He sought protection in a herd, but its leader, the ferocious killer, drove him out. He had no place in his herd for an outcast—a weakling, a baby stallion. But there came a day when this untamed weakling was a magnificient, powerful creature who defeated the Killer, who had never before known anything but victory! Rex, who made his film debut in 1924 in 'The King of Wild Horses,' is an even more magnetic creature in 'Black Cyclone.'

"Thousands of acres of Nevada's beautiful plains and hills supply the background for 'Black Cyclone' which is hailed as one of the year's greatest sensations—both as to dramatic value and photography."

Taylor Starts Production on Associated's "Miracle of Life"

IMMEDIATELY upon the completion of camera activity last week on "Camille of the Barbary Coast," Mae Busch, who portrays a leading role in the film, began work on her second picture for Associated Exhibitors entitled "The Miracle of Life," an S. E. V. Taylor production.

"The Miracle of Life," a modern society drama, will be the first of a series of feature pictures that Mr. Taylor has contracted to make for Associated Exhibitors' distribution.

Adapted by Marion Leonard

"The Miracle of Life" was adapted for the screen by Marion Leonard, from a story written by Olga Printzlow, and is now in the second week of production at the Cosmopolitan Studios at which Mae Busch and Owen Moore recently finished Hugh Dierker's "Camille of the Barbary Coast." The first week of camera work was spent in shooting of exteriors in which Miss Busch and Percy Marmont appeared while awaiting the arrival of Nita Naldi, another featured member of the cast, from the Coast.

This is the first time that these three prominent screen players have ever appeared together in a film, and is in keeping with the Associated Exhibitors' policy of acquiring big stars for its 1925-1926 product. According to J. S. Woody, president of the distributing organization, "The Miracle of Life" will be released sometime in October on the program of the second group of features arranged for the new season.

Production Head for Thomson

Milton Gardner, formerly production manager at Goldwyn, and one of the best known executives in the motion picture industry on the West Coast, has been affiliated with the new Fred Thomson unit at the F. B. O. Studios in Hollywood. Mr. Gardner will serve in the capacity of production manager and will begin work immediately in the preparation of Thomson's next F. B. O. attraction. It will be "The Wild Bull of Skull Mountain." Silver King, the star's big white horse, will, of course, have an outstanding part.

Producers Distributing Lists First 26; Rork and Neilan Productions Included

IN A preliminary announcement to the trade by John C. Flinn during the M. P. T. O. A. convention, Producers Distributing Corporation revealed the scope and strength of its program for 1925-26. Avoiding all advance heralding and carefully guarding the details of all forthcoming releases while perfecting its plans, Producers Distributing Corporation now discloses an impressive aggregation of productive genius in an affiliation that will contribute at least forty powerful and wholly independent attractions during the coming year.

The influential names of Marshall Neilan and Sam Rork are now found listed with Cecil B. De Mille, Al and Charles Christie, Hunt Stromberg, Frances Marion, Renaud Hoffman and A. H. Sebastian in the roster of big producers associated with Producers Distributing Corporation and the names and achievements of these men are advanced in the company's official announcement as "a warranty for the theatre owner against empty seats and a warranty for the public against empty entertainment."

Only twenty-six of the forty odd productions to be released during the coming year are listed in this preliminary announcement, but among the pictures enumerated are the titles of six of the biggest stage successes, including "Eve's Leaves," "Seven Days," "Three Faces East," "The Road to Yesterday," "Silence" and "Strongheart," which will be produced under the screen title of "Brave Heart."

In addition to these plays fifteen popular and famous works of fiction are listed for screen adaptation, including "The Last Frontier" by Courtney Riley Cooper, "Simon the Jester" by William J. Locke, "The New Magdalen" by Wilkie Collins, "Hell's Highroad" by Ernest Pascal, "The People vs. Nancy Preston" by John Morosco, "The Wedding Song" by Ethel Watts Mumford, "The Open Switch" by Frank H. Spearman, "Her Two Men" by Richard Washburn Child, "The Volga Boatman" by Konrad Bercovici, "The Million Dollar Handicap," adapted from "Thoroughbreds" by W. A. Frazer; "Red Dice," adapted from "The Iron Chalice" by Octavius Roy Cohen; "Made for Love," adapted from "The Valiant Gentleman" by M. J. Stuart; "Steel Preferred" by Herschell Hall, "The Valley of Fear" by W. G. Tuttle, and "The Man From Red Gulch" by Bret Harte.

This imposing collection of material from the pens of great dramatists and writers is rounded out with three especially written original stories. These include "The Flame of the Yukon," "The Unknown Soldier" and "Fifth Avenue." The first title will be a Hunt Stromberg production, Renaud Hoffman will produce "The Unknown Soldier" and "Fifth Avenue" will be a Sam Rork feature.

Two personally directed Cecil B. De Mille super productions are announced in "The Road to Yesterday" and "The Volga Boatman." The first of these exceptionally lavish subjects will be an adaptation by Jeanie Macpherson and Beulah Marie Dix from the famous stage play, "The Road to Yesterday" by E. J. Sutherland and Miss Dix. This play is a colorful romance of modern mannerisms and medieval chivalry in which the distinguished and debonair stage star Joseph Schildkraut will be featured with Vera Reynolds and Jetta Goudal. De Mille's second personally directed production, "The Volga Boatman," will be adapted from Konrad Bercovici's story dealing with the virile lives of men in the raw in the picturesque and adventurous Volga country. These big subjects will be given splendidly lavish production and the finest players in all filmdom will be cast in every part.

In addition to the two personally directed specials, nine productions are listed to be supervised by De Mille. These include "Silence," Max Marcin's current dramatic success that will go on tour next season with four road companies in addition to opening for a run in Chicago with the original cast. The elaborate screen adaptation of this play will be directed by Rupert Julian.

"Eve's Leaves," another big dramatic hit on Broadway by Harry Chapman Ford, will be interpreted on the screen with Leatrice Joy as the star under the direction of Paul Sloane. "Three Faces East," adapted from the great stage play by Anthony Paul Kelly, will be directed by Frank Urson and Paul Iribe with an all star cast headed by Agnes Ayres and Robert Ames. "Hell's Highroad," adapted by Eve Unsell from Ernest Pascal's novel, will star Leatrice Joy, supported by

Edmund Burns, Robert Edeson and Julia Faye under the direction of Rupert Julian.

"The Coming of Amos," starring Rod La Rocque with Jetta Goudal, Trixie Friganza and Noah Beery in featured roles, adapted from William J. Locke's novel, will be directed by Paul Sloane.

Paul Sloane will also direct "The Wedding Song," adapted from the novel by Ethel Watts Mumford, and "Made for Love," adapted from M. J. Stuart's novel, "The Valiant Gentleman." Leatrice Joy will be starred in both these productions supported by Edmund Burns.

Rupert Julian will direct Rod La Rocque in "Red Dice," adapted from the Octavius Roy Cohen story, "The Iron Chalice," and "Brave Heart," adapted from the big dramatic success, "Strongheart," by William C. De Mille.

The famous stage farce, "Seven Days," by Avery Hopwood and Mary Roberts Rinehart and founded on Mrs. Rinehart's book, "When a Man Marries," will be produced as an Al Christie special feature comedy under the direction of Scott Sidney, director of "Charley's Aunt." This production will have an all star cast featuring Lillian Rich, Creighton Hale, Lilyan Tashman, Mabel Julienne Scott, Hallam Cooley, William Austin, Tom Wilson, Rosa Gore, Eddie Gribbon and Charles Clary.

Six Hunt Stromberg productions are listed. Two of these will be Priscilla Dean pictures, two Harry Carey pictures and two personally directed Stromberg Specials. The great western story, "The Last Frontier," by Courtney Riley Cooper, originally started by the late Thos. H. Ince as the greatest film creation of his career, will be completed by Stromberg as his first special during the coming year. This will be followed by "The Open Switch," adapted from Frank Spearman's powerful railroad story, "Whispering Smith."

Priscilla Dean will be starred under Tom Forman's direction in "The People vs. Nancy Preston," adapted from the successful novel by John Morosco, and in "The Flame of the Yukon," an original story of the Alaskan gold rush especially written for Priscilla Dean's dynamic dramatic style.

Harry Carey will be starred under Tom Forman's direction in "The Valley of Fear," from the Liberty Magazine story by W. G. Tuttle, and in "The Man from Red Gulch," from Bret Harte's great western story, "The Idyll of Red Gulch." These stories were selected for the new series of Carey westerns because their dramatic portrayals of western adventure may be shown in pictorially artistic settings.

The newly organized Metropolitan Productions will release four George Melford Productions, including "Without Mercy," adapted from John Goodwin's celebrated novel, featuring Vera Reynolds, Dorothy Phillips, Robert Ames, Rockliffe Fellows, Patricia Palmer, Lionel Belmore, Fred Malatesta, Sidney D'Albrook and Gene Pallette; "Steel Preferred," adapted from Herschell Hall's series of Saturday Evening Post stories; "Her Two Men," by Richard Washburn Child, another popular Saturday Evening Post story, and "The Million Dollar Handicap," adapted from the famous novel of the race track by W. A. Frazer.

Frances Marion is scheduled to contribute her first two pictures as an independent producer in "The New Magdalen," adapted from Wilkie Collins's world famous novel, and "Simon the Jester," adapted from William J. Locke's great story of the same title. Both of these adaptations will be made personally by Miss Marion and the picture produced under her personal supervision.

Sam Rork is listed for four productions, including "Fifth Avenue," a story of a thousand emotions in which Lewis Stone will be starred under the direction of Alfred E. Green.

Renaud Hoffman will contribute another epic on humanity in "The Unknown Soldier" from the story by Dorothy Farnum that deals with the human sidelights of the world war and pictures the strife as it was waged in the hearts of those left at home.

Additional attractions bringing the total for the year to between forty and fifty will be announced later when the details of their production with casts and directors have been set.

F. B. O. Working on Program of 64 Features and 76 "Shorts"

SHOOTING on F. B. O.'s huge 1925-26 program, embracing sixty-four features, twelve of which will be Gold Bond specials, and seventy-six short subjects has this week begun at the Coast Studios of the company.

James Leo Meehan, son-in-law of the late Gene Stratton-Porter, who is transferring "The Keeper of the Bees," now running serially in McCall's Magazine, one of the novelist's late books, to the screen will conclude casting this week, and actual shooting will commence on Monday. Mr. Meehan has already assembled an unusually distinguished cast. To Robert Frazer has been assigned the role of James Lewis MacFarlane, world war hero of the book, and to Gene Stratton, granddaughter of the novelist, that of Little Scout, a girl tom-boy, who is one of the motivating forces of the story. Josef Swickard has been cast as the Bee Master, with Martha Maddox as the mother. Several other well known box-office names will be added to the cast by Mr. Meehan, and will be announced shortly.

Emory Johnson and his mother, Mrs. Emilie Johnson, are preparing the story and continuity of "The Last Edition," the young director-producer's new effort which will immortalize the profession of journalism.

Another note of interest on the F. B. O. lot is the completion of "The Bandit's Baby," the first of the new series of super-Western productions starring Fred Thomson and his horse, Silver King. "The Bandit's Baby" is a story of the great open spaces and the regeneration of a kind hearted bandit by a deserted waif. Del Andrews is the director.

Among other productions in work are Evelyn Brent's sixth crook melodrama, "Smooth as Satin," which is based on Bayard Veiller's stage success, "The Chatterbox." It was directed by Ralph Ince. It is to be followed by a melodrama in a colorful Spanish setting, in which Miss Brent will devote her talents to a somewhat different character than those she has recently interpreted. It is called temporarily "Tizonia—the Firebrand," and is an original story by Clifford Howard and Burke Jenkins.

Plans are under way for Harry Garson to start work on another comedy drama, "High and Handsome," from a Red Book Magazine story by Gerald Beaumont.

Richard Talmadge is bounding and diving through "Twenty Years After," based by the author, James Bell Smith, on Dr. Samuel Johnson's classic, "History of Rasselas, Prince of Abyssinia." Jack Nelson is directing.

Bob Custer has started work on "The Bloodhound" by H. H. Van Loan. The players include Mary Beth Milford, Ralph McCullough, Emily Barry and David Dunbar. William James Craft will direct.

Wesley Ruggles, who is directing the new H. C. Witwer two-reel series, "The Pacemakers," is at work on Chapter Ten, called "What Price Gloria?" co-starring George O'Hara and Alberta Vaughn.

Larry Kent, the new juvenile lead, who has recently been signed by F. B. O., is reading scripts, preparatory to his first starring entrance on the F. B. O. lot.

"The Thoroughbred"

Oscar Apfel is directing "The Thoroughbred" on the West Coast for Phil Goldstone Productions and Truart release.

Will Hays pays a visit to the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios at Culver City. Here he is shown with Irving Thalberg, Louis B. Mayer and Harry Rapf, and at the extreme right in uniform is Corporal Nagel, a featured player in "The Exquisite Sinner," a forthcoming Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer release.

Get "Tearin' Loose" Print

First Wally Wales Arrives in New York at Weiss Brothers' offices

Louis Weiss, managing director of Weiss Brothers' Artclass Pictures Corporation announces that he has received the first print and negative of "Tearin' Loose" the first of the eight five-reel acrobatic-stunt novelty features starring Wally Wales, the cowboy prince.

Wally Wales is the third of the trio of hard riding Western stars featured in Weiss Brothers' 1925-26 program. According to his first picture this new star will maintain the high standard of popularity made by Buddy Roosevelt and Buffalo Bill Jr., the other two of the trio.

Lester Scott Jr. of Action Pictures Inc. who produced the picture has put the very best possible material in this picture. There are a number of well known Western players in the cast. Among them are Jean Arthur, Charles Whitaker, H. Alfred Hewston, Harry Belmour, Polly Van, Bill Ryno, Vester Pegg and Frank Ellis.

The picture was directed by Richard Thorpe who has been responsible for a number in both the Buddy Roosevelt and Buffalo Bill Jr. Series. The story was written by Sergey Sergeyeff and the scenario by Frank L. Inghram.

A special press book with a full line of exhibitor aids and accessories will be printed in two colors for this whole series.

Three Leading Ladies

Glenn Tryon Needs Them in New Hal Roach-Pathe Comedy

Three leading ladies support Glenn Tryon in the latest of his two-reel comedies for Pathe release, now in the course of production at the Hal Roach Studios under the direction of Fred L. Guiol.

The beauties enhancing the Tryon cast are Blanche Mehaffey, Katherine Grant and Jane Sherman, all of whom have appeared to advantage in Hal Roach comedies. Chester Conklin and James Finlayson will do the "heavy" roles.

Plans for Warners' Forty Revealed At Sales Convention in Los Angeles

WITH complete plans for forty pictures in the 1925-26 season tucked away in their pockets, Harry M. Warner, Abe Warner, Sam E. Morris, Meyer Lesser and Herman Starr, of Warner Bros., arrived home Monday, May 18, from the Warner convention in Los Angeles where a sales meeting of the Vitagraph Exchanges and Warner officials was held four days last week.

The convention was the first get-together of the Warner executives and the Vitagraph sales managers since the recent purchase of the Vitagraph company. The business sessions were held in the Ambassador Hotel. Full plans for the coming season were discussed, and production plans outlined.

On the return of the home executives, it was announced that the Warner Forty for next season would consist of: Two by Ernst Lubitsch; two with John Barrymore; two with "Syd" Chaplin; four with Marie Prevost; four with Monte Blue; four with Irene Rich; two with Lowell Sherman; four with Matt Moore and Dorothy Devore; four with Kenneth Harlan and Patsy Ruth Miller; four with Rin-Tin-Tin and eight with All Star casts.

The titles of the stories, principal players, directors and scenarists of all the forty with the exception of the all-star cast pictures, which will be selected within a few days, follow:

John Barrymore in "Captain Alvarez" by H. F. Sheldon, directed by Millard Webb, scenario by Bess Meredith, who has just completed "Ben Hur." A colorful and romantic story of the life of Maximillian, Emperor of Mexico, during the reign of Napoleon III.

Catherine Brody's "Why Girls Go Back Home," sensational sequel to "Why Girls Leave Home" with Marie Prevost. The cast includes: Willard Louis, John Roche, Gayne Whitman, Clyde Brook. Directed by Harry Beaumont.

"His Majesty, Bunker Bean," by Harry Leon Wilson, another great comedy story for Matt Moore and Dorothy Devore. The cast includes: Willard Louis, Louise Fazenda, John Patrick, and directed by Roy Del Ruth.

An Ernst Lubitsch Production, "The Third Degree," from the all-powerful story by Charles Klein. Directed by Ernst Lubitsch.

"The Limited Mail," greatest of all railroad thrillers by E. E. Vance, with Monte Blue. The cast includes: Willard Louis, Vera Reynolds, Tom Gallery, Eddie Gribbon, Jackie Huff, John Roche, Otis Harlan. Directed by George Hill.

"The Pleasure Buyers," a thrilling mystery novel by Arthur Somers Roche, with Irene Rich. The cast includes: Clive Brook, Gayne Whitman, Don Alvarado, Charles Conklin, Wanta Hall, June Marlowe, Frank Campeau, Frank Leigh. Directed by Chester Withey.

The story sensation of the year, "Bobbed Hair," by twenty celebrated authors, starring Marie Prevost. The cast includes: Louise Fazenda, Kenneth Harlan, John Roche, Walter Long, Emily Fitzroy, Pat Hartigan. Directed by Alan Crosland.

Rin-Tin-Tin in "Below the Line," by Charles Logue. The cast includes: John Harron, June Harlowe, Pat Hartigan, Charles Conklin and Victor Potel. Directed by Herman Raymaker.

"The Love Toy," author anonymous, with Lowell Sherman and a tremendous all-star supporting cast. Directed by Alan Crosland.

"The Man on the Box," by Harold McGrath, starring the screen's greatest comedian, Syd Chaplin, hero of "Charlie's Aunt." The cast includes: Alice Calhoun, Charles Reisner, David Butler, Charles Gerard, Kathleen Calhoun, Charles Conklin. Directed by Fred Newmeyer.

"The Golden Cocoon," by Ruth Cross, with Helene Chadwick, Huntly Gordon, Richard Tucker, Margaret Seddon, Frank Campbell. Directed by Millard Webb.

"The Climbers," by Clyde Fitch, with Irene Rich, Huntly Gordon and a typical Warner cast.

A second big Ernst Lubitsch Production of a famous international stage success.

"Three Weeks in Paris," by Gregory Rogers with the screen's greatest comedy pair, Matt Moore and Dorothy Devore. The cast includes: Louise Fazenda, Willard Louis, Helen Lynch, John Patrick, Gayne Whitman, Frank Bond. Directed by Roy Del Ruth.

Rin-Tin-Tin in "Clash of the Wolves," by Charles Logue. The cast includes: Dolores Costello, Don Alvarado, June Marlowe. Directed by Herman Raymaker.

John Barrymore, in his second big Warner picture, "The Social Highwayman," by Elizabeth Phipps Train. Directed by Harry Beaumont, scenario by Bess Meredith.

"Red Hot Tires," by Gregory Rogers, with Monte Blue, Patsy Ruth Miller, Lincoln Steadman, William Lowry, Charles Conklin, Fred E. Smelton. Directed by Earle Kenton.

One of the biggest of the season's stage dramas, "Hell Bent Fer Heaven," by Thatcher Hughes, with Monte Blue. The cast includes: June Marlowe, Gayne Whitman, John Harron. Directed by William Beaudine.

"The Passionate Quest," E. Phillips Oppenheim's greatest novel, with Marie Prevost, Huntly Gordon, John Roche. Directed by James Flood.

"Satan in Sables," by Bradley King with Lowell Sherman, John Harron, June Marlowe. Directed by James Flood.

"The Fighting Edge," by William McLeod Raine, with Kenneth Harlan and Patsy Ruth Miller.

"The College Widow," by George Ade, outstanding stage success for a whole decade, starring Syd Chaplin. Directed by Charles Reisner, who has just finished co-directing Charlie Chaplin in "The Goldrush."

"Captain Alvarez" Picked by Warners for John Barrymore's First Picture

JOHN BARRYMORE has a new ambition. He confided to Warner Bros. this week his yearning to make an outdoor thrill picture, and the Warners obliged by handing him the scenario of the colorful play, "Captain Alvarez."

"This'll do!" exclaimed Mr. Barrymore when he had finished reading. "It's the very thing I've been looking for.

"You see," he continued, "hardly anybody believes I can do a thrill picture. I like to do the unexpected. Every play different, every leading role different, that's my idea of the way to keep the public interested. I have just finished the great classic, 'Hamlet.' What finer stunt for me now than to chase a whale like 'Down to the Sea in Ships,' or something else on that order?

"I'm tired of the 'Miss Nancy' roles," he went on, glancing at a portrait of himself in the finery of Beau Brummel. "I want to get out in the open and do a red-blooded part—something different. And I think that's what the public wants. Just to prove that my theory is correct let me remind you that I've played only about seven really great roles, but each one was so individual and so different from the others that it seems as though I've done about seventy."

So, just to make Mr. Barrymore happy, Warner Bros. selected "Captain Alvarez," which, as a play, was staged by Sanger & Jordan in 1914, with Paul Gilmore in the leading role. It concerns the hero of a South American revolution who is kept busy enough to satisfy even Mr. Barrymore, and is full of dash and action.

"Captain Alvarez" was the work of Harry S. Sheldon, author also of "The Havoc" and other stage successes. As a four-act play it made a hit and there is general agreement that it is admirably suited for screen translation. Everything will be in readiness for Mr. Barrymore to start work on the production when he reaches the West Coast, June 1.

Though definite information is lacking at the moment, there is talk that Harry Beaumont, well-known Warner Bros.' director, will wield the megaphone in the production of this first starring vehicle for Mr. Barrymore. In spite of reports, the selection of the leading woman is yet to be announced.

First National Activities in New York City Studios

WITH one picture in the cutting room, another in production, another starting within a few days and two more scheduled for production within a few weeks, Earl Hudson's Eastern production units of First National are facing a busy summer.

Milton Sills' first starring picture, "The Making of O'Malley," adapted from Gerald Beaumont's recent magazine story of the same name, has just been completed. Marion Fairfax is busy with the titles, and the picture will be ready for an early release.

Practically all the cast for "The Half-Way Girl" is selected, and John Francis Dillon is making rapid strides with the filming of this colorful vehicle in which Doris Kenyon is featured, with Lloyd Hughes playing the male lead. An excellent cast has been chosen for this picture, including Hobart Bosworth, Tully Marshall, Teddy Sampson, Sam Hardy, Sally Crute, Harriet Sterling, Martha Madison and Charles Wellesley.

Fred Stanley, Director Lambert Hillyer and Roy Carpenter, cameraman, have gone to the lumbering regions, one hundred and fifty miles northwest of Ottawa, Canada, to prepare for the exterior scenes of Sills' next starring picture, "The Knockout," which will start in a few days. The Canadian Government has turned over its motion picture bureau with all its resources to Hudson in connection with the making of this picture. Sills is in California for a brief visit. He will go direct to the Canadian location.

Mary Astor has arrived from the Coast to play the leading feminine role in "The Scarlet Saint," the screen adaptation of Gerald Beaumont's magazine story, "The Lady Who Played Fidele." Eugene Clifford and Jack Jungmeyer of the scenario department, are working on the script for this picture.

Ben Lyon is expected from the Coast shortly. Shortly after his return "The Pace That Thrills," an auto racing story, will be started with Ben in the featured role.

Meanwhile Hudson, when he is not supervising the work on the various scenarios and productions, is working on the story of "Atlantis," which will be placed in production in the near future as a sequel to "The Lost World."

When Milton Sills has finished "The Knockout," from M. D. C. Crawford's novel "The Come-Back," a great super-special in which he will have the stellar role will be placed in production. It will be "Men of Steel," an adaptation of R. G. Kirk's Saturday Evening Post story, "United States Flavor."

Fox Signs Miss Livingston

Fox Film Corporation placed Margaret Livingston under contract to play important roles in forthcoming big specials. Her first assignment was the role of Violet Derring in the motion picture version of "Havoc," which was directed by Rowland V. Lee. She will also have an important part in "The Wheel," one of the John Golden group of clean plays now being filmed at the Fox West Coast Studios.

Pathe Material Provides for All-Comedy Bills

THERE is no question about the audience appeal of all-comedy programs. The public likes to laugh and practice has proved that programs replete with laughs are business-getters.

Pathe reports that all-comedy programs are increasing in vogue and points with particular pride to the recent experiences of two of San Francisco's first-run houses, the Egyptian and the Aztec. Max Graf, managing director of both houses, after presenting his first all-comedy program, wired Pathe as follows:

"It is the first time that an all-comedy week has been tried in this city and our business is beyond expectations."

Harold Lloyd in "Now or Never," was the principal picture of the first bill shown by Graf. The supporting program included such popular short subjects as "Our Gang" in "The Love Bug," the "Spat" Family in "Excuse My Glove," and a Pathe Review. The whole program was booked into the theatres by the Pathe Exchange.

The program was heavily advertised in advance and with a promise of "your money back if you don't laugh." The public responded even better than the management anticipated and the box-office records of the theatres were broken on several occasions.

Another San Francisco house to fall into the all-comedy program line is the Granada. This first-run house played an all-comedy program comprising the Asscoiated Exhibitors' feature comedy "Introduce Me," an "Our Gang" comedy and an Aesop Film Fable. The short-subject comedy offerings were from the Pathe program and the semi-weekly issues of Pathe News completed the bill.

Pathe provides exhibitors with excellent advertising matter on its two-reel comedies. Of very practical value is the trailer issued by the distributing concern for each release which gives the exhibitor opportunity to give his comedy subjects the same type of advance announcement as the feature.

Bruce Fowler, managing director of McVickers Theatre, Chicago, is a big-time exhibitor who has found these trailers worthwhile advertising aids. Just recently Mr. Fowler used the trailer advantageously for Harry Langdon in "Boobs in the Woods." In addition to the special trailer he exploited the Pathe comedian with billing in the "lights" equal to the given the feature-length picture. With the increasing vogue for comedy pictures, exhibitors should find properly exploited all-comedy programs profitable attractions.

Ruby Blaine, who has a featured role in "Headlines," a St. Regis Pictures Production directed by E. H. Griffith. Miss Blaine is now under a two-year contract with St. Regis for featured roles. "Headlines" will be released through Associated Exhibitors.

Plans Rushed for Initial "Winds of Chance" Showing

PLANS are now being rushed by E. A. Eschmann and his associates in First National's distribution department, for the premiere showing of the company's next big special, "Winds of Chance," which Frank Lloyd is personally producing. He has been at work on this production for three or four months, and its early completion is assured.

The production of this Rex Beach story of the gold-rush days to Alaska is particularly timely, following close on the heels of the discovery of gold in Canada where so many gold-seekers are now flocking.

Mr. Lloyd has found a theme, a background and a set of characters entirely to his liking in this Beach novel and has developed an enthusiasm equal to his own or the part of his assistants and his actors. It is being made on a scale of bigness that will bring it direct comparison with "The Sea Hawk," Mr. Lloyd's outstanding production up to date.

The cast is a roster of many of the biggest names in the screen world. Victor McLaglen, who has one of the leading parts, is an exception. He is an English actor comparatively new in this country, but First National was so impressed by his work in "Winds of Chance," that it has placed him under a five-year contract.

Players in the cast whose names are household words to the picturegoers of the world include Ben Lyon, Anna Q. Nilsson, Viola Dana, Hobart Bosworth, Claude Gillingwater, Tully Marshall, John T. Murray and Fred Koehler. Another player who will, it is believed, emerge from this production with a great reputation is Dorothy Sebastian.

Robert Lieber and Richard Rowland, First National executives, bid Colleen Moore and her husband, John McCormick, goodbye on the ship which is taking them to Europe for a two months' vacation.

Buys Right to Stage Play

Louis B. Mayer announces the purchase of the motion picture rights to "Sally, Irene and Mary," the famous musical comedy by Edward Dowling which enjoyed a successful run here at the Biltmore a short time ago. As nearly every large producing company was bidding for this comedy, which is one of the most successful of recent years, its acquisition by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer is considered a distinct triumph.

Macfadden Will Supervise Eight Astor Corp. Pictures

THE 16,400,000 readers of the Macfadden publications will read the announcement in the forthcoming issues of the Macfadden publications that Bernarr Macfadden, head of the publishing house, will supervise a series of eight productions to be made by True Story Film Company, Inc., from stories which will be published as novelettes or as installments in the Macfadden publications.

At the head of True Story Film Company, Inc., is Nathaniel G. Pendleton, who will act in the capacity of general manager. Mr. Pendleton has had practical experience in the work of film production and has a broad knowledge of stories and the magazine-reading public.

All of the eight productions will be released through the Astor Distributing Corporation, of which Harry Rathner is president.

"The preliminary announcement we made in stories in the newspapers, trade papers and in our advertising was not meant to fully cover the ground," said Mr. Rathner in his offices in the Loew State Building.

"We feel that the affiliation between Astor Distributing Corporation and Macfadden publications is one of the most important moves ever made in behalf of independent exhibitors. It should be kept in mind that this alliance represents an advertising tie-up totalling $480,000. I do not know where else it would be possible to reach a reading and motion picture public with such force.

"Independent exhibitors are well aware of the millions of people who read Macfadden publications, but I think it is no more than fair that we should take this opportunity to show the intensity of the campaign through the Macfadden magazines.

"The Macfadden publications are 'Movie Weekly,' 'Radio Stories,' Romances,' 'True Story,' 'True Detective Mysteries,' 'Dream World,' 'Dance Lovers,' 'Modern Marriage,' 'Muscle Builder,' 'Physical Culture,' 'Fiction Lovers,' 'Your Car' and the New York daily tabloid newspaper, the Graphic.

"Titles of the forthcoming 'Gold Medal' productions to be made by True Story Film Company are the following: 'A Rogue's Riches,' 'False Pride,' 'Bad Habits,' 'The Danger Line,' 'The Harem Girl,' 'Wives at Auction,' 'The Wrongdoers' and 'Broken Homes.'

"In addition to these eight from True Story Film Company, Astor will offer to independent exhibitors these productions: 'The Shining Adventure,' from the novel by Dana Burnett, produced by Madeline Brandeis, directed by Hugo Ballin and starring Percy Marmont and Mabel Ballin, with Ben Alexander prominently cast. 'The Lover's Oath,' a Ferdinand Pinney Earle production starring Ramon Novarro, with Kathleen Key playing opposite him. 'The Business of Love,' a Jesse L. Lasky production, starring Edward Everett Horton and with Barbara Bedford playing opposite. Preparations are under way under the supervision of Major Maurice Campbell for the big Astor 'Aristocrat' special, 'Child Wives.'"

Otto Selected to Direct

Henry Otto, director of "Dante's Inferno," has been chosen by Fox Film Corporation to make "The Rhyme of the Ancient Mariner," already in production at the William Fox West Coast Studio.

Bert Lytell is the proverbial "rose between two thorns," when Anita Stewart as Tamea and Justine Johnstone as Maisie both want him as a partner, to Huntly Gordon's amusement in this scene from "Never the Twain Shall Meet," a Cosmopolitan picture distributed by Metro-Goldwyn

Everybody who has ever heard of motion pictures has heard of the mammoth production of "Ben Hur" which Fred Niblo is directing for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, and everybody who has heard about "Ben Hur" knows that Ramon Novarro is playing the title role in the picturization of Lew Wallace's famous novel, and his past successes insure his latest production of equal popularity.

De Mille Buys "Silence"

H. B. Warner Stage Success For Producers Distributing Corporation

"Silence," one of the outstanding dramatic successes of the current theatrical season in New York City, has been secured by Cecil B. De Mille for screen translation and will be produced under the direction of Rupert Julian for release through Producers Distributing Corporation on the coming season's program.

This play is an exceptionally tense subject written by Max Marcin, who has taken extraordinary precautions through the theatrical producer, Crosby Gaige, to protect every dramatic scene in the story by publishing illustrations of the action in magazines and trade journals.

The play was produced in New York this season by Crosby Gaige at the National Theatre with H. B. Warner in the leading role, and next season it will be presented for a run in Chicago while four companies take it on tour. The story deals with a notorious criminal who refuses to marry a girl he loves because he wishes to save her from the shady life he leads.

Stromberg Buys "Shipwrecked"

The motion picture rights to "Shipwrecked," one of the strongest melodramatic successes on the speaking stage in several years, have been purchased by Hunt Stromberg and will be produced by him as a Hunt Stromberg Special to be released by Producers Distributing Corp. sometime during the coming year.

"Shipwrecked" was written by Langdon McCormick, author of "The Storm," and was first produced at the Frazee Theatre on Broadway, New York, where it enjoyed a successful run and attracted wide attention because of its spectacular features.

"The Tower of Lies"

Victor Seastrom is directing Lon Chaney in "The Tower of Lies," for Metro-Goldwyn.

"The Birth of the West," A First National Picture

"THE Birth of the West," an epic of American frontier and Indian fighting days that followed the Civil War, produced in Colorado on a huge scale by Frank J. Carroll, with a cast including more than 4,000 Indians and soldiers, is announced by First National as an important screen release for July.

The theme of "The Birth of the West" is new, as, for the first time in picture history, an Indian is seen as the hero. The reproduction of Custer's last stand is said to be one of the most vivid ever photographed. Another high point in the story is the attack of Indians on Fort Remington. A moon

Some 2,000 Navajos and Utes were permitted by the United States government to appear in the picture, made in Southwestern Colorado, and as many cowboys and soldiers were used to oppose them. Robert Frazer has the leading male role as Cardelanche, the educated son of a Sioux chieftain, who, when he fails to bring enlightenment to his own people, accepts a commission in the army as a captain, acting as a scout under General Kinnard, in command of Fort Remington. The plot revolves around his romance with the general's flirtatious daughter, Miriam, played by Clara Bow.

Other roles of importance are taken by Johnny Walker, who as Lieutenant Parkman, is Miriam's sweetheart; Robert Edeson as General Kinnard; Walter McGrail, Gaston Glass, Helen Ferguson, Ruth Stonehouse, Martha Francis and Florence Crawford.

The picture, made under the direction of John G. Adolfi, required six months of research and was five months in the making.

Grainger Sells Fox Product to the Ike Libson Circuit

THE William Fox product has been booked in the Ike Libson chain of theatres for Cincinnati and Dayton, Ohio, and Louisville, Kentucky, according to a statement made by James R. Grainger, general sales manager of Fox Film Corporation, who has just returned from a three weeks' trip during which he visited Canada, Milwaukee and cities in the Middlewest.

This means that Cincinnati and Dayton will play "The Iron Horse," "The Fool," "Lightnin'," "Havoc," "Lazybones" and all the other big Fox "Supreme Attractions," including the John Golden pictures, during the coming season. Louisville also will play the biggest pictures on the Fox schedule. Fox films has thus assured itself of first-run outlets in the three key cities named.

Coincident with this announcement, Mr. Grainger confirms the fact that Finkelstein & Rubin have booked the Fox product solid for that firm's important chain of theatres in Minneapolis, St. Paul and Duluth. Here are three more vital centers in the Middlewest territory in which Fox has gained first-run outlet for his "Supreme Attractions."

Mrs. Samuel Goldwyn, formerly Frances Howard, remembered for her splendid work in Paramount's "The Swan," has been released from her contract with Famous Players. She will settle down to home life in Hollywood.

Leatrice Joy in Culver City

Ready to Begin Work in Productions Under Supervision of Cecil B. De Mille

Immediately following the completion of "The Dressmaker From Paris," her last Famous-Players Lasky starring vehicle, Leatrice Joy supervised the dismantling of her commodious dressing and lounging rooms on the Lasky lot, and the removal of her effects to Culver City, where she began at once with preparations for the forthcoming productions in which she will be starred under the direct supervision of Cecil B. De Mille.

Regarding her leaving the Famous-Players organization, Miss Joy said: "I have nothing but the most kindly feeling for those for and with whom I worked, and the genial and whole-hearted co-operation I always enjoyed in my work will linger long in my memory as one of the most pleasant associations I have ever enjoyed.

"Under these conditions, 'parting is a sweet sorrow,' for I will always be in close contact with my former co-workers, and under the guidance of Mr. De Mille, to whom I attribute my present success, I hope to rise to greater heights than might be achieved with any other producer. He knows the public's taste and recognizes box-office values, and has given me as my first vehicle 'Hell's Highroad,' which is now in production."

Ann Pennington Signed

To Appear With Julian Eltinge in Christie Feature

Dainty little Ann Pennington, famous Broadway stage star and one of the brightest lights of the Ziegfeld Follies, has affixed her signature to a contract with Al Christie to appear with Julian Eltinge in a big Al Christie feature that will be released through Producers Distributing Corporation following "Seven Days."

This gives the Christie's two of the biggest names in the entire world of amusements in addition to the merits of the picture itself which, by presenting Julian Eltinge in skirts, will be an attraction that may parallel their present great success, "Charley's Aunt."

Fred Thomson in scenes in "The Bandit's Baby," an F. B. O. production.

Schulberg to Supervise Filming of Three Next Season's Releases

B. P. SCHULBERG will return to California this week to begin the supervision of the first three pictures to be released on the 1925-1926 program of B. P. Schulberg productions. Mr. Schulberg came East a fortnight ago to confer with J. G. Bachmann, general manager of distribution, and to be present at the Milwaukee Convention of the M. P. T. O. A.

While in New York he laid definite plans for the filming of the eighteen Schulberg productions for the coming year, and completed a production and release schedule. Immediately upon his arrival in Hollywood, camera work will get under way on the first three releases for the fall. These will be "The Girl Who Wouldn't Work," "Parisian Love" and "With This Ring."

"The Girl Who Wouldn't Work" is from the pen of Gertie D. Wentworth James. It created a stir among the reading public in England when published there last year. It is soon to be issued here under the trademark of a prominent American publishing house.

"With This Ring" is a Saturday Evening Post serial, now published in book form by Dodd, Meade and already boasting of large sales. Its author, Fanny Heaslip Lea, has many literary successes to her credit.

"Parisian Love" by F. Oakley Crawford, is said to be a fast and colorful melodrama.

The other properties that will reach the screen next season as Schulberg releases are: "Shenandoah," the great American play; "The Plastic Age," by Percy Marks; "Horses and Woman," "Dancing Days," by J. J. Bell; "Lew Tyler's Wives," by Wallace Irwin; "Exclusive Rights," by Evelyn Campbell; "Shameful Behavior," by Mrs. Belloc Lowndes; "The Aristocrat," and "The Worst Woman," both by Larry Evans; "Shopworn," by Patricia Wetherill; "Eden's Fruits," "The Other Woman's Story," by Peggy Gaddis; "Studies in Wives," by Mrs. Belloc Lowndes, and "When A Woman Reaches Forty," by Royal A. Baker.

Percy Marks in New York

Percy Marks, author of "The plastic Age," was a visitor this week to the New York office of B. P. Schulberg Productions, the company which will bring his famous novel to the screen next year. Mr. Marks is spending a brief vacation in the East on a leave of absence from the University of California where he is a member of the faculty.

Novarro Comes East

Ramon Novarro is headed for New York to start work on "True Blue," which Christy Cabanne will direct.

"Play Ball"

Patheserial Unit Using Long Island Studio for Interiors

Interiors for the Patheserial "Play Ball," now in production under the direction of Spencer Bennett, are being staged at the Long Island Studio, formerly known as the Pyramid, at Astoria. F. W. Seitz is studio manager for the Pathe unit.

The leading roles in this baseball story, written by John J. McGraw, manager of the New York Giants, are Allene Ray and Walter Miller. Supporting players include J. Barney Sherry, Harry Semels, "Wally" Oetel, Mary Milner, and many baseball players and celebrities.

The fourth chapter of this ten episode Patheserial is at present in the making. Although "Play Ball" is essentially a baseball story the action is not limited to scenes on the diamond, even underwater scenes being called for in the scenario prepared by Frank Leon Smith.

Loew Circuit Books Educationals

What is undoubtedly the largest booking ever made for sort subjects by one exchange was recently consummated between the New York branch of Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., and the Loew circuit.

This huge booking covering booking dates on seven Educational subjects, covers a total of 576 days, of which 425 are in the month of May.

This booking, both in number of play dates contained and the gross amount of the contract constitutes what is without doubt a record in Short Subject history.

Scenes from Chadwick's "A Man of Iron," starring Lionel Barry more supported by Mildred Harris. The production was directed by Whitman Bennett.

$1 for Your Time

Many exhibitors tell us that Moving Picture World Guide to Releases is the most accurate available to them. We know it is the most complete in that it is the only chart containing names of stars, type of picture, and all necessary information to the exhibitor.

We want it to be absolutely accurate—Moving Picture World recognizes the importance of accurate footage information, etc.

If you notice an error in FEATURE footage, or any other major error, we will pay you $1 for the effort on your part of writing us a letter telling us the correct facts.

In many territories local censorship cuts alter the footage to a minor extent. Don't write to tell us of these unimportant variations. But in any case where you feel that our figures will work a real hardship on the exhibitor following them—shoot us the word and we will shoot the dollar for your trouble.

Moving Picture World is willing to back up its complete confidence in the accuracy of its chart with its money.

We can't do more. No one else does as much. We thank you.

PROJECTION

EDITED BY F. H. RICHARDSON

Thomas A. Edison

Recently I had some matters I desired to consult Thomas A. Edison upon. Upon one or two occasions I have made an attempt to see men who think themselves Moguls in the film industry, usually to find the task of seeing King George would probably be about as simple. Their "Secretary" looks upon one with a cold, fishy eye, and demands to know all about what you presume to have the temerity to hope to present to the consideration of Mr. Very High Andmighty, and unless you tell him, her or it all about it, down to the most minute detail, the only way you will "see" the gentleman will be to deliberately waylay him on the street, or blast your way through the wall of his office with TNT. All of which, by the way, is idiotic, because it not only places every one at the absolute mercy of this whippersnapper of a "Secretary," but also places the Big Boss at his or her mercy, because the applicant does not and cannot know whether or not he or she has placed the matter before Mr. Big Man correctly or not, NOR CAN HIS OR HER EMPLOYER KNOW IT EITHER.

For this reason I've stopped bothering trying to place anything at all before these alleged "big men."

Thomas A. Edison, however, is a really BIG man, therefore not at all hard to approach, always provided a man has any claims to reputation or standing at all. Mr. Edison had but just returned from Florida the day before, and was to go to Boston the day following to attend the wedding of his son, yet when I phoned asking for an interview, Mr. Meadowcroft, his Secretary—a man of years and discretion—promptly informed Mr. Edison that I wanted to see him, and in less than three minutes the matter had been arranged, with the warning that he, Mr. Edison, could give me but a brief time, due to the many things he had to do.

I mention all this as illustrative of the foolish procedure of many men in this industry who apparently imagine they gain something by making themselves to all intents and purposes unapproachable. THE REALLY BIG MAN IS NEVER UNAPPROACHABLE. Abraham Lincoln was not, and it was one of his marks of real greatness. Of course it is true that busy men cannot be constantly bothered with, or intruded upon by every Tom, Dick and Harry. That is common sense, BUT let me add that this "very busy" racket is rather sadly overworked. The Big Man seldom is a bit more busy than you or I, and very often even not nearly so busy.

Mr. Edison seems hale and hearty, though his always poor hearing has failed sadly since last I met him. But his mind is as keen and sharp as ever, and I hope and believe he is to be spared to us for still many years. It is a matter of deep regret to him that the great fire at his laboratories a few years ago destroyed his first original camera. I was able to present to him, on behalf of the Nicholas Power Company, some photographs of various models of Edison projectors, some of which also were wiped out in the fire.

Bluebook School

Question No. 291—Tell us, in your own words, how work is accomplished by electricity.

Question No. 292—In electrical calculations, what do the letters E, C, and R stand for?

Question No. 293—For what reasons is it not only advisable and desirable but also necessary that a projectionist understand electrical wiring, and the problems connected therewith?

Question No. 294—What is a "Mil"? A "Circular Mil"?

Question No. 295—Explain what is meant by a "degree" as applied to a circle.

Interesting Letter

From Roy H. Saxon, Projectionist Palace Theatre, San Benito, Texas, comes a letter which seems to me to be very interesting. It is no easy matter to edit a department from week to week, and make and KEEP it interesting. If I stick to dry-as-dust technical matters, then soon only a few enthusiasts would read it, and usually they are the very ones who really need to read a department of that kind least.

I must therefore try to leaven the serious matter with things which are not of much technical value, but are interesting reading. It is thus that I have managed to hold the interest for all these years, where many others who have tried the same thing in other papers invariably have failed. Apparently I waste a lot of space thus, but in fact it is not wasted at all, or at least I don't think it is. It is the "human interest" side of matters, without which we would have few readers, and a department without readers is ALL wasted space.

Brother Saxon says:

Dear Brother Richardson: Although I've been reading your department for a long while, I have not written to it. This was for the simple reason that I have never yet been able to complete a letter which suited me when it was finished, though I've written a lot of them. So now I'll try again.

I started my "career" as an operator—yes, as "Operator," for in those days (1912) there were few real motion picture projectionists. In that year I was dispensing carbonated water (soda) at five cents per dispense, in return for the truly munificent wage of nine great, big whole dollars per each seven days.

"Position" Vacant

It so happened that in the town there was a theatre which employed a boy to rewind, post bills, ship films, etcetera—and the "etcetera" was in itself quite some considerable job. This "position" became vacant. I applied for it, got it, and by so doing sawed six of those unnecessary nine dollars off my weekly stipend, for I started in the theatre at three dollars per WEEK, which proves how badly I wanted to become a motion picture projectionist. Further proof is found in the fact that I stuck at that three-dollar-a-week job for one and one-half years. Gosh!

You will remember when you made a trip into this country. You visited that theatre, which had a real projectionist. When you came into the projection room I was changing reels, for I had studied hard and had then reached the dizzy heights where I was entrusted with threading up.

In the next issue of the Moving Picture World my name appeared beside that of the projectionist, in great, big black letters! Proud? Huh! My vest buttons nearly all popped off under the strain.

Competent at Last

Finally I was pronounced competent, and secured a small theatre job in a small town, and at last was a full fledged projectionist, but a year after that the call for volunteers came, and of course I went. Navy. U. S. S. Powhattan for mine, and I helped carry three thousand of the boys across the Big Pond, whence some of the poor chaps did not return. They sleep in a foreign land, but their slumbers are no less peaceful, for they died for humanity and their country.

It was necessary to supply the men with some form of entertainment, so we stocked up with a Power Six A, two DeVry projectors and a supply of film to last a month. I had charge of it and, believe me, it was great sport.

Well, the Kaiser got the tar licked out of him, and we called it a day and came back home, so that was that, and I'll get back to everyday today affairs.

Studies Bluebook School

I study the Bluebook School questions, write out what I believe to be the correct answers and then look in the Bluebook to see how nearly right I am. Sometimes I make a bull's eye, but more often it's "not so good," but (and this is the answer to the value of the Bluebook School) when I've looked it up and found out where I'm wrong the thing is fixed in my memory so firmly that I never forget it.

I note that some machine operators still persist in mutilating film, by punching or otherwise. This brings to mind the old colored couple who had witnessed the screening of a Civil War battle scene upon which some machine attendant had exercised his punch. Walking home the wife said to her husband: "Sam, you reckons all dat fit'in was done just laik we saw them so'jers doin' it in dat theatre?" To which Sam promptly replied: "So'se it was, honey. Co'se it was! Did'n you see all dem bullet holes in th' pitcher?"

I firmly believe that the great majority of projectionists and machine attendants (operators) enjoy reading an occasional letter which tells of the trials some of the men have passed through. Even the city men must, I think, like to know of the small-town man and his views. I would like to know if I am right or wrong in supposing you welcome the occasional publication of this sort of a letter, which has no technical value whatsoever, but is just "good reading." Remember, I always have ten times enough matter to fill the department, and as a rule can print any sort of matter you want. What I want to know is just what you DO want. Give me your views, please.

Unnecessary

The editor is more or less constantly subjected to what seems the rather unnecessary trouble, annoyance and expense of replying to questions concerning strictly union matters. These inquiries frequently come from members of local unions, who propound queries concerning matters neither myself nor this department have anything whatsoever to do with, which I cannot possibly know very much about, and which cannot, in the very nature of things, be replied to in this department. Very often these inquiries have to do with some injustice, real or fancied, inflicted by a local union upon the individual member. The inquirer seldom even bothers to send return postage.

This department is primarily designed to help projection, and the men engaged therein. It is willing to do anything possible to accomplish that purpose, BUT with the quarrels of the individual member with his own local union, neither myself nor the department I edit have either the right or the desire to meddle in any degree.

Address Officers

Such inquiries should be addressed to one of the International officers, usually the Vice-President located nearest to you. I hand you herewith a complete list, copied from the last I. A. Official Bulletin, which same is sent by the I. A. to every local union once every month. You have a perfect right to demand from your union officers the address of any international officer, though if for any reason asking for it seems inadvisable, this department will supply you with it at any time, upon request. The address of the President, Assistant President, Secretary and Manager Claim Department are Suite 701, West 40th Street, New York City.

Officers—WILLIAM F. CANAVAN, President; RICHARD J. GREEN, General Secretary-Treasurer; HARRY L. SPENCER, Assistant President; WILLIAM D. LANG, Manager, Adjustment and Claim Departments; FRED J. DEMPSEY, First Vice-President, Room 1, 276 Tremont St., Boston, Mass.; WILLIAM COVERT, Second Vice-President, 257 Brock Ave., Toronto, Ont., Canada; WILLIAM ELLIOTT, Third Vice-President, P. O. Box 811, Cincinnati, Ohio; H. GUY CULVER, Fourth Vice-President, 18 East Park Place, Oklahoma City, Okla.; CLEVE BECK, Fifth Vice-President, 970 Thorne Ave., Fresno, Cal.; GEORGE E. BROWNE, Sixth Vice-President, Room 309, 208 North Wells St., Chicago, Ill.; JOHN P. NICK, Seventh Vice-President, 1000 North Grand Ave., St. Louis, Mo

Small Town a Problem

I will of course reply to the questions of small town non-member projectionists concerning union matters, because these men very frequently are non-members very largely, or entirely, through the fault of the local union itself. I make this statement because many unions located in cities "cover" territory in which from one to a dozen small towns and villages are located, each one of which has one or more little theatres. It is an indisputable fact, however, that many such unions not only make absolutely no effort to get these small town men into the union, though they work under its jurisdiction and may be very competent projectionists, but actually refuse point blank to accept them into membership.

As one who was active in the labor movement for more than twenty years, I fully understand that the admission of the small town man presents a real problem, and one fraught with the germs of very lively trouble, hence I hold that we must not judge harshly, but rather discuss the problem from the standpoint of seeking the greatest possible good for the gretaest possible number—for the exhibitor, for the motion picture industry and for the public, as well as for the union and the individual.

Four Parties Interested

That this department may properly discuss such questions I do hold, because there are FOUR parties vitally interested in such matters, viz: First, the motion picture projectionist and moving picture machine operator; second, the motion picture industry, which much perforce depend largely upon the competency of the men to display its wares to the public for its popularity and success; third, the exhibitor, who very often has a changes CAN clean up the abuse of film at any time they really want to and will proceed along sensible lines. The thing is simplicity itself. Thoroughly inspect every reel of film, make ALL necessary repairs and CHARGE ALL UNNECESSARY DAMAGE TO THE THEATRE. Believe me, about the second or third bill Mr. Theatre Manager gets for punch marks, perhaps with the suggestion that the damage be collected from the man who did it, PUNCHING WILL STOP AND STOP RIGHT THEN AND THERE! Of course that applies to other forms of mutilation, such as scratch marks, stickers, etc.

But the thing to remember is that when any union officially endorses a thing which makes a certain, specific declaration, such as that label does, the union itself becomes measurably or directly responsible for the declaration being rigidly lived up to, and for any damage resulting through failure to live up to it. That, I think yourself, John, and every one of your members will agree with me as being pretty close to a self-evident fact.

Loose Cue Sheet

Projectionist C. H. Watkins, Delft Theatre, Escanaba, Michigan, says:

Dear Friend Richardson—I cannot agree with Projectionist Hile, April 25 issue, as to placing of the cue sheet in the container. I make a change-over cue sheet, in duplicate, and place one beside the observation port of each projector, together with my running time sheet.

As to removing punch marks, stickers, etc., I have many times thought I was the only one who did that. I was led to that conclusion by the looks of most of the films I get, and have seen projected in other theatres. In Omaha, Nebraska, in Kansas City, Missouri, and even in Chicago, the second city in the land, I have seen them hit the screens in streaks. I guess, however, that I'm not the only one after all, and I think Brother Hile's idea is a very, very good one, if projectionists will take it up and GET ON THE JOB consistently and persistently.

Des Moines

The Des Moines, Iowa, exchanges are really taking all punch marks, scratch marks and stickers out of their film, or were last Fall when I was working in Iowa, notifying the theatre manager by means of a label inclosed with the shipment of that fact, and that he would be charged up with any and all film punched or unnecessarily injured thereafter. The label was signed by the Des Moines Film Board of Trade and endorsed by the Des Moines Projectionists' local union. It certainly is helping conditions in Iowa. Some such stunt wouldn't hurt the Milwaukee and Minneapolis exchanges.

It is simply and EXACTLY what this department has been advocating for the past EIGHT YEARS, as may be proven by an examination of our columns. I have times almost without number, told exchanges that the punch artist could be squelched if they would remove all marks, inspect their films carefully each time and CHARGE THE THEATRE WITH ALL FILM DAMAGED UNNECESSARILY.

What I have objected to was a union endorsing the statement that the films in a shipment are in "perfect condition," when it is in no position to know that they are—that the exchanges are actually putting the films in "perfect condition," which is, unless my memory is at fault, the way the label in question reads.

Denounced Label

I have denounced that label, yes, but wholly and entirely on account of its disregard of correct nomenclature, and because it was endorsed by unions which could not possibly, by even the most wild stretch of imagination, be presumed to know whether or not the films sent out under their endorsement were in the condition the label declared them to be in.

If an exchange sends with the films a statement declaring them to be in "perfect condition," the projectionist, ESPECIALLY IF HE KNOWS THAT STATEMENT TO HAVE THE ENDORSEMENT OF THE UNION, has the RIGHT to assume them to be in exactly that condition. If the label sent only declared that all scratch, punch and other change-over signal marks have been removed, then no very serious wrong would be done in any event, because even though they be not all removed, no trouble other than a marring of the show can result.

To say the films are in perfect condition, however, when there are loose splices, ripped sprocket holes etcetra, is VERY BAD INDEED, because the projectionist who, with perfect right to do so, assumes the statement of the exchange to be correct, proceeds to project them, may be confronted with one or more stoppages of the show, or even with a serious film fire.

That part of Brother Hile's proposal approved by friend Watkins, had to do with each projectionist making a cue sheet for each show, sending it forward with the films, thus not only instructing the other men in the use of a cue sheet, but teaching them how to make one.

From Maine

Chester Johnstone, Projectionist Leavitt Theatre, Sanford, Maine, has the following to say:

Dear Mr. Richardson: In April 11 issue there is part of a letter from Jesse Lawrence, Projectionist, Lake Placid, New York, in which he says he "Can't understand why any projectionist should need a change-over cue sheet." He then goes on to say that he uses wire reels, and can see just how much film is on the upper reel at all times.

The argument of friend Lawrence is to me just plain absurd. After reading it I proceeded to measure the trailers on the show we were using at the time, and found they varied from thirteen inches to eleven feet, eight inches in length.

Will Lawrence or any one else tell me how he is to know whether the last ten or twelve feet of film on the reel is trailer, or film containing action of real importance to the play plot which if omitted would mar the entertainment value of the production?

Not Convinced

I have yet to hear any argument which has convinced me that there is any change over signal available to the projectionist (certainly no projectionist will even think of using a punch, scratching holes in the emulsion or using stickers) as reliable as a properly made cue sheet, and the best one is the one he himself makes.

A cue sheet sent out by the exchange might be all right until some projectionist using 2,000 foot reels joined two 1,000 footers, and then cut them apart again in the wrong place, whereupon Mr. Exchange cue sheet goes completely flooey.

The devices which register on a dial the amount of film remaining are only fairly accurate in any event, and when one gets a reel with a hub of different diameter—well that's that, though it is true that reel hubs are mostly one diameter now-a-days. However, one comes now and then which varies, and for my part I prefer a thing I can depend upon at ALL times, which is a record (cue sheet) of the last scene of each reel and particularly the action in the last ten or fifteen frames.

Fourteenth Year

I am in my fourteenth year in projection and in that time have tried many change-over signals, and now it is going to take something mighty darned good to make me switch from my own home brewed cue sheet.

Have been a reader of our department for many years and am one of the many who are grateful to you for your untiring efforts in the cause of motion picture projection.

Brother Johnstone puts up a good and consistent argument, though I did not suppose there was any appreciable variation in reel hub diameters these days. I believe, with him, that the man who has his heart in his work, and is a really efficient man will prefer to make his own cue sheet, with this proviso: the man who has daily change of programme, and who works by himself—which is the case in many small town theatres—has his hands fairly full, and it is a fact that a device such as I described and illustrated for you a short while ago can be made to give fairly accurate results. It also has the advantage that its action is positive, and it is pretty hard to make any mistake when using it.

How Come, Duluth?

G. W. Bennewitz, Sioux Falls, South Dakota, in a personal letter says:

By the way, F. H., I wonder what has happened to that used-to-be live bunch of projectionists up in Duluth, Minnesota? Whassa malla with the Duluth boys? Their city is on the shores of Lake Superior—so is Port Arthur, Canada! I w-o-n-d-e-r!!!!???

Well, G. W., of course I haven't been there lately, and the silence from the general direction of Duluth is some silence, all right, but all the same I'll bet it isn't because of Port Arthur and its ruddy colored liquid. Duluth might confirm my faith, however.

Question No. 261—Explain what is meant by "polarity."

Hans Dobson, Toronto, Ontario; H. C. Funston, Waco, Texas; Walter Johnson, Champaign, Illinois; Chas. Armentrout, Mason City, Iowa; C. H. Hanover, Burlington, Iowa; S. F. Cooley, Manchester, New Hampshire; G. W. Bennewitz, Sioux City, North Dakota; Wm. A. Burnett, Newton, Iowa; F. H. Moore, Taunton, Massachusetts; W. C. Budge, Garden City, Long Island; Glenn G. Wallace, Muskegon, Michigan; W. C. Whitt, Red Bluff, California; H. E. Hurlbutt, Oshkosh, Wisconsin, and A. L. Fell, Collingswood, New Jersey (whose answer was received late), all gave evidence of at least a fair understanding of polarity, though some of the boys experienced difficulty in expressing their views, as I could see.

I think Hanover has what is perhaps the most clear explanation. He says:

Polarity is electrical pressure, exactly in the same way, insofar as effect be concerned, as the pressure in a steam boiler, a gas main, a water pipe or in a hydraulic jack.

Place water, gas or steam under pressure, and it seeks to resume the normal, expanded condition it is in when unconfined. In the endeavor to expand itself, and thus loose pressure, steam will shove a piston ahead of it and thus perform work. Water will do the same thing, though in it very little expansion is involved.

When electricity is "pumped" into electrical conductors by a generator, it is put in a condition which to all appearances is exactly similar to steam, water or gas under pressure in a pipe. Steam, water or gas seeks to escape into the open air, for thus it looses its pressure. Electricity apparently seeks to escape from one wire to another, because in so doing it looses its electrical pressure.

So far as science knows, positive electricity is under tension or pressure, and seeks to become negative, which apparently corresponds to the open air condition of water, gas or steam. Steam, gas or water will, as has been said, perform work in its effort to escape pressure. Electricity will also perform work in what seems to be its effort to escape from positive to negative.

You doubtless have noted that I have used the term "seems" liberally. This I did because as yet even the greatest scientists cannot agree among themselves as to exactly what does take place as between positive and negative in electricity, so who am I that I should say that current "flows from positive to negative," or vice versa?

Polarity is the thing we call positive and negative. It represents the difference, whatever it may be, as between the conditions existing on positive and negative electrical conductors. It is or represents the thing we call electrical pressure. It, is the opposite poles of an electrical generator. It is "positive" and "negative," and whatever capacity for work there is between them.

I was going to publish several replies, but after all I don't see that very much could be added to that answer, so I guess we'll just call it a day and pass on to—

Question No. 262—Explain the difference between a volt and an ampere.

Walter Johnson does very well on this one. He says:

Under the streets of our city are pipes which bring water to us. The water we use is measured, in gallons, by means of a meter. We must pay in proportion to the number of gallons we use. This is quantity. In electricity we also use quantity, or what is presumed to be quantity, which is measured in amperes. The ampere therefore represents electrical quantity, or volume of flow.

Reverting to our water pipe, if there were not some force behind the water no water would flow from our hydrant, hence we could not get quantity. This force we call pressure. It is measured in pounds.

The same thing is true of electricity. There must be pressure in order to have any action at all. This pressure we measure in volts, hence the volt represents electrical pressure.

Burnett says:

Electric current is usually said to have both pressure and volume. Its action as relates to those two attributes, as well as regards the matter of friction, is very similar to that of water, or gas under pressure, but this similarity exists only insofar as has to do with its action.

Voltage corresponds to pounds pressure in a water pipe or in a steam boiler. Amperage is the term used to denote quantity or volume of flow, just as gallons represents the flow of water, or cubic inches the volume of steam flowing.

Bennewitz says:

Amperes relates to the rate at which electricity is flowing while volts refer to the push or pressure that causes the electricity to flow. In both hydraulic and electric circuits there may be great pressure or voltage and yet no flow of current. Where flow of water is prevented by a closed valve, the pump is maintaining a high hydraulic pressure and yet there can be no flow or current so long as the valve is closed. Likewise, in the electric circuit, although the dynamo or generator is maintaining a high electrical pressure (voltage) there can be no flow of current so long as the switch is open.

Voltage or electrical pressure can never of itself accomplish anything electrical, that is voltage can not, unaided, make a lamp burn or a motor turn. Current (amperes) is always necessary to effect electrical results (the current makes the lamp burn and the motor turn). However, a voltage or difference of potential is always required for the production of a current. Hence the first step towards effecting any electrical accomplishment is the production of a voltage. Then the voltage will cause a current to flow and the current will produce the result.

Whitt says:

The volt is the unit of electrical pressure. The ampere is the unit of electrical volume or flow. One volt is the amount of electrical pressure required to force one ampere against or through one ohm resistance, hence one ampere is the amount of current one volt of electrical pressure will force against or through one ohm resistance.

Amperes flowing is analogous to water flowing through a pipe under pressure. It corresponds to a given amount or volume of water flowing past a given point, regardless of pressure. Voltage in an electric circuit corresponds exactly to, or bears the same relation to the volume, flow (amperage) in that circuit that the pressure in the water pipe bears to the flow. Hence, the greater the pressure the greater the volume flow through an opening of given "size" in either electric or water circuit.

Question No. 263—Explain how power is stored up, using steam, a spring and electricity as samples.

Armentrout says:

We convert power of one sort into power of another. For example, we build a fire under a boiler containing water, thus converting heat energy into steam, or pressure energy. As steam, or pressure is formed by the action of the fire, power is stored up.

By connecting one sort of power, as steam or water pressure, to an electric generator we cause that power to be transformed into electrical energy, or power. Electric power manifests itself by attraction and repulsion by lighting and heating effects and by chemical changes. The amount of power stored up in electric form will depend upon the amount of energy of another form used.

There are several errors in this reply. I have used it merely to show how careful one must be to analyze matters closely in making reply to questions. For instance, Brother Armentrout says "The amount of power stored up in electrical form will depend upon the amount of energy of another form used."

This is far from correct. It should read this way: The amount of power stored up in electrical form will depend upon the amount of energy of another form used, LESS THE AMOUNT OF LOSS INVOLVED IN APPLYING THE PRIMARY POWER.

Do you see, Brother Armentrout? Power is seldom or never applied without waste, and very often the waste is close to half the applied power. Consider yourself slapped on the wrist and be more careful, dang you!

Hanover says:

Pressure means power applied and often that power may be re-applied and thus made use of. When a spring is compressed it is placed in a state of tension. It seeks to resume its normal form and will apply all or very nearly all the pressure exerted to compress it in resuming its original form.

Steam, on the other hand, represents power when under pressure, but there is no known form of utilizing the power thus stored without considerable loss, mostly through friction. It must be applied to work through the medium of an engine, and engines all have heavy internal friction.

Electricity under pressure represents stored up power, just as steam does. It must be applied to work by means of machinery, and this machinery has both magnetic and frictional losses, hence the stored up power can be only partially made available for useful purposes.

Which is excellent, but not to the point.

Here is what I would myself consider the correct answer to the question, if you will forgive my butting in. Every one seems to have jumped to the conclusion that the question asks how the power stored is used.

When a spring is compressed or stretched (coil spring) or bent, power is stored up, because the spring will exert power in the attempt to resume its normal shape.

When a boiler which is steam tight is partially filled with water and a fire maintained under it until the water reaches the point of evaporation by heat, a portion of it is changed by the heat into steam, which really is a gas. Steam has many times the volume of water, hence, since it cannot escape, pressure is formed in the boiler because what it then contains has many times the volume, of water, hence, since it cannot escape, pressure is formed in the boiler because what it then contains has many times the volume, or would at atmospheric pressure have many times the volume the water and air contained in it before heat was applied would have. The steam is therefore compressed, and thus power is stored up in that boiler.

When we consider electricity we do not know exactly what does take place, as to "compression," but we do know that when a generator is operated there is power stored up in it and in the circuits attached to it, presumably primarilly in the positive pole. This is accomplished by causing electric conductors to cut across magnetic lines of force in a certain way, the said conductors being contained, for mechanical reasons, on a rotating armature.

Question No. 264—Can you see or feel electricity? Explain your answer.

Bennewitz says:

We cannot see or feel electricity. What we see when we look at an "electric light" is not electricity, but the incandescence of a filament heated by electrical friction as the current passes through. When we rereceive an electric shock we do not feel the electricity, but the friction caused by its passage through the flesh.

Whitt says:

We cannot see or feel electricity, though we may see the effects of current as in light and power, or may feel its effect in heat. The effect of current passing through the body may be felt in the form of a shock, which will vary with the EMF applied. We do not actually feel the current, however.

That is, I think correct, still it occurs to me that maybe we might say we do feel the current when we are shocked. To say we don't (as I have always myself said) perhaps is cutting rather fine corners. What do YOU think about it?

Every one else said about the same thing brothers Whitt and Bennewitz said, so that's that.

Question No. 265—Has the positive or negative wire of a generator or battery any affinity for anything else except a conductor of opposite polarity attached to the same generator or battery?

Funston says:

The positive or negative wires of a generator have no affinity for anything except the conductors which form a part of the same generator circuit.

Whitt says: "No."

There was one catch in this one, which only Cooley caught. He says:

No, EXCEPT in cases where two or more batteries or generators are so connected that they, in effect, form one power source, though they may either be used to all intents and purposes separately.

Error: Take it all back. Bennewitz, also caught that point.

Weleetka, Okla.

From J. L. Greenwood, Manager Orpheum Theatre, Weleetka, Oklahoma, comes this in-

As the manager, projectionist, advertising man, bill poster and general utility man of the Orpheum Theatre in this little town, I am an interested reader of the Projection Department of the "World."

I was especially interested in Question No. 231 of the Bluebook School, and the answers thereto. The question was "Name the various causes of 'rain' in film." The answers appeared on page 726, April 18 issue. In a nut shell they all said "dirt and grit." If there is no dirt or grit, and if the projectors be in reasonably good condition, then there would be no "rain."

In some of the answers mention was made, in a general way only, of the reasons for the film being dirty. One cause, which I believe is the greatest and the most overlooked of all is a dirty rewind table, BOTH in the exchange and in the theatre projection room. Eternal vigilance is the price of safety, and if the table tops be not kept scrupulously clean, millions of particles of dirt and grit will accumulate on them and the vibration and air currents set up by the process of rapid rewinding will cause them to rise and be carried in between the layers of film in the roll.

I have been in theatre projection rooms where there was no evidence of a broom, and a dust cloth or wiping rag seemed to be totally unknown.

RAINY FILM IS A JOY KILLER, AND THE REAL BUGBEAR OF THE LATE RUN EXHIBITOR. I am getting off the subject, you will say, but I feel I have some justification in so doing, because of the extreme importance of the matter to millions of small town people who have to submit to greatly lowered amusement value because of the unnecessarily great amount of dirt-filled scratches in the film called "rain."

I would also like to speak of the question propounded as to the causes of film damage. If I rightly remember, one of the answers was, in general terms, to the effect that much of it was due to CARELESS HANDLING AT THE EXCHANGES. Brothers, of what does this careless handling consist? Here is one example: A few days ago in a shipment received from a big distributor, one reel was in especially bad condition. It was wound on one of those cheap "tin" reels, which was bent and warped something like three quarters of an inch, so that the film zig-zagged from one side to the other in rewinding, causing the film roll sides to uneven, some of the film layers sticking way out beyond others. This reel came in a shipping case with six or seven heavy reels on top of it, and of course these layers were buckled and broken along the sprocket holes.

I had to waste a lot of valuable time inspecting and repairing this wreck, cutting a lot of action out of the picture. A piece of the cut-out is attached hereto so that you may see just what happened.

Why in the name of the very most common sense does the distributor, who we have a right to presume has at least some brains, continue to ship valuable film on reels which the Woolworth stores probably would refuse to handle because they would not appeal to them, as sensible business people, as being good value for a dime? Why expend thousands or hundreds of thousands of dollars on a production and then suddenly get something worse than ridiculously cheap when the time comes to sell it to the public—even the small town public?

Good Stuff!

Good stuff, friend Greenwood! Right you are. It is pure business imbecility to place valuable film on weak, flimsy reels which cannot and do not protect them even half way adequately.

The damage done in shipment through the combination you describe is NOT confined to the small town shipments, and the queer part is that many appeals have reached this editor from exhibitors who have been faced with a heavy charge for damage done to films in exactly the way you have set forth. The exchange had the GAUL to pile a lot of reels of film wound on the well known "tin" reels on top of each other in a shipping case, sending them out under conditions where any one with a good grade of putty brains would know that serious damage would probably result and then when the damage occurred, try to collect from the exhibitor. That is what I call pure NERVE.

The comments of friend Greenwood on dirt and rain are all right, as far as they go, BUT dirty rewinder table tops, while in themselves bad, are by no manner of means the only source of dirt, much of which is in the air itself, especially when there is a poorly made cement floor in the projection room or exchange.

Well, anyhow, such letters are excellent, since they are interesting and cause men to think, whether they may altogether agree with the writer or not, and the small town projectionist or exhibitor is just exactly as welcome to the pages of this department as his city brothers. He may or may not be as advanced in knowledge as the city man, but what he may lack in that he makes up in numbers, and the small town men entertain MILLIONS of people, in the aggregate, every day of the year, hence while his little theatre may be small, it nevertheless is of very real importance. Make no mistake about that!

An Old Timer

J. H. Griffin, Assistant Manager, Glory B and Grand Theatres, Miami, Oklahoma, hands us a laugh and the following:

Friend Richardson: Have been in the projection room ever since Thomas A. Edison made his one-pin projector mechanism, and the General Film Company told us what we could and what we could not run. Was in the motion picture division in France during the late argument with the chap who started out to be King of the World. Since leaving the army I have been in charge of the Glory B and the Grand theatres in this city.

I have a copy of every edition of your Handbook and have been a close student of the Bluebook School. Thought I knew the motion picture game fairly well, but attached hereto is a bit of paper I tore from the lid of a film can today which has me guessing. Just wondered if you could tell me what kind of an animal a "Chief Projestice" is, and what his, her or its duties in or around a theatre may happen to be. Oh, well, it would be a sad world if we did not get a laugh handed to us once in a while.

"Chief Projestice"

The paper is a printed label bearing these words: "Carl ————, Chief Projestice Cozy Theatre, ————, Oklahoma." I leave the name of the town blank because I don't wish to subject the good brother to ridicule. He has a perfect right to style himself that if he wants to, but I think he will find many who, like Brother Griffin, will want to know the exact nature of his job. To me it merely spells a laugh, and anyhow a laugh is always good—in fact one of the very most valuable things we get out of life.

While what Griffin said was meant all right, still I think there was quite a bundle of years between the time when Edison changed his projector to a one pin movement, and when the General Film came on the scene—three or four anyhow. It really is not so easy to remember the exact dates, but I think the Edison one-pin appeared about 1906 or 1907, and the General Film came on the scene about 1909 or 1910. That is my recollection anyhow, though maybe I'm wrong at that, and I have nothing at hand with which to verify the dates.

What Do You Think?

At the Club Rooms of the American Projection Society today I loafed on the job a bit, and as usual, got into an argument, in which several engaged.

The statement was made by a high grade projectionist that he would advise the installation of a motor generator set having a 110 volt generator, and use resistance to cut down the voltage again. His argument was that better results were had by that method than by any other, including the series arc type of motor generator, and several men sided with him more or less.

I took issue with that conclusion. My argument was that just as good results could be had with the series arc type, or with a low voltage generator, always provided the apparatus was kept clean and in correct adjustment, and further provided the apparatus be handled as it should be.

What's Your Opinion?

The weight of opinion seemed to be against me, but I maintained my position and still stick to it. However, I would like the experience of others on this point, and if there really is anything in their argument, I want to know just WHY it is so. My argument is that while it is readily granted that the heavy ballast resistance necessary with an arc lamp and 110 volt supply makes the arc more stable and easier to handle, still the careful man who remains constantly at his post, using the field resistance control when necessary and keeping his arc length constant, can get just as good results as can be had with 110 volt supply and the huge waste inherent in heavy ballast resistance—rheostats. Let us hear from you on this matter. Such arguments are for the real good of the profession. If I am in error I want to know it.

Anything Which Makes the Photoplay Less Pleasing Reacts to Decrease Box Office Receipts

BETTER PROJECTION PAYS · POWER'S PROJECTOR ·

PROJECTION ROOM EXPENSE

By F. H. RICHARDSON

Extracts From a Paper Read Before the Society of Motion Picture Engineers

BETTER PROJECTION PAYS · POWER'S PROJECTOR ·

"In various papers presented to this society by the writer during past years, the fact has been emphasized that every operation in the production of a photoplay must perforce depend very largely for its effect upon the final buyer, the public, upon the manner in which it is projected to the theatre screen.

"For many years I have labored hard in the endeavor to impress upon this society, and upon the motion picture industry as a whole, the fact that ANYTHING WHICH CAUSES THE PHOTOPLAY TO REACT LESS PLEASING TO THE THEATRE PATRON, MUST AND IN THE VERY NATURE OF THINGS WILL REACT TO DECREASE BOX OFFICE RECEIPTS.

"That fact is now, I believe, thoroughly understood by this society, and by a constantly increasing number of exhibitors, as well as by most producers. There still is, however, a very large percentage of exhibitors and theatre managers who apparently still have a fixed idea that excellence in projection means either very little or nothing at all to the box office, and still others who do not believe that high grade projection is of sufficient importance to justify the added expenditure necessary to obtain it.

Box Office Returns

"To argue with the men here present that a photoplay well projected is more pleasing and therefore has a higher box office value than one not well projected, would be a mere waste of energy, because you all understand that fact. I believe you will also grant, as a basic proposition, that in order to secure the greatest possible box office return, a theatre must continuously and consistently present its pictures through the medium of high grade projection. If you do concede this, then immediately we are confronted with two questions, viz.: (a) what various things are necessary in order that a theatre present uniformly high grade projection, and (b) what amount of expense over and above the possible minimum is the exhibitor justified in expending in order to secure it.

"Let it be clearly understood that by 'High Grade Projection' we mean projection which will place upon the screen the highest possible entertainment value contained in any photoplay. Also we should understand that in this paper we deal only with projection itself, and not with those various other things which have to do with the show as a whole, such as music, screen setting, theatre decoration, seating, ventilation, etc., etc.

Matter of Cost

"Fix the act clearly in your mind that projection, in all its grades, from the poorest to the best, is wholly a matter of cost. Any theatre may have projection which will place upon its screen the maximum entertainment value, contained in any photoplay provided it is willing to pay the cost. This being true, the whole matter then resolves itself into a question of just to what extent added cost in projection will bring additional box office returns.

"As a foundation for our discussion, I think we will all agree that projection room expense may only properly be increased above the possible minimum, when such increase will cause the box office to receive additional revenue, due to increased patronage caused by the increased excellence of the thing the theatre patron pays to see—the picture—equal to or in excess of the additional expense incurred.

"Unless there is additional box office revenue which the exhibitor has reason to believe is due to improvement in the projected screen image, then the exhibitor very naturally and very properly dies not feel that increase in projection room expense over and above the possible minimum is justified. As a business man he will only invest money where he has reason to believe the investment will be returned to him, plus a reasonable profit.

"The purpose of this paper is to examine into the matter of projection room expense, seeking to determine, as nearly as we may, just what investment, over and above the possible minimum, is or ought to be justified from the standpoint of increased box office revenue.

"Broadly, there are two possible extremes, viz.: (a) the well constructed, well ventilated, properly located projection room supplied with all necessary high grade projection equipment, and those conveniences necessary to the health and reasonable comfort of the men working therein, the equipment in charge of a projectionist or projectionists possessed of the technical knowledge necessary to the efficient, high grade projection of motion pictures, and with sufficient practical experience and energy to apply that knowledge intelligently. Such a projection plant is expensive in first cost, and relatively expensive in operation because of the fact that the high grade projectionist commands relatively high remuneration, and will only consent to handle equipment which is kept in good repair. In location for the projection room what is correct from the projection viewpoint is not always available without some sacrifice in seating space.

"The other extreme is the small, cheaply constructed, poorly located, poorly ventilated projection room, without sanitary and other conveniences for the comfort of the men working therein, equipped with the cheapest possible machines and optical appliances, the whole in charge of a projectionist possessed of slight technical knowledge and little energy or ambition to excel, or to even apply the knowledge he does possess in practice.

"Such an assemblage comes cheap, insofar as first cost and upkeep be concerned, but an ever increasing number of theatre managers and exhibitors are arriving at the conclusion, through costly experience, that first cost and upkeep are the only things in which it is not very expensive.

"Let us consider the point at which the exhibitor is justified in replacing old projectors with new, up-to-date ones. Let us assume that in a certain theatre the admission price averages twenty-five cents for all seats, and that there are a total of 700 seats. Let us further assume that this theatre gives four shows each day, in which case it has a total of 700 x 4 = 2800 seats for sale each twenty-four hours.

NICHOLAS POWER COMPANY
INCORPORATED
NINETY GOLD ST. NEW YORK, N.Y.

"Good Service"

"This theatre has, we will suppose, two motion picture projectors which are old type and badly worn, and a motor generator set which is well past its prime of usefulness. The management claims it cannot afford to replace these machines with new equipment so long as they are 'giving good service.' Let us examine into that matter, in the light of reason and common sense, carefully remembering that 'Good Service' is a relative term only.

"Let us assume that two new, up-to-date projectors would cost him in round numbers, a total of $1,600.00. Let us further assume that the new projectors will last only three years, at the end of which time they would be without further value. In other words, the management will, after three years of use, throw the projectors in the scrap heap as having no further value.

"This means that the management will have $1,600.00 invested in projectors for a period of three years, and that these projectors must not only earn an additional $1,600.00, plus $[illegible] as interest at eight per cent on the investment, in order to clear themselves, but must return an additional sum over and above that, as profit, in order to justify their installation.

"During the three years the projectors must return a total of $2,112.00 in added box office receipts in order to pay for themselves and in addition pay eight per cent interest on their cost.

"This seems quite a large sum of money until we examine the facts. The average price of seats in this theatre is, we have assumed, twenty-five cents. There are (365 x 3) 1095 days in the three years, hence it will require an average increase in daily income equal to (211200 cents ÷ 1095 days) about 19½ cents to pay the total cost of the projectors and interest on the money. Remembering that if the theatre is an average one it will have an average of at least 800 of the total 2,800 seats unsold each day. Will any man contend that new up-to-date projectors will not, with the application of the same skill and knowledge the old ones received, give sufficiently better projection to cause enough additional patronage to fill MORE than eight of those unsold seats? If this appeals to your mind as sound argument, then we may decide that projection room expense for replacing the projectors once every three years is fully justified.

"The same argument applies to upkeep in the shape of repairs for the projectors. IT MAY BE PRESUMED THAT, TAKING THE ATRES BIG AND LITTLE, ONE HUNDRED DOLLARS A YEAR WILL BE AMPLE TO KEEP THE PROJECTORS IN VERY GOOD CONDITION, BUT TO BE LIBERAL LET US SET THE SUM AT $150 PER YEAR. THIS IS LESS THAN FIFTY CENTS PER DAY, AND SURELY PROJECTORS IN GOOD REPAIR WILL PUT A SUFFICIENTLY IMPROVED PROJECTION ON THE SCREEN AGAINST PROJECTORS IN POOR REPAIR TO INCREASE PATRONAGE BY THE SALE OF TWO ADDITIONAL SEATS A DAY. TO THINK OTHERWISE WOULD, IT SEEMS TO ME, BE TO PAY THE PUBLIC A VERY POOR COMPLIMENT."

CHADWICK SERVICE FOR LIVE WIRE SHOWMEN

Something to crow about! That's the way we feel about our service to the exhibitors.

Chadwick Press Books, for instance, present fully, clearly and attractively showmanship campaigns that are real business builders. Exhibitors tell us this.

Chadwick Window Cards, the product of distinctive poster art and fine printing, are typical of the Chadwick aids for showmen.

Chadwick Heralds are designed for box office purposes. Always in full color, they are made to sell pictures to the public. And they do!

AN ACKNOWLEDGMENT

Chadwick Pictures Corporation is pleased to announce that the excellence of its Press Books, Window Cards and Heralds is in a large measure due to the splendid service, craftmanship and co-operation of the ERWIN S. KLEEBLATT PRESS, of 351-355 West Fifty-second Street, New York City.

All printed accessories for "A Man of Iron," Lionel Barrymore's newest production, are the work of the Erwin S. Kleeblatt Press, and these are typical of the Press Books, Window Cards and Heralds that you may expect on all future Chadwick Productions.

In

"A MAN OF IRON"

AN ADAPTATION

By Lawrence Marsten

In "A Man of Iron" Lionel Barrymore has found one of the finest vehicles of his distinguished screen career.

In the stern, forbidding background of a great steel mill is laid the drama of the tremendous struggle of a strong man to conquer a weak woman.

It is a battle against great odds,—a battle, the winning of which solves a problem whose very presence is a menace to the age-old institution of marriage.

"A Man of Iron" is a production that is universal in its appeal.

TO THE INDEPENDENT EXHIBITOR:

Don't Be Stampeded!

As soon as coalition became an established fact between the M. P. T. O. A. and the I. M. P. P. D. A., a SUBTLE, INSIDIOUS, UNDERMINING campaign to sow the seeds of uncertainty in the ranks of the exhibitor began.

Exhibitors from various parts of the New York territory were in some mysterious manner informed that the proceedings at Milwaukee would come to naught—that it was foolhardy on the part of the exhibitor to lay too much stress on the various resolutions passed—that if the exhibitor were wise, he would book for his theatre such pictures as were nationally advertised and on which he could depend to make money.

With subtle insinuations and craftiness, spreading the poisonous gas of doubt, these invisible forces are trying to breach the solid ranks of the independent exhibitor.

Discard Rumors, Whisperings, Gossips!

We are more determined than ever to proclaim our whole-hearted and free independence—to book for your theatres such quality pictures that the public demands.

It is only the weak-kneed man who is afraid to fight for his rights. The independence of the exhibitor is more than assured. There is no turning backward! There will be no let-up in the steps that have been taken and are to be taken to bring to a successful conclusion this battle of right against might!

The Play Date Bureau Will Function!

The plans as outlined in Milwaukee are rapidly being consummated and even by the time you read this, a force of high-powered men will be in the field, covering every part of the United States, visiting every exhibitor with a list of independent productions that will in every way be of the highest quality and with a message of assurance to stand firm and invincible in their determination to keep the screen free and independent.

AND ONE MORE FACT — THE PROFITS DERIVED THROUGH THE COOPERATION OF THE INDEPENDENT PRODUCER DISTRIBUTOR AND EXCHANGEMAN WILL NOT BE USED TO ERECT OR BUY THEATRES IN DIRECT COMPETITION WITH THE EXHIBITOR.

Founded in 1907 by J. P. Chalmers

Once Upon a Time—

ONCE upon a time there was a department store that confined its advertising to announcement of the $1500 seal coats and $2500 baby grands in its stock and never bothered to mention smaller items on its shelves. This store—

Hold on—there never was such a department store. We can't even get away with that in a fairy tale. Let's try again.

Once upon a time there was a magazine publisher who confined his advertising on each issue to a single feature. He never bothered to tell his prospective readers that the publication also carried snappy short stories, interesting fact articles, etc. He—

Just a minute. We are wrong again. There never was a publisher of that type. We'll have to try once more.

Once upon a time there was an exhibitor who spent considerable time selecting his comedy, booking serials to build up cumulative drawing power, shopping around for the news reel and novelties that best pleased his patrons—and then never bothered to tell a soul that he had these items on his screen.

Now we've got it. Not only "once upon a time" —but every day and in every part of this country.

It isn't a fairy tale—but I will admit it is darn hard to believe.

JUST now, in New York, a group of short subject producers are endeavoring by means of frequent around-the-table meetings to devise a means of bringing home to the exhibitor this thought:

THE PICTURE WORTH A PLACE ON YOUR SCREEN IS WORTH ITS PLACE IN YOUR ADVERTISING.

Every once in a while, during the year, one of these same managers will ask us to write for one of his pressbooks a brief message seeking to impress on the exhibitor the importance of the short subject.

We are afraid these managers are beginning to look on us either as a cynic or a dullwit unable to appreciate their problem.

Because we always approach the task so hopelessly.

We can't for the life of us understand the exhibitor attitude towards his short subjects.

We have been long enough in editorial harness to be able to see two sides to almost any question. But here is one that stumps us.

It seems so obvious.

If an exhibitor places a subject on his screen—whether it be a thousand feet or ten thousand—he does so with the feeling that it is going to please the majority of those sitting out front.

Doesn't it stand to reason then that there are many who ARE NOT OUT FRONT who might have been there had they known of the subject on the screen?

I'm getting so that I can't argue about it any more. It's like trying to convince a drowning man that water is wet.

STANLEY WAITE, of Pathe, tells us of an interesting ad that well illustrates the problem. Some few weeks ago Herschel Stuart, as capable a showman as there is in America, gave over practically all of his quarter page ad to a two-reel Harry Langdon comedy. The feature of the week was an "also ran" in the ad copy, as it undoubtedly was also in drawing power.

Stuart could see that angle for his big four thousand seat Missouri Theater, St. Louis.

A few weeks later the same comedy played its first run in Cleveland, and the motion picture editor of one paper picked it out of the week's offerings for a seven column streamer head on his page.

Yet—when you looked through the ad columns —it was IMPOSSIBLE for you to find out at what Cleveland theater the Harry Langdon comedy was playing.

A newspaper editor—giving his readers WHAT THEY WANT—thinks it the feature event of the week. A theater manager doesn't even bother to mention it in his ad!

Will someone tell him the water is wet?

Film Congress Plans Passage of Some Films Duty Free

By W. STEPHEN BUSH

EUROPE is really interested in the International Film Congress to be held in Paris in the week of June 22. While the great conference in London proved premature and therefore perhaps abortive, no one taking it very seriously, the Paris affair, enjoying the co-operation of the League of Nations, is today the topic of general conversation in the big film centres of Europe.

I learn by way of additional details that the Congress will have a large attendance, over a hundred acceptances from every country in Europe having been filed with the secretary of the Congress. If one is to get his impressions from the atmosphere of the secretarial offices in Paris, there is good ground for saying that American participation in the deliberations and actions of this International Assembly of the experts and "best minds" in the film industry of the world is eagerly and confidently expecte

Even the daily press in its comments on the importance and the possibilities of the Congress dwells a good de on the need of co-operation from the other side of the water. Some representatives of interested producers have asked in what practical and definite way the League of Nations can aid in the planning and producing of films which are to possess outstanding international values.

To this question a practical and definite answer has been given. The Congress is to suggest the names of prominent people representing both the industry and the general public. These names, if given a final approval by the League, will pass upon the merits of any film for which an extraordinary cultural, ethical, historic or even technical value is claimed by the producer. The verdict of the committee will carry with it very substantial advantages. A film receiving the unanimous favorable vote of the committee will have to pay no duties of any kind as it passes through the various countries belonging to the League of Nations, and will be exempt from the requirements of censorship in those countries.

This sounds almost promising but there is also a negative side to the possible action of the committee. If the committee consider a film as libeling a nation belonging to the League of Nations, then such a film will be officially proscribed and a formal sentence of excommunication is to be pronounced against it. Such a film cannot be exhibited in any country which is a member of the League of Nations. The details of this proposition will of course be very thoroughly discussed at the conference. Whatever the result of the Congress one thing is sure: We could not wish for a more formal and emphatic recognition of the value of the film as an international power and interpreter than that given to it by the League of Nations.

A German named Schuefftan has patented a new method of making "dummies" to take the place of big historic and architectural sets in film productions. With the use of his models the actions of the players are not in any way impeded in their freedom; in fact, they and the director can forget all about the "dummies" and may make themselves believe they are playing against the real backgrounds. For this process, it is claimed, no special cameras or special equipments of any kind are needed. The patents, it is announced, have been purchased by the UFA company.

The next country in which Americans are to try the experiment of producing abroad is Switzerland. According to reports from Zurich, Emil Harder, the director of "William Tell," is about to acquire a studio costing a million dollars to be located in the little mountain republic. Only American actors are to be employed and the technical staff is likewise to be composed entirely of American help. The Swiss government is said to favor the project and to have granted substantial concessions by way of encouraging the experiment. The next feature to be produced is "The Danger Signal," by Hoey Lawlor.

A curious and by no means healthy situation exists in Austria where far too many films are imported for actual consumption. The result is that even first-class American features such as pictures of the type of "The Covered Wagon" and "The Lost World" and all the Mae Murray films, are having their first runs in the kind of houses which about twenty years ago we used to call nickelodeons.

There are only about 600 theatres in Austria, of which about one-third are located in Vienna. The average seating capacity is around 300. The government of Austria is the most oppressive in the world as far as motion pictures are concerned, taking practically 50 per cent. of the gross receipts. As a result there is no increase in the number of houses and no desire to build a place with a larger capacity. One of the leading producing companies in Austria, the Helios, has broken down, probably as a consequence of the impossible conditions created by the exactions of the government. This company had been giving good promise of quality work and had started to make "The Last Waltz," when lack of funds brought the waltz to a sudden end.

On the list of coming European productions for which unusual merit is claimed are two French features, "Vertige," with the scenario modeled on the story of the same name by Charles Mere, and "Jocaste," built on the well-known story of the late Anatole France. Sweden is represented by a proposed filming of Selma Lagerloef's "Jerusalem." As far as Italy is concerned one cannot even report progress. The only picture for which the producers have attempted at least a degree of publicity has been "La Cavalcata Ardente," which is an appeal to Italian patriotism. The subject deals with Garibaldi's immortal conquest of the Kingdom of Naples and the two Sicilies. The film has had a measure of success in Italy, but would scarcely do for the foreign markets.

A German film producing company has entered suit against Lubitsch and the Warner Brothers on the ground that they have infringed upon its alleged exclusive right to film the libretto of the opera, "A Waltz Dream," composed by Oscar Straus. The plaintiff claims that it acquired the story which served as the foundation of the opera as long ago as 1907. The story is said to have been written by one Hans Mueller, an author of Vienna from whom Oscar Straus acquired the rights to turn it into an opera. The German company maintains that Mueller had a right to sell the filming rights of the story separately and that the musical composer had nothing he could sell. The company claims that it sent a number of cablegrams to Mr. Lubitsch detailing its supposed rights in the premises, but never received an answer to any of them.

Coming and Going

James V. Bryson, managing director of European M. P. Company of Great Britain, is here on a visit.

Among the passengers on the S.S. Sierra, sailing from San Francisco on May 26, were John W. Hicks, Jr., managing director of the Famous Lasky Films Service, Inc., of Sydney, Australia, with Mrs. Hicks and their small son, John W. II.; also John E. Kennebeck, exploitation manager for Australia, who is sailing with his bride, an Omaha society girl.

Sofus Berg, general manager for First National in Scandinavia, and Svein Aas, exchange manager in Oslo, Norway, arrived in New York this week on the Bergensfjord.

I. Blumenthal, special representative of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in Europe, has sailed for Paris.

C. W. Bunn, of E. A. Eschmann's staff of salesmen on First National specials, left for an extended tour of Canada last week.

Jesse J. Goldberg, president of Independent Pictures Corporation, who returned to his New York office last week for a brief conference with the heads of the various departments, has left for his West Coast studios and will be there for several months.

Ray Rockett is in New York from Los Angeles.

John Zanft of the Fox theatre department is sailing for Europe early next month.

Wanda Wiley was scheduled to arrive in New York from the Coast this week.

Bennett Buys Glendale Studio

Whitman Bennett announces that he and his associates have acquired by purchase, the Glendale Studio at 3021 Myrtle Avenue, Brooklyn. The purchase includes not only the studio building, but also three acres of valuable realty. Mr. Bennett will give up the Yonkers Studio, which was sold recently to the Mount St. Vincent Catholic School, on the first of August, and on that same date will take possession of the new property. The Glendale Studio is much larger than the Yonkers Studio and has been acquired by Mr. Bennett in order that he may have ample facilities for fulfilling his own new contracts with the Arrow Pictures Corporation.

Three New Theatres for Kansas City

Three new theatres were announced and one extensive remodeling task started in Kansas City last week, close upon the heels of the announced $300,000 improvement of the Warwick Theatre, the construction of a $1,000,000 theatre and office building at Broadway and Valentine road and the construction of a $500,000 theatre and office building at Mill Creek boulevard and Forty-third street.

The new theatres announced were the proposed construction of a new downtown house to replace the Old Victory Theatre near Twelfth street and Grand avenue, a suburban house at Indiana and Howard avenues and a theatre at Fifth street and Elizabeth avenue, Kansas City, Kas. In the construction of the theatre to replace the Victory, the Wonderland, one of Kansas City's oldest downtown second run houses, will be razed.

Button from Metro "Train" Cut Lad in Mass., Report

An attachment for $15,000 was placed against the "trackless train" of the Metro-Goldwyn Company on the charge that one of the advertising lapel buttons thrown from the train when it was in Springfield, Mass., on Wednesday, May 22, had struck a boy in one eye.

The boy, Edward Enright, four years old, is alleged to have been standing on a curbing, watching the train as it passed through Springfield on the way to Hartford. Occupants of the "train" were throwing handfuls of the advertising buttons, on which there is a pin, into the crowd of spectators. The boy suddenly was struck in the eye, it is alleged, in such a way that the pupil of his eye was punctured and lacerated. According to specialists, it virtually is hopeless to expect that the lad will recover the sight of this eye.

The $15,000 attachment against the film company's property was placed in order to insure court jurisdiction. The attachment immediately was dissolved by the action of the Metro-Goldwyn representatives in filing a bond.

Eddie Carrier is in charge of the train and during the New England tour is accompanied by William Hickey, New England district manager for Metro-Goldwyn.

Industry in Splendid Shape, Hays Tells Publishers

The motion picture industry is prospering splendidly, Will Hays of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., told editors and publishers assembled this week at West Baden, Ind., for the annual convention of the Inland Press Association.

Sound business methods prevail, Mr. Hays said, and complete harmony exists in the ranks of his association, while the artistry of pictures is ever increasing. The suggestion that a few companies sought to dominate the field he answered with the argument that any really good picture is sure to obtain wide distribution. He also pointed out that, as to ownership, one producing and distributing company has 316,000 shares of stock, held by 4,288 individuals in forty-five different states and twelve foreign countries, while another similar company has 184,000 shares distributed among 1,521 individuals in thirty-four different states. Soon all will have stock on the market, he predicted.

FRED HAMLIN TAKEN ILL

Fred Hamlin, popular publicity director of the Mark Strand Theatre, New York City, was taken suddenly ill Sunday morning, May 24, and removed from his home to the Presbyterian Hospital. The diagnosis was a heart attack. Fred was reported as much improved on Wednesday, though unable to see his friends, and it was predicted that he would be back at his desk within a week. That will be an occasion for many congratulations.

WILL REBUILD IN NEWARK

John Lutz, owner of the Sherman Opera block in Newark, N. Y., which was destroyed by fire, will rebuild. The Crescent Theatre occupied the ground floor of the building. The loss is reported to be $300,000.

More Warner Houses

Sam Warner has verified the rumor that Warner Brothers have bought two H. P. Varner theatres, one in Concord, N. C., and one in Lexington, N. C., and two R. D. Craver theatres, the Broad-Strand in Charlotte, N. C., and one in Columbia, N. C. The company also has taken over the management of the Craver house in Winston-Salem, N. C., Mr. Warner acknowledges.

Questioned about the rumor that Warner Brothers has taken over First National franchises in six other southern states, Sam Warner declined either to affirm or deny. He said that Warner Brothers do not enter into competition in taking over these theatres because their only competitors are Paramount theatres. The Warners will open an exchange in Charlotte, N. C.

Corinne Griffith Feted at Dansant

Richard A. Rowland, general manager of First National Pictures, gave a tea-dance in honor of Corinne Griffith, First National star, at Sherry's, on Friday afternoon of last week, from four until seven o'clock. Two hundred and fifty guests turned out to meet the star and pay their respects to her charming personality. Representatives of the motion picture trade journals, fan magazines, newspapers and publishers were among the guests.

Among those present were: Edna Ferber, author of "So Big" which First National recently produced, and of "Classified" which will serve as Miss Griffith's next picture; Sir Henry Macgowan; Maurice Diamond, London publishers' representative; Mrs. Alice M. Williamson, English novelist; Peter B. Kyne, American novelist; Rita Weiman, authoress and playwright; E. M. Asher, president of Gorinne Griffith Productions, and Charles R. Rogers of the same organization; Alice Joyce, Nathan Burkan, Johnny Hines, Sam Katz, Irving Lesser, Spyros Skouras, Robert Kane, C. C. Burr, E. A. Eschmann, Herman Bruenner, Mrs. Florence Strauss, Frank J. Carroll, David Wallace, business manager of the Actors Theatre, Dorothy Parker, Gabriel Hess and Courtland Smith of Will Hays' organization, W. J. Watt, the publisher, Charles Belmont Davis, Karl Kitchin, Mr. and Mrs. Victor Talley, Walter Camp, Robert Dexter, Warner Richmond, Sofus Berg, general manager of First National Pictures in Scandinavia, Svein Aas, manager for Norway, and Ken Hall, director of publicity and exploitation for First National in Australia.

Volstead Gets Him

Louis Guhl, widely known to Wisconsin exhibitors as a former theatre operator, film salesman and promotor, was sentenced recently in the federal court in Milwaukee to serve a six months term in the House of Correction and pay a $500 fine after pleading guilty to a charge of violating the Volstead law. Guhl, of recent months, has been in the cafe business.

Biechele Sees All "Under One Roof"

"With one possible exception I can see no barrier that may stand in the way of the affiliation of the M. P. T. O. Kansas-Missouri and the M. P. T. O. A. when our board of directors meet June 8," said R. R. Biechele, president of the Kansas-Missouri body, upon his return from the national convention in Milwaukee, he having officially been appointed to represent his association as a member of Allied, at the national gathering.

"The lone exception is taking money from the Independents under proposed play date plan," Mr. Biechele continued. "The plan in itself is a good one, I'll grant you, but we, as exhibitors, are not going to be overanxious about receiving money from any group of exchanges, or any one else, for that matter. Of course I don't know what may happen at our directors' meeting. I am merely expressing an opinion. Then, again, the meeting of the national board of directors, the policy outlined at that meeting and the concrete results of it will be a great factor in molding the opinion of Kansas and Missouri, as far as affiliation is concerned.

"I believe most of the members of our organization are satisfied with the Middle Western representation on the national board, as far as percentage is concerned, any way.

"It's plain, very plain, that the Milwaukee meeting was the forerunner of a national consolidation of the Allied T. O. C. C., the M. P. T. O. A., all under one roof. It is bound to come sooner or later and cannot be avoided. From what I have heard from fellow exhibitors in my territory, I think we will affiliate with the M. P. T. O. A., despite some small objections that might be present.

N. J. Pledges Dues to National Organization

When the national directorate goes into session on June 3 and 4 at least one of its members, we learn, expects to be able to report that his state organization is "100 per cent. paid up" as regards dues to the M. P. T. O. A. This national director is Joseph Seider, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New Jersey.

At a meeting this week of the N. J. directors he received the assurance that national dues from across the Hudson would be ready to fill their space in the M. P. T. O. A.'s treasury before the important pow-wow at the Hotel Roosevelt, New York City, next week.

Demand in Eastern Pa. for Independent Product Jumps from 25 to 100 Per Cent—Directorate Meets June 3-4 to Name Field Marshal

By Tom Waller

THE aftermath of the Milwaukee convention is crested with a wave that is bringing to independent producers some of the greatest business they have ever experienced. Exhibitors that seldom crossed some of their thresholds are now signing the dotted line as fullfledged customers with a worthiness evincing permanency. This information we gathered just before going to press from most authentic sources. It is well substantiated by other concrete reports that the pledge cards adopted at Milwaukee and circularized throughout the country have for the past few days and still are cluttering the streams of mail into national headquarters in New York City of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America.

In facts and figures to bear up this point we are advised that this week seventy exhibitors representing eighty-five theatres in Eastern Pennsylvania met in Philadelphia when all filled in pledge cards. Their pledges alone, we learn, make the demand for independent product in this territory jump from twenty-five to 100 per cent. over the same demand in that section of the country this time last year.

The avalanche of signed pledges to give worthy independent product a conspicuous place in their bookings is already superseding the fondest hopes of independent leaders, it would seem.

In Western Pennsylvania, which territory also includes West Virginia, exhibitors of their own volition have appointed a committee of seven. This unit is now conducting a house-to-house canvass, we learn, in an endeavor to duplicate the success of the easterly part of the state.

Returns from other parts of the United States could not be gleaned at this time, with the exception that they constitute a good part of the mail opened on the eleventh floor at 25 West 43rd street these days. It is possible that names and other figures will be officially released following the two-day session on June 3 and 4 at the Hotel Roosevelt, New York City, of the National Board of Directors.

The directors will hash over and put into motion the accomplishments realized at Milwaukee. They will go into session on the first day promptly at eleven o'clock. It is expected that the first thing they will do will be to name a general manager who will superintend the national field work of cementing into a solid basis the merits of the independents.

The selection of a field marshal at present promises to be no easy task. According to reports from many creditable channels in Manhattan there are just now a score or more names that are scheduled to be up for consideration. Who is who at present is another matter. Of the reported many only one has been divulged and that is Attorney Nathan Burkan, as told in last week's Moving Picture World.

In regard to Burkan it would seem that he will receive the solid backing of the Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce. The Burkan arbitration plan presented at the Milwaukee convention made its author figure nationally as well as locally.

That Burkan is assured of this post, a part of the newly created Bureau of Trade and Commerce, is, however, by no means positive. Of the others the names of some to quote one spokesman, are "of such magnanimity as to astound the industry." This comment is illustrative of the keen speculation rife at this time. It also would show the high light of importance thrown on this executiveship in that the national organization in many instances is credited with being the recipient of applications from such high calibred individuals as described.

Sydney S. Cohen, chairman of the board of directors, refused to volunteer any assistance in the World's effort to ascertain some of the names. Cohen made it quite clear that at the opportune time news in this respect will be divulged and that at this writing it is purely a matter for the executive consideration of the directors as a whole. Cohen also maintained a reticent attitude on other matters pertaining to the organization, promising, however, official comment after the directors' conference.

The need of immediate funds to carry out the edicts of the convention is expressed in a letter sent to members of the M.P.T.O.A. by National Treasurer Louis Sagal. Already we learn exhibitors have been responding with their checks. In this letter Sagal stresses:

"The only income we have is DUES. The money the producers and distributors are contributing is for the Bureau of Trade and Commerce alone, and no part of it goes to the support of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America. That is up to you.

"Our new fiscal year commences June 1st. We must have funds immediately to carry out the program of definite business plans voted by the delegates at the Milwaukee Convention. Will you cooperate by promptly paying dues for each theatre you own and operate, as per the attached schedule.

"We need a paid business manager to give you practical service and he must have enough human units to carry out the work.

Producers Distributing Corp. Holds First of Sales Sessions in New York

John C. Flinn Appoints William J. Morgan Sales Manager; Outlines Corporation's Policy as "Honesty"—Munroe Reports

THE first of three big conferences of the sales force of Producers' Distributing Corporation was held this week at the Hotel Commodore in New York City. This session, which lasted two days, marks the initial step in the regime of John C. Flinn as vice-president and general manager of the company, and the new policies as formulated by Mr. Flinn and F. C. Munroe were officially put into effect and the program of pictures for the coming season was outlined and discussed at length.

In his opening address Flinn announced the appointment of William J. Morgan as sales manager, and stated that Morgan would assume his duties with Producers' Distributing Corporation as soon as he could conveniently withdraw from First National.

Morgan is one of the best known executives in the industry and in joining Producers Distributing Corporation he severs an association of eight years with the First National personnel. He was associated with J. D. Williams in Australia prior to the formation of First National and when Williams organized that company Morgan joined the organization and took charge of sales under general manager E. A. Eschmann.

F. C. Munroe, president of Producers Distributing Corporation, addressed the meeting with an outline of the gratifying progress of the company, from a beginning eighteen months ago, with a hurriedly assembled program of pictures, to the present healthy condition of the organization.

"With the enthusiasm of our sales force and the confidence of the exhibitors, backed by the quality product pledged by the reputable producers now affiliated with us," said Munroe, "there is nothing that can stop us from taking the highest place under the sun."

The policy of the company as outlined by John C. Flinn may be summed up in one word, "honesty." "We are honestly trying to furnish the very best in entertainment," said Mr. Flinn, "and all that we ask is open and above board competition and we are ready to meet this competition with the utmost confidence in the ultimate result."

An interesting phase of the conferences was an explanation of the budget system devised by H. O. Duke and used during the past year as a guide in the allotment of quotas. It was explained that while budgets were used in every other big industry as invaluable aids in successful merchandising, the budget was an almost unknown thing in the motion picture industry.

Duke, by means of charts and figures, showed how the budget treated each production as so much merchandise, purchased at the production cost, plus prints and exploitation charges, and then allotted the prorata of this cost to each branch. With the budget figures as a guide each branch manager was shown how to keep constantly informed of the profit or loss on each picture.

It was announced that a new corporation was being formed to handle foreign distribution. William Vogel will head this new unit and offices will be opened at once in London for the direct distribution of the company's releases throughout Great Britain. Other offices will be opened in Paris and Berlin to supervise the distribution in those countries.

Following the addresses on policy and distribution, Flinn summarized the program of production scheduled for release during the coming year and each picture was taken up separately and discussed at length on its theme, direction, cast and exploitation possibilities.

The convention was attended by the managers and bookers of the eastern branches, the company's executives and department heads including salesmen from the New York, Philadelphia and Boston territory and representatives of the producers contributing to the coming season's program.

The second conference will be held at the Congress Hotel in Chicago on May 28 and 29 and this will be followed by the west coast convention in San Francisco on June 3 and 4.

BUFFALO BOARD COMMITTEES

Frank J. A. McCarthy, president of the Film Board of Trade of Buffalo, has appointed the following committees for the ensuing year: Transportation, Henry W. Kahn, chairman; Marvin Kempner and Joe Miller; Film Theft, Earl Kramer, chairman; Henry W. Kahn and Bill Rowell; Gratis Film, William L. Sherry, chairman; Marvin Kempner and Jimmy Speer; Film Condition, Basil Brady, chairman; Earl Kramer and Colonel Howard F. Brink; Housing, C. W. Anthony, chairman; Sydney Samson and Basil Brady; Executive, Sydney Samson, Frank McCarthy and Henry W. Kahn. Messrs Brady, Brink, Samson and Kahn have been appointed members of a special committee to attend the Syracuse meeting of the M. P. T. O. of N. Y. in Syracuse, Tuesday, June 2.

ELECTED TWELFTH TIME

For the twelfth time Joseph Mogler was elected president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of St. Louis, Mo., May 19.

Warner Brothers Plan to Open 8 New U. S. and Canada Branches

WARNER BROS. announced the completion of plans for the opening of eight new sales exchanges. These, with the twenty-nine which were acquired through the purchase of Vitagraph, will bring the total up to thirty-seven.

The new exchanges, all of which will be in operation within a few days, will be located in Portland, Maine; Charlotte, N. C.; Butte, Mont.; Portland, Ore.; Jacksonville, Fla.; Indianapolis, Ind.; Vancouver, B. C., and Calgary, Canada. No announcement has been made respecting the managers of these offices or the personnel of their sales staffs.

The Vitagraph exchanges, all of which came into the possession of Warner Bros. with the recent purchase, are in Albany, N. Y.; Atlanta, Ga.; Boston, Buffalo, N. Y.; Chicago, Cincinnati, Cleveland, Dallas, Tex.; Denver, Colo.; Detroit, Kansas City, Los Angeles, Milwaukee, Minneapolis, New Orleans, New York City, Oklahoma City, Okla.; Omaha, Neb.; Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Salt Lake City, San Francisco, Seattle, St. Louis, Washington, Montreal, St. John, N. B.; Toronto, and Winnipeg.

It will be noted that with the opening of exchanges in Vancouver and Calgary, the Warners will have six in Canada, while the United States is covered like a blanket.

10 YEARS FOR THEATRE BANDIT

Robbing theatres in Kansas City is getting to be a highly unprofitable business. Last week an Orpheum Theatre bandit was sentenced to ten years in the penitentiary, while this week a youth by the name of W. H. Thompson was arrested and identified as one of the bandits who held up the Garden Theatre on April 13.

Greater Movie Season Hints Are Included in 24-Page Press Sheet

"Get Your Man" Called Film Myth

Commissioner Courtland Starnes, directing head of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, had something to say relative to moving pictures showing Canadian Mounties in action when he returned to his headquarters at Ottawa, Ontario, following his attendance at the International Police Convention in New York City a few days ago.

The Commissioner declared that the "Get Your Man" slogan applied to the R. C. M. P. was purely a creation of the movies. With romantic license, the cinema producer had given the Mounted Police constables picturesque apparel, customs and duties in their films, he said, with the result that the dapper Jack Holt was the ideal "mountie" to the general public.

To Open June 17th

Loew's Coney Island Theatre, now in the course of construction at Surf and Stillwell avenues, will be formally opened the evening of June 17, with Marcus Loew and a large party of stage, screen and radio stars in attendance. The theatre will be devoted to the presentation of feature motion pictures with occasional stage novelties. The addition of the Coney Island house to the Loew chain will give Marcus Loew representation in every part of Greater New York and swell the New York chain to 50 theatres. The theatre will have a seating capacity in excess of 2,600.

Hays Organization Announces Plans Nearly Perfected for Field Operation—Many Exhibitors Join Governors in Pledging Their Aid

THE National Greater Movie Season Campaign inaugurated by the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., Will H. Hays, President, is almost ready for field operation. Accessories covering pretty well everything from a balloon to a twenty-four sheet have been prepared, the territories fixed, and exploitation men are engaged to work in co-operation with exhibitor committees which will be formed in each center embraced in the August drive, the Hays unit announces.

Not only have general channels of publicity been covered, but national tie-ups which are being secured through the unprecedented endorsement the season has received in commercial fields, are opening new avenues of exhibitor-public service or exhibitor-industrial association that can be utilized continuously.

"They're Better Than Ever" is the slogan most in evidence with "Let's Go" or "Come On In" as variations according to the use for which the accessory is intended. Three designs of block posters—a twenty-four-sheet, a three-sheet and a one-sheet—are available together with a special pictorial one-sheet. Tack cards and banners, pennants, heralds, slides, trailers, cut-out letters, window-signs and stickers given exhibitors wide choice in outdoor advertising material; while novelties include metal badges, buttons, balloons, paper hats, fans, metal puzzles, walking-dolls, cloth flowers snapperjacks, steel bells, etc. By arrangements with the manufacturers all accessories will be sold to exhibitors at cost. The twenty four sheet, for instance, sells for 72 cents.

The complete plan and methods of organization are detailed in a twenty-four page press sheet, wherein advertising, publicity newspaper stories, talking points for four-minute speakers, and exploitation from a practical, common-sense and profitable angle, are all covered intensively.

Endorsement of the season has reached a point where nearly all the great national organizations have pledged their support.

Calling the movement a commendable undertaking, the Governor of New Jersey has written to Mr. Hays offering co-operation to aid as lies within his power.

Governor A. G. Sorlie of North Dakota says, "You may be assured of my interest, and I am sure you may count upon the people of North Dakota to support this movement and to cooperate in all ways possible to bring about interest in the better quality of moving pictures. I believe the exhibitors of moving pictures in this state are almost unanimously back of such a campaign as this and will lend their best efforts to promote the work."

Governor John H. Winant of New Hampshire and Governor Franklin S. Billings of Vermont have also written Mr. Hays endorsing the campaign. Similar support is forthcoming from the International Federation of Catholic Alumnae and the Maccabees; while Frank J. Irwin, national commander of the Disabled American Veterans of the World War, acknowledging the co-operation of Producers and Distributors given in the interest of disabled veterans, promises the support of his organization.

The principal exhibitors throughout America look forward to big business increases as a result of the campaign, according to letters Mr. Hays is receiving.

"Count on me 100 per cent. I hope the season will be such a success this year that you will make it an annual event," declared W. A. Steffes, Chairman of the Allied States Organization.

"The benefits of the first Greater Movie Season have been made so very certain to us as a result of our participation in its activity during August 1924 that we are taking advantage of this business getting opportunity this year with renewed vigor and enthusiasm." That from Sol Lesser of West Coast Theatres, Inc., California, is a striking testimony to the season's permanent value.

Samuel Carver of the Liberty Theatre, Kansas City, Mo. has already started interesting the Women's City Club and the Parent Teachers Association. "I want this city to go over with a bang," he says. All through the South and New England there has been a unanimous wave of approval, while from Iowa, A. H. Blank expresses that State's "tremendous need of something, as we face a new season and turn wearily away from a depression that has spread in a most devastating fashion over two years. Only a great and national campaign of the scope you have outlined can renew the public's interest, upon which the very foundation of the industry rests."

The Montana Film Board of Trade has received endorsements of the project from the principal theatres of Butte. Colonel Fred Levy of Louisville, Ky., will swing his theatres behind it, as will the Moore and Graves Amusement Company controlling houses in Denver, Pueblo, Colorado Springs and Greeley, Colo. Twenty Skouras theatres in St. Louis will celebrate Greater Movie Season. John B. Carroll, manager of Consolidated Amusements of Tampa, Fla. assures the cooperation of his

Kick Against Copyright Bill Registered by Canadian Chief

COL. JOHN. A. COOPER of Toronto, president of the Motion Picture Distributors and Exhibitors of Canada, an association affiliated with the Hays organization at New York, has written a very strong letter to Mr. W. E. Raymond, M. P., chairman of the Copyright Committee of the Canadian House of Commons, Ottawa, relative to the proposed amendments to the Canadian Copyright as a result of which all theatre proprietors in the Dominion would be called upon to pay unlimited royalties for the use of the considerable copyrighted music at performances.

Col. Cooper's letter, which is self-explanatory, reads in part as follows:

So far as our investigations go, we believe the only request that has been made upon the theatre owners of Canada for fees on music is from the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers. So far as we can discover, no demand has been made upon them by holders of European copyrights.

On behalf of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners, I desire to lodge a formal protest against certain provisions of the bill which affect them:

(1)—The provisions of the Bill introduce a new principle into our economic life without any discussion, and without any evidence that our leaders in jurisprudence approve such principle. In other words, there are no decisions of our courts which uphold this principle, namely, that holders of copyrights or patents can collect more than once from the user of a copyrighted or patented article.

(2)—Because the Bill introduces a series of damages and fines which is quite unfair and for which there is no precedent.

(3)—Because it will be very difficult for theatre owners using copyrighted music to know who is the owner of certain copyrights. For example: arrangements might be made with the American Association and a lump sum paid for the use of all their copyrighted music. After having made such arrangements the theatre owners would probably find there were one hundred different authors, some Canadian and some foreign, whose copyrights were not held by persons represented by the American or any other Association. In other words, without registration of the copyrights in Canada, there is no knowledge of ownership.

(4)—Because no notice has been given to Theatre Owners of Canada of this proposed legislation; and no representatives of the theatre interests have been invited to appear before your committee.

For your information there are theatre associations with headquarters in Toronto, Montreal, Winnipeg, Calgary and Vancouver and I would respectfully suggest that before such extraordinary legislation is placed upon the Statute Books that notice should be served on these organizations. If these people are to be called upon to pay large sums of money annually to foreign holders of copyrights, it is only fair they should have ample warning.

New Youngstown Houses

There is a building boom going on at Youngstown, Ohio. Included in the new structures is a new Keith-Albee house, which will be managed by John R. Elliott, who is now assistant manager of one of the Keith houses in Cleveland. Warner Bros. have taken a 99-year lease on a valuable West Federal street site, and will shortly begin work on a pretentious theatre. Emil Renner and Chas. Schafer, together with their associates, have organized a company to build a new house on the site now occupied by the Orpheum Theatre, in Youngstown.

The Brown Theatrical Co., Zanesville, Ohio, which was recently incorporated, will build a new house on South Fifth street in that city. The company will likewise operate the Weller and Liberty Theatres. The incorporation was for $350,000.

F. P.-L. Establishing Training School for Theatre Managers

HAROLD B. FRANKLIN, director of theatres, Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, announced this week the establishing of a training school for theatre managers. This school will open its first term August 15, and upon the graduation of the first class, February 1, 1926, the second term will open. The courses will be continuous thereafter and will embody every phase of motion picture theatre management.

The school, the sessions of which will be held at the Rivoli Theatre, New York City, will be under the direct supervision of one of the Famous Players-Lasky theatre department's experts and its administration will be in charge of an executive council. In addition to this executive council, Franklin states, there will be a board of directors consisting of some of the most important figures in the motion picture industry.

Among the subjects which will serve as bases for courses in the school will be the history of the development of the motion picture theatre, the inter-relation of production, distribution and exhibition; the selection of advantageous sites, the various types of theatres, from the de luxe first run house to the neighborhood theatre; theatre architecture and equipment, house service, the relation of the theatre to the community, music, projection and lighting, presentation and prologues, exploitation, advertising and publicity; good-will building, programs and theatre accounting.

Requirements for entrance to the school will include good health, absence of deformity, and a clean-cut, pleasing personality. No applications will be received from men under eighteen or over twenty-eight years of age, and while it is preferred that applicants be college graduates, exceptions will be made for high school graduates whose other qualifications are deemed favorable. Applications for admission to the first session of the school will be received between July 1 and July 15. On July 20, or thereabouts, the tentatively successful candidates for admission will be notified and they will be interviewed in New York City by appointment between August 1 and August 10. In connection with his announcement, Mr. Franklin stated:

"Although motion picture theatre management is a highly technical field requiring specially trained experts, there has hitherto been no central training point for those engaged in this important work. Through their own sheer ability there are men, at different points throughout the country, who have developed through experience and the progress of the theatre business a capability which measures up to requirements. But without any definite training center there has naturally been much wasted effort, much blundering and failure.

"The establishing of the Paramount theatre managers' training school is the first step toward preparing thoroughly trained managers to carry on the work of motion picture theatre management."

Keith Plans 3 Huge Theatres in Boston for Next Fall

B. F. Keith theatres before long will have three huge theatres in the heart of Boston, according to an announcement by Mayor James M. Curley. The mayor said that the Keith interests have taken a long term lease on the skyscraper and theatre which is being constructed at Tremont and Hollis streets. The building is being erected by the American Bonding and Mortgage Company and represents an investment of $7,000,000. The theatre has been planned on a palatial scale and is expected to be ready for opening on September 1.

The other new Keith house at Washington and Essex streets will be ready about the same time.

The third new Keith house will be the $2,000,000 memorial theatre to B. F. Keith, which will be erected on ground on Washington street now occupied by the present B. F. Keith's Theatre, the Boston Theatre and Bijou Theatre.

N. Y. ZONES WILL ELECT OFFICERS

New state officers as well as new chairman and boards of directors for the Buffalo and Albany zones will be elected at the meeting of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New York, Inc., in the Hotel Onondaga, Syracuse, Tuesday, June 2. The present boards of directors will meet Monday evening, June 1, in the same hotel at 8 o'clock. A large delegation of exhibitors will attend from Buffalo and western New York towns.

Walter Hays, president of the state organization; J. H. Michael, chairman of Buffalo Zone and Charley Hayman, state treasurer, Niagara Falls, will head the western New York delegation. Much important business will come before the meeting including the mapping out of a uniform procedure in arbitration. A committee representing the Film Board of Trade of Buffalo as well as one representing the Albany board, will attend.

Warner Franchises of from 2 to 10 Years Offered to All Exhibitors

Wis. Treasurer Will Demand Quiz

Solomon Levitan, Madison theatre owner and treasurer of the State of Wisconsin, who at the recent convention of the M. P. T. O. of A. delivered an address attacking the methods of the Big Three producers, has announced that he will demand an investigation by the Wisconsin department of markets into trade tactics employed by the large producers.

"It is clearly a matter for investigation when a picture that carries a premium of $2,500 in one place may be shown for $750 in a neighboring city where competition is inactive," he declared.

New Policy Is Announced by Harry Warner as Aftermath of Recent Coastal Sales Convention—Details Are Outlined

WARNER BROS. announce this week they will offer their product by franchises to exhibitors on a two to ten years' plan.

This new policy is a result of the Warner Bros. sales convention held in Los Angeles recently and was announced by Harry M. Warner on his return from the coast.

Details of the plan have not been given out but Warner said the franchises would be offered on an equitable basis. The Warner statement follows:

"This important decision opens up to exhibitors new fields of expansion and business activity. It means, stripped to essentials, that exhibitors need no longer fear the huge booking combines that threaten to absorb their theatres, but are now assured of sufficient product, under the Warner franchise policy, to stay in business, and stay in it as long as they wish.

"Instead of Warner Bros. entering the theatre field on a competitive basis, the franchise, on the contrary, aims to establish a permanent relationship between exhibitors and Warner Bros., with a view to protecting exhibitors against the steadily increasing booking and theatre combines that curtail product. As Mr. H. M. Warner expressed it:

"'We have decided to franchise our product to all exhibitors, whether big or small, for any period from two to ten years.

"'This franchise, which is virtually an option on Warner product for successive years, gives the exhibitor the protection and security of knowing that he need no longer be forced against the wall because he lacks the product to keep his theatre open and doing business profitably.

"'Regardless of what other product an exhibitor wishes to book for his house, he is safe in knowledge that through the Warner franchise, that may extend from two to ten years, according to the term decided upon, he has the opportunity to expand and keep right on growing.

"'From the very inception of our organization, which, until a month ago, was limited to production and distribution through the state right plan, we have striven to work with the exhibitor and for the exhibitor, retaining our independence and thereby enabling showmen to retain theirs.

"'Now that we have purchased the Vitagraph company, and thus procured our own distribution centers throughout the world, we have gone a step further. Through our new franchise policy, we now offer exhibitors renewed encouragement to remain in business profitably and, at the same time, back that up with the high calibre of product we have scheduled for production and release this coming season.

"'It was no simple thing to decide upon the new sales policy that would govern the Warner exchanges. It needed discussion pro and con by men who had operated the distributing centers we are now using, and knew the snags and obstacles to be avoided.

"'The manager of every exchange we now control in this country was present at the sales conference we held on the coast, and it was from these men, as well as the Warner executives who have helped the organization reach the goal it set itself years ago, that the solution came.'"

No "Joint Adventure" Rules Judge Dismissing Gleichman-Famous Suit

PHIL GLEICHMAN, former proprietor of the Broadway Strand Theatre, Detroit, lost his damage suit against the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation on May 27 when Judge Frank Lamb handed down a decision declaring that no "joint adventure" existed. He dismissed the case on that ground.

Attorneys for both Gleichman and Famous Players-Lasky consumed more than three days in summing up and refuting the charges that the New York corporation broke its five-year contract with the plaintiff. Gleichman charged that in 1922, three years after the original agreement was signed, Famous abrogated the contract and gave their pictures to the John H. Kunsky Enterprises. Kunsky was named as co-defendant when the suit started but later the charge against him was withdrawn.

Figures showing the amount of gross revenue taken in at the Broadway Strand during the three years Famous served the house with pictures were revealed during the trial, as well as the net profits of Famous from rentals and percentage of gross on pictures played at the Kunsky theatres. The latter figures were brought forth by George W. Trendle, general manager for Kunsky, only after a bitter legal battle to prevent their introduction as evidence.

"'Get more money' was behind every move made by Famous Players," declared Robert M. Brownson, one of Gleichman's attorneys, in summing up his case to Judge Frank Lamb Tuesday afternoon. "They were mighty glad to persuade Gleichman to borrow money and purchase the Broadway Strand when they needed an exclusive Paramount house in Detroit, but when Kunsky opened his big Capitol Theatre, only a couple of blocks away, and they saw Gleichman losing money and realized a better revenue producer was in sight they proceeded to ditch Geichman."

Brownson produced court decisions to prove the contract entered into between the two parties was a "joint adventure" and John C. Bills, attorney for Famous, introduced a like number of decisions to prove no partnership existed.

Famous held that at the end of the third year Gleichman broke the five-year agreement by negligence in paying film rentals, failure to pay a $1,000 note that was overdue and refusal to pay rentals demanded for certain pictures.

The case consumed almost three weeks and attracted nation-wide attention because of the influence the decision will have in the making of future contracts between a producer and an exhibitor.

During the trial Sidney R. Kent, general manager of Famous Players; George Weeks, sales manager; Al Lichtman, former sales manager; Harry Ross, division manager, and George W. Trendle, general manager of the Kunsky theatres, as well as Gleichman, the plaintiff, appeared on the witness stand.

But we must have the money first."

The schedule for dues for the year ending June 1, 1926, is as follows:

Theatres	Annually	Semi-Annually	Quart.
500 seats or under	$26	$13	$6.50
500 to 1000	52	26	13.00
1000 to 1500	78	39	19.50
1500 to 2000	104	52	26.00
2000 to 2500	130	65	32.50
Over 2500 seats	156	78	39.00

Make checks payable to Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America or L. M. Sagal, Treasurer.

"Millions for Defense but not one Play-date for Tribute" is the slogan of a pamphlet being mailed to exhibitors from national headquarters. Attached to this is a pledge card which calls for the recipient listing the theatres he owns or operates, their seating capacities and length of runs. This reads in part:

"Realizing as I do that my PLAY DATES are the most valuable asset of my theatre and that only by allocating a fair number of these to recognized independent producers can I be assured of my continued independence and be assured of an ample supply of quality product, I HEREBY PLEDGE for the season 1925-26 that I will reserve for them..... play dates."

The pamphlet on the importance of play-dates is as follows:

YOUR PLAY DATES—Your greatest asset and the most essential thing for the producer and distributor, must be allotted most carefully so they will not be used against you.

At the National Convention in Milwaukee, a Bureau of Trade and Commerce was formed to promote business relations between the Independent Theatre Owner and the Independent Producer and Distributor, because it is most apparent that there must be mutual co-operation between them if either is to survive.

It is the purpose of this Bureau to give to these "Independents"—producers and distributors who are not building and operating theatres in competition with their customers, the greatest possible number of play dates.

For that purpose we drew up the enclosed pledge card for the mobilization of PLAY DATES for the Independents; and by the enthusiastic response in written pledges which we received at the Convention, we know that the independent theatre owners realize that if they are to continue in business themselves they must give a greater percentage of their play dates to the independent producers and distributors than ever before.

We know you want to do your part in preserving the Independence of the Industry also, and would urge you to fill out the enclosed PLAY DATE CARD and return it signed to this office at the earliest possible moment. We are enclosing a return addressed envelope for your greater convenience.

We will not presume to attempt to tell you how to run your own business, we only urge that you carefully scan the market for the coming year and assign a far greater number of play dates to the real Independents than you have ever done before. This you can do with the full assurance that there will be an ample supply of Quality pictures for your needs. Our survey shows that.

There will be plenty of Independent pictures of the highest quality. YOU have hundreds of PLAY DATES. See to it that a proper proportion of these are given to these Quality Independent pictures. Fill out the enclosed card and let your conscience be your guide. Remember that every play date given to a producer-distributor-exhibitor is a brick in a theatre in competition with you or a fellow exhibitor. Do not be short-sighted. Look ahead and encourage the independent producer and distributor to make better and better product by your active, personal support of PLAY DATES this year. Unless they get this assurance from you, they cannot remain in business, and without the independent producer and distributor what hope has the independent theatre owner. Your Interests are inseparable and by helping each other you help yourself.

Your Play Dates properly filled mean life to your theatre, in that your screen is adequately supplied with product. Your play dates equitably distributed among Independents mean money to those producing and distributing forces who are doing most to keep you in business, money which will enable them to continue to do so.

Disregard the "baits" that will be held out for your play dates by producer-distributor-exhibitor concerns. Every play date you give them weakens the Independent Producer and Distributor. Be a real Independent by supporting the Independents and return the pledge card to us promptly. We will soon have momentous news for you regarding our Bureau of Trade and Commerce, and will also send you a complete list of all those Producers and Distributors who have affiliated themselves with us, so that we can bring to them the greatest possible help and assistance.

chain. The Capitol, Royal and Gem of Little Rock, Ark. are enlisted, while A. L. Block, president of the Circle Theatre, Indianapolis, remarks, "We are fully of the belief that the new pictures for the coming season are going to be better than any we have been privileged to see before. This in itself is of such tremendous importance that it should help materially to obtain the desired result."

John H. Kunsky of Detroit, Harry M. Crandall of Washington, George H. McDermit of Oklahoma City, Frank Dowler, Jr. of Atlanta, are other names found among the list of exhibitors who have enthusiastically accepted the idea. A perusal of these endorsement shows not one State that has not its quota of theatres anxious to participate.

Changes in Staff of N. Y. Film Commission

The effect of a Democratic majority on the New York State Motion Picture Commission, which came about recently through the appointment of Mrs. Elizabeth V. Colbert, of Albany, as one of the heads of the Commission, who succeeded Mrs. Helen M. Hosmer, of Buffalo, a Republican, has become apparent during the past week or so. As the Commission now stands, the only Republican member is George H. Cobb, the chairman, the other two members being Democrats.

T. J. Donnelly, of New York City, has been named in place of Fred Wightman, as a deputy, at a salary of $4,000, while Mrs. Sally Minsterer, of Brooklyn, drawing a like salary, has been named in place of Mrs. Burton, of Rochester, a Republican leader in her home district, and who has been with the Commission almost from the time of its inception back in 1921. Mrs. Anna Connelly, of Yonkers, drawing a salary of $3,500 has been named in place of Edna LaRose, who came to the Commission as a Republican appointee at the time of its organization, and who was formerly connected with the Governor's office at Albany during the Whitman administration.

LUBLINER AND TRINZ are following their policy of incorporating separate companies for their leading theatres and last week announced the formation of the Congress Theatre Company with a capital of $50,000. The headquarters for the new company will be at 307 North Michigan avenue. The principals of the new organization are Joseph Trinz, Harry M. Lubliner and Joseph Stern.

The new moving picture theatre planned for Springfield, Ill., by the Balaban Katz Midwest circuit that is to go up on the southeast corner of Jefferson and 5th streets in that city may be turned over to the Orpheum circuit for their direction according to the report received from Springfield last week. The new house is planned to seat 2,500 and will be one of the largest theatres in central Illinois. At the present time the Orpheum circuit owns and operates the Majestic Theatre at Springfield.

The new Jeffrey Theatre at 71st and Jeffrey avenue, Chicago, which was opened recently under the management of Lew Goldberg has passed from his hands to a syndicate composed of Newell and Retchin, who own the Howard, Adelphi and other houses on the north side and Arnold Schaak owner of the Panorama and Keystone theatres on Sheridan Road. The new managers have organized the Jeffrey Amusement Company with Lester Retchin as president, Henry E. Newell secretary and Arnold Schaak treasurer.

Another new theatre for Belmont avenue, Chicago, was announced last week by A. M. Ruttenberg. The house will be erected on the east side of Cicero avenue 100 feet north of Belmont avenue by the Belmont Park Theatre Enterprises Inc. The cost for the land, building and equipment, it is said, will exceed a half million dollars. The house will seat 1,800 and will have all latest equipment. Work is expected to start in July and the house will be ready for opening early in the spring of 1926.

The Gregory circuit of theatres is now composed of ten theatres in nearby cities with two houses under construction, one in Chicago and the other at Hammond, Indiana. The new house under construction in Chicago will be known as the Gregory Theatre and

Darkening Also of Sax's Rialto Gives Rise to Reports That Warners and Fox May Build for Outlet—Acute First Run Situation

TWO highly important deals, involving downtown houses and any number of reports concerning other transactions in the making, constitute a summary of Milwaukee activities during the last week.

The most important development was the announcement that Universal has signed a long term lease for the Alhambra, second largest motion picture theatre in the city, heretofore controlled by the Uihlein interests of Milwaukee.

The second was the consummation of a deal whereby the Rialto, belonging to the Saxe chain, will be closed shortly and remodeled into a drugstore.

The Alhambra transaction recalls the address delivered during the convention of the M. P. T. O. of A. here recently by Carl Laemmle in which the Universal chief declared he did not intend to buy houses in cities where his company has an outlet for its product, but at the same time warned that where the door is shut to Universal the only course left is to buy or build.

Universal obtains possession of the Alhambra, a 3,000 seat house, on August 1. The consideration involved and the exact number of years which the lease will run have not been revealed.

While Universal, through the deal, has obtained an outlet for its product, Warner Bros., Metro-Goldwyn, Fox and other companies appear, as a result of the transaction, to be without a first run house to depend upon.

This situation has given rise to countless rumors, some apparently founded on fact and others mere gossip, but all forecasting events which may change the entire complexion of downtown theatre row.

Among the most persistent reports is one that Warner Bros. and Fox will each seek to obtain footholds by purchasing houses. The name of Warner Bros. has been linked with the Butterfly Theatre, owned and operated at present as a second run house by John Freuler. This theatre, however, is one of the oldest in the city, has only a thousand seats, lacks a lobby and has proven unsuccessful in recent years when attempts were made to operate it on a first run basis. For these reasons, the skeptics are not placing much faith in this report.

Fox, on the other hand, has been linked with the Garden. The Garden, a house of modern construction, belongs to the Uihleins and it is considered a certainty that with the Alhambra disposed of, attempts will be made to let go of that also since it always has been the weaker of the two.

Both Fox and Warners apparently realize that without a house of their own the door appears to be pretty well barred in Milwaukee. The Alhambra, it is understood, will play approximately a dozen pictures outside the Universal banner and with a drop in admission prices expected, it is felt that Warners could not find a place there even among the dozen.

While the larger independents are attempting to figure out some way to dispose of their pictures, it appears that members of the so-called Big Three are in for somewhat the same trouble.

With the Alhambra no longer to be considered in the market, the Big Three has only Saxe's Wisconsin and Strand to turn to. First National, by virtue of the franchise which Saxe holds, is assured of being taken care of. Not so with Metro-Goldwyn and Paramount, however, and indications point to a merry battle between these two to land the two leading Saxe houses.

Concerning other reports, there is talk also that Balaban and Katz are seeking an entry in Milwaukee. This appears to have some support, since it was generally under-

Many New Theatre Projects Start for North Carolina

ARTHUR LUCAS, of Atlanta, for many years a prime factor in motion picture circles in the South, has invaded the Carolina territory and evidences a desire to have a large chain of houses in this territory. His acquisition of the State and Superba Theatres in Raleigh, North Carolina, came simultaneously with the signing of a thirty years lease on the Ideal, Charlotte, and closely after the opening of his new Egyptian theatre, Greenville, South Carolina.

Lucas announces that he will begin on June 1st extensive alterations on the Ideal in Charlotte. A lot to the rear of the theatre has been purchased, and the theatre proper will be enlarged to almost double its present capacity. Thirty-thousand dollars, as a minimum, will be expended on alterations and improvements.

Many improvements are also under way since his acquisition of the Raleigh houses, entire re-arrangement of lobbies to both theatres already being under way. The new Egyptian at Greenville, recently opened by Lucas is said to be one of the most beautifully furnished interiors possessed by any theatre in the South. Jack Reville, formerly of the National and Broadway, Richmond, Va., is looking after Lucas' interests in Raleigh as general manager.

S. S. Stevenson, general manager of Stevenson Theatres, Inc., announced during the past week the immediate construction of new theatres in Goldsboro and Burlington, North Carolina, to add to his rapidly growing chain of popular priced movie houses. Stevenson has worked out a set of uniform theatre construction plans, which he states will be followed, generally, in the building of all new Stevenson theatres, so that there may be maintained a uniform standard of appearance, both outside and inside, and uniform service to patrons in all the Stevenson houses. These plans closely follow the Cameo, opened last February by this circuit in Rocky Mount, North Carolina.

Coincident with the Stevenson announcements in Goldsboro and Burlington came announcements from Messrs. H. R. Mason and McIntyre, the respective native theatre operators in these towns, that they would match the Stevenson houses in each town with new theatres of their own at an early date.

The Stevenson circuit is already operating in Raleigh, Henderson, Wilson, Greenville and Rocky Mount, having two houses in Henderson, where the home office of the circuit is located. It has been rumored that plans were under way for a large, modern house in Henderson, to replace the Princess there.

will be located at Leavitt and Archer avenue on the south side. R. Le Vine and Co. are building the house which will seat 2,500 and be ready for opening this fall. The new theatre at Hammond will be built on the northeast corner of Homan and Russell avenue in that city and will include a huge dance hall besides a 3,500 seat theatre of the latest design. Work has also been started on this house.

The Amalgamated Bank of Hammond will build a 15-story building next to the new house and this will bring the principal business of that hustling steel city to the theatre corner. S. J. Gregory of Chicago is president and secretary of the new circuit, William Klinze of Hammond is treasurer and G. Shearer of Hammond is vice president. Ted Schlanger is chief booker for the circuit with offices in the State Lake building on North State street. During the past week J. L. McCurdy, formerly managing director of the Randolph Theatre, was made general manager of the circuit.

The Sante Fe Theatre at Tuluca, Ill., has been opened under the management of E. Barriclaw and J. Toffli who are showing exclusive picture programs in the house.

Edward Holland has taken over the management of the Grand Theatre at Lincoln, Ill., and will fix the house up.

The Gregory circuit is planning an early fall opening for their new theatre that is going up at 35th and Archer avenue, Chicago.

Wilford L. Swanson, J. C. Leaming, E. A. Siegal and E. A. Bakkers have organized the Lawrence Amusement Company with a capital of $125,000 and offices at 160 North La Salle street, Chicago, to build and conduct theatres and other places of amusement.

Harold L. Hill has sold the Rivoli Theatre building at Elston and Keystone avenues, Chicago, to Ralph A. and Geo. Schwartz for $215,000. The new owners will make some improvements in the structure.

Plans for the new Diversey Theatre at Clark and Diversey boulevard, Chicago, call for the opening of the house about the middle of July under the joint direction of the Orpheum circuit and Balaban and Katz organization.

With the coming of Paul Ash as musical director of the McVickers Theatre several changes have been made by the Balaban and Katz organization among their musical directors, S. Boguslawski being transferred from the Central Park Theatre to the McVickers as assistant to Mr. Ash and is succeeded there by Henry Keller, formerly of the Orpheum circuit. Leopold Spitalny is now the head of the Tivoli musical organization and Adolphe Dumont has been transferred to the Riveria Theatre on the North side. Joseph Engelhardt is the leader at the Roosevelt Theatre and musical director Nathaniel Finston is now assisted by Lewis R. Lipstone formerly of the Roosevelt Theatre.

THIS PRODUCER IS PRODUCING

Herman Gantvoort, known throughout the motion picture industry as William ("Bill") Holland, an expert on motion picture advertising and the author of "David Wark Griffith," a biography of the master director, is the father of twin baby girls, Anne and Betz, born to the charming Mrs. Gantvoort last Saturday night in the New York Nursery and Childs Hospital. Mrs. Gantvoort, who is prominent in opera and concert circles in New York and Chicago, and her babies, are doing well. Mr. Gantvoort turned from motion picture activities a year ago, and became a producer of legitimate plays, "Hell's Bells," the crashing comedy success now at the George M. Cohan Theatre being his initial adventure, with two additional plays going into rehearsal shortly and with other "Hell's Bells" companies being shaped up for other cities and the road. Our congratulations to the proud parents.

N. J. M. P. T. O. Names Committees and Makes Plans for Convention

THE Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New Jersey held their monthly meeting on Wednesday, May 27, at the New Monterey Hotel, Asbury Park, New Jersey, when plans for the New Jersey Convention were discussed and committees for the convention were appointed.

The committees are as follows: Entertainment Committee, Henry P. Nelson, Morris Kitinsky and Leon Rosenblatt; Committee on Attendance will be headed by Sidney Samuelson as chairman, with twenty-one members still to be selected; Finance Committee, William Keegan, Jacob Unger and William H. Lamont; Reception Committee, Fred Mertens, Peter Adams and Pierson Hume; Business Committee, Harry Hecht, William Hunt and Louis Rosenthal; Registration Committee, Benjamin Schindler, Eugene Steinhardt and Louis Castlebaum; Speakers Committee, I. M. Hirshblond, Charles Hildinger and George Jacobs.

The committees will start upon an active campaign for entertainment at the coming convention, which will be held at the New Monterey on June 29, 30 and 31, Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday.

R. F. Woodhull, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, addressed the meeting and received a great ovation, this being his first appearance before the New Jersey board since his elevation as national president.

The reduction in power rates was taken up and a letter sent out by President Jos. M. Seider to all theatre owner members. Three engineers were engaged by the New Jersey organization on a contingent basis, and if they are successful it will mean a great saving to the theatre owners as well as a rebate for overcharge since 1914.

The recent national convention was reported and the board approved of the report of the national convention delegates. New Jersey members were asked to sign pledge cards allotting part of their play dates to independent producers and await further advice from the national organization whose board of directors meets on June 3 and 4.

The organization of New Jersey theatre owners was greatly gratified on the election of R. F. Woodhull to the national presidency and on the election of their president, Jos. M. Seider, as a member of the national board of directors.

A full board of directors was present, as well as the officers of the organization. Those present were:

President Jos. M. Seider, Vice-Presidents Charles Hildinger and Peter Adams, Secretary Henry P. Nelson, Treasurer William Keegan; board members, Sidney Samuelson, R. F. Woodhull, Benjamin Schindler, Louis Rosenthal, I. M. Hirshblond, Leo Juskowitz, Leon Rosenblatt and W. C. Hunt.

President Seider's report on the month's activities was read and approved by all present.

stood that the B. and K. circuit made a strenuous effort to obtain the Alhambra before it passed into Laemmle's hands. Balaban and Katz also have been mentioned in connection with the Garden and there is some talk, too, that an effort is being made to buy into the Saxe chain.

Who will manage the Alhambra for Universal is also the cause of considerable speculation. O. J. Wooden, who has acted as director of both the Alhambra and Garden, will for the present, at least, look after the affairs of the Garden alone. Leo A. Landau, who preceded Wooden, is being mentioned for the Alhambra post. He at present is in Minneapolis.

STERN BUILDING TWO IN N. J.

Joseph Stern's Theatrical Enterprises of Newark, N. J., announce the building of two more theatres. One under way is the Coliseum in Bloomfield, expected to cost about $450,000. The other is the Ritz in Newark, figured at approximately $500,000.

Woodhull Quizzes Burkan on Plan

Attorney Nathan Burkan at this week's meeting of the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce in the Hotel Astor, New York, presented an outline of a plan, substantially, it is said, to negotiate for franchises for various exchanges throughout the country. The lawyer indicated that he will make known the details of this proposition, which he is quoted as describing as his idea of a good plan, at next week's meeting.

R. F. Woodhull, newly elected president of the M. P. T. O. A., who was in attendance at this session which was more or less open as was evidenced by the presence of several associate members, interrogated Burkan on several points in relation to his plan. The result of this questioning, we are told, was that it was definitely established that advocates of the plan would not be subjected to 100 per cent. booking of any particular brand of product. Woodhull we also gather, pledged himself at that time to support any worthy proposition.

A review of the happenings in Milwaukee, accomplishments and optimism were the subjects incorporated in an interesting address to the T. O. C. C. by Sydney S. Cohen, chairman of that organization's board of directors and also head of the national directorate. —T. W.

"Drusilla with a Million"

Mary Carr, Human Interest Story, Pathos, Comedy and Drama Should Spell Box-Office Success
Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Director F. Harmon Weight has turned out what we believe will prove to be an excellent audience attraction in his picturization of Elizabeth Cooper's novel, "Drusilla With a Million, which is being distributed through F. B. O.

Many will probably be surprised to find it is not the narrative of what a jazzy young woman did with a million, for Drusilla is a lovable old lady in a home for the aged, too poor to pay her way like the others and therefore the drudge of the place, when she falls heir to the fortune. And no better selection for this role could have been made than Mary Carr.

Interest is immediately awakened as to how Drusilla is going to spend the million. Her request for the lawyer to have the auto go a little faster makes you wonder if she is going to step out a bit, but the problem soon solves itself for her and to your satisfaction, too. She "mothers" a baby abandoned on her doorstep and this opens the way for a lot more and soon her home is like an orphan asylum, with Drusilla finding complete happiness in caring for the unfortunate little ones.

This gives to the picture intense human interest and will make it appeal strongly to the feminine contingent. A baby is almost always a hit on the screen and there are more than a dozen here, and these little ones get several laughs as well, especially one fine bit where one little fellow splashes milk on another one and makes him cry.

The dramatic portion of the story is supplied by a little orphan girl who marries the hero when it is disinherited, is persuaded by the villainess to leave him, has a baby in the midst of her struggle with poverty and abandons it on Drusilla's doorstep. Arrested, she refuses to divulge her husband's name. A particularly brutal cross-examination develops unusually strong drama and heart-rending pathos that will bring many a tear, and through it all there is exceptionally well handled suspense.

Director Weight's handling of the suspense is one of the big points, for while the hero is searching for his wife, several times he just misses finding her. While this is a familiar theatrical device, it is extremely effective and will bring the spectators to the edge of their seats in their anxiety to see whether he will find her this time. The best use of this is in the courtroom scene where the villainess gets the husband out of the courtroom by feigning illness. Just at the right psychological moment the husband returns. Another instance of the director's cleverness is in the way in which he immediately winds up the story after this big emotional climax with no unnecessary footage.

The small cast was excellently chosen and all register strongly in their respective roles. Mary Carr is ideal and makes Drusilla a human, lovable and delightfully motherly sort of a person; Kenneth Harlan is clean-cut as the young husband. Priscilla Bonner is very fine in the pathetic role of the orphan girl-wife, a type of role in which we have never seen her before. William Humphrey as the hard-hearted lawyer and Clarie Du Brey as his scheming daughter make you hate them intensely.

With its exceptional heart-interest, pathos, stirring drama and the plight of the abandoned babies "mothered" by Drusilla, its human comedy, "Drusilla With a Million" makes a big appeal to the emotions. It will bring both laughter and tears and we predict for it a big box-office success.

Based on novel by Elizabeth Cooper.
Directed by F. Harmon Weight.
Length, 7,391 feet.

Story

Drusilla Doane, a lovable old lady, becomes an inmate of an old lady's home, but as she has no money to pay her way like the others, she is made the drudge. Elias Arnold, a distant relative, has amassed a million but because of his son Collin's escapades he disinherits him and leaves his million to Drusilla who goes to live in the mansion. A baby is abandoned on her doorstep and she takes it in and soon the place is a regular orphanage and arouses the ire of her haughty neighbors. Collin, injured in an auto accident, is nursed back to health by Sally May, an orphan, and he marries her. They are happy until Daphne Thornton who wants to eventually break the will and marry Collin, persuades her she is ruining Collin's life. Sally May leaves and has a hard fight with poverty. Finally she has a baby and in trying to leave it on Drusilla's doorstep is arrested, the neighbors determining to make a test case. In court Daphne sees Sally May and by a ruse gets Collin out of the room. In a cruel cross-examination, Sally May refuses to tell her husband's name. Just as her baby is to be taken away from her, Collin returns and takes her in his arms, as he has been searching for her all the time. Drusilla takes the two with the baby to live with her, and share the million.

"Scandal Proof"

Shirley Mason and John Roche a Good Team in William Fox Drama
Reviewed by Sumner Smith

"Scandal Proof," starring Shirley Mason, can truly be called an action picture. This Fox production starts off with just enough characterization and swings smoothly into the plot. This progresses with a distinct rise in dramatic interest and with never a pause in the tempo, even where human interest stuff is introduced for the sake of class audience appeal. It is action all the way, well knit action that makes for a story of absorbing interest.

The drama has to do with a girl shopkeeper whom circumstance throws in with a dissolute youth and whom fate singles out as a murderess after his death. The climax of the action, however, is not her acquittal but the stigma that attaches to her despite it—how it deprives her of employment as a maid and threatens to prevent a happy culmination of a romance.

Shirley Mason is exceptionally attractive and very clever in the lead. She will have an audience's sympathy at all times. John Roche, playing opposite her, has a good role and creates an impression of sincerity. They make a good team. Freeman Wood is effective as the roysterer and Hazel Howell striking as a blonde vamp. The other players all perform well, with little Billy Fay very appealing as the baby.

There is good drama and good heart interest stuff in this picture and it is made doubly effective by the acting. The feature ought to please most audiences.

Story

Grace Whitney innocently goes on a wild house party with Monte Brandster and a "gold digger" named Thelma Delores. The latter kills Monte in a fit of jealousy and circumstance points to Grace. She is acquitted when Herbert Wyckoff, a clean youth, testifies in her favor, and she falls in love with him. Two years later, as Enid Day, Grace is governess in the Hollister home. Wyckoff and sister visit. He tells Grace she must leave, adding that in his court testimony he probably let his sympathy outweigh his judgment. Mrs. Hollister, a flighty matron, is in love with Dicky Thorbeck. Wyckoff comes to believe in Grace and realizes he loves her. Mrs. Hollister and Dicky are about to be caught by Hollister in a bedroom when Grace, for the sake of the baby, takes the matron's place. She is denounced and recognized as the supposed murderess, but Wyckoff still believes in her and her marriage with him brings all of her troubles to an end.

"Just a Woman"

Clever Twists and Excellent Acting Make This First National Feature Pleasing Entertainment

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

A play by Eugene Walter, the author of many stage successes, furnishes the basis for the M. C. Levee production "Just A Woman" which First National is distributing, with Conway Tearle, Claire Windsor and Percy Marmont in featured roles.

These three form what might be termed a friendly triangle although the vamp in the story seeks to make it appear otherwise. The bare outline of the plot is a familiar one. A man who suddenly becomes wealthy is ensnared by a vamp who seeks to make him divorce his wife and marry her, but he learns his wife is true blue and reconciliation occurs.

In the twists that have been given the working out of this theme it becomes pleasing entertainment. For instance, the main thing is the playing up of the woman angle, as implied by the title. The story hinges in its early reels on the success of the friend's invention and it is the wife who puts over the big contract that means wealth for all and she later shows her cleverness too, and finally it is a woman who nearly gets the best of her, the vamp who stages a frame-up.

The women have it all their own way in this picture for they pull the strings and the men do their bidding. This should make it appeal to the fair sex. Although it would hardly seem plausible that the hero would fall so easily for the vamps line which is so obvious to the spectator, the story for the most part is worked out smoothly and with considerable cleverness and holds the attention and interest. While not to be taken too seriously it is entertaining.

Much of this is due to the work of the three featured players and a fourth, Dorothy Revier, who is not so well known. Claire Windsor gives a bright and pleasing interpretation of the role of the clever wife, Conway Tearle, except for the ease with which he falls for the vamp is convincing as the husband, and with little to do Percy Marmont is effective as the loyal friend. Well up in the class with these is the portrayal of the vamp by Dorothy Revier who looks and acts the part of the charmer admirably. While not unknown to many fans, we believe this is to be her biggest opportunity and she certainly registers in the big-time class. Eddie Gribbon introduces some effective comedy.

June Holden finally persuades her husband, Robert, to enter into an agreement with their friend, George Rand, a struggling inventor, to allow him the use of a room in their home and facilities to experiment with a new steel process in return for half interest. Rand proves successful and Robert enthusiastically arranges sale of the idea. June refuses the offer as too low and faces the directors of the corporation with the ultimatum that her husband, a practical steel man, be made president and the cash and royalty be increased very much. They find their joke, that she is "just a woman" and should be easy to handle, has an awful back kick. With wealth comes gaiety and Robert soon is ensnared by a designing vamp who in her endeavor to convince him that more than friendship exists between June and George arranges a frame-up by having an ape get into June's room on a night when George is in the house and Robert has purposely remained away. June's screams naturally brought Robert and a flash-light photo was used as evidence. In the hearing before a referee the question of the custody of the child is brought up and to keep him June denies Robert is his father. Realizing the extent of this sacrifice of her good name, Robert faces the vamp and learns of the frame-up. Going back to the judge he apologizes to his wife and withdraws his suit and begs June to forgive him, which she does.

"I'll Show You the Town"

Reginald Denny Star in Great Universal Jewel Entertainment Picture

Reviewed by Sumner Smith

"I'll Show You the Town," a Universal Jewel starring Reginald Denny, is the finest sort of entertainment. Packed from beginning to end with chuckles and roars of laughter, it will send all theatre audiences away in the best spirits imaginable. There is not a bit of forced humor in it—every bit depends on the plot and advances it; hence its great appeal. We predict that it will break at least a few theatre records.

Reginald Denny is immense and his support, headed by Marion Nixon, Lilyan Tashman, Margaret Livingston and Cissy Fitzgerald—the women with whom he gets into difficulties—is of the best. Minor players each have opportunities to register humor and not one of them fails. Hayden Stevenson, Helen Greene, Neely Edwards, Lionel Braham—they're all great.

Elmer Davis' story is exceptionally good screen material. Its two highlights are a man's attempt to secretly dine three women at one time in a restaurant and, later, to remain on the best of terms with them when they call at his hotel and, furthermore, get rid of a raging husband and the wife that the hero has befriended.

From the standpoint of pure comedy, probably the funniest scenes are those in the restaurant between Denny and Cissy Fitzgerald She imagines herself drunk on prohibition champagne and Denny rivals her grotesque dancing when a bit of ice slips down the back of his neck. Eventually they are put out of the restaurant. While Denny is consistently good, too much praise cannot be given Miss Fitzgerald for her work in the scenes allotted her.

The hotel scene has to do with an escape from the raging husband. His wife is the butt of the comedy, being shoved from one room to another. The denouement is effectively staged in a corridor, before the elevator, and in these scenes the characters are perfectly posed. How well knit is the story becomes apparent in this final big scene which brings all the characters together.

This picture, after the first reel, has a swing and snap to it seldom found. There is practically no waste footage after that reel, though the picture runs 7,400 feet. The comedy begins along rather legitimate lines, swings off into farce and ultimately turns into rich burlesque, without, however, impairing the entertainment value in the least—really, helping it.

People like to laugh, and here is a clean, speedy, highly humorous opportunity for them to laugh. Book "I'll Show You the Town" and exploit it for a clean-up.

Story

Alec Dupree, college professor, is called on to induce a middle-aged widow to donate funds to the college. Circumstances find him with engagements with three women at a restaurant the same evening. One is this widow, the second the friend of a friend and the third a charming girl with whom he has fallen in love. He manages the situation for a time by going from one table to the other when a boy pages him. Returned to his hotel, Alec finds an oldtime sweetheart, now married, in his rooms. Her enraged husband shows up and Alec hides her in another room. The male occupant of that room hastily returns her, and she is further moved around. Alec and she are caught just as the elevator discharges his friends of the evening before, and he is discredited. Desperate, he runs off with the girl he loves and wins her "yes."

"The Fighting Demon"

Athletic Stunts, Action and Comedy Make This a Typically Entertaining Talmadge Feature

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

In "The Fighting Demon," his newest release through F. B. O., Richard Talmadge has another congenial story, built especially with a view to allowing him ample opportunities for stunts and naturally falling into the same type of entertainment as his former vehicles.

As usual with Talmadge stories, plausibility is considerably stretched in devising some of the situations. However, this will not affect its entertainment value with this star's fans, who are looking for stunts and fast action, and there is plenty of both here. Measured from this standpoint, it is fully up to if not just a little ahead of Talmadge's average and should amply please his admirers.

In this instance Talmadge is cast as a safe expert who is lured to South America by a gang who want to rob a safe. They rob him of his money so he cannot return and he signs for a prize fight. The night of the fight they kidnap him and force him to open the safe, but he locks them in, rushes to the ring, defeats his opponent, jumps out into the audience and nabs one of the escaping crooks, and incidentally wins the girl. This is just a sample of the action, for a lot more occurs on shipboard as the result of his flirting with the wife of the fighter and being chased all over the vessel. He climbs the rigging, jumps from deck to deck, etc., introducing stunt after stunt, some new, some familiar, but all good and showing off his athletic ability and agility.

It is obvious from the foregoing that Talmadge is perfectly at home here and gives a pleasing performance. His supporting cast is entirely satisfactory and contains several well-known players. A good comedy bit has been injected into a scene between Talmadge and extremely fat Frank Alexander, who appears as a cab driver. There are also a lot of other comedy touches throughout.

"The Fighting Demon" is peppy, fast-moving, action-stunt entertainment that should please the majority.

John Drake gets a job as a designer with a safe company and accepts a lucrative offer as manager of a similar concern in South America. On the boat he incurs the enmity of Diaz, a prize fighter, by flirting with his wife, but falls really in love with Dolores, daughter of the leading banker. Arriving in the town he finds the job was a fake and is even robbed of his money and passport. In desperation he signs to enter a prize fight. In the meantime Belding, the leader of the gang that lured him there, kidnaps him and makes him open the bank's safe. Drake locks the gang inside and summons the police, and then rushes to the fight. He finds Diaz is his opponent but beats him as he knows his weakest points. Pierce, the banker's secretary, in league with the crooks, attempts to escape but Drake jumps out of the ring and nabs him. Drake becomes the popular hero of the town and Dolores declares her love for him.

"Old Home Week"

Thomas Meighan and Lila Lee Score in Paramount Small-Town Farce Comedy

Reviewed by Sumner Smith

In "Old Home Week," a Paramount picture, Thomas Meighan and a competent supporting cast headed by Lila Lee offer an hour or so of highly amusing entertainment. Thomas J. Geraghty has revamped George Ade's story of small-town life somewhat to suit screen purposes, and in directing Victor Heerman has caught the spirit of the thing perfectly and turned out a picture full of ludicrous situations and comical subtitles, easy to laugh over and equally easy to follow on the screen. Most of it is farce comedy, but occasionally the picture strikes a realistic tone when Meighan and Miss Lee are in the forefront and essays a heart throb or two.

With such artists as Meighan and Miss Lee to work with, Director Heerman probably didn't worry much about the acting. The result is that he has devoted considerable attention to selecting backgrounds and these are exceptionally well chosen. Every incident of the small town's celebration of "Old Home Week" is well staged, from the backgrounds to the grouping of the players.

Meighan offers restrained acting where almost any other player would have burlesqued the pseudo oil man's troubles to the limit, but he gets over his points well and at the Rivoli was always successful in bringing the laughs. In fact, the star and Miss Lee have about the only "straight" parts in the picture. Miss Lee is especially fresh and charming as the heroine. Charles Sellon, Larry Wheat, Charles Dow Clark, Leslie Hunt, Max Figman and the others are well cast and, working along broader lines than Meighan, keep the picture constantly funny.

Tom Clark, part owner of a luckless gasoline filling station, is welcomed by his home town during "Old Home Week" as a big oil man. Coleman and Barton, sharpers, have sunk an oil well in the town and sold stock in it. Tom is given full charge of it. Judge Harmon, whose daughter Ethel loves Tom, learns Tom's real business status and exposes him. Tom refuses to give up control of the oil well, which he has found to be a fake, and "salts" it by hitching it to the reservoir, his plan being to sell it back to the crooks. The townspeople misunderstand every move he makes until the sale is completed; then the crooks' rage at being outwitted clears up the situation. Tom is reestablished in public favor and Ethel Harmon accepts him.

"Quicker 'N Lightnin'"

Buffalo Bill, Jr., Scores as Stunt Athlete in Pleasing Western With Unusual Backgrounds

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

While "Quicker 'N Lightnin'," Buffalo Bill, Jr.'s newest picture for Artclass Pictures Corporation, follows along the general lines of the average western, some of the action has been treated in a little lighter vein, giving the star several chances to show his athletic ability. Another "different" feature of this production consists of the use of one of the immense cliff dwellings of the Pueblo Indians of Arizona as the background for a large part of the story.

These two points, plus a story of average interest, which gets into action with the first camera shot and keeps up a good pace, a pleasing romantic angle, just enough melodrama to hold the action together and keep things moving and provide a motive for the action, effective comedy on the part of the star and Harry Todd as his eccentric companion, make this a picture that should not only please western fans but appeal to an even wider clientele.

There is, of course, the usual riding and hand-to-hand encounters. The riding scenes, particularly where the hero escapes and goes for the sheriff, are snappy and there are some striking shots against the rugged Arizona backgrounds. The fighting has at times been given a comedy twist to the point of burlesque, where the hero leads a chase, with the bandits following, and his helpers swat each one as he turns the corner of a building. There is a slight anti-climax here, but the action is again built up for a good melodramatic finish when the hero rescues the girl from a squaw who was about to sacrifice her to the sun god.

Buffalo Bill, Jr., shows here that he is quite a stunt athlete and should be given more opportunities along this line. Dorothy Dorr is attractive as the girl and the other roles are all capably handled.

While the story is not at all times convincing, we think the average patron will find it a pleasing hour's entertainment.

Quicker N' Lightnin' calls on his sweetheart, Helen Harlow, and finds that her father has been lured away. As he is about to search for him, Mowii, a renegade Indian, knocks him out. Lightnin's pal, McNutt, finds him and Harlow returns to find Helen missing. Morella, an Indian girl, tells them Mowii has taken Helen to his lair in a deserted Pueblo village. En route there they find Morella's father has been murdered. Mowii's gang capture the party and imprison them. Lightnin' escapes and passes the guard, who is Morella's sweetheart, and gets word to the sheriff to come with a posse and there is a battle royal in which most of the gang are captured. Mowii and his mother, a Sun Worshipper, escape with Helen. Lightnin' follows and Mowii again knocks him out. Later Lightnin' finds the Squaw is about to sacrifice Helen and grabs the arrow. Mowii appears. Lightnin' impales his arm with the arrow and ties him until the sheriff appears and then takes Helen home with him.

"Three Bases East"

(F. B. O.—Series—Two Reels)

Baseball furnishes the subject for the eighth number of "The Pacemakers" series distributed through F. B. O. which deals with the rivalry of Tom Granger and Merton Randolph for the hand of Nita O'Neill, the belle of Pomeroy College. Interest is worked up in this subject with the familiar device of having the villain, Merton, pull crooked work and keep Tom out of a crucial game. Tom of course does get into the game at last and saves the team from defeat. The college atmosphere has been given by having Merton steal a thesis from Tom, which causes the professor to decide he cannot enter the game. Nita finds it in time to save the situation. While nothing new in the idea, it can be depended upon to work up the interest of baseball fans. There is some amusing comedy contributed by Al Cooke and Kit Guard, but here again old material has been used as a sheet of flypaper is responsible, and Wesley Ruggles has certainly played this up for all it is worth. This number for the average person will hardly be found to measure up to the majority of the series.—C. S. S.

"Earth's Other Half"

(Educational—Hodge Podge—One Reel)

This issue of Lyman Howe's Hodge Podge distributed by Universal is built up on the theory of showing each half of the world how the other half lives and consequently the sections alternate between the two hemispheres. The sections include Seminole Indians in the Florida Everglades, river dwellers in China, a water carrier in South America crossing land inhabited by millions of birds, herding sheep in Scotland, natives of Holland, Indians in Glacier National Park. One of the most interesting sections shows the maguey plant of Mexico which has a spiked leaf. When this spike is pulled out several long fibres are found attached to it, making a natural needle and thread. The comedy is taken care of by cartoon sections showing the manufacture of Swiss cheese and microscopic view of a glass of vodka, both burlesqued.—C. S. S.

"What Price Goofy?"

(Pathe—Comedy—Two Reels)

Beyond a question of a doubt "What Price Goofy?" is one of the best things Charley Chase has ever done. It sparkles with cleverness—tells and puts over some intricate comedy that is real and hilarious. One of the funniest incidents is the hide and seek game with Chase and his dog as the participants. The dog should "bring down" any house. He covers his eyes with his paws as Charley secretes the article, but never fails to find it. The most hilarious part of the hide and seek game is when Charlie endeavors to bury some clothing of another woman and the dog keeps on playing the game. Another clever part is when Chase substitutes a sneak thief and introduces him to his wife as a college professor of table etiquette. The real professor, unknown to the wife, is a woman imprisoned upstairs. She stamps on the floor and at first when the suspicious wife investigates she finds it to be the butler trying out some new dance steps. The sign language between Chase and the butler, played by Lucien Littlefield, is particularly good. Some of the comedy is of the kind which could easily be made risque, but skilful and delicate directing make "What Price Goofy?" clean-cut and wholesome amusement all the way through.—T. W.

"Fun's Fun"

(Educational—Comedy—One Reel)

Although Cliff Bowes and Virginia Vance are the featured players, two little kiddies and two puppies furnish most of the laughs in this Cameo Comedy. A large portion of the footage is taken up with the antics of one kiddie and the dogs that jump out of bed and hide when mamma comes around and later are responsible for the older child getting all mussed up in a mud puddle. Bowes introduces slapstick by sliding down a banister and igniting his trousers from matches in a hip pocket. Later wife sends him to mail letters and he takes one puppy along and ties it to a ladder, a cat causes the dog to run and spills the painter who is on the ladder and this starts a chase. The kiddies and puppies introduce human interest stuff and there is an average amount of comedy.—C. S. S.

"Horace Greeley, Jr."

(Pathe—Comedy—Two Reels)

"Horace Greeley, Jr." is a burlesque on a western, featuring Harry Langdon. It is a comedy without any beginning or end with a goulash of things that make many people laugh. Langdon as a reader of dime novels flivvers into a town of hard men and painted women. Dumb luck makes it possible for him to knock out the toughest guy in a saloon and thereafter he is looked up to as a real hero. He later rescues a girl from a motley horde which he lassoes into the local jail. The title is suggestive of the late Horace Greeley's advice to adventurous and ambitious youth: "Go West, young man. Go West." Langdon is given plenty of latitude and those who like this comedian's work will be well satisfied with Horace Greeley, Jr."—T. W.

"Nobody Wins"

(Universal—Comedy—One Reel)

An amusing idea deftly worked out makes this one of the very best of the series of "Sweet Sixteen" comedies released by Universal under the Bulls Eye brand featuring Arthur Lake and Olice Hasbrouck. Arthur frames with the auctioneer to bid up Olive's portrait but gets stung as another auctioneer closes it out to him at $50.00. Arthur's father refuses to pay and frames with the cops to teach him a lesson. Arthur's rival determines to get the picture and instructs three men to take it from Arthur and pay him. Arthur has gotten a job with a lumber company delivering doors, and each man takes the $2.00 door and pays him fifty for it. So he has plenty of money to turn the tables on his father and when the rival finds he is stung, the boys fight and the portrait is destroyed. Witty subtitles also help in making this an enjoyable little comedy.—C. S. S.

"The Runt"

(Pathe—Cartoon—One Reel)

A little black pig that gets nosed out of his porridge by his bigger and fairer brethren becomes a hero when he rescues the crowd from the slaughter house in "The Runt." The cartoon by Paul Terry is on the order of some familiar nursery stories and should tickle the youngsters and amuse their parents. —T. W.

"The Cloudhopper"

(Educational—Comedy—Two Reels)

The significance of the title of Larry Semon's newest comedy for Educational only becomes apparent in the latter part of the second reel. The action opens in a charity bazaar in the heroine's home and her mischievous little brother is responsible for a lot of the comedy. Larry plays a dual role, that of the hero and of a chap who is too fond of his hootch. Little brother substitutes cigars for frankfurters in the hero's sandwich and makes him sick, while the hootch drinker wastes a box of matches trying to smoke a frankfurter. A couple of conspirators try to steal a secret formula. Frank Alexander, noted for his extreme averdupois dreams he is in swimming, dives from a balcony, falls through the floor and lands in a barrel of paste and gets smeared from head to foot, a situation that is found in almost all Semon comedies. The crooks steal the formula and escape in an aero. The heroine follows in another machine. Larry climbs a rope ladder and gets aboard. Then follows some cleverly handled scenes in which thrills are mixed with comedy with Larry fighting the crooks and coming near falling from the plane, and the supports and wires give way with him. Of course he wins out. The humor does not seem quite as spontaneous and rapid fire as in the average Semon comedy, but it should prove a good offering for the majority of slapstick fans. —C. S. S.

"Scientific Husband"

(Fox—Comedy—Two Reels)

This Sunshine Comedy is built upon two familiar ideas for getting the laughs—a mechanical house where lightning makes the tables and chairs hop around and a negro constantly pursued by a lion. Not particularly well acted, still the agility of the players and the repetition of slapstick stunts may get it by with fans who like riotous comedy. The chairs are hoisted to the ceiling and fall upon the players or with them; the negro gets stuck in the window and is thoughtfully chewed by the lion. There is much aimless chasing through the rooms.—S. S.

"The Showdown"

(Universal—Western—Two Reels)

Art Acord is the star of this Universal Western released under the Mustang brand, appearing as a rather wild young fellow who leaves town after a rough and tumble party. The villain makes it appear that he has defrauded the girl and is trying to blackmail him. He hires a gang to waylay the hero on his return but the scheme goes astray and Acord wins out, thrashing the villain and making him acknowledge his perfidy, which leaves the hero and girl happy together. There is the usual run of action, fighting and some good riding and it should prove of fair entertainment value for Western fans.—C. S. S. More "Shorts" on page 629.

EXHIBITORS' NEWS AND VIEWS

EDITED BY SUMNER SMITH

Community Theatre, Catskill, Taken Over by W. W. Farley

W. W. Farley of Albany has taken over the Community Theatre in Catskill, one of the largest and handsomest houses in the Catskill region. This has been run by M. E. Silberstein, who will now devote his time to writing editorials and managing his daily newspaper. It is understood that William Smalley, who had a house in Catskill, disposed of the theatre to Mr. Silberstein, but whether or not this is to be included in Mr. Farley's holdings is not yet known. Mr. Farley was in New York a part of the past week, stopping at the Hotel Biltmore. Negotiations between Mr. Farley and the owners of the Gateway in Little Falls and the Liberty in Herkimer, which have been under way for three or four weeks, are reported to have fallen through.

Mr. and Mrs. Walter Roberts of the Troy Theatre were pleasantly surprised last week by a visit from Mr. and Mrs. Colby Shaw, who have been at Santa Monica, Cal., for a year and a half. Mr. Shaw conducted the orchestra at the Mark Strand in Albany when Mr. Roberts was handling the house. The Shaws will remain in the East this summer and may decide eventually not to return to the West Coast.

There are three exhibitors with bull dog tendencies in Dover Plains, a village barely large enough to support one house, but when it comes to giving up no one of the three is inclined to make the first move. Take L. C. Adams, who has a house in Dover Plains, as well as another in Copake, and who runs his own machine, and who was along Film Row last week. Do you think he would move elsewhere? Well, hardly. He is there to stay, as he says, and he means what he says.

Walter Suckno of the Albany and Regent theatres in Albany is going to "buck the tiger" this summer, and will play the best pictures obtainable without paying any attention whatever to hot weather or daylight saving.

N. S. Fleck, a newcomer in the business, has taken over the Rex in Middleburg and reopened it. Mr. Fleck was in town getting acquainted along Film Row during the week.

The Strand in Canajoharie, run by James Wood, closed last week. According to all reports it will shortly become one of the Schine houses. Rumor also has it that Jimmy Chest's theatre, the Capitol, also in Canajoharie, may go over to the combine.

They can't keep out of the game. Mike Freedman resigned from Farash Theatres, Inc., of Schenectady a few weeks ago to enter the real estate business. Last week, however, he was discovered sitting complacently in the office of the State Theatre, blocking out the week's advertising.

Jake Rosenthal of the Rose in Troy isn't stingy when it comes to paying those who participate in his amateur nights, even though their acts are not prize winners. Everyone gets at least a dollar, although the winner, decided by applause, gets a crisp five-dollar bill, second place receiving three dollars, third place two dollars and the remainder in iron men. Every Wednesday night carries amateur acts along with pictures, last Wednesday night having no less than nine acts, some even from Albany. When Jake started his amateur nights two or three weeks ago he was a bit afraid that there might be a little too much disturbance and so had three policemen on hand. The acts went over extremely well, and instead of disturbance Mr. Rosenthal found nothing but applause, so he dispensed with two of the cops.

Favorite Fish Food

The secret is out! Uly S. Hill, managing director of the Mark Strand in Albany and the Troy and Lincoln theatres in Troy, has at last disclosed how he catches so many fish. The mystery has been one of years, carefully guarded by Mr. Hill, as he would return with superior smile and full creel. Mr. Hill uses raw liver instead of worms as bait, having discovered that raw liver, chopped into bits, is used as food at the state fish hatcheries. Naturally enough, when a fish is brought up on liver from his youngest days he acquires an appetite for it.

Mr. Hill planned a fishing trip to Lake Champlain for Decoration Day, but has been obliged to postpone it because of the Zone meeting in Syracuse on June 2. But when he does go, watch out! His son Norman must have been let in on the secret, for he is doing considerable fishing these days near the Hill home at West Sand Lake, generally returning with from twenty to thirty fish, but as Friend Uly likes fish to the extent of three times a day and seven days to the week, few reach the neighbors.

Visitors along Film Row during the past week included Charles Sesonske of the Grand in Johnstown, who drove into town like a king with a chauffeur at the wheel, and Lew Fischer, who dropped into town from Fort Edward and other places where he has theatres.

Herman Vineberg, manager of the Mark Strand in Albany, will take a vacation the fore part of June. But don't embarrass the man by asking whether it will be the mountains or the seashore, for Herman has made his plans to spend the time working around the new house which he recently bought in one of the finest residential sections of Albany, "fixin' up the lawn and things generally." Mr. Vineberg completed his second year as manager of the local house on May 21.

W. W. Mase of Prattsville is the latest to send in his check to the Albany Zone Committee. He was in town Monday and after dropping into headquarters decided that the work of the committee merited his support.

On account of illness, the Pastime in Fort Jackson, run by R. E. Knapp, cancelled bookings from May 23 on, according to letters received by various exchanges.

Otto Eigen of the Academy in Sharon Springs is rather downhearted these days, and well may be, for on June 1 he will be forced to vacate the house which he has been running for many years. It is understood that the house has been sold.

Peter Gordon, who has been running the Rainbow Falls tea room at Ausable Chasm, is branching out, having just acquired the Photoplay Theatre at Keeseville from H. E. Nichols.

Changes of interest reported along Film Row during the past week are to the effect that L. L. Connors, who has been running the Pember Theatre at Granville, will not renew his lease on May 30; that the Palace in Waddington, run by L. LaPointe, is closing for the summer for necessary repairs, and that the Lyric in Hunter, run by S. Stein, will probably have another person at the helm by reason of the fact that a large gas station is being built in close proximity to the theatre and Mr. Stein has decided to erect a house of his own.

William Smalley, with fifteen houses to his credit and more probably on their way, believes in exploitation. He is now using two men traveling over the circuit for this purpose. In connection with the Smalley house at Fort Plain they travel out as far as Sharon Springs. One of Mr. Smalley's exploitation men, stationing himself in front of a large concern in Canajoharie and equipped with a megaphone, started to sing. Five hundred employes craned out of the windows and work practically stopped. It so happened that the head of the concern was one of the village officials, and the efforts of the exploitation man were quickly transferred to another town.

Helena D'Algy is busy on her second Metro-Goldwyn picture. She appeared in "Daddy's Gone A'Hunting," the Zoe Akins stage success, and in "Confessions of a Queen," based on Alphonse Daudet's novel, "Kings in Exile," a Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer production.

Buffalo, N. Y.

The Olympic Theatre, Buffalo, recently added to the Schine chain of houses in New York State, has changed its policy to two double feature programs each week, changing the bill Sundays and Thursdays. Manager Ray S. Averill is also attracting much attention with his "Screen Tests," being made by Robert Bruce Coleman, director, and through which the management announces he hopes to find new material for screen stars. Tests are made of all applicants and the following week these films are shown on the shadow stage of the Olympic. Much publicity has been given the stunt as well as word of mouth advertising.

Vincent R. McFaul, managing director of Shea's Hippodrome, is sporting a new Willys-Knight Six sedan. No wonder it's hard trying to find him these fine daylight saving evenings.

C. C. Young, district manager of the Schine Theatrical Corporation, has notified Manager Gus de Pauw that the contract for the completion of the Capitol Theatre in Newark, N. Y., has been let to Leon Lempert & Sons, Rochester. The contract calls for completion of the house by August 15. The house will seat 1,400.

Press dispatches from Athens announce the engagement of Miss Thalia Diplarakou to General George Kondyles, secretary of the interior of the Greek administration. Miss Thalia is a niece of Nikitas D. Dipson, head of Affiliated Theatres, Inc., of Batavia and Olean. About two years ago Thalia visited her uncle in Batavia.

J. B. Strayline has taken over the old Strand in Geneseo, N. Y., which he reopened May 27. The Becker Theatre Supply Company of Buffalo installed two new projection machines.

Canada

The Montreal Theatre Managers' Association carried through a successful social venture in the holding of its first annual dance and frolic at the Venetian Garden, Montreal, May 22. A feature was the use of two orchestras made up of musicians from various local theatres.

C. F. Lawrence, manager of the Gayety Theatre, Montreal, a large downtown house, was reopened May 17 with a policy of combined pictures and vaudeville. During the first week of operations the feature was changed every day. On the first day the attraction was "The Silent Accuser." This was followed by "The Dixie Handicap," "Racing Luck," "He Who Gets Slapped," "Never Say Die," "So This Is Marriage?" and "Janice Meredith." Manager Lawrence is running a comedy, news reel and a serial in addition to the vaudeville.

K. M. Leach, proprietor of the Regent Theatre, Calgary, Alberta, and one of the outstanding exhibitors of the Canadian West, suffered a distinct loss recently when it was found necessary to destroy "Main Direct," which was regarded as the greatest racehorse that Western Canada ever raised. This horse was a wonderful pacer. Mr. Leach has a large stable of both trotting and running horses.

On the occasion of the opening game at London, Ontario, in the Michigan-Ontario Baseball League, Manager Fred Jackson of Loew's Theatre, London, had all the players of both the local and visiting teams as personal guests at the evening performance. All the players were introduced from the stage and Mr. Jackson presented the London manager, Mike Baker, with a floral horseshoe.

"The Iron Horse" opened a summer engagement at the Princess Theatre, Montreal, on May 31, this being the first Canadian run of the feature. Manager Abbie Wright arranged to have the picture presented twice daily at special prices, all seats reserved. The Princess is ordinarily a vaudeville theatre.

Manager Harry Dahn of the Capitol Theatre, Montreal, had two big weeks with "Madame Sans Gene," the engagement closing May 23. In Montreal, as well as at Ottawa, where it was shown by Manager Leonard Bishop at the Regent Theatre, the production was shown with both English and French titles.

Albany, N. Y.

These dances are certainly keeping Betty Feuer of the Crescent in Schenectady flat broke. Right on top of a ten dollar affair at Union College last week, that lasted until dawn and of course demanded a new gown, there comes the Elks ball, with another new creation. And now Miss Betty has decided to spend a few days in New York City, all of which means that the dimes must come fast and furious at the Crescent.

There is a report to the effect that the American Theatre in Troy, acquired by the Strand interests several months ago and since closed, will be redecorated in the near future and will reopen as a second run house in the fall.

William Shirley of Schenectady was the fashion plate at the Milwaukee Convention, dapper as they make them. Incidentally it is said that some of the boys attending the gathering contributed sufficiently to Mr. Shirley's enjoyment to the extent that they met his expenses with enough left over to cover next year's trip. Mrs. Shirley has been spending a few days in New York City.

Certainly Sol Manheimer, who handles the Robbins theatres in Watertown, will set up the cigars these days. Yes, it's a daughter, born a week or so ago, and Mr. Manheimer is strutting about the Garland City like a peacock.

While the Schine boys cannot claim relationship to Heinz they are now being dubbed as the "57 kinds," for their chain, growing so fast that no one can keep track of it, reached the stage of fifty-seven varieties last week.

M. H. Linton of Utica, whose house burned a few weeks ago shortly after it was opened, has practically completed financial arrangements to the end that another theatre will be erected this summer and ready for opening by September. Despite the fact that "Pop" is something over sixty, he has all the energy and ambition of a youngster, and while his loss came as a crushing blow, he is now looking forward to another theatre just as handsome as the one burned and which will stand as a monument to his efforts.

Lew Fischer, wife and dog, all of Fort Edward, were along Film Row last week. The dog, a splendid German police, caused both excitement and admiration in some of the exchanges, for while some of the young women admired the dog, others were afraid that he might be inclined to nip off their pedal extremities.

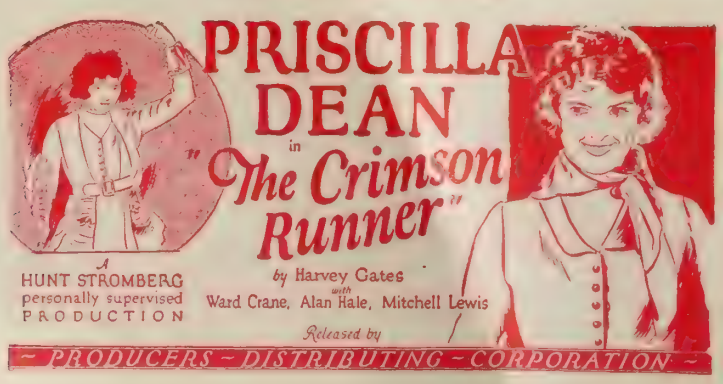
The deal whereby Famous Players was to take over the Hudson Theatre in Schenectady is said to be off. Following a season of stock the theatre will close June 1. The pouring of concrete started last week on Proctor's new theatre in Schenectady.

George Dwore of Schenectady is devoting his time during the days to the law and evenings to handling the Cameo, while his father looks after the Capitol.

Walter Roberts, manager of the Troy Theatre in Troy, appeared last week in a shirt that fairly shrieked. Yes, it was a gift from his wife. Mr. Roberts takes off one night a week from work, and being an ardent fight fan attends the boxing matches.

Bank Hall in North Bennington has closed for the summer. Tom Sheehan of the Rialto in Massena has booked the entire 1925-26 product of F. B. O. Jacob Tremper of the Airdome in Rhinebeck was in town during the week.

Although Jimmy Rose, now handling four theatres, served for several years as a film salesman, he believes in distributing his patronage. Last week, for instance, he contracted for all the product of the Producers' Distributing Corporation. When a salesman Jimmy ranked with the best, and as an exhibitor he is proving himself a 100 per cent individual.



Jacqueline Logan, the star featured in "The Sky Raider," with Capt. Nungesser, famous French aviator, by Associated Exhibitors.

Chicago

The new offices of the Illinois association, as well as the Chicago city organization, at 845 South Wabash avenue, sixth floor, were opened for inspection last week. They give the officials more room to work in and afford convenient headquarters for members.

O. W. Ekblad will build a new picture theatre and dance hall at Marcus which will seat about 500.

Lee Baker has been named manager of the New Victor Theatre at Sheffield to succeed J. F. Wiley, who has gone into other lines.

The Gem Theatre, Herrick, Ill., is now under the management of D. W. Bolt.

The many friends of J. H. Vadakin, owner of the Vadakin Theatre at Bethany, Ill., will be sorry to hear of his death last month after an extended illness.

Peter Parizan has bought the Wilson Theatre, Madison, Ill., from Peter Lohoyan.

Jack Haag, formerly manager of the Cosmopolitan Theatre at 79th and Halsted, Chicago, when it belonged to the Ascher circuit, has been named manager of the Forest Park Theatre, succeeding "Happy" Meininger.

Harry Swan, relief manager of the Ascher circuit, has been named house manager of the Chateau Theatre, Chicago, under Harry Beaumont, succeeding Fred Hartman, who is now with the Jeffrey Theatre.

The Woodlawn Theatre, Chicago, denies that Andrew Karzas sold a half interest in the theatre to Cooney Brothers. The manager, whose signature cannot be deciphered, writes: "I want it distinctly understood that there is absolutely no truth in this statement." This department apparently has erred.

Bill Diehl of the Forreston Theatre, Forreston, Ill., is improving his house, adding projection room equipment, including a new Simplex.

Jimmy Coston is fixing up some of the houses on his circuit and adding new equipment here and there. His Linden Theatre, Chicago, installed two new projection machines and a new screen last week.

Jimmy Plodna of the Harper Theatre, Chicago, is back on the job after a few weeks at Miami, while Jack and Ben Cooney of the the National Theatres Circuit have returned from a few weeks sojourn at Biloxi, Miss.

Ohio

Robert Shaw, manager of the Orpheum Theatre, Lima, Ohio, has closed the house for the summer. He intends to renovate and redecorate, install a new $10,000 pipe organ, new projecting machines, ventilating system, etc., and thoroughly remodel the lobby.

Harry Simkins has disposed of his Dolly Varden Theatre, Cincinnati, to Ned Betz, who also operates the Liberty Theatre, Dayton, Ky.

Walter Portune, formerly assistant to Manager Phil Honeyman of the Lyric Theatre, Cincinnati, has succeeded Graves E. Roach as assistant to Manager Roy H. Beattie of the Palace. Both are Libson houses.

The Palace Theatre, Cincinnati, has been redecorated for the summer with a new line of brightly colored cretonne draperies, which present a decidedly cool atmospherical appearance.

J. Lackman, owner of the Washington Theatre, Cincinnati, has sold the house to Lou Snitzer and Elmer Shard.

Edward E. Keen, proprietor of the Oxford Theatre, Oxford, Ohio, is installing a new ventilating system.

Edward Hart, real estate investor, Cincinnati, has acquired possession of the Strand Theatre property on Walnut street. The Strand is one of the Libson chain of houses in Greater Cincinnati.

The Columbia Theatre, Cleveland, which closed a season of burlesque some three weeks ago, has reopened as a picture house and will so continue over the summer.

The Pantheon Theatre, Lorain, Ohio, recently was dark for seven days. When the house reopened, new seats, a new ventilating system and a ten-piece orchestra greeted the patrons.

The Grand Central Theatre, Cleveland, is now under the management of Morris Kaplan, who also owns the Cameo.

At Dayton, Ohio, the ownership of the Sigma Theatre has passed from Robert to August Hirsch.

A $50,000 house, exclusively for a colored clientele, will be erected at Gilbert avenue and Beecher streets, Cincinnati. The plans are being developed by a local architect.

Arkansas

The new Royal Theatre at Fayetteville, Ark., is being remodelled and new equipment added.

The Royal Theatre at Arkadelphia, Ark., is being remodelled and new equipment added.

May McAvoy, of the Metro-Goldwyn "Ben Hur" cast, is positive that she weighs 100 pounds—NOT 110 pounds! (The reason for the fluctuation is evident, if you look closely.)

Pittsburgh

Local exhibitors and exchangemen who journeyed to the Milwaukee convention included. Chris Vollmer, Pittsburgh; Paul Huhn, Pittsburgh; Aleck Moore, Pittsburgh; John Newman, New Castle; Morris Finkel, Pittsburgh; John Alderdice, Dormont; Wm. R. Wheat, Jr., Sewickley; Nathan Friedberg, East Liberty; Fred Herrington, secretary of the Western Pennsylvania Theatre Owners; Theodore Mikalowsky, Masontown; Walter Silverberg, Greenville; Harry Davis, Pittsburgh; Anthony Jim, Woodlawn; Bennett Amdur, North Side; Tom Schrader, Pittsburgh; William Walker, Sheridan; M. Roth, Duquesne and Swissvale; P. A. Mansfield, Pittsburgh Press; A. H. Schnitzer, F. B. O.; C. W. Dickinson and Jack Hays, Universal; W. J. Kupper, Fox: James H. Alexander, Columbia Film Service; Harry Grelle and A. R. Cherry, Supreme Photoplay Company; Harry J. Smith, Acme Motion Picture Projector; T. P. Hollis, Pittsburgh Motion Picture Supply Company; Edward B. Morton, Hollis, Smith, Morton Company, and A. Steinberg, S. & S. Film & Supply Company.

Larry Jacobs put on an attractive prologue for "Sally" at the Hippodrome on May 18-19-20. The prologue lasted for twenty minutes. The setting represented a back alley in the tenement district of New York. The Unique Entertainers (male quartette) were the performers, singing the "Sally" songs, and also old-time songs such as "Sidewalks of New York." The whole thing was put on in great fashion and made a big hit with the large crowds.

Douglas Fairbanks and Mary Astor in a scene in "Don Q., Son of Zorro," a United Artists release.

News of St. Louis Territory

Charley Goldman, owner of the Rainbow and New Astor theatres, St. Louis, was fined $16.50 on a charge of speeding by a J. P. at Williamson, Ill. Goldman was en route to Chicago from St. Louis. The speed cop contended that Charley was burning up the concrete.

Harry Thornton of the Gayety Theatre, Springfield, Ill., and Tom Reed of Duquoin, Ill., are en route to California to attend the Shrine convention. They will visit Hollywood while out that way.

Joe Greene, manager of the Lafayette Theatre, St. Louis, has a bundle of tricks in his bag. His latest was an eight-page program for the grand opening of the Russell Airdome that brought in a handsome profit through the advertising of local merchants. The Lafayette and Russell Airdome are owned by the St. Louis Amusement Company.

Chester Gruber has opened a summer garden beside his sandwich shop on West Florissant avenue near Union boulevard, St. Louis. He also operates the Miners Theatre, Collinsville, Ill.

F. S. Hotyon, manager of the New Grand Theatre, Hope, Ark., has plans for extensive improvements to that house.

Out-of-town exhibitors seen along Picture Row were: Tom Reed, Duquoin, Ill.; Chester Gruber, Collinsville, Ill.; Joe Hewitt, Robinson, Ill.; Harry Thornton, Springfield, Ill.; Oscar Wesley, Gillespie, Ill.; V. Krause, Mowequa, Ill., and H. Roman, Benld, Ill.

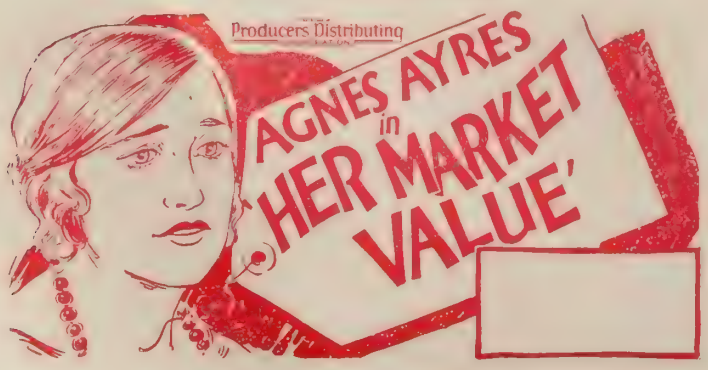
Mrs. S. B. Follis has sold her Scout Theatre, Alamo, Tenn., to O. E. Howell. The new owner will retain Mrs. Follis as manager.

The Palace Theatre at Flat Rock, Ill., is installing a new lighting system and has closed temporarily.

Houses closing for the summer include: Midway, Fornfelt, Mo.; Opera House, Irving, Ill.; Opera House, Makanda, Ill.; Pastime Theatre, Mendon, Mo.; Odd Fellows Temple, Mount Olive, Ill.; Princess, Percy, Ill., and Pastime, Tamaroa, Ill.

John J. Rotchford, who has been statistician in Warner Brothers' contract department for a long time, was made assistant general manager of the Vitagraph Company this week and will act as General Manager Sam E. Morris' right hand man.

Mr. Rotchford has been identified with the motion picture industry for many years and has a wide acquaintance in the business as well as a broad knowledge of conditions over the country.



North Carolina

Actual work has commenced on Durham's new municipal theatre with the awarding last week of the contract by City Council. The house will cost $250,000 and replace the old Academy of Music recently sold by the city.

Contract has been awarded for a new theatre at Goldsboro, N. C., to cost $100,000 and to be operated by H. R. Mason, for many years owner and proprietor of the Acme Theatre there. Besides picture equipment it will have the second largest stage in the state. It will seat 1,200. G. F. Cox, Norfolk, Va., will build the house and promises completion before November 1 of the present year. Stevenson Theatres, Inc., will start work on a new theatre there about June 1.

Plans are being drawn for a seven-story office and theatre building at Burlington, N. C., this announcement following close on the heels of the announcement that the Stevenson Theatres circuit would invade that town with a new link in their Carolina chain. The new theatre will be operated by W. C. McIntyre, present operator of the Rose and Mack theatres there, it is announced. The house will be equipped for both pictures and road attractions and will seat 1,000.

Oklahoma

A. L. Ramsey is building a new theatre at Sulphur, Okla., and also remodelling his Log Cabin Theatre at that place.

Walter L. Brown is building an airdome at Purcell, Okla., with 500 seats. Both pictures and musical comedy will be shown.

Malcom Cook and Adrian Mason have opened their new Airdome at Capital Hill, Oklahoma City.

Mrs. A. Levick has purchased the Royal at Ralston, Okla.

Hall and Mealer have opened their new Airdome at Maurika, Okla.

Bissy Bean has purchased the Lyrick at Perry, Okla.

F. G. Roberts has purchased the American at Ada, Okla., from J. Cobb.

A new Airdome has been opened at Edmond, Okla., by Uncle Willie.

Texas

The Arcadia Amusement Company will build a new theatre at Tyler, Texas, in the near future, to cost about $30,000.

L. L. Dunbar is the new manager of the Cliff-Queen Theatre at Oak Cliff.

Reuben Bohls of the Queen at Taylor, Texas, died a few days ago.

J. L. Santos has purchased the new Gem Theatre at Wharton, Texas.

The new Rialto at Brownfield, Texas, costing $30,000, is nearing completion.

Iowa

James Nestle, owner of the Rialto at Lake Mills, Ia., is planning to build a new $10,000 theatre at that place.

Sheraton, Ia., is to have a battle over Sunday closing. E. P. Smith, exhibitor, will lead the fight for his Sunday shows, and it is said he has the mayor with him.

J. Lierke, proprietor of the Empire at Storm Lake, Ia., has sold it to John Veenschoten of Elcador, Ia. Mr. Veenschoten, it is said, is planning to buy a number of theatres and go into the picture business on a large scale. He was formerly in the theatre business but has been out of it for some years.

STRAIGHT from the SHOULDER REPORTS

A DEPARTMENT FOR THE INFORMATION OF EXHIBITORS

EDITED BY A. VAN BUREN POWELL

F. B. O.

AIR HAWK. (5 reels.) Star, Al Wilson. For real thrills, the kind that creep up your spine in spite of the average fan's usual composure, this little special has practically all of the stunt pictures backed clean off the map. For a real wallop, the scene showing Wilson going from one plane to another thousands of feet from the earth cannot be improved upon. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Audience appeal, one hundred per cent. Rural class town of 850. Admission 10-30. J. D. Warnock, Luna Theatre (350 seats), Battle Creek, Iowa.

BREED OF THE BORDER. (4,920 feet). Star, Lefty Flynn. An average program western that went over fairly good with the usual Saturday night audience. Flynn well liked on account of his pleasing personality. Tone, okay. Sunday, no. Special, no. Audience appeal, ninety per cent. Rural class town of 850. Admission 10-30. J. D. Warnock, Luna Theatre (350 seats), Battle Creek, Iowa.

CLOUD RIDER. (5,070 feet). Star, Al Wilson. For real stunt stuff I thought the "Air Hawk" was about the best thing I had ever seen, but believe me, "The Cloud Rider," is even better than "The Air Hawk." A little leading lady that is really pretty, and for the comedy role that she carries, her work is certainly clever. Al Wilson's stunt of putting a new wheel on the broken plane in mid-air is without question the most thrilling spectacle I ever saw. This feature is suitable for a stunt special and will please one hundred per cent. Rural class town of 850. Admission 10-30. J. D. Warnock, Luna Theatre (350 seats), Battle Creek, Iowa.

DANGEROUS COWARD. (6 reels). Star, Fred Thomson. Also another good western. Silver King does some good work in this one. A comedy western that will please anywhere. Tone, fair. Sunday, no. Special, no. Town and country class town of 700. Admission 10-20. W. F. Denny, Electric Theatre (250 seats), Lowry City, Missouri.

FORBIDDEN CARGO. (4,850 feet). Star cast. Not so bad for an action picture. Audience seemed to enjoy it. Had many favorable reports. Best class. Al. Hamilton, Rialto Theatre, South Norwalk, Connecticut.

GALLOPING GALLAGHER. (4,700 feet). Star, Fred Thomson. Here is also a good western picture that will please any audience, as the work of Thomson and also his horse Silver King are good. Tone, fair. Sunday, no. Audience appeal, one hundred per cent. Town and country class town of 700. Admission 10-20. W. F. Denny, Electric Theatre, (250 seats), Lowry City, Missouri.

GALLOPING VENGEANCE. Star, Bob Custer. All hail! Custer has a new leading lady and she is good. This is by far the best picture Custer has made to date and will rank as a top notcher as a program western. J. D. Warnock, Luna Theatre (350 seats), Battle Creek, Iowa.

HIS FORGOTTEN WIFE. (6,500 feet). Star, cast. Will please the average audience and make a little money. Tone, fair. Sunday, no. Special, no. Audience appeal, seventy per-cent. All classes city of 200,000. Admission 10-20. R. M. Kennedy, Royal Theatre (350 seats), Birmingham, Alabama.

IN FAST COMPANY. Star, Richard Talmadge. Another good program picture. Not a bad picture for any time. A good prize fight scene. Also quite a bit of stunt action. W. F. Denny, Electric Theatre (250 seats), Lowry City, Missouri.

LAUGHING AT DANGER. (5,442 feet). Star, Richard Talmadge. Crammed to the brim with all varieties of dare-devil stunts without any regard to logic. Seemed to go over in excellent shape with the action loving audience on a Saturday night. Tone, good. Sunday, no. Special, no. Audience appeal, ninety-five per cent. Rural class town of 850. Admission 10-30. J. D. Warnock, Luna Theatre (350 seats), Battle Creek, Iowa.

MASK OF LOPEZ. (4,900 feet). Star, Fred Thomson. Good outdoor program picture. Horse very good in stunts. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good audience appeal. Farmers and merchants town of 1,650. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

MICKEY. Star, Mabel Normand. Old picture, but good at that. The kids liked it on account of a Chamber of Commerce blow out that was about all my crowd so will take their word for it. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good appeal. Small town class and farmers town of 600. Admission 10-20, 10-30. H. W. Batchelder, Galt Theatre (175 seats), Galt, California.

O. U. WEST. (5,000 feet). Star, Lefty Flynn. Adverse criticisms of this picture have been printed but the picture pleased fairly well and the photography and film were flawless. Action lagged in several places but the production, as a whole, did well at the Box Office. Tone, fair. Sunday, no. Special, no. Fair audience appeal. General class town of 1,000. Admission 10-25, 15-35. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

O. U. WEST. (5,000 feet). Star, Lefty Flynn. Excellent western with good story and plenty of action. Work of leading lady very good and she is pleasing to look at. Lefty's wicked grin goes over big, as usual. Say, Lefty, why in the d—— did you change your name? You are not Maurice! Better keep the old one! "Lefty" sounds pretty good to me. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal one hundred per cent. Rural class town of 850. Admission 10-30. J. D. Warnock, Luna Theatre (350 seats), Battle Creek, Iowa.

O. U. WEST. (5,000 feet). Star, Lefty Flynn. A very good comedy western and the kind that pleases everyone. These comedy westerns are the ones that the public want and not those with all this heroic impossible stuff in it. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good appeal. Miners and railroad class town of 3,500. Admission 10-35. Giles Master, Strand Theatre (730 seats), Gallup, New Mexico.

RANGE TERROR. (4,738 feet). Star, Bob Custer. Rather poor in my estimation and largely on account of the bad appearance of the leading lady. She does not seem to photograph well and her work is nothing short of painful. Custer must have a pretty leading lady if he expects to get by. Tone, okay. Sunday, no. Special, no. Very poor audience appeal. Rural class town of 850. Admission 10-30. J. D. Warnock, Luna Theatre (350 seats), Battle Creek, Iowa.

SCAR HANAN. Star, Yakima Canutt. This is the first picture I have ever run starring Yakima Canutt the world's champion cowboy. For western fans he is without doubt a good bet as his horsemanship and stunts are wonderful. The story of "Scar Hanan" is above the average for this class of pictures. Only flaw is a very poor appearing leading lady. A leading lady who is not pretty is impossible. Tone, good. Sunday, no. Special, no. Audience appeal, ninety per cent. Rural class town of 850. Admission 10-30. J. D. Warnock, Luna Theatre (350 seats), Battle Creek, Iowa.

THAT DEVIL QUEMADO. (4,720 feet.) Star, Fred Thomson. Hokum, Hokum, Hokum, but still they liked it so why kick? Tone, fair. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Audience appeal, seventy-five per cent. All classes city of 200,000. Admission 10-20. R. M. Kennedy, Royal Theatre (350 seats), Birmingham, Alabama.

THAT DEVIL QUEMADO. (4,720 feet). Star, Fred Thompson. Without any question the best example of real acting that Fred Thomson ever did. Thomson has developed an original and pleasing style that is quite in keeping with the high class comedy western production that he now appears in. Of course, there is action, plenty of it, and best of all Silver King, peer of horses. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Audience appeal, one hundred per cent. Rural class town of 850. Admission 10-30. J. D. Warnock, Luna Theatre (350 seats), Battle Creek, Iowa.

THAT DEVIL QUEMADO. Star, Fred Thomson. Have run all of Fred's pictures to date, and they are all very good; but this one is the best of them all. Has comedy, action, plot, and all the qualities which satisfy the most exacting audiences. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Excellent audience appeal. Mixed class town of 1,200. Admission 10-25. John McGill, Community Theatre (500 seats), Port Orchard, Washington.

THAT DEVIL QUEMADO. (4,720 feet). Star, Fred Thomson. Best Thomson to date. Has a good plot and some good comedy. Silver King wonderful as usual. Keep up the good work Fred. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fine audience appeal. All classes town of 3,000. Admission 25-35. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

THAT DEVIL QUEMADO. (4,720 feet). Star, Fred Thomson. Guess F. B. O. is treating Fred a little more tenderly since his accident as this one lacked the start-to-finish action of his previous productions, however, there is a good story to this one and it's so entertaining that its lack of action is not missed. There are several good thrills to the story. None will be disappointed and they'll walk out with smiles on their faces. Tone, fair. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Strong appeal. General class town of 1,000. Admission 10-25, 15-35. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

First National

BORN RICH. Star, Claire Windsor. Here is a disgusting triangle story of spineless and gutless men and women in high society. They took eight reels to tell a two reel story; positively bores. Punk tone, appeal fifty per cent. No for Sunday or as special. Draw all classes, town 2,517. Admission 10-25. A. L. Middleton, Grand Theatre (500 seats of which I am using only about 200), DeQueen, Arkansas.

DECLASSE. (7,889 feet). Star, Corinne Griffith. The best picture that Miss Griffith has yet released. It's there from the start to the finish. Usually eight reels is too long for them but not this one—no padding; it will not suit your Saturday night crowds in a small town, but any other night it should please them all. I'd say you can go the limit on this one and tell them how good it is; it will stand up. Small town patronage. A. Mitchell, Dixie Theatre, Russellville, Kentucky.

GIRL IN THE LIMOUSINE. (5,630 feet). Star, Larry Semon. In my estimation better audience picture than "Potash and Perlmutter" and cost me just half as much. Would have pleased better at advanced prices. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Hardly suitable for special. Audience appeal, ninety per cent. All classes town of 2,517. Admission 10-25. A. L. Middleton, Grand Theatre (500 seats), DeQueen, Arkansas.

IN EVERY WOMAN'S LIFE. (4,258 feet). Star, Virginia Valli. One nice little picture. Heard many good comments on it, so it must have pleased. Very good mystery drama. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair appeal. All classes town of 3,000. Admission 25-35. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

INEZ FROM HOLLYWOOD. Star, Anna Q. Nilsson. Very good. Seemed to please all. First National pictures always go over. All classes town of 4,000. R. L. Nowell, Idlehour Theatre (210 seats), Monroe, Georgia.

IN HOLLYWOOD WITH POTASH AND PERLMUTTER. (6,750 feet). Star cast. I expected an extra good picture. Consider it very ordinary. Drags and a terrible straining of situations. Some walked out on this. Am losing confidence in exhibitor reports. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Audience appeal, fifty per cent. All classes town of 2,517. Admission 10-25. A. L. Middleton, Grand Theatre (500 seats), DeQueen, Arkansas.

PERFECT FLAPPER. (7,000 feet). Star, Colleen Moore. Pulled pretty fair and pleased the majority. Jazz pictures are sure dead here. Colleen alone saved this. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre (600 seats), Decorah, Iowa.

SON OF THE SAHARA. (8 reels). Star, Bert Lytell. An excellent program picture that could almost be classed as a special. Good direction, but something was lacking in the action scenes. Boys, don't be afraid of this one as it is very entertaining and Bert Lytell's acting is up to his work in "Eternal City." Tone, fair. Sunday, no. Almost suitable for special. Strong appeal. General class town of 1,000. Admission 10-25, 15-35. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

TRILBY. (7,321 feet). Star, Andree Lafayette. Suppose to be some show and fell flat. Story is good and actors are fine but the people stayed away. Probably noticed the lobby display and thought it was another "Humming Bird" etc. They don't like that kind. Tone, good. Sunday, no. Special, no. Audience appeal, ninety per cent. Factory and store people town of 3,500. Admission 15-30. Henry W. Nauman, Moose Theatre (700 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

WOMAN ON THE JURY. (7,231 feet). Star cast. Fairly good program picture that pleased about seventy-five per cent. Not a special by any means but will hold interest due to good direction and excellent work of the cast. The story is very obvious and the suspense is not the kind that makes the patrons grasp the seat arms. Seven reels too long for such a story. Tone, fair. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, seventy-five per cent. General class town of 1,000. Admission 10-25, 15-35 on specials. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

Fox

DANTE'S INFERNO. (5,680 feet). Star cast. Story with wonderful exploiting possibilities. Most attractive paper and cards. Draws them like fly paper and will do immense business on the short run. Story most elaborately done and has no offensive scenes. Excellent tone. Good appeal. General class city of 15,000. Admission 10-40. Ben L. Morris, Temple Theatre, Bellaire, Ohio.

DESERT OUTLAW. Star, Buck Jones. A very good Jones picture, enough action to satisfy anyone, up to Jones standard. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Audience appeal, seventy-five per cent. All classes town of 2,800. Admission 15-25. David W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

DRAG HARLAN. (Fox). Star, William Farnum. Good western with lots of action. Best Farnum re-issue I have seen. All classes town of 4,000. R. L. Nowell, Idlehour Theatre (210 seats), Monroe, Georgia.

GENTLE JULIA. (5,837 feet). Star, Bessie Love. Very light comedy picture which will do for a one night run. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Miners and railroad class town of 3,500. Admission 10-35. Giles Master, Strand Theatre (730 seats), Gallup, New Mexico.

O YOU TONY. (6,802 feet). Star, Tom Mix. A one hundred per cent. audience picture. Why play so called high class stuff when the people want the same old hokum. The fans come the others don't. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Audience appeal, one hundred per cent. All classes town of 2,517. Admission 10-25. A. L. Middleton, Grand Theatre (500 seats), De Queen, Arkansas.

PLUNDERER. (5,812 feet). Star cast. One of those "gigantic Specials" season 1923-24. A fair program picture had the film been in good shape, but as it was there were only fifteen misframes in the production and several of the subtitles were too short. We paid a special price for this Saturday Night program picture and played it on our regular weekly special night and just got by. Tone, rough. Sunday, no. Special, no. Fair audience appeal. General class town of 1,000. Admission 10-25, 15-35. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

ROUGHNECK. (7,619 feet). Star, George O'Brien. Four days to satisfactory business. Picture pleased all who saw it. General class city of 35,000. Admission 25-35. C. D. Buss, Strand Theatre (700 seats), Easton, Pennsylvania.

TRAIL RIDER. (4,752 feet). Star, Buck Jones. Fair western picture. Lucy Fox good to look at. The kind of picture that pleases all the patrons it draws. Tone O. K. Appeal ninety per cent. Yes for Sunday but no as special. Draw all classes, town 2,517. Admission 10-25. A. L. Middleton, Grand Theatre (500 seats of which I am using only about 200), De Queen, Arkansas.

TROUBLES OF A BRIDE. (4,915 feet).

Old Timer With Us Again

It certainly makes a fellow feel good to open a big, fat envelope and find it lined with more than thirty reports and the following letter:

"Dear Van and 'Gang'—Here I am again. Kill the fatted calf for a prodigal son has returned.

"Well, it has been a sad winter. The whole town has had radio—ittis and the snow shovel blues, the first was the cause of financial embarrassment and the latter gave me a backache.

"I won't relate any frigid tales about the weather nor any lonesome anecdotes about my theatre attendance—instead I will pass to more cheerful subjects and say that business is better, and still picking up.

"The enclosed reports are not up-to-date, but there may be exhibitors who have not yet booked these earlier releases—for their benefit, here goes.——Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall Theatre, Chester, Vermont.

The tips will be in next week: they got here too late for type this time.

Star cast. If your patrons like lots of hokum and thrills play this. It is not bad but is just a program picture and not a special. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair appeal. Miners and railroad class town of 3,500. Admission 10-35. Giles Master, Strand Theatre (730 seats), Gallup, New Mexico.

Metro-Goldwyn

ALONG CAME RUTH. (5,000 feet). Star, Viola Dana. Played two days to poor business. Picture, however, is pleasing comedy. General class city of 35,000. Admission 25-35. C. D. Buss, Strand Theatre (700 seats), Easton, Pennsylvania.

CIRCE, THE ENCHANTRESS. (6,882 feet). Star, Mae Murray. Not a bad show. James Kirkwood carries the responsibility of putting the show across. A new type of picture for Mae Murray made it seem attractive to the majority. Tone, doubtful. Sunday, no. Special, no. Audience appeal, eighty-five per cent. Factory and store people town of 3,500. Admission 15-30. Henry W. Nauman, Moose Theatre (700 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

DIXIE HANDICAP. (6,905 feet). Star, Claire Windsor. A horse race drama embracing a pleasing love story and an excitable horse race. A little villainy and the financial failure and final recuperation of an old southern colonel. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Audience appeal, ninety per cent. General class city of 500,000. Admission 10-20. William T. Meeks, Silliman's Murray Theatre, Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

GREAT DIVIDE. (7,811 feet). Star, Conway Tearle. A remarkably good drama containing a storm and cloud burst that has not been equaled to date. A fine cast including that lovable reprobate actor. Wallace Beery provides the best screen entertainment. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Audience appeal, seventy per cent. General class city of 500,000. Admission 10-20. William T. Meeks, Silliman's Murray Theatre, Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

LADY OF THE NIGHT. (5,441 feet). Star, Norma Shearer. Just a program picture for the small town. Work of the cast excellent, however. Tone, okay. Sunday, no. Special, no. Fair audience appeal. Oil field class town of 1,000. Admission 10-25. H. E. Schlichter, Liggett Theatre (600 seats), Madison, Kansas.

SILENT ACCUSER. (6 reels). Star, Peter the Great. Only a fair plot but made into a very nice little picture by the almost human acting of Peter the Great. My audience consider him to be as good as either Strongheart or Rin Tin Tin. Clever dog. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good audience appeal. All classes town of 3,000. Admission 25-35. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

SNOB. (6,513 feet). Star cast. A fair program offering. Used it on a double feature program and got away with it. Don't promise too much on this one. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair audience appeal. All classes town of 3,000. Admission 25-35. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

TESS OF THE D'URBERVILLES. Star, Blanche Sweet. Heavy drama. Story of the eternal triangle, two men and a woman, betrayed innocence, a wronged husband. Villain is murdered by heroine, pardoned, reunited husband and wife, saves her from the gallows. Bad title, box office medium. Star, good. No tone. Sunday, no. Special, no. Audience appeal, seventy per cent. All classes town of 6,000. Admission 10-20-30. Frank H. Wotton, Park Theatre (600 seats), Lebanon, New Hampshire.

WHITE SISTER. (10,400 feet). Star, Lillian Gish. I guess not much use to comment on this one. This one a real special. A one hundred per cent. picture especially if you cater to Catholics. Tragic ending. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Audience appeal, one hundred per cent. All classes town of 2,800. Admission 15-25. David W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre (250 seats), Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

Paramount

EAST OF SUEZ. (6,821 feet). Star, Pola Negri. Just another Pola Negri picture for me. Did not pay the rental on it. I think that it is better than the others she made. Tone, fair. Sunday, no. Special, no. Audience appeal, twenty-five per cent. College class town of 2,100. Admission 10-25. R. X. Williams Jr., Lyric Theatre (345 seats), Oxford, Mississippi.

ENEMY SEX. (7,861 feet). Star, Betty Compson. A clever little comedy drama which seemed to please my audience. Had poor crowd, due to church services, and so cannot say much about its drawing power. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good audience appeal. All classes, town of 3,000. Admission 25-35. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

EXCITERS. Star, Bebe Daniels. A very clever picture that took well here. Two lively stars, Debe Daniels and Antonio Moreno furnish lots of peppy entertainment, the kind that my audiences like. You'll make no mistake in booking this. Tone, fair. Sunday, no. Farmers and merchants town of 440. Admission 15-25. Kenneth W. Thompson, M. W. A. Theatre, Hancock, Wisconsin.

FEET OF CLAY. (9,746 feet). Star cast. Struck me as being a real good show. Pulled big Sunday. Just average Monday and Tuesday. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Good audience appeal. Family and student class town of 4,000. Admission 10-25. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre (600 seats), Decorah, Iowa.

FEMALE. (6,176 feet). Star, Betty Compson. There is no appeal to this picture and out of Betty Compson's line entirely. It is one of those South African stories with a Boer girl for a heroine and the plot is a fizzle. Noah Beery is very good as a pipe smoking native of the veldt and Betty Compson's acting is always good even in this weak play. But where this gifted actress shines is in "The Miracle Man" and "To Have and to Hold," two extreme characterizations. City and country class town of 3,000. Admission 10-30. George W. Walther, Dixie Theatre (500 seats), Kerrville, Texas.

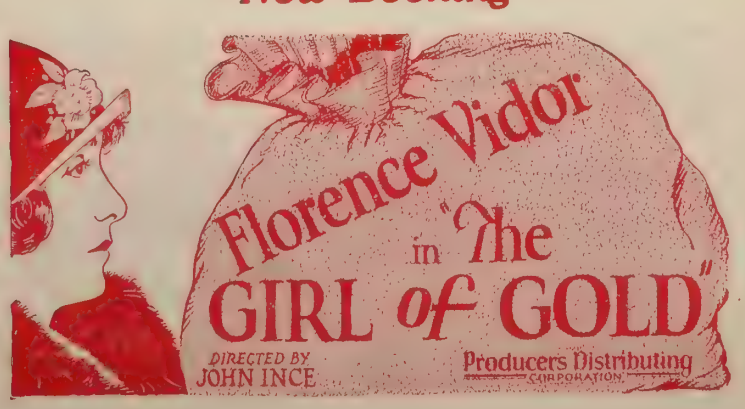
FEMALE. (6,176 feet). Star cast. A dandy good picture. Good acting. Betty Compson does good work. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Town of 3,500. Admission 10-30. A. C. Gordon, Star Theatre (450 seats), Weiser, Idaho.

GOOSE HANGS HIGH. (6,186 feet). Star cast. This surely was a disappointment. The picture was sold as a special but certainly was not up to the Cruze standard. Can't see where they got the title as it certainly does not appeal. Another flop. Tone, good. Sunday, no. Special, no. No appeal. All classes city of 15,000. Admission 15-35. Ed Malhiot, Monarch Theatre (569 seats), Medicine Hat, Alta., Canada.

GRUMPY. (5,621 feet). Star, Theodore Roberts. Old but good. Roberts shows the world that he can make a salary without his cigar. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good appeal. Farmers, town of 442. Admission 10-25. John C. Leveck, Benoit Auditorium (100 seats), Benoit, Mississippi.

HERITAGE OF THE DESERT. (5,875 feet). Star cast. Here is a picture which should satisfy everyone. It has a good story, is full of action, an excellent cast, beautiful photography and many beautiful scenes in the desert in color. Tone good. Special, no. Good audience appeal. Working class, city of 100,000. Admission 10-15-20. W. C. Budge, Comedy Theatre (275 seats), Jamaica, New York.

HER LOVE STORY. (6,736 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. Consider this only fair. Some liked it, while a great many didn't. Made a little money, so won't kick. Gloria popular here and they came to see her. All classes, town of 4,000. R. L. Nowell, Idlehour Theatre (210 seats), Monroe, Georgia.



HUMMING BIRD. (5,577 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. This picture is one of French life. It gives the star a good chance to show her talents for character parts, which she does with skill. Audience enjoyed it greatly. Tone good. Special, no. Good audience appeal. Working class, city of 100,000. Admission 10-15-20. W. C. Budge, Comedy Theatre (275 seats), Jamaica, New York.

KISS IN THE DARK. Star, Adolphe Menjou. Good light comedy only. A little bit overdrawn. Pleased about seventy-five per cent. Mixed class, town of 1,800. Admission twenty-five cents. Fred S. Widenor, Opera House (492 seats), Belvidere, New Jersey.

KISS IN THE DARK. (5,767 feet). Star, Adolphe Menjou. Menjou ideally cast and at his best, as are all in the cast. "A Kiss in the Dark" is a splendid entertainment and pleased all who came to see it. Suitable for any theatre. The settings in the picture are very pleasing, ranging from some exceptionally artistic and beautiful scenes in Cuba to New York. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Special, above average. Great audience appeal. All classes, city of 95,000. Admission 40-50. Guy A. Kenimer, Arcade Theatre (1,152 seats), Jacksonville, Florida.

LILY OF THE DUST. (6,811 feet). Star, Pola Negri. Not so bad. Negri, Ben Lyon and Noah Beery act well but have no plot to act on. Well directed and hotel scenes are good. Tone poor. Sunday, no. Special, no. Fair audience appeal. Farmer class, town of 442. Admission 10-25. John C. Leveck, Benoit Auditorium (100 seats), Benoit, Mississippi.

LOCKED DOORS. (6,621 feet). Star, Betty Compson. Pretty fair offering that pleased quite well. Hasn't any too much drawing power. Will do nearly as well as a lot of them. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Not a special. Good audience appeal. Town and country class, town of 1,200. Admission 10-25. C. R. Seff, New Radio Theatre (250 seats), Correctionville, Iowa.

MANHANDLED. (6,998 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. A fine picture. Gloria handles the comedy role well. Well directed. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good audience appeal. Farmers, town of 442. Admission 10-25. John C. Leveck, Benoit Auditorium (100 seats), Benoit, Mississippi.

MAN WHO FIGHTS ALONE. (6,337 feet). Star, William Farnum. There are too many good stories that it is a shame for Paramount to waste a picture on this one. Acting only fair. If you have bought it, run it, but don't boost it. Tone, none. Sunday, no. Special, no. Poor audience appeal. Farmers, town of 442. Admission 10-25. John C. Leveck, Benoit Auditorium (100 seats), Benoit, Mississippi.

MERTON OF THE MOVIES. (7,655 feet). Star, Glenn Hunter. Good high class comedy that only about two-thirds of the people understood. Some were pleased and some were not, but it's a good picture just the same. Town and rural class, town of 2,500. Admission 10-25. S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho.

NORTH OF 36. (7,908 feet). Star, Jack Holt. Very good picture. These pictures draw good here. Drew from four surrounding towns. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Good audience appeal. Working class, town of 1,200. Admission 10-30. C. R. Seff, New Radio Theatre (250 seats), Correctionville, Iowa.

NORTH OF 36. (7,908 feet). Star, Ernest Torrence. This is a real picture. Thousands of cattle. Will draw well. Cast, photography, everything fine. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Very good audience appeal. own and country class, town of 1,200. Admission 10-25. C. R. Seff, New Radio Theatre, Correctionville, Iowa.

OLD HOMESTEAD. (7,606 feet). Star, Theodore Roberts. I dug this out of the past for a second run and did well with it. I am strong for some of these old second runs. They fit into the Saturday night nicely. I have previously run them on a Monday and Tuesday showing and then the year later Saturday night crowd is an entirely different bunch. You can't buy as much for your money anywhere else and I believe the small town theatre will stand one or two seconds a month. Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, South Dakota.

PETER THE GREAT. (7 reels). Star, Emil Jannings. High brow historic picture. Good acting and very interesting. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Special, no, but above program type. Fair audience appeal. Farmers and merchants, town of 1,650. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

SINNERS IN HEAVEN. (6,621 feet). Star, Bebe Daniels. Good picture that drew and pleased. Town and rural class, town of 2,500. Admission 10-25. S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho.

STORY WITHOUT A NAME. (7,912 feet). Star, Agnes Ayres. A dandy Saturday show that drew better than I expected. There are some thrills in this. Print was in fine shape. Moreno is good in this. Tone okay. Not a special. Good audience appeal. Better class, town of 4,500. Admission 10-25. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (404 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

SWAN. (5,889 feet). Star, Ricardo Cortez. Good picture. Fine acting. Splendid, elaborate sets. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Good audience appeal. Farmers and merchants, town of 1,650. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

TOO MANY KISSES. (6,750 feet). Star, Richard Dix. This is a fine comedy. It went over in nice shape. Dix is good. Frances Howard isn't, but the story is entertaining and the picture pleased everyone. Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, South Dakota.

UNGUARDED WOMEN. (6,051 feet). Star, Bebe Daniels. Good, entertaining picture. I would say book it. Most everyone that came said good. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Hardly suitable for special. Good audience appeal. Small town class and farmers, town of 600. Admission 10-20, 10-30. H. W. Batchelder, Galt Theatre (175 seats), Galt, California.

WAGES OF VIRTUE. (7,083 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. My patrons were evidently tipped off on this one or have not forgotten "Her Love Story." They failed to show up to see "Wages of Virtue." One more like this one and we will not be able to get them out to see Miss Gloria. A. Mitchell, Dixie Theatre, Russellville, Kentucky.

WAGES OF VIRTUE. (7,083 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. One of the Famous Forty with a big rental attached to it that's all. When you play it you won't have anything to count up except your overhead. Tone fair. Sunday, no. Special, no. Audience appeal fifty per cent. All classes, town of 2,900. Admission 10-25, 15-30. A. E. Andrews, Opera House (496 seats), Emporium, Pennsylvania.

Pathe

WHY WORRY? (6 reels). Star, Harold Lloyd. This one is a wow, comic. Our audience nearly tore house down. Better than "Hot Water." Run these Lloyd's if you haven't before and your people will like him. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Audience appeal one hundred per cent. All classes, town of 2,800. Admission 15-25. David W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre (250 seats), Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

Producers' Dist. Corp.

ANOTHER MAN'S WIFE. (5 reels). Star, Lila Lee. A dandy good program attraction with action and heart interest. Tone okay. Sunday, no. Special, no. Audience appeal ninety-five per cent. Rural class, town of 850. Admission 10-30. J. D. Warnock, Luna Theatre (350 seats), Battle Creek, Iowa.

BARBARA FRIETCHIE. (7,179 feet). Star, Florence Vidor. A great picture. The action scenes are great. The war scenes are the best ever made of the Civil War. All in all, the picture is great. Everyone here more than satisfied. All classes, town of 2,800. Admission 15-25. David W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre (250 seats), Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

BARBARA FRIETCHIE. (7,179 feet). Star, Florence Vidor. I was rather afraid of this one, on account of the many poor reports I have read on it. But it proved to be a corking good picture and I recommend it to any exhibitor as a fine picture. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good appeal. All classes, town of 3,000. Admission 25-35. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

BEAUTY AND THE BAD MAN. Star, Mabel Ballin. This is a good picture and if these people had some good paper you could put this picture over as it is very good and well directed and pleased everyone. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Good audience appeal. Miners and railroad class, town of 3,500. Admission 10-35. Giles Master, Strand Theatre (730 seats), Gallup, New Mexico.

CHALK MARKS. (6,000 feet). A homely small town story with plenty of heart appeal. Very good for Sunday showing, also good for tying up with the school. Acting and direction excellent and was well received, especially by the older patrons. Tone good. Sunday, perfect. Special, no. Audience appeal ninety per cent. Rural class, town of 850. Admission 10-30. J. D. Warnock, Luna Theatre (350 seats), Battle Creek, Iowa.

CHARLEY'S AUNT. (7,245 feet). Star, Sidney Chaplin. Eight reels without any plot, but made into a real entertainment by real work of cast and clever titles. Pulled good for four days. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Good audience appeal. Family and student class, town of 4,000. Admission 10-25. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre (600 seats), Decorah, Iowa.

CHORUS LADY. Star, Margaret Livingston. A zippy, breezy comedy drama that is bound to please everybody. Excellent for all classes. Tone okay. Sunday, no. Special, no. Audience appeal ninety-five per cent. Rural class, town of 850. Admission 10-30. J. D. Warnock, Luna Theatre (350 seats), Battle Creek, Iowa.

FRIENDLY ENEMIES. Star, Weber and Fields. Very good picture and well directed and will please everyone. Very poor paper on this picture and hard to put over. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good audience appeal. Miners and railroad class, town of 3,500. Admission 10-35. Giles Master, Strand Theatre (730 seats), Gallup, New Mexico.

GIRL ON THE STAIRS. (6,224 feet). Star, Patsy Ruth Miller. One of the best program pictures I have run since January 1. Every member of the cast does excellent work and the direction is perfect. Everybody pleased. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Audience appeal one hundred per cent. Rural class, town of 850. Admission 10-30. J. D. Warnock, Luna Theatre (350 seats), Battle Creek, Iowa.

HOUSE OF YOUTH. (6,669 feet). Star, Jacqueline Logan. This proved to be only a fair program attraction. Title seemed to draw, as it created more or less discussion. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Audience appeal eighty-five per cent. Rural class, town of 850. Admission 10-30. J. D. Warnock, Luna Theatre (350 seats), Battle Creek, Iowa.

RECKLESS ROMANCE. (5,530 feet). Star cast. High class comedy that had a good sized audience hitting on all twelve cylinders from a laughing viewpoint. Just the thing to get away from the usual "sticky" stuff made so frequently these days. Play it, by all means. It's good. Rural class, town of 850. Admission 10-30. J. D. Warnock, Luna Theatre (350 seats), Battle Creek, Iowa.

ROARING RAILS. (5,753 feet). Star, Harry Carey. One of Carey's best, that has all the elements of a strictly A No. 1 high grade western. Work by leading lady very good. Tone okay. Sunday, no. Special, no. Audience appeal one hundred per cent. Rural class, town of 850. Admission 10-30. J. D. Warnock, Luna Theatre (350 seats), Battle Creek, Iowa.

SIREN OF SEVILLE. (6,724 feet). Star, Priscilla Dean. Some old woman in New York must have designed the paper for this great picture as this is by far the best she ever made and is a real special but the paper and stills on it are something fierce and all love stuff, and this is a fast action picture, with a wonderful bull fight in it. In order to put this over I had a large bullfighter in action drawn on a large piece of beaver board. Giles Master, Strand Theatre (730 seats), Gallup, New Mexico.

SOFT SHOES. Star, Harry Carey. I believe this one made the best hit of the series; has comedy, a good story, good direction, and Harry handles the comedy to good advantage. Can recommend this series to any exhibitor. (Have bought the new series.) Tone and appeal good. Not as a special. Draw general class, towns of 1,200 to 2,200. Admission 10-25. E. N. Prescott, Prescott Circuit (theatres 250 to 700 seats), Union, Maine.

SOFT SHOES. Star, Harry Carey. A very good attraction but not up to the high standard of some of Carey's recent releases. However, it went over in fine shape and should please any Saturday night audience. Tone okay. Sunday, no. Special, no. Audience appeal ninety per cent. Rural class, town of 850. Admission 10-30. J. D. Warnock, Luna Theatre (350 seats), Battle Creek, Iowa.

TROUPING WITH ELLEN. (6,483 feet). Star, Helene Chadwick. Very pleasing program attraction. Heard many good comments from a fair sized audience. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Audience appeal one hundred per cent. Rural class, town of 850. Admission 10-30. J. D. Warnock, Luna Theatre (350 seats), Battle Creek, Iowa.

Universal

BLIND HUSBANDS. Star cast. A picture that is old but real good entertainment. Some action and good plot. A picture in eight reels. Would be better in six reels but will get by. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal seventy-five per cent. Town and country class, town of 700. Admission 10-20. W. F. Denny, Electric Theatre (250 seats), Lowry City, Missouri.

BURNING TRAIL. Star, William Desmond. Very poor western, and why they put Desmond in westerns I do not know. Badly directed and a very poor story, with about the silliest ending that was ever given to a picture. Tone good. Sunday, no. Special, no. No audience appeal. Miners and railroad class, town of 3,500. Admission 10-35. Giles Master, Strand Theatre (730 seats), Gallup, New Mexico.

Help your fellow exhibitors by sending tips.

Summer is coming and the theatres are likely to cut down on number of showings in some cases.

DARLING OF NEW YORK. (6,260 feet). Star, Baby Peggy. This is a good picture that will please anywhere. A great kids' picture. Good acting from start to finish. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Town and country class, town of 700. Admission 10-20. W. F. Denny, Electric Theatre (250 seats), Lowry City, Missouri.

FIFTH AVENUE MODELS. (6,581 feet). Star, Mary Philbin. Just fair. Picture starts out good and had good possibilities but flopped at the end. Philbin is utterly unsuited for her part, and why waste Norman Kerry in such a picture? Don't promise too much and you will get by. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair appeal. Miners and railroad class, town of 3,500. Admission 10-35. Giles Master, Strand Theatre (730 seats), Gallup, New Mexico.

HIT AND RUN. (5,508 feet). Star, Hoot Gibson. A very good baseball story, although it is full of hokum. Just the thing for a double feature show. It is doubtful as a single feature, as many people, especially women, do not care for baseball. It went over good here. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good appeal. All classes, town of 3,000. Admission 25-35. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City Connecticut.

HURRICANE KID. Star, Hoot Gibson. This star never makes a poor one for me on my crowd. Wonderful bet for Saturday. Plenty of action and the crowd went out saying nice things about the picture and the house. We thank you. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Audience appeal ninety per cent. All classes, town of 6,000. Admission 10-20-30. Frank H. Wotton, Park Theatre (600 seats), Lebanon, New Hampshire.

OH DOCTOR. (6,587 feet). Star, Reginald Denny. Well, well, folks, here's a picture for everybody, with a story that fits Denny like a plaster cast. My audience sure liked it and yours truly agreed with them. It will make a mummy laugh. Book it and boost to limit. You can't lose. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Special, as a comedy, yes. Audience appeal one hundred per cent. General class, city of 500,000. Admission 10-20. William T. Meeks, Silliman's Murray Theatre, Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

OH DOCTOR. (6,507 feet). Star, Reginald

George Marlow, Washington Theatre, Atoka, Oklahoma, has come into "Our Gang" with a first report on one of the blanks we have on last page.

The "Gang" extends a welcoming hand.

Come on, folks—do as Mr. Marlow has done.

"This is my first one," Mr. Marlow says, "But I am very much interested and will send more."

THAT'S THE SPIRIT!

Denny. Pleased very well. Drags at first but finishes good. Like the "Fast Worker," would be great in six reels instead of seven. Family and student class, town of 4,000. Admission 10-25. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre (600 seats), Decorah, Iowa.

RIDIN' KID FROM POWDER RIVER. (5,727 feet). Star, Hoot Gibson. No good. Hoot is all right, I believe, if they'd just give him a story instead of such amateur trash. No tone. Sunday, no. Special, no. Poor appeal. Family and student class, town of 4,000. Admission 10-25. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre (600 seats), Decorah, Iowa.

RIDIN' PRETTY. Star, William Desmond. Fair. Not enough action for a Saturday crowd but seemed to get by, however. Didn't hear any kicks. All classes, town of 4,000. R. L. Nowell, Idlehour Theatre (210 seats), Monroe, Georgia.

SIGN OF THE CACTUS. Star, Jack Hoxie. Barely gets by. No one went out of their way to tell me how much they liked it. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Audience appeal sixty-five per cent. All classes, town of 2,517. Admission 10-25. A. L. Middleton, Grand Theatre (500 seats), DeQueen, Arkansas.

TORNADO. (6,576 feet). Star, House Peters. One of the best lumber camp melodramas we have ever had. Flood and log jam scenes are amazing. Worth running in any house. General class, city of 15,000. Admission 10-40. Ben L. Morris, Temple Theatre, Bellaire, Ohio.

Vitagraph

BAREE, SON OF KAZAN. Star, Anita Stewart. The best northern picture I have ever seen. Miss Stewart is just as beautiful and convincing as ever and the picture has action, suspense and some of the most beautiful snow scenes imaginable. In fact, it has everything to make a first class film entertainment and a drawing card. It holds my house record. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Absolutely suitable for special. Great audience appeal. Oil field class, town of 1,000. Admission 10-25. H. E. Schlichter, Liggett Theatre (600 seats), Madison, Kansas.

BAREE, SON OF KAZAN. Star, Anita Stewart. This is one of the best pictures we have had this year. It is a wonder, and the box office will prove it. Played it on light night, Friday. Audience congratulated me on the way out, and also Vitagraph. Come again; you can't give us too many of these. Tone good. Sunday, no. Special, yes. Audience appeal one hundred per cent. All classes, town of 6,000. Admission 10-20-30. Frank H. Wotton, Park Theatre (600 seats), Lebanon, New Hampshire.

BEHOLD THIS WOMAN. (6,425 feet). Star cast. A real special that ranks with "Greater Than Marriage" from every angle. Vitagraph should be proud of this class of features. Tone good. Especially suitable for Sunday. Special, yes. Appeal one hundred per cent. Rural class, town of 850. Admission 10-30. J. D. Warnock, Luna Theatre (350 seats), Battle Creek, Iowa.

CLEAN HEART. Star cast. Vitagraph has done gone and done it again, and I don't mean maybe. This one proved to be a sure-fire box office hit, and if this doesn't make money for you, close up shop. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Great audience appeal. All classes in big city. Admission ten cents. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre (298 seats), Baltimore, Maryland.

CLEAN HEART. Star cast. Well acted, well produced, with plenty of entertaining qualities. Excellent for Sunday showing as the moral side of the picture is very strong. Best tone. Excellent for Sunday. Special, no. Appeal ninety-five per cent. Rural class, town of 850. Admission 10-30. J. D. Warnock, Luna Theatre (350 seats), Battle Creek, Iowa.

FEARBOUND. Star cast. Good acting, well produced, strong story but gruesome beyond description. In spite of the masterly manner in which this picture is handled it did not please on account of the horrible story and the contemptible characters. A story of beastly men. Tone okay. Sunday, no. Special, no. Poor audience appeal. Rural class, town of 850. Admission 10-30. J. D. Warnock, Luna Theatre (350 seats), Battle Creek, Iowa.

GREATER THAN MARRIAGE. Star cast. A problem play that ranks as a real special. All the good elements are incorporated in this one and it is especially good for Sunday showing. One of the better pictures of the year. J. D. Warnock, Luna Theatre (350 seats), Battle Creek, Iowa.

Warner Bros.

AGE OF INNOCENCE. Star cast. Only a fair program attraction, suitable for off nights. Tone okay. Sunday, no. Special, no. Poor audience appeal. Rural class, town of 850. Admission 10-30. J. D. Warnock, Luna Theatre (350 seats), Battle Creek, Iowa.

BEAU BRUMMEL. (10 reels). Star, John Barrymore. An artistic masterpiece but a lemon as far as the small town exhibitor is concerned. The better class enjoyed this one but the lowbrows walked out on it. Second night far below first night. Business poor. Personally considered this some of the best work John has ever done as his characterizations were perfect. Tone fair. Sunday, yes. Not suitable for special in small towns. Poor appeal. General class, town of 1,000. Admission 10-25, 15-35 on specials. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

"In May prepare for June," says Connie Darling, Century Comedy star, whose current two-reeler, "Almost a Husband," now being released by Universal, tackles the marriage game from some new angles

BRIDGE OF SIGHS. (6,694 feet). Star, Dorothy Mackaill. Melodrama de luxe—and pleased the audience at that. It is really a worth-while picture and is especially good for the masses. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Audience appeal ninety-five per cent. Rural class, town of 850. Admission 10-30. J. D. Warnock, Luna Theatre (350 seats), Battle Creek, Iowa.

CORNERED. (7,500 feet). Star cast. Dandy crook story with some very interesting situations. Holds interest and pleases. Good for any day. General class, city of 15,000. Admission 10-40. Ben L. Morris, Temple Theatre, Bellaire, Ohio.

FIND YOUR MAN. (7,300 feet). Star, Rin-Tin-Tin. As usual Rin-Tin-Tin makes a big hit with a fair sized audience. While this is not as good as "Where the North Begins," it is well worth boosting as it has plenty of action, heart interest and punch. Tone okay. Sunday, no. Special, no. Audience appeal one hundred per cent. Rural class, town of 850. Admission 10-30. J. D. Warnock, Luna Theatre (350 seats), Battle Creek, Iowa.

LIGHTHOUSE BY THE SEA. Star, Rin-Tin-Tin. If any exhibitor is passing up these dog pictures he is making a big mistake. The price is right, and your audience goes out with a very friendly feeling towards you. Tone all right. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Splendid audience appeal. Mixed class, town of 1,200. Admission 10-25. John McGill, Community Theatre (500 seats), Port Orchard, Washington.

LOVER OF CAMILLE. (7,180 feet). Star, Monte Blue. Just a bunch of "nothing" minus "less" divided by "zero." How any person can possibly see anything in this, from any standpoint, is more than I can figure out. It is silly, impossible and boresome beyond description. An excellent attraction for increasing the army of radio fans. Don't run it. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. No audience appeal. Rural class, town of

850. Admission 10-30. J. D. Warnock, Luna Theatre (350 seats), Battle Creek, Iowa.

NARROW STREET. Star, Dorothy Devore. A comedy drama that was well received by a fair audience. Nothing but good words of praise was heard. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Audience appeal ninety-five per cent. Rural class, town of 850. Admission 10-30. J. D. Warnock, Luna Theatre (350 seats), Battle Creek, Iowa.

THIS WOMAN. Star, Irene Rich. An excellent heavy dramatic attraction. Beautiful settings, very good direction and presented by an A-1 cast of players. Tone good. Especially suitable for Sunday. Special, no. Audience appeal one hundred per cent. Rural class, town of 850. Admission 10-30. J. D. Warnock, Luna Theatre (350 seats), Battle Creek, Iowa.

Comedies

ALL NIGHT LONG. (Pathe). Star, Harry Langdon. Where do they get this stuff that Langdon is stepping after Chaplin, Lloyd and Keaton's honors? There are a dozen better. He has a silly manner that is all his own, but it is anything but funny. Some good story work and stunts by the gag men have gotten laughs. General class, city of 15,000. Admission 10-40. Ben L. Morris, Temple Theatre, Bellaire, Ohio.

CALL THE WAGON. (Educational). A fair comic. Gets quite a few laughs but no one went into hysterics. All classes, town of 2,800. Admission 15-25. David M. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre (250 seats), Mt. Joy Pennsylvania.

DEEP SEA PANIC. (Fox Imperial Comedy). Very good comedy that pleased everyone. Miners and railroad class, town of 3,500. Admission 10-35. Giles Master, Strand Theatre (730 seats), Gallup, New Mexico.

FIGHT. (Fox). Star, Earl Fox. Hope the rest of the Van Bibbers are better than this one as "The Fight" failed to please. The boxing match was weak and was too short. Patrons have been spoiled by seeing the fast bouts in the "Fighting Blood" and "Go-Getters" F. B. O. series, which made the fight in "The Fight" look like a bunch of infants holding a bottle sucking contest. Tone fair. Sunday, yes. Weak audience appeal. General class, town of 1,000. Admission 10-25, 15-35. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

GOING EAST. (Educational). Star, Neal Hamilton. A good laugh producer; this one should make anyone laugh. They sure laughed here. All classes, town of 2,800. Admission 15-25. David W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

GOOD SPIRITS. (Educational). Star, Walter Hiers. A bunch of old gags done over for Hiers' benefit, but for some reason it pleased, hence no kick coming. General class, town of 1,000. Admission 10-25, 15-35. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

HALF BACK OF NOTRE DAME. (Mack Sennett). Good comedy, as are ninety per cent of Sennetts and Pathes. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal one hundred per cent. All classes, town of 2,517. Admission 10-25. A. L. Middleton, Grand Theatre (500 seats), DeQueen, Arkansas.

JONAH JONES. (Educational). Star, Lloyd Hamilton. Ham brought out a number of ha ha's in this one and the comedy, as a whole, was better than some of his past ones. Each funny stunt wasn't repeated to death as has been the case in previous releases. Considered this a good one and is a good addition to any program Tone okay. Sunday, okay. Special, no. Good appeal. General class, town of 1,000. Admission 10-25, 15-35 on specials. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

INBAD THE SAILOR. (Fox). One of the best monkey comedies Fox has ever made. A good plot and those well trained apes had the house in an uproar from the beginning to the end. More like this one, Bill Fox, and your comedies will be requested as much as Educationals. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Appeal extra good. General class, town of 1,000. Admission 10-25, 15-35. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

LOW TIDE. (Educational). Star cast. Fine comedy with plenty of action that had the fans yelling their heads off. Couldn't keep the kids quiet during this comedy and they almost raised the roof off the old barn. Fine tone. Sunday, yes. Strong appeal. General class, town of 1,000. Admission 10-25, 15-35. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

O MIN. (Universal). Star, Joe Murphy. These Gump comedies are just fair. They get a few laughs but are not hilariously funny by any means. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal one hundred per cent. All classes, town of 2,517. Admission 10-25. A. L. Middleton, Grand Theatre (500 seats), DeQueen, Arkansas.

ONE SPOOKY NIGHT. (Pathe-Sennett). Last half of last reel contains enough storm, lightning and spooky situations to make it a fine comedy. Cast good. No special tone but appeals one hundred per cent. Yes for Sunday. Draw all classes, town of 2,517. Admission 10-25. A. L. Middleton, Grand Theatre, DeQueen, Arkansas.

OUR GANG COMEDIES. (Pathe). These comedies are always good and please both grown-ups and the kiddies. Mixed class, town of 1,200. Admission 10-25. John McGill, Community Theatre (500 seats), Port Orchard, Washington.

PIGSKIN. (Educational). Star, Lige Conley. Lige scores another hundred. Here's a football comedy that made all kids from one to one hundred and one stand up and yell. A laugh provoker if there ever was one. Lige is the action boy and the fans are sadly disappointed if he doesn't appeal in slapstick. Tone okay. Sunday, okay. Strong audience appeal. General class, town of 1,000. Admission 10-25, 15-35 on specials. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

SHANGHAIED LOVERS. (Pathe). Star, Stan Laurel. Here is a good comedy that has enough of the funny to please most any crowd. A comedy of the sea and a funny one at that. Good tone and appeal. E. N. Prescott, Prescott Circuit (250 to 700 seats), Union, Maine.

WIDE OPEN. (Educational). Star, Lige Conley. The best two-reel comedy I have seen in a long while. I see so many comedies that it takes a good one to make me even smile, but I admit that this one had me in sitches. Foolish but it will make anyone laugh. All classes, town of 3,000. Admission 25-35. Finishing Four, Starting Five at Paramount L. I. Studio

THE final touches are being put to four pictures at the Paramount Long Island Studio, and work is progressing steadily on five new productions which are to keep the stages humming for the next month.

"The Manicure Girl,' starring Bebe Daniels, supported by Edmund Burns and a cast of other favorities, is now getting its final titles and will be ready for preliminary showing at an early date.

The last shots of Richard Dix's new speed picture, now titled "The Lucky Devil" (first title was "California—or Bust"), were made this week, and Director Frank Tuttle is now busy with cutting and editing, while Julian Johnson is turning his hand to the subtitles. This picture is full of thrills, and Gregory La Cava, who co-operated with Tuttle in the directing of the automobile race scenes, has been made almost a nervous wreck by the actors' many hair-breadth escapes from death. Esther Ralston has the principal feminine role, while many other excellent players are in the cast, including Edna May Oliver, Mary Foy, Charles Sellon, and Mrs. John Harriman (Alice Laidley). Leon Nomis, the famous stunt man, and six well known racing drivers competed with Dix in the road race scenes into which were accidentally injected a number of real thrills not called for in the script. Gunboat Smith is also seen in an exciting prize fight sequence.

Herbert Brenon will complete "The Street of Forgotten Men" by the end of the week. This picture of the old Bowery and the professional beggars who made-up for their trade in a "cripple factory," features Percy Marmont, Mary Brian and Neil Hamilton.

Probably another week will see the completion of D. W. Griffith's new picture, "Sally of the Sawdust," in which Carol Dempster and W. C. Fields are co-featured. The company is now making the final scenes on location on Long Island.

Of the five new productions now in preparation, two will be started in actual filming next week.

Thomas Meigan steps before the camera on Monday in the first scenes of his new picture, tentatively titled "Whispers," Tom Geraghty made the adaptation from Booth Tarkington's story, "Whispering Men." Several popular players are under consideration for leading roles, but to date no definite announcement has been made regarding the supporting cast. Al Green will direct.

On the same day, Bebe Daniels will start work in her new film, "Lovers in Quarantine," which Luther Reed has adapted from the successful stage play, "Quarantine," now showing on Broadway. Harrison Ford has been engaged as her leading man, but the remainder of the cast has not yet been selected. Frank Tuttle, who directed Bebe in several of her recent successes, will again handle the megaphone.

Pola Negri returns to New York next week from California, and will begin her first picture at the Long Island Studio about the first of June. No details about the story or the cast have been announced. Paul Bern, will direct the brilliant Polish star.

Another production slated for the first of next month is "That Royle Girl," which will be made by D. W. Griffith, with Carol Dempster in the leading role. Paul Schofield is now finishing the film version of the popular story.

The next Herbert Brenon production will be "A Kiss for Cinderella," an adaptation of the famous Barrie play by Willis Goldbeck. Camera work will be started in the early part of June. Percy Marmont is the only player definitely selected so far, although it is probable that Betty Bronson will have the leading role.

Other announcements made recently are that Eddie Sutherland, the director, and Neil Hamilton, leading man, have signed long term contracts.

Enviable Record

Twenty-nine of the leading women of all picturedom have played opposite Tom Mix in the nine years he has been appearing in Fox Film Corporation productions. This list, compiled by Fox authorities, includes:

Colleen Moore, Wanda Hawley, Pauline Starke, Patsy Ruth Miller, Lillian Rich, Barbara Bedford, Billie Dove, Doris May, Mabel Ballin, Jane Novak, Eva Novak, Alma Bennett, Ora Carewe, Alice Calhoun, Anne Cornwall, Lucy Fox, Victoria Forde, Enid Markey, Kathleen O'Connor, Teddy Sampson, Gloria Hope and Pauline Curley, Claire Anderson, Rhea Mitchell, Claire Adams, Betty Jewel, Gertrude Olmstead, Marion Nixon and Kathleen Kay. .. ..

Complete 'Steele of Mounted' Cast

Work on the production for Vitagraph of James Oliver Curwood's "Steele of the Royal Mounted," under the direction of David Smith, is proceeding satisfactorily, according to advices from California. By the addition of three well known players the cast has been made complete.

The role of Mrs. Thorpe will be filled by Mabel Julienne Scott. Sydney De Grey will impersonate Colonel Becker, and John Toughey will play Colonel MacGregor. Bert Lytell is featured.

Vigorous Public Campaign Planned for "White Monkey"

IN furtherance of their recently inaugurated policy of staging effective advance publicity campaigns on all Sawyer-Lubin productions, Associated Pictures Corporation has formulated an ambitious exploitation schedule for the recently completed production, "The White Monkey," which features Barbara La Marr under the direction of Phil Rosen.

Has Had Wide Circulation

"The White Monkey," authorized by John Galsworthy, has enjoyed wide circulation, having led the lists of best selling novels for months, and by reason of the extensive newspaper copy on production and players sent out through First National since the novel was acquired has already been widely publicized to the general public.

The first step in the new campaign will be the sending to all exchanges and first run exhibitors of a miniature white monkey souvenir, in the form of an inkwell or paper weight, which will serve as a constant reminder of the production in addition to being a unique and useful desk ornament. This exhibitor publicity will be followed up by a series of advertisements on "The White Monkey" in the trade papers.

To Appeal to Picture Fans

A direct appeal to motion picture fans will be made through a series of advertisements in the fan magazines. This will be in addition to the Saturday Evening Post advertising, which will be part of the national advertising campaign given releases by First National Pictures.

An eight page folder will be prepared on "The White Monkey," and in addition to general distribution to exchanges, first runs and franchise holders these will be available at small cost to exhibitors for distribution to their patrons prior to the showing of the picture. Colored reproductions of the painting around which the Galsworthy story revolves will be sent all exchanges for display. Smaller photographs of the painting will be sent franchise holders and first run exhibitors.

THIS BLACK FLAG BEAT A CUTOUT SHIP IN LAREDO

Getting close to S. R. O. in Holy week was the accomplishment of Jack Rowley, of the Royal Theatre, on The Sea Hawk. He used plenty of lithographs around town, but the banner was what seemed to attract the people in this Texas town

Mechanical Train for Coming Through

Oscar White, of the Rex Theatre, Sumter, S. C., outdid himself on a lobby for Coming Through. He built a box about 3 1-2 feet wide by 4 feet deep, around which he piled coal to suggest a mine. The cavity was lighted with concealed lights and in this space a toy train ran continuously.

On either side of the lobby were piles of coal with wheelbarrows, picks and shovels. Lettered panels and cutouts completed one of the best lobbies he has ever achieved.

And of course it did not cost much. The tools were borrowed from the hardware store, and the local coal company hauled several loads to and from the theatre in return for a credit card with a hint that now was the time to be thinking about next Winter's coal.

Something new was the distribution of 1500 book marks in the local schools, the text reading: "You have a better chance of Coming Through in the business world if you complete your education. See Coming Through at the Rex Theatre, Monday and Tuesday."

The book markers seemed to work exceptionally well.

Makes a Cleanup With Orchestra

Making the house orchestra pull more money into the box office than a big videll attraction is going some, but Morris Rosenthal has been doing that lately at Poli's Theatre, Bridgeport, as one of his local appeal acts.

It was an old stunt, the rube band, but it overshadowed the dramatic feature and got several times the space given The Dressmaker from Paris.

Rosenthal merely moved the men from the pit to the stage, dressed them up, took the place of the leader himself and further augmented the band by putting in his assistant at the cymbals.

They slaughtered several well-known selections and broke the program with a chorus picked from the pupils of a local dancing school. After the chorus they placed one more freak number and then went into a serious playing of the Anvil Chorus from Il Travatore, with electric effects. After the earlier numbers, the playing sounded all the better through contrast.

The act was a literal knockout, and yet it cost almost nothing, for the pupils were glad to get experience and the archestra looked upon the stunt as a lark.

It will be recalled that Rosenthal recently put on a locally made picture. He writes that when he can make more money with local talent, he does not see the reason for importing expensive acts.

A Double Play

Edgar Hart, of the Opera House, Augusta, Maine, made a double play on his Easter attraction. He obtained the services of a local dancing teacher, who was glad enough to contribute her services in return for the advertising she obtained.

She had no professional photographs for the lobby. There was a photographer newly located in the town. Hart persuaded him to make up a set of negatives in return for permission to display them in his show case, and supplied him with a nicely lettered backing for the case. In addition he gave him prominent credit on the lobby cards showing another set.

The photographer got the advertisement and some showy samples. The dancer got advertising and the photographs. Hart got a good headline without cost. No one seems to have lost.

Why Swanke Wins

In a personal letter from Arthur Swanke, of the Rialto Theatre, El Dorado, Ark., recently, he gives the real reason why he is doing big time work in a small town. Not expecting to be quoted, he wrote: "I do not believe that there is anyone who takes more pleasure in making attractive lobbies than I. I really live in my lobbies."

In other words it is a labor of love and not just a job on a salary. When you have this spirit, you are well on your way toward good lobbies. You must take a pride and interest in your work, and then it ceases to be work.

Swanke not only makes up two lobbies a week, doing all the other necessary work for a double change, including the newspaper end, but he even finds time to do some decorative stuff for the stores.

A Condensed Week

Although he did little other than to increase his pictorial display and drive hard on the newspaper publicity, Charles Sessen, of the Criterion Theatre, Enid, Okla., got as much as his usual week's business out of a two day run of The Thundering Herd.

His only ballyhoo was an illuminated perambulator, which he regularly uses. He got the increase through intensive work rather than unusual expenditure.

Miniature Window Good Lobby Puller

Getting in line with the others, Barry Burke, of the Palace theatre, Fort Worth, Texas, used a fashion show in connection with "The Dressmaker From Paris," tying up a large local store.

The store gave a large show window to the stunt, and Burke arranged with them to reproduce the window in miniature as his lobby display. It was an exact copy, even to the diminutive show cards, and every costume used in the window was reproduced on doll models for the lobby.

Miniatures always are interesting, but if they reproduce some local object they are much more valuable. Most persons who saw the lobby went over to the store, to see the original, and vice versa. It was a material aid to the merchant as well as to the house and helped to put the picture over to a better business than this season of the year calls for.

Private Newspaper Now an Institution

Before the war there were scores of house-owned newspapers or locality sheets, but they dropped with the paper shortage and few of them have been revived.

Recently E. F. Corcoran, a Paramount exploiteer, induced the Rex Theatre, Sheboygan, Wis., to start its own paper because the local newspapers paid so little attention to pictures. The house had been getting out a large broadside, but it looked like an advertisement and not a paper. Corcoran got 40 merchants to come in on an issue on a guarantee of 10,000 circulation. The idea was to make it look like something and at the same time cut the expense.

Now it has become a regular feature and not only covers the cost of printing and distribution but is rolling up a nice profit. The advertising rate is low and the circulation large, so the advertising holds up because the advertisers get results.

It is not a good plan to fight a local paper that is generous with space, but with a crabby editor, the house newspaper can be made profitable.

Rubed His Jannings for The Last Laugh

Backing up a sound campaign on The Last Laugh, J. M. McClure, of the Franklin theatre, Oakland, Calif., put out an impersonator of Jannings as the carriage opener. In a gorgeous coat and carrying the official umbrella, on which was painted the title of the play, he rubed the downtown streets, officiously opening auto doors for passengers, escorting old ladies across the street and carrying out the general idea of the role. It gave an intimate suggestion that clinched the other work.

The best bet was a couple of previews, one for the newspapers, which educated the public to the idea of the story, and the other for the local Better Films organization.

He mailed out 25,000 postals, used 500 window cards and carded the spare tires of the local taxis.

The result was not only a good business but general satisfaction, for The Last Laugh needs to be explained to get the best audience results. If you show it cold it is so different that people do not know just what to think. We know of one dumb bell here in New York who went out with a hammer because she had expected to see a comedy. Tell them about it in advance.

Had Dummy Poser for Yolanda Run

Figuring that he ought to get money on Yolanda, if it was a costume picture, D. Roscoe Faunce, of the Strand theatre, Birmingham, hired a human dummy to pose in a store window several times a day, the week before the Marion Davies Picture opened.

A Metro-Glodwyn Release.

THE CABINET

The store gave him all the space he wanted to advertise accessories, and the stunt was a continuous advertisement, though the appearances were intermittent.

When the picture opened, the cabinet was taken down to the lobby and the figure of a mounted knight was attached to the back. Twice daily the dummy did his posing stunt, and at other times the cabinet was swung around to let the knight front the street.

Two corner posts of compo board, painted to represent turrets, gave the entire lobby a castle effect with very little material and painting.

Cheap at $15

Most of the Southern cities are all excited about the possible air mail route between Chicago and New Orleans. Columbia, S. C., is one of them.

When a traveling air outfit came to Columbia for a few days' pitch, carrying passengers at $5 a trip, C. W. Irvin, of the Imperial Theatre, gave the pilot $15 to paint The Air Mail on the underside of the plane.

Some persons thought this meant that the plane was in the mail service, doing experimental work, but there always was someone to explain that Paramount's picture, The Air Mail, was being advertised, and it surely was the truth. Irvin got a lot of advertising for his $15, and showed a real profit.

A Special Trailer for Local Player

Edgar Hart, of the Opera House, Augusta, Maine, had a picture in which a former Augusta girl had a small part, as the picture was made in Maine by a Boston concern.

The girl was a favorite with her classmates in High School and two weeks in advance Edgar started a trailer, which the production company made especially for him. Hammering on the local idea, he added the fact that the picture was to be shown on the girl's birthday, and he urged them to come to her birthday party, ending the picture with a slide reading: "Your Augusta friends wish you many happy returns, Irene."

There was a bad patch on one of her close-ups, so he cut out about two inches, put this in a black box, with a light behind it and a condenser lens over the aperture and used this for a lobby attraction.

He achieved a packed business all day.

For the first two days of a recent week the house was sold to the Elks for a minstrel show. Edgar wanted them to remember that the picture program started again on Wednesday, so he persuaded a local restaurant to let him print up 4,000 paper napkins, and these were used from Saturday to Wednesday. It cost only $1.25 for the printing, and the restaurant supplied the stock. It helped to bring them in when the pictures were resumed.

Apparently the Owl Drug Company, of Los Angeles, spends half its time selling drugs and the other half mixing up picture hook-ups. They must find it profitable, for they are always coming in on some stunt.

The latest was a Sally Sundae on the Colleen Moore production. Its 300 soda jerkers all wore green ribbon badges printed up: "Try a Sally Sundae. As delicious as the production is good. See Colleen Moore in Sally. Loew's State Theatre."

This was supplementary to mirror and counter work.

Gave Fashion Show in Lobby Hat Box

D. Roscoe Faunce, of the Strand Theatre, Birmingham, Ala., made an unusual display for "The Dressmaker of Paris." He had this scheduled for Easter Week and figured that the dressmaking would appeal to the women, so he went to more than usual trouble to put it over.

He made a cylindrical hat box about five feet in diameter, with a glass front, as shown in the smaller cut.

A Paramount Release

FAUNCE'S HAT BOX

In the front of the box, about eye-high, was a glass window, displaying a miniature stage draped in grey sateen, as shown in the larger cut. At the back was a cutout of Leatrice Joy. The floor of the stage was cut to let in a circular platform four feet in diameter, to the edge of which were attached cutouts of the fourteen models, and a descriptive card for each. This stage revolved at the rate of four turns per minute, the lighting being done with cross throws of colored lights of 200 and 400 watts.

To supplement this he made up thirty profile hat boxes from compo board, each with a tulle bow, and lettered these with the title and star, with a still from the play. They were so gay and attractive that he experienced no trouble in getting them into the best windows in town, and might have used more.

He also got out 200 block one-sheets, half being printed with the statement that "The Blind will see The Dressmaker from Paris, etc.," and the rest starting with "The lame will walk."

Out of Town Cards Were New Haven Hit

Tod Browning, of the Olympia Theatre, New Haven, is generally up to something, but he rang the bell with unusual force for Sally. He got 3,000 postcards from a New York hotel and had them pen-written by girls, the message running: "Will be in New Haven all week of March 29, at 146 Temple street. Call L 755. Sally."

These were addressed to a list of men and were sent back to New York for mailing.

The telephone calls were so numerous that it was necessary to assign a special operator to one wire, and she spent the entire day—and several days thereafter—explaining to amorous or puzzled men and irate wives that Sally merely was the title of the newest Colleen Moore play. All calls for Sally were sent to the single wire, instead of being sent in over the theatre's other trunk lines, and the first two days the wire was in constant use.

Very few seemed to connect the street number with the theatre, which was why the stunt went over so big.

The value of this angle of the out of town mailing depends much upon the temper of the town. In some sections it would have been fatal to the picture, but Mr. Browning knew how most of his patrons would take it.

strip of black. It's different, and while it is not always a good idea to bend a title this is so boldly done that you do not have to slant the page to be able to read it. As it is for the third week of the run it is not necessary to do more than announce the title and the continuation. The fact that it is holding over is all that is essential and even those two sales lines are not really needed, though they help. This seems to be a very simple display, but we do not imagine that the artist just happened to do it that way. It seems to have been studied out to get the best display in a small but expensive space.

Plenty of Talk in Little Space

This is a fifty line double from the Regent Theatre, Rochester, or a trifle more than seven column inches. It gives room for the announcement of the title, the featured players and two boxes of talk. Of course you do not always get a short title and you might have Dagmar Godowsky instead of Agnes Ayres, but the point is that you can get a lot into a little space if you do not start in with eighteen point letters and work up. There is all the display you can ask for in this small space, and you get this display because you separate the title from the players with sales talk. The talk is an asset and not a detriment. If the Regent can do it, your printer can get you the same effect if you will show him the samples and then keep after him, sweetening the kicks with a pass now and then. This would be a little better if the two players were set upper and lower case instead of all caps.

"Love will find a way and even the Dark Swan among women will find hers" is a little better, but there is very little appeal even in this and nothing to drive a man out of the house down to the California. There is not even much appeal to the drawing. It just takes up space without doing anything much. About the only sales angle is Marie Prevost's liberally displayed leg, and there is only one of those. The California usually gets the idea over, but this is a waste of about three eigths.

Lance Meredith in the panel suggesting that the matinee be patronized where possible or that the evening patrons come as early as convenient. This sells on suggestion, the same as the statement that only one show a night will be given or announcing that patrons will not be admitted to the theatre after the picture starts. All of these devices take it for granted that the show will get the crowds and the crowds come because they take it for granted that there will be crowds. If you are excited not to use the idea as a stinger to put over a defective, it will work every time and with less argument than it would have to convince the patron on argument about the play. A further kick is given by the announcement that evening prices will prevail at the matinees during the engagement. Taken in connection with Director from its 6 months run in New York at $2 the suggestion of "at usual prices" is maintained with a little velvet from the afternoon showings. The Lumberg made a clean campaign on the picture, with the usual school appeal and a newspaper contest in which prizes were offered for the best title to a set of six scene cuts from the play. It sells with less talk and from reports brought better business.

lover, and explains the two ones. It will be noted that the name cut is reversed to let in the title. The sales talk below the signature looks better on the style sheet it would in a heavier face. You have only to compare this with the last ever to see the right. This is the point where the layout slips. At least caption should have run in the one column and then should have been set in upper and lower. This would have given a greater emphasis and at the same time would have added white space where he belongs. But taken by and large it is a good display in a new one that seems to work about the best—a three inner. Nowadays the average theatre goes in for a display much deeper than its width, but a three inner seems to give the ideal proportion for a really neat layout, and the Dome has used that proportion to a generally good effect.

The Long Topline Is Better Displayed

The announcement from the Ritoh Theatre, Baltimore, is mostly plan book cut with a heavy piece for the announcement of the closing of the engagement of a large jazz orchestra. It offers little that is new, but it does demonstrate that the crossline at the top is better in upper and lower case than it would be in capitals. It seems to be the rule in Baltimore to set all lines in caps where space permits, and it is only where there are too many letters that the compositor reaches for the lower case type. Here the line is too long to go in all caps, and so the display is much better because it is more easily read. Of course there is no reason supposing a line to be set in all caps, even if it will run short on the space, but in Baltimore there must be a chapel rule to this effect, since it is done whenever the space permits and the only way to fool them seems to be to give them too many letters to go in all caps. If you will compare this with other Baltimore layouts we think you will like this style better. This is not up to the best standards of First National as regards cut, but it does very well since the name and the suggestion of love making will sell almost anywhere.

A First National Release

IN UPPER AND LOWER

Reverse Background Loses Some Effect

by Laura La Plante and Tully Marshall. In the reproduction these names will come up better than they do in the original because of better printing. The title is cramped and has no sales value, though probably it has been sold through other means. At the same time it should be possible to get the title over to better results than this even in a space less than four inches. The big idea seems to have been that reverse would show up well in the limited space. Whether it gave display once it attracted attention does not appear to have been considered, which very often is the way with reverse cuts. The advertiser considers what it should do rather than what it does do.

Masked Girl Slept in The Golden Bed

Springfield, Ohio, used the girl in a bed on The Golden Bed with an interesting variation. This girl wore a mask and you got ten dollars if you were the first to identify her, providing that you could write a four-line jingle using her name. The next ten got passes to see the picture.

The bed was used in a dry goods store window for three days with a sign announcing that on the fourth day—Saturday—the bed would be occupied between two and three and seven and eight by a local girl. The crowds were so dense that the plate glass window held only through a miracle, but it did hold, and the merchant liked it, but if you try the stunt, erect a strong barricade.

The theatre was tied more directly to the stunt through the fact that the replies had to be brought to the lobby. The bed was merely a gilt compo board outline, one section in front of and the other to the rear of an ordinary couch.

A GREATER PRESENTATION SEASON

PLANS are well under way for the celebration of a Greater Movie Season during the month of August. Thousands of theatres throughout the United States will observe this film festival.

Will H. Hays has noted local experiments in this direction and has analyzed the benefits derived. When key theatres test an idea and grade it according to show business standards it is safe for the majority to adopt it.

The purpose underlying this special season is to increase attendance and create good-will. If a theatre manager can claim this of his particular drawing area, he has no cause to worry. It is the plan of Mr. Hays to assist the theatre manager to the extent of detailed information compiled from subject matter submitted by those who have worked the idea and found it practical. Special advertising and publicity will do much. Greater Movie Season is a great impetus for the new season. It will enable the manager to get off in his race at a good pace. It is the opportunity to declare himself before his public and display his new stock. Any theatre manager can get the upper hand of "Old Man Competition" when he is given a flying start and a corps of pep specialists to keep pushing him.

The success of Greater Movie Season will depend upon the various programs. This, however, is the vulnerable spot. Advertising, publicity, stunts and all other forms of attraction material will not keep the people coming unless they get something good when they do come. The public are always willing to try, but plaudits born of satisfaction get more money than those purchased at the price of paper.

The program is the thing. Good pictures necessary. The surrounding features vital. What will the result be? Repetition or new ideas. Monster jubilees will get the line started through the doors but plan to keep it unbroken during the season that is to follow.

Let us give more thought to the surrounding programs as we approach the next year which starts in August. It is possible to plan now for your presentation features, outlining the special attractions in the same manner you are booking your pictures. Last minute ideas are often good, but they are more expensive and lack the finesse which should be characteristic of each production.

What will your program consist of? The commonplace or features marked for their originality and novelty? The general trend is forward, and situated as we are, we can see a progression, a concerted effort on the part of leading producers to make next season count for something really worth while in presentation productions.

There will be more theatres offering better prologues and presentations and Greater Movie Season will offer the ideal moment to start the ball rolling, and introduce the better productions which will be matched with attractions of equal quality during the succeeding season.

PRODUCTIONS OF TOMORROW

THE other day a few producers met in a well known metropolitan grill. During the luncheon conversation the subject of forthcoming productions naturally appeared, with the dominating question—"Where will the presentation lead us? Will it ever reach a definable plane?"

Every producer is striving to attain a definite development. The form of the presentation has been arrived at—a stage production characterized by extreme artistry. But to classify it in the manner similar to legitimate stage productions is at present impossible.

Variety is demanded. This variableness must characterize the productions, as similarity is the stumbling block over which so many producers fall down.

The presentation business is enjoying good health and is a rapidly growing child. Perhaps, someone will be the discoverer of the key and unlock the door to the secret of a presentation system.

A few thoughts gleaned from the luncheon are worth passing on. They are indicative of how the producer is planning. They are glimpses into the work of tomorrow, particularly next season.

Acts with spoken lines, in the forms of sketches and one act plays, will be written and presented as a prologue to certain pictures, eliminating main titles, the opening scenes following the introduction of the spoken announcement and atmosphere creation.

With the large influx of vaudeville attractions as presentation features, special treatments and routine will be given to mark a contrast between the vaudeville house and the motion picture theatre. The concerted effort on the part of leading presentation producers to establish a form of highly artistic entertainment will not be impaired.

Presentations and prologues without people. With the inception of novel scenic and lighting treatments, special musical arrangements will interpret these productions.

A presentation stock company. Weekly musical and dramatic productions of a varied nature with a cast of reputable principals.

A presentation serial. Four or five productions co-related to a single idea. Each production complete in itself, with the same cast of players throughout the series. This opens a door to some exploitation possibilities.

It looks like a big season. What are your ideas?

The progressive producer, the true artist of the theatre, finds a happy explanation in the writings of John Ruskin.

"The artist not only places the spectator but talks to him; makes him a sharer in his own strong feelings and quick thoughts; hurries him away in his own enthusiasm; guides him to all that is beautiful; snatches him from all that is base, and leaves him more than delighted, —ennobled and instructed, under the sense of having not only beheld a new scene, but of having been endowed for a time with the keen perception of a penetrating intelligence."

"To think hard, work constantly and make the best of things as they come along, be they good or bad, resolutely determined not to be discouraged, come what will, we will surely arrive at a comfortable landing."—Charles Dickens.

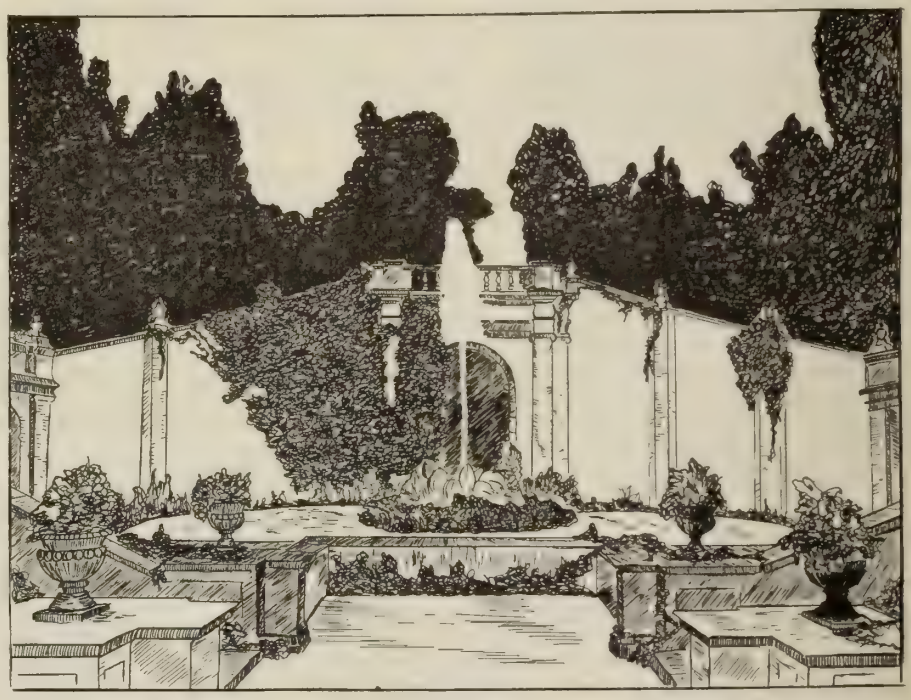
THE LURE OF JUNE

A Summer Fantasy

A Moving Picture World Presentation

Devised by Colby Harriman



WITH the introduction of flower shows as features in various houses, it has been deemed advisable that a presentation emphasizing the beauty particular to this season would blend harmoniously with such a tie-up.

June is also known as "the month of roses," "the merry month of marriage," and this presentation has been devised to introduce the romance of the season, together with the beauty of this month of the year.

The scene represents an old garden which may be known as a trysting place. A scrim is hung down at the curtain line. At the rise two characters, a youth and a maiden poorly clad, are spotted down center. Back of this is blackness, with the exception of the sky area above the trees, which is a deep blue, the tops of the trees forming a silhouette tracery in the sky; a pale moon is hung up left. The effect to be derived is that of a cameo. The characters swathed in amber highlighted with canary against a dark background.

Big First Run Presentations

RIALTO THEATRE

Featured Picture: "Any Woman" (Paramount

Brefel-Werner Duo

Martin Brefel, tenor, and August Werner, baritone, give an excellent rendition of the duet from "La Forza Del Destini" by Verdi. They appear before fabric drapes, gray toned blue from borders and sides, and dressed in tuxedos work in amber spot. The artistry of both singers was acclaimed by the audiences with three curtains following the song.

Dance Divertissement

John Wenger has created a fantastic set which is extremely simple in its construction but very effective. A set piece at center, a narrow panel cut-out with fantastic towers, adjacent rocks, and clouds. Painted on profile board the cut out is about six feet wide and tapers upwards towards the borders. It is backed with black plush, with strands of tinsel hanging across the surface, the tinsel about one foot apart. The set is flooded with blue, green and magenta. At the opening of the act a pin spot in amber is danced over the face of the close in curtains, as they open, amber and canary flood the performing area as Vivian Day, dressed in a white "Peter Pan" costume trimmed with rhinestones, does a dance selection, "A Bit of Peter Pan."

MARK STRAND THEATRE
New York City

Featured Picture: "Just A Woman" (First National)

Memorial Prelude

Joseph Plunket commemorates Memorial Day with an orchestral selection arranged from musical compositions by Victor Herbert, and introduces Kitty McLaughlin and the Mark Strand Male Ensemble in a fitting finale. The orchestra and curtains are flooded right with red, center with white and left with blue. Towards the finale curtains open revealing a long narrow arched opening, an ivory casing with dark plush carrying off right and left. A wreath is one side of the base of the arch. In the center on a small platform stands the singer dressed in a white robe representing "Columbia." White spots highlight her. Back is hung a sky drop flooded with blue. In front of the curtains on either side stand four members of the Ensemble dressed in field uniforms standing "at rest." They are outlined with red shot in from right and left.

Divertissements

The revolving stage is used to present three numbers. The first, Emily Day, coloratura soprano is introduced singing "The Butterfly Waltz"—Herbert. Two high box hedges are set at an angle with an opening at center. Back of the opening is a small hedge; a marble garden bench is center and large flowering tulips form a circular row in the foreground. The singer is gowned in an 1860 costume of blue and white, with gold lace. White spot on the singer with amber spots from the bridge highlighting the set. There is a suggestion of a sun-dial at the right of the garden bench.

b) "Danse Chinois". The setting consists of a large gold Buddha statue on a gilt pedestal at center with a spray of flowers over the back of the statue, a glowing incense bowl held by the figure. Mlle. Klemova dressed in Chinese costume kneels in front of the statute and M. Daks and Bourman dressed in glittering Chinese robes stand right and left of the statue. A very good dance number is given. Red and green highlight the statue. Amber and canary used from the bridge with canary from booth to flood for dance number.

(c) "Edward Albano assisted by the Male Ensemble of eight sings the "Toreador" Song by Bizet. The setting consists of two stone gateway posts with a very artistic wrought iron gate in square design between the posts. Foliage pieces in jardinieres are used to dress in front of the gateway. A large bowl shaped urn with brightly colored leaves of a plant is on top of the post right. The soloist appears dressed in a light costume of gilt material with red and green in sash and cape. The members of the Ensemble are dressed in highly colored Spanish jackets and dark trousers. Red amber and canary used to highlight with canary spot for the soloist.

COLONY THEATRE
New York City

Featured Picture: "The Crimson Runner" (Hunt Stromberg)

Eddie Elkins and Club Richman Orchestra

This popular orchestra of the Club Richman New York City, presented several syncopated numbers which were very popular with the audience. Setting consists of a large French window occupying one third of the space up center. A shirred draw curtain is hung on the upper half of the window. Two rows of figured batik for drapes flank the window on either side. Light curtains carry off right and left. Back of the window is flowered set piece or balustrade with a sky tab drop for backing. Two bracket chandeliers with candles surmounted by silk shades are hung right and left of the window. A crystal chandelier hangs from center. The orchestra is grouped about stage, piano at dead center. Upper part of the fabrics composing the body of the set toned in blue with rose at the bottom. The lights on the brackets and on the chandelier are in amber. The area occupied by the orchestra is flooded with magenta and canary from borders. The spot outside of the window is highlighted in vivid colors. Two artists are introduced during the action; Ben Blue in a new cycle of eccentric dance novelties, and Cutie Osborne, dressed in silver spangled dancing costume does an excellent Charleston specialty. The two artists appear together at the finale.

Eldora Stanford

This artist offers attractive songs in a very effective setting. A garden bench of suggested marble is center with two set trees laden with shell pink flowers right and left of the bench. Singer is in a rose-colored dress of 1860 period. Blue sky drop is hung in one filling the balance of the area with pink spot on the singer.

Virginia Bell

This presentation is one of extreme novelty, as it introduced "the girl of a thousand faces" doing dance numbers with masks designed and executed by Alex Hall. An interesting strip of film precedes the number setting forth the use of the masks and introducing the dancer. The first number is entitled "Vanity." After a pictured interpretation of the setting, scrim is lowered, screen taken away revealing setting on the stage. Black plush hung in two, small tapestry hung center, two large vases filled with silvered leaves right and left. Dancer clad in a vampirish costume of glittering spangles and rhinestones removes the mask, hands it to a turbaned attendant who kneels opposite, and puts on a grotesque Chinese mask with an accompanying dance. The screen is lowered and an interesting glimpse of the artist making masks is shown. This is followed by a pictured version of Miss Bell doing a dance glorifying the American vampire followed by a scene of a toy shop. A hand comes into the scene, removes the cover from a box revealing a double exposure of Miss Bell in a costume of The Silly Doll. The screen is taken away and before a black plush the dance is executed. For finale, film of moving masks is thrown on, the dancer finishing in front of the largest mask at center. The faces or masks for this picture and the presentation were created by Alex Hall, well-known sculptor from Los Angeles and are beautifully modelled and finished. They outrival the famous Benda mask in contour and color, and the novel manner in which they are used promises to make them one of the outstanding accomplishments of the year.

RIVOLI THEATRE
New York City

Featured Picture: "Old Home Week" (Paramount)

Divertissements

Three numbers comprise the divertissements offered this week, although the dance features were eliminated from the program at the second show on day of reviewing. Dolores Fariss who is programmed to render Danse Classique and Rivoli Ballet also programmed in the third spot of the presentation, did not appear, disappointment being voiced by several patrons. Betty Paulus, mezzo-soprano with Jacques Pintel at the piano, and an unprogrammed male soloist render a cycle of three songs which were very popular and elicited much comment from the audience. An artistic setting is given which consists of an oval opening with a poplar tree motif at right, and a suggested tree trunk at left and a fantastic multiple line border silhouetted against a blue green sky backing, punctuated with blue glistening stars. A transparency is hung front of the oval opening. Grand piano is set upright center with a floor lamp at the upper end of the bench. Amber spot from front is used on the singer; canary from the side on the piano with amber on the sides to tone. The pianist in the presentation and the organist in the pit accompany the singer. The following program was offered: "I Passed By Your Window"—May H. Brahe; "Life and Death"—S. Coleridge-Taylor; "Listening"—Irving Berlin.

CAPITOL THEATRE

Featured Picture: "The Spaniard"

Ministrel Week is celebrated at this theatre with a gala program consisting of twenty numbers in the presentation feature entitled "Tom Brown's Musical Minstrels." The featured artists are Tom Brown, master of ceremonies; John Lambert, William Rector, George Evers and John West as Premier Comedians. The vocalists, Roy Dietrich, tenor, and Vern Buck, baritone. Other attractions in the presentation are The Harmonists, a singing trio. O'Day and Morrison, dancers. The Oriental String Octette. Ted Morse Jazz Band. Tom Brown and Saxaphone Sextette.

STRATFORD THEATRE

Featured Picture: "The Man In Blue"

The Jazz Week Program is marked with nine stage feature. The first number is entitled "Call of the South" with a tenor soloist and eight girls as "Women of the Southland," eight men as "Gentlemen of the South," six girls as "Dancers in Crinoline" and six girls as "Jazz Dancers." The following acts are billed. Ed and Mack Williams, steppers. White Hussar Band. O'Malley and Therrien, harmony singers. Nat Nazarro with Buck and Bubbles. Sublime to Ridiculous with Lola Scofield and June Lee. Fowler and Tamara and their South American Troubadours. Jimmie Dunn. "Ukulele Lady," with O'Malley and Therrien, Ensemble, Ballet and Singing Hussar Band.

CAPITOL THEATRE

Featured Picture: "Drusilla With a Million" (B. B. O.)

In Memoriam

S. L. Rothafel's presentation, in commemoration of Memorial Day is a genuine tribute and marked for its impressiveness. A bell is tolled off stage with a subdued musical motif on the organ as the curtains open, revealing dark stage. A scrim hung down at the curtain line. Presently figure of a woman, Delphine March, in flowing gown of white with a jewelled tiara is discovered on a small incline extreme left supporting a large wreath. Green blue highlights the figure from right with red from left. She sings "Gone to Their Rest"—Roechel. Towards the finish of the song purple highlights a gauze drop hung in folds back of the scrim and the lights are brought up revealing a back drop painted with a field of poppies dotted here and there with small white crosses, a sloping hill is suggested. A long dull red tone at its very edge with dark, lowering sky. Canary and magenta tone the field of poppies.

Roxy's Gang in Vienna

This is a musical melange of student life. The scene is an exterior of Viennese cafe at twilight. The foreground suggests a garden front with a foilage border hanging down in one; the border is in folds which gives substance to the overhead treatment and suggests the garden; upstage a platform runs across with an opening at center which is flanked on either side with two large newell posts surmounted by two architectural figures which we will conveniently call "winged lions." A balustrade in design carries from the posts at center off right and left. A sapling tree with green leafed top is back of each newell post and at extreme right and left of the balustrade. The back drop suggests a Viennese country side with distant house and modern castle at left. On the right of the drop is a landscape with a water patch upon which a rippler works. Photographic clouds in pinks and ambers are extreme right blending with the dark clouds painted on the drop with amber and canary highlighting the characters on the platform, and flooding the foreground. Purple tones the top of the drop, green highlighting the tree tops. Tables and chairs are used to dress down stage right and left, and up center on platform. The following program is given by the characters dressed in various student costumes, the ladies appearing in evening gowns and native outfits:

Opening: "Vienna Life So Gay," Entire Gang.
"Student Love Song," Mr. Stanbury.
"Now My Dear," Gang and Students.
Ballet: "Gavotte," Miss Niles and Capitol Ballet.
"Doo Doo, You Are My Doo Doo," Gang and Students.
"A Real Good Friend," Messrs. Wetzel and Harrower.
"Come Now Stop Your Nagging," Mr. Rice and Gang.
"Butterfly Waltz," (Victor Herbert)—Miss Howell.
"Beautiful Lady," Mr. Robyn.
"Bury All Your Troubles," Mr. Rice and Gang.
"One More Kiss," Miss Rice.
Finale: "Auf Wiedersehn," Miss La Mance, Mr. Stanbury and Students.

Capitol Ballet Corps

Doris Niles and six members of the Corps follow the featured picture with an attractive dance "Whispering Flowers." The setting consists entirely of fabrics. Three arch leg drops of transparent mettaline cloth of light material is hung in one, two and three with a back drop of the same material hung in folds. The body of the set is toned in green. Characters are discovered kneeling in center, the girls robed in blue diaphonous garments with Miss Niles clad in pink of similar material. A magenta spot is thrown from a border directly over them. For finale the lighting treatment brought in magenta highlighting the heads and shoulders of the dancers as the canary was dimmed and taken off.

The characters seat themselves on a wall not visible to the audience, the lights slowly rise, revealing a dull gray wall with a suggested tree background. From one side of the garden enters a woman in white colonial costume, ghostlike. She is joined by a man in a white costume of similar period. They meet at the trysting place and sing the first movement of the Enchantment Song as the two original characters are enrapt with the dream which is being enacted.

Presently two characters of the 1860 period enter and take up the movement of the song. An old man and an old woman finally come in and, meeting, join the other couples and after the song they form an enchanting circle around the first couple as they proceed to do a stately wedding dance. Presently a figure of a girl in diaphanous costume appears at the top of the wall, and pantomiming a call off stage she weaves a spell over the pool. The characters in the dance disappear as the lights gradually come up revealing the greens of the foliage pieces about the garden. Then the fountain plays forth as girls clad in various colored costumes made of roses, appear from the area of the pool and dance over the parapet.

The two original characters arise in amazement from their dream and are startled as they see the garden transformed into a mass of roses, the vines on the wall become red and pink, the trees in back one mass of varicolored flowers, the fountain plays in rainbow tones. The dancers bring a filmy web, place it on the head of the girl as a bridal veil. They pick a mantle which sparkles as dew, throw it over her shoulders for the bridal robe; they throw a wreath of flowers around the neck of the boy and the characters bewildered, proceed down stage as the dancers bring the action towards the finals.

There is a sudden silence, a bird call, two or three shafts of light which flash on the sky. The dancers rush away and disappear in the pool. There is a sudden blackout and the youth and maiden stand in their original position, same lighting treatment, shorn of the glittering robe and veil and sing the theme song for the finale, as the sky reddens with the dawn.

PRODUCERS' FORUM

Mr. Harriman desires to hear from all producers and will appreciate their opinions, ideas and suggestions on all matters appertaining to general production work, publishing same in this section with credit to the author.

Proper American Flag Display

Considerable attention has been brought to bear by various governmental agencies relative to the misuse of the American flag and also its proper treatment in display and decorative schemes. With the approach of Independence Day, it seems proper that the various exhibitors should note the regulations attending the display of the national emblem and thereby co-operate with the governmental department in question. According to the United States Army Information Service there are only two ways to display the flag properly. One way is to fly the flag, freely unfurled, from a staff; the other way is to hang it flat, with full horizontal or vertical length falling evenly, with the starry field at top and to the observer's left.

At crossed staffs with another flag, it should be on the observer's left, its staff in front of the other staff. In a cluster it should be in the center or at the highest point of the group.

On a staff projecting from a window the flag may be hung either horizontally or at an angle, with the starry field drawn clear to the truck, as the peak of the staff is called. Suspended between two rows of buildings so as to hang over the middle of the street, the flag should be hung vertically with the starry field to the north in an east-and-west street and to the east in a north-and-south street.

Whether indoors or out, the flag should never be festooned over doorways or arches, tied in a bow-knot or fashioned into a rosette or draping. For these purposes bunting of the national colors is most appropriate. The starry field should be uppermost.

On a platform or stage, if the flag is not flown from a staff, it should be displayed flat, above and behind persons on the platform or stage.

If on a staff it should have the position of honor, at the heraldic right or observer's left.

When flags of two or more nations are displayed they should be flown from separate staffs and all flags should be approximately the same size. International usage forbids the display of the flag of one nation over that of another in time of peace.

Riesenfeld Orchestra in Civic Feature

Hugo Riesenfeld, managing director of the Rivoli, Rialto and Criterion Theatres, New York City, will conduct his combined sixty-piece orchestra at a Memorial Day concert on Saturday afternoon, May 30, on the Central Park Mall, in a concert to be given under the auspices of Walter Naumberg, in memory of his father, Elkan Naumberg, the donor of the bandstand. The following program is announced: (a) Coronation March form "The Prophet"; (b) Tchaikovsky's "Overture—1812"; (c) Siegfried's "Rhine Journey" from "Gotterdammerung"; (d) Schubert's "Marche Militaire"; (e) Liszt's Hungarian Rhapsody No. 2; (f) Suppe's "Light Cavalry" overture; (g) a cornet solo selection from "Aida"; (h) one of Bizet's "L'Arlesienne" suites; (i) Strauss's "Wine, Women and Song" waltz. Mr. Riesenfeld is also scheduled to give another park concert on July 4th.

Community singing was successfully introduced at the Capitol Theatre, New York City, with the presentation this week of the Ko-Ko Song Cartune with the theme "Daisy" (On a Bicycle Built for Two). The popularity which this subject enjoys is evidenced by the lusty way the audiences joined in the singing. Edward Hyman of the Mark Strand Theatre, Brooklyn, also reports excellent results with community singing prompted by the cartoon subjects.

Decorative Lanterns

With its purpose as much for decoration as for use, the decorative lantern is an artistic adjunct to the scenic scheme when it faintly pierces the shadows of a garden scene or casts a pleasing twilight glow upon a veranda or semi-exterior.

The lanterns may be placed to emphasize a particular spot such as a garden bench, a trysting spot near a set tree cluster, a bed of flowers or prick from the shadows an artistic bit of vine-covered wall and lamps shedding a soft becoming light over characters in action in a garden or porch-party scene.

With the early and thoroughly artistic products of our own country and the lamps and lanterns of other lands, especially those of the Orient to draw upon, each out-of-door setting may have its suitable and decorative light. The dim glow of the lantern through the foliage or silhouetted against a dark blue sky or interesting looking brick or stone wall rows will appear as delightful as beautiful flowers in conspicuous places in interiors.

Brass, copper, bronze and wrought iron lanterns modelled after the old American and English ones are very durable and effective for set piece or wall treatments.

Japan has always been famed for its garden and temple lanterns. There the lantern is as important in actual garden treatments as the trees, shrubs and flowers. Often the lamps were made of stone, bronze or brass, which were veritable works of art, and could be duplicated with papier mache. There are several styles of these lamps, those placed on a pedestal, the hanging lamp, and the low lantern that rests on a stone.

The Japanese and Chinese paper lanterns are always lovely and are adaptable to almost any setting. If one is willing to go to a little trouble, he can find, instead of the stereotyped red and yellow variety with little sprays of flowers, wonderful looking shapes in silver and faint subtle colors decorated with ferocious dragons, waves and clouds and all manner of unusual designs.

Some of the most effective lanterns are those made of shellacked wall paper or glazed chintz. Built up on a discarded or junior lamp stand (or a wired frame) which can be enamelled the desired color, they will result in a distinctive and highly attractive lantern.

Painting on Glass

With the introduction of certain flood lights which carry glass mediums upon which are painted scenes and reflected on a surface, it is interesting to note certain phases relative to the work of preparing the mediums.

Good quality glass should be selected. Simple designs chosen, and conventional designs either in landscapes or other motifs to predominate. Make a pattern of the scene you wish to project. Transfer the pattern or design to the glass with carbon paper. The impression will be faint but sufficiently clear for filling in with colors. The painting is done with tube oil paints mixed with a little white enamel paint which insures a hard surface, although permitting light to pass through. Use a fine brush of good quality for the painting. The design may be filled in with one or more colors. Bright striking colors give the best results when finished and the medium adjusted. Have the edges of the outlines in dark colors to exclude a blurred border.

Rubber Cement

This is a valuable adhesive and an improvement on the old glue pot. Rubber cement is handy, clean and is used constantly by poster artists, etc., for a variety of purposes which include patching, mending, and arranging sectional material. An outstanding feature is the fact that you need [illegible] ladle or wooden stick to apply it; it will not work on a brush as air quickly hardens it.

Colony Theatre Tapestry

B. S. Moss has purchased a magnificent Aubusson Tapestry which he has placed at the top of the stairway leading to the mezzanine section of the Colony Theatre, New York City.

This tapestry represents a French garden scene with the figures attired in the gowns of the 17th century. These gowns are woven in beautiful pastel colors. Incidentally, the garden itself inspires happiness by the beautiful coloring in the flowers and shrubbery. A Palace in the distance is clearly defined.

At the other stairway, a choice Spanish panel has been placed, the body of which is a rich wine color, of velvet of the 16th century period. Beautiful borders are woven all around, and in the center is a wonderful Cartouche of early embroidery. The ensemble color effect of this panel with its antique softness lends tranquility and mellowness to the entire surroundings.

A good idea is being presented at the Liberty Theatre, Seattle, where Oliver Wallace at the console of the organ conducts song contests in which members of the audience compete for cash prizes.

Louis Katzman, who was recently guest conductor at the Colony Theatre, New York City, has been granted a patent on the trade mark "Symphonojazz" which he will use on his arrangements in the future.

Short Subject Merits More Recognition; Pathe Missionary Work Is Bearing Fruit

Comedy Demands Greater Imagination Than the Feature and Audiences Prefer Laugh to Tears—Cost About $25,000 a Reel

By ELMER R. PEARSON

Vice-President and General Manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc.

TRADITION and custom are the unwritten laws born of experience. While they never in themselves get into the written record, yet they possess a degree of permanency far beyond that of the duly recorded government statute. Laws have been made and abrogated overnight without even jarring the observance of customs against which the laws were designed. The impetus to change or discard custom or tradition must come from within the group; from their recurrent experiences and from the realization that past methods and time-honored ideas have outlived their time and no longer apply to the problems or affairs of present-day life.

The motion picture industry is not so young that it has not acquired its own body of customs and traditions. Some have come to us as a heritage from the stage. Of these there can be no criticism; their survival is sufficient proof of their usefulness. A certain portion of our trade customs, however, came into being with the rise of the motion picture itself. They are still in the formative stage and lack the tempering that only the crucible of Time can impart. But they are in the crucible, and every day finds them more solidified and less susceptible to change.

There is the custom, for example, of regarding dramatic fare as necessarily the principal ingredient of any successful theatre program. This is due no doubt to the fact that the motion picture produced from the beginning has stressed the dramatic rather than the comedy theme.

There are very definite reasons for this. In the first place, a comedy is harder to produce, foot by foot, than a dramatic subject. The comedy demands greater fertility of imagination, greater originality of treatment and much more painstaking takes and retakes of many details. The dramatic feature often gets over by reason of its elaborate properties, gorgeous backgrounds or costumes, or spectacular effects. But the comedy demands something more substantial to be successful: its interest must arise from the solid entertainment of its characterization, its surprising twists and original bits of action, or its cleverly constructed plots and situations.

It is not surprising, therefore, that the producer should have more frequently gone in for dramatic rather than comedy pictures. Nor is it surprising that bigger first-run theatres affiliated with producers of feature-length dramas should have nourished and sustained this standard by throwing the emphasis on the drama in their advertising and presentation.

The independent exhibitor has succumbed to the subtle example of the affiliated houses, and to his own disadvantage. By throwing the force of his advertising on the feature he has increased the rental prices of the feature production while reducing the prices on the short-subjects. Good short-subject stars and directors have been attracted into feature-length production in order that they may secure advertising recognition and financial returns denied them because so many theatres' advertising ignores them until they show up in a five-reeler.

But, now, let us look at the other side of this picture—at the public's side. The whole history of human kind proves that men are more disposed to laugh than to cry. The physical organs of life itself are so constituted as if to induce the individual to laughter rather than to tears. The laugh invigorates the whole human system, bringing the sparkle to the eye and a feeling of elation to the mind. Weeping and its accompanying emotions depress mentally and devitalize physically.

The greatest authors and playwrights of all time knew well this propensity of humankind to relish laughter above all else, and took advantage of it. Shakespeare, for instance, realized that both the gentry in the gallery and the fans in the pit demanded comedy in huge gobs, and he gave it to them not only in whole doses, as in "A Midsummer Night's Dream" and "As You Like It," but also saw to it that both his straight dramas and even his tragedies were liberally sprinkled with the spice of comedy. Showmen of the present day might well take a page from this master-showman's book and give the comedy the consideration it deserves when planning their programs.

Look over the list of New York stage offerings for the past several years. There have been ten dramatic flops to every comedy failure and while the dramatic offerings outnumber the comedies two to one the list of big successes contains two comedies for every one drama.

Every normal person wants to laugh. Let your advertising guarantee him a lot of laughs, and he will be there even though he cares not much for the rest of your bill. If any exhibitor in any large city could secure bookings on enough of the market's comedy output to insure the permanent designation of his theatre as the "Theatre Comique," in a very short time he would have every other theatre in that zone distanced for attendance records.

Very many of the smaller theatres have already established "Comedy Nights," "Pathe Nights," "Short-Subject Nights," etc., with surprising increases in their box office receipts.

As we said at the beginning, custom and

New Season to Witness Increasing Use of Entire Programs of Short Subjects

By J. E. STOREY

THE short subject is rapidly coming into its own. The season just closing has seen the short subject in the ascendancy and we confidently predict that the 1925-1926 term will witness even greater advances by the short subject in popular prestige and usage by the exhibitor on his programs.

More than ever before the public is throwing its patronage to the variety brand of entertainment. The increasing popularity of the vaudeville bill is one proof of this. The report by libraries of the tremendous demand for short stories, or for books embodying series of short stories, is another sign of this preference for diversity.

Showmen Using More Short Subjects

Many showmen have already heeded this demand and have increased their use of short subjects within the past year to a notable extent. With each succeeding month we find increasing instances of this practice among first-run exhibitors. St. Louis recently witnessed day-and-date showings in every one of its first-run houses except one, of thirty-three Pathe short subject releases. Boston is another big city that has given the Pathe short-subject product 100 per cent representation simultaneously in its first-run theatres.

New York is also on the roster of the big towns giving increased program space to the short subject. Within the past year Broadway's first-run theatres have repeatedly shown four and five Pathe short-subject releases day-and-date. The Grand Opera House in New York City ran, with highly profitable box office receipts, a Pathe two-reel comedy for practically every day of the month. Another remarkable instance of short-subject popularity is the booking arrangement made by the Stone Theatre of Brooklyn whereby Pathe's short-subject product was signed for showing on forty days out of a period of fifty consecutive days.

Pathe Banner Week in Los Angeles

Los Angeles recently put on a Pathe banner week during which four two-reel comedies from the company's program appeared day-and-date at four of the film capital's prominent first-run theatres. Five of San Francisco's first-run houses presented during the same week four different Pathe comedy offerings, the New Fillmore and New Mission theatres doubling on one of the subjects day-and-date.

Perhaps the most important feature of this increasing prominence being given the short subject is the ever-widening use of the all-short-subject program. This kind of program was given great impetus about two years ago as a result of the fight made in exhibitor circles against the excessive length of feature productions. Responsive to the public's rebellion against these too lengthy and often mediocre features, many of the more alert showmen sensed the basic cause of the unrest to be a lack of variety entertainment in their bills and immediately inaugurated a plan of running all-short-subject programs from time to time. The results at the box office were apparent from the first.

Does Capacity Business

Edward J. O'Keefe, operating the Criterion Theatre in Atlantic City, N. J., has given his short-subject programs an all-comedy cast. His report on the box office reaction is typical.

"I am very glad to tell you that All Comedy Day never fails to do capacity business. When I first introduced this unique idea of a program consisting of nothing but comedies, the general opinion of picture men whom I discussed the idea with was that it would never go over. However, I am very glad to say that with every recurring year if anything it grows even more popular. Yesterday (New Year's Day), by the way, was my regular semi-monthly All Comedy Day, and it proved to be one of the largest in the history of the City Square Theatre.

"I have also introduced the idea to my Boardwalk house, and it has proven just as popular there as it did on the avenue. The idea I believe has been copied extensively over the country, and wherever put over intelligently as far as I know has always proved successful."

That has been O'Keefe's experience on the East Coast, but the western reports are just as enthusiastic. In fact, the Dreamland Theatre at Bandon, Ore., went the Atlantic City exhibitor one better and extended the All Comedy Program from one day to an entire week. During this particular week the Dreamland presented a series of "All Comedy Carnival Shows," the bulk of the programs being made up of Mack Sennett and Hal Roach comedies, Aesop's Film Fables and Topics of the Day.

Comedies Bigger Part of Program

Within the past few weeks the West has added still further to the record of the All-Comedy Program's success. The Egyptian and the Aztec, two of San Francisco's prominent first-run houses, recently staged programs made up largely from the Hal Roach two-reel comedy product appearing on the Pathe schedule. Max Graf, managing director of both houses, was so favorably impressed by the box-office returns that he declared his intention of repeating the plan in the near future.

"Am running Hal Roach All-Comedy Week in the Egyptian and Aztec theatres, Market Street," wired Mr. Graf at the time. "Our business is beyond expectations. Everyone pleased. I will run more Hal Roach Weeks with full comedy bills."

These are only a few of the more outstanding instances of how the All-Short-Subject Program has worked out whenever tried. On the strength of the success of such demonstrations in the past, we look forward confidently to a greater extension of the idea among exhibitors during the new season.

Pathe is keenly mindful of the situation and has shaped its production plans for the new season with the conviction that the forthcoming period will witness among exhibitors everywhere a greater demand than ever before for quality short-subject entertainment.

Pathe Has Huge 2-Reel Comedy Program; Sennett and Roach Signed to Supply 104

By STANLEY B. WAITE
Sales Manager of Two-Reel Comedies Department, Pathe Exchange, Inc.

MACK SENNETT and Hal Roach Studios have outlined a program of comedy production for the season of 1925-1926 to be distributed by Pathe Exchange, Incorporated, that will outdo anything these two leading comedy producers have attempted in the past. The production schedules of Hal Roach and Mack Sennett will result in the spending of millions of dollars during the coming season in order to fill the ever increasing exhibitor demand in the comedy field.

The request on the part of the exhibitor for an increased output of bigger and better screen comedies is the result of the same demand made upon him by the theatre-going public. In the past few years the comedy subject has increased in importance many hundred per cent. until today the motion picture fan is beginning to watch with keen interest for his favorite comedians and comedy brands. This fact is best brought home to the exhibitor in the extraordinary box-office returns on such series as the "Our Gang" and Harry Langdon Comedies.

Three years ago the Pathe organization realized the increased popularity of better comedy product and instituted a campaign for all-comedy programs. Pathe has pursued this campaign vigorously since then, and as a result quite a number of theatres have staged all-comedy bills with unusual success. With this end in view it has been the endeavor of Pathe officials during the past year to build up a program of short-subject releases surpassing both in quality and entertainment value anything previously attempted along this line. The 1925-26 season finds this policy continued on an even more elaborate scale. The schedules laid down for the Hal Roach and Mack Sennett organizations call for the delivery of 104 two-reel comedies for the coming season.

On the making of these comedies both Hal Roach and Mack Sennett will employ five units each. Four of the companies from each studio will be headed by individual stars, while one company from each of the producers will make comedies in which various members of both stock companies will be featured.

Three of the Mack Sennett companies will be headed by Harry Langdon, Alice Day and Ralph Graves respectively. In addition, there will be a Mack Sennett Comedies series in which various members of the Mack Sennett stock company will be featured, including such prominent comedy players as Madeline Hurlock, Raymond McKee, Natalie Kingston, Billy Bevan, Thelma Parr, Sid Smith, Vernon Dent, Jack Richardson, Kewpie Morgan and Andy Clyde.

Mack Sennett has already laid plans commensurate with the marvelous progress of Harry Langdon, both in popularity and box-office power during the past season.

One of the newcomers to stardom who is expected to add greatly to her following during the coming year is Alice Day, who has been assigned to a definite place on the Pathe program for the forthcoming season as the head of her own unit. Miss Day is the first young lady to be signed by Mack Sennett for starring roles since Mable Normand. "Tee for Two" is the title of the first completed comedy of her Mack Sennett series for Pathe. Another Mack Sennett player to develop strongly during the past year is Ralph Graves. He has also become an established box-office attraction and will be featured at the head of his own unit, producing two-reel comedies.

In addition to the above named stars Mack Sennett has added many new names and faces. These include Eddie Cline, Harry Edwards, Del Lord, Ralph Ceder, Reggie Morris and Lloyd Bacon. Harry Edwards, who is responsible for the direction of Langdon's past screen hits, will continue to wield the megaphone for this Mack Sennet star. Lloyd Bacon handled the direction of Lloyd Hamilton prior to his coming to the Mack Sennett lot. Del Lord is one of the tried and proven directors on the pioneer comedy-producer's lot, having made twenty-five pictures for Mack Sennett. Eddie Cline will direct Ralph Graves in his new series of comedies.

For the coming season John Waldron, general production manager of the Mack Sennett Studios, has enlarged his scenario staff to nine people who will work under the supervision of Arthur Ripley while a large staff of "gag" men have been recruited to work with Felix Adler.

In addition to the regular lineup of the far famed Bathing Beauties, the stock company at the Mack Sennett Studios includes such names as Sid Smith, Vernon Dent, Madeline Hurlock, Natalie Kingston, Thelma Parr, Virginia Gilbert, Billy Bevan, Jack Richardson, Kewpie Morgan and Andy Clyde.

Early this spring Pathe and the Hal Roach studios signed a new contract which calls for the delivery during the coming season of a minimum of forty-eight and a maximum of fifty-two two-reel comedies.

To take care of this huge production program Hal Roach has added extensively to his studio personnel. The staff of directors works under the supervision of F. Richard Jones, who has been identified with the direction of comedies since the days of the Keystone Comedies. Mr. Jones' wide experience extends both to the short-subject and feature-comedies fields.

"Bob" McGowan, the "Our Gang" director, is the dean of the Hal Roach directorial staff. The marvelous success of this series of comedies is due in large measure to the skilled and sympathetic handling of the troupe of youngsters by McGowan. During the coming season Mr. McGowan will continue to direct the "Our Gang" aggregation. James W. Horne, known for a long time as a successful director of feature-length production, is handling the megaphone for the Glenn Tryon two-reel comedies. The two-reel series of comedies featuring Charley Chase will be made under the direction of Leo McCarey. This director is accredited to a large degree with the development of Chase during the past season and thus shares in the honors that attach to Charley Chase's promotion from the one-reel to the two-reel comedy department. Chase in the past eighteen months has attained a plane of popularity little short of remarkable.

Clyde Cook, the newly signed Hal Roach-Pathe star, will be directed by Lloyd Buckingham. Like Clyde Cook, Buckingham is also a newcomer to the Hal Roach lot but has established an international reputation as a comedy director. Mr. Buckingham has directed the majority of productions made by Clyde Cook since his entrance into the motion picture comedy field. The Cook comedies will be of the slapstick nature with a strong dependence on "gags." Fred Gill will direct the Hal Roach Two-Reel Comedies Series.

Among those to be co-featured in this series are several names that have already made their mark as stars of well-known comedy brands. Reference is made especially to Al St. John, who was starred by Fox for several years and later by Educational; Lige Conley, who was also a Fox star and later was the featured player in Educational's "Mermaid Comedies"; Dot Farley, one of the best known comediennes of the screen, and Lucien Littlefield, who gained an enviable reputation as a character actor in the feature department. Among the other prominent members of the Hal Roach company who have become established screen attractions are Katherine Grant, Jimmy Finlayson, Martha Sleeper, Blanche Mehaffey, Fay Wray and Kathleen Collins.

Other departments of the Hal Roach organization have also been added to.

Two Pathe Features for Fall Release

HAROLD LLOYD
To be seen in new feature comedy of college life for Pathe release.

By HARRY SCOTT
Feature Sales Manager of Pathe Exchange, Incorporated

AT the time of writing this announcement Pathe has definitely scheduled two feature productions for release during the early part of the 1925-1926 season. Additions will be made to Pathe's feature program during the forthcoming period and plans to this end are already under way. It is Pathe's plan, however, to build up a schedule of feature releases that will be notable for their quality entertainment rather than their mere numbers.

The two feature productions already assigned to the Pathe program for the new season are the Harold Lloyd feature comedy, as yet untitled, which is based on a highly diverting story of college life, and the Hal Roach feature, "Black Cyclone," in which "Rex," the Wild Horse, plays the title role. Both these productions are completed and the advance comments resulting from pre-release showings of the pictures have given the Feature Department every cause for being unusually enthusiastic over their box-office prospects.

Harold Lloyd's new comedy is a distinct departure from his more recent types of roles. The story deals with college life and presents Harold as an undergraduate with particular aspirations of becoming a football star. In the matter of time consumed and money spent this production promises to be the most ambitious one ever undertaken by Lloyd. Some marvelous shots were obtained at the annual gridiron classic between the University of California and the Stanford University at Berkeley, while other football scenes were filmed at the Los Angeles Coliseum.

The present Harold Lloyd comedy is largely in the nature of a character study. A youngster sets out on a college career with the ambition of becoming the most popular man in the school. To achieve his purpose he resorts to all manner of ludicrous devices and situations, with the result that he becomes the laughing stock of his associates, although they are careful to keep him entirely in ignorance of their real sentiments towards him. The crucial test comes in the football game when Harold is called into the contest by accident. Disillusioned at last and aware of his companions' real feelings towards him, the boy throws all artifices aside, becomes his real self and by sheer grit wins his way to the popularity that he has so long sought for in vain. A highlight of the action is a ninety-five-yard run by Harold said to be the funniest if not the most spectacular gridiron dash ever seen on or off the screen.

While concerned with the football sport the picture has been so constructed that those not acquainted with the technique of the game will be able to follow the action with a maximum of interest. Sam Taylor and Fred Newmeyer are once more teamed in the direction of the production, while the cast includes Jobyna Ralston as Lloyd's leading woman, Brooks Benedict as the heavy, Hazel Keener, James Anderson and Joe Harrington.

A number of preview showings have already been held on the West Coast as test engagements before average audiences. The reaction of each of these showings has convinced the Harold Lloyd company that they have in the new feature production the funniest comedy with which Harold Lloyd has yet been identified. It is Pathe's plan to release the new picture in the fall so that the exhibitor may capitalize on the widespread interest in the gridiron sport with which the comedy directly ties up. Elaborate plans are already under way by Pathe to organize special advertising and exploitation campaigns for the new Harold Lloyd production as direct aids to the exhibitor's box-office.

"Black Cyclone" is the successor to "Rex, King of Wild Horses," which proved one of the screen's sensations during the past season. The new Hal Roach feature, starring Rex, is hailed by all those who have seen it as decidedly superior to the first "Rex" picture in point of story value, thrilling action and the individual performance of the equine star.

The story of "Black Cyclone" is a romance of the plains in which the major roles are carried by animal actors, the human characters being relegated for the most part to subordinate parts in the action. Between the great Morgan thoroughbred "Rex" and an equally powerful Pinto stallion, known as "The Killer," is waged one of the most thrilling contests ever seen on the screen, with the leadership of the herd and the hand, or hoof, of Lady, Queen mare of the desert, as the trophies for the victor. "Pest," a long-eared, shaggy-haired burro, furnishes the comedy relief. The picture was staged in the Nevada desert under the direction of Fred Jackman and took over three months in the making.

ALLENE RAY
Star in Patheserial, "Play Ball" and "Sunken Silver."

Preceding the national release of the picture, "Black Cyclone" will be given a series of key-city exploitation runs. First of these was staged at the Capitol Theatre, New York, where the world premiere was held opening Sunday, May 17. Following the Capitol engagement, "Black Cyclone" will be shown over the Loew Circuit, having been engaged for the maximum, or 120 days, playing time by this important chain of houses.

S. L. Rothafel, the famed "Roxy" of national radio repute, in speaking on Sunday evening, May 10 through Station WEAF and six allied radio stations throughout the country, announced that "Black Cyclone" was the best picture that he had seen in five years.

Serials on Highroad to Big Popularity; Pathe Read the Signs, Eliminated Hokum

By E. OSWALD BROOKS
Sales Manager of Serial Dept., of Pathe Exchange, Inc.

AS a preliminary to a detailed description of the lineup for Patheserial releases during the forthcoming season it would seem advisable to narrate a little past history on the subject of serials generally.

It is a well known and fully established fact that as recently as only three or four years ago the average motion picture serial was regarded by exhibitors and public as "hokum" entertainment. There was ample justification for this viewpoint. Until Pathe made a very determined attempt to bring serials forward along the same lines that feature product had been brought forward, there was grave danger of this extremely profitable class of picture being entirely thrown into the discard.

Theatre patrons had become tired of "hokum." Instead of the "thrilling" situations gaining applause, they were gaining laughs—at their absurdity. That type of serial, constructed illogically, with little thought to connected story or logical plot, "padded" to the nth degree was rapidly ceasing to attract.

It seems like delving back into ancient history, yet it is only a little over five years since Pathe inaugurated a distinct innovation in serial writing, construction and production, whereby practically all of the illogical "hokum" was eliminated and the motion picture serial brought to a very close approximation of the popular magazine serial—which has been the backbone of circulation with all successful weekly and monthly magazines for the past twenty years.

An early experiment was made with a ten-chapter serial released under the title of "Bound and Gagged." We know now that this title was a misnomer, but at that time the "greater and better" Patheserial idea was in its infancy. We thought it still necessary to give serials very sensational titles. Time has proved otherwise.

The next experiment was our acquisition of Robert W. Chambers' splendid novel, "In Secret," from which basis was produced a Pearl White serial entitled "The Black Secret." Shortly afterward we enlisted the service of Jack Dempsey and made new serial history with "Daredevil Jack." Then came a temporary reversion to the "hokum" type. "Bound and Gagged" and "The Black Secret" did not immediately fulfill all of the rosy expectations which we had forecast when producing those subjects. Necessarily at that time we were somewhat in the position of groping in the dark, yet serial production had to be carried on continuously.

However, the exhibitor opinions on our earlier efforts along the lines of "greater and better" Patheserials were extremely favorable to that type of product, so long in the early days of 1923 arrangements were perfected by our vice-president and general manager with the late Emerson Hough for the use of his story "The Way of a Man," as the basis of a Patheserial—and this was released in January, 1924.

"The Way of a Man" was startlingly and really phenomenally successful right from the word "Go!" It was the first time that a serial had ever been released under a non-sensational title—yet when "The Way of a Man" was one year old it had eclipsed in distribution any Patheserial ever released prior to that time.

Very much encouraged by the early showing on "The Way of a Man," there was immediately put into production a Patheserial based upon James Fenimore Cooper's "Leatherstocking Tales," and this was released immediately following "The Way of a Man," under the title of "Leatherstocking." Another success was scored with "Leatherstocking," as these stories were so well-known to every man, woman and child throughout the country.

Following that we embarked upon a quite radical experiment. We took an excellent modern novel of life and adventure in Egypt, bringing in the work of noted Egyptologists in tomb exploration, and released this under its book title of "The Fortieth Door."

By this time the "greater and better" Patheserial plan was working so satisfactorily that our production department approached no less a person than Police Commissioner Enright of New York with a suggestion that he should write a story for Patheserial purposes and bring into that story the various activities of the New York Police Department. Commissioner Enright furnished us with "Into the Net," and up to date the distribution on "Into the Net" has considerably exceeded the record set by "The Way of a Man."

Then came "Galloping Hoofs," an original Kentucky racing story conceived by the joint efforts of George B. Seitz and Frank Leon Smith, which also has been a wonderful box office attraction.

The "period Western" having proved so successful in the case of "The Way of a Man" it was then decided that another of that type should be welcome to follow "Galloping Hoofs," and accordingly arrangements were made with Theodore Burrell for the use of a story originally known as "The Girl Vigilante" but released by us in Patheserial form under the alluring title of "Idaho!" This serial is proving a veritable clean-up everywhere.

That brings us right up to date, as "Idaho!" is now the current Patheserial being released.

In this effort to evolve a "greater and better" Patheserial our firm spared no expense in the question of books written by world famous authors. We produced these serials upon a lavish scale, equalling any good feature production. We went right into the feature field for stars and supporting players. We felt that if ever the serial proposition was to be placed upon a proper plane, our serial productions would have to be at least the equal of the average very good feature.

Today a casual glance at any episode or "chapter," as we prefer to designate the weekly instalments of Patheserials, would not reveal the slightest difference between any scene or sequence of that Patheserial and any scene or sequence of the average best feature. This applies all along the line as to production, direction, sets, acting, etc.

Emboldened by the great success of this "greater and better" Patheserial plan, our lineup for serials during the forthcoming season of 1925-1926 is necessarily even yet more ambitious.

Starting on May 10 we will release an Albert Payson Terhune story of the Florida Everglades under the title of "Sunken Silver." This is a direct picturization in Patheserial form of Mr. Terhune's very successful novel "Black Caesar's Clan." The featured players in "Sunken Silver" are Allene Ray and Walter Miller. By this time Miss Ray has gained a very favorable reputation as a Patheserial heroine. Her work in "The Way of a Man," "The Fortieth Door" and "Galloping Hoofs" has endeared her to millions of serial fans throughout the country, who now look forward with keen anticipation to her next starring vehicle. Walter Miller is a new recruit to the Patheserial fold.

In the opinion of many he is about the best leading man we have ever had.

Following "Sunken Silver" we shall release a tremendously interesting serial of western import, entitled "Wild West." This is being produced by C. W. Patton at the Miller Bros. 101 ranch in Oklahoma. It will carry all of the allure of a Wild West show, the circus atmosphere and in retrospect the great Oklahoma land rush of 1889. "Wild West" is not a period story. It is an excellent, up-to-date, thrilling and romantic narrative of life "on the show." For this production Helen Ferguson has been selected as the leading woman and Jack Mulhall as the hero. Mr. Mulhall's work in "Into the Net" was to a large extent responsible for the enormous success which Mr. Enright's story met with.

"Stereoscopiks" Prominent in Pathe's 1925-26 List

A SERIES of remarkable novelty reels that were added just recently to the Pathe program and will continue as one of the features of Pathe's lineup of short-subject releases for 1925-1926 is the group of third-dimension pictures known as "Stereoscopiks." There are four subjects in the "Stereoscopiks" series, which will be made available at the rate of one release every week.

Two of the group have already been released and are now receiving representative first-runs throughout the country. The first titled "Zowie" has received a host of favorable comments both from newspaper reviewers and exhibitors. Only a few weeks ago E. D. Rhind of the Bates Opera House at Attleboro, Mass., advised that this subject "played in conjunction with an average feature broke all records for my Thursday show, which is one of the poorest days of the week for me." Mr. Rhind further stated that "Zowie" had "caused more excitement and comment among my patrons than anything that has ever played this theatre." Mr. Rhind's comment is typical of literally hundreds of reports that have been received at the Pathe Home Office and the Pathe branches concerning "Zowie" since the release of this subject in March.

Another frequent comment made concerning the "Stereoscopiks" is their quality of apparently leaping out from the screen over the heads of the astounded spectators. This illusion when coupled with the right kind of action on the screen never fails to send the audience into shrieks of laughter, and this fact has been featured in much of the critical comment found in photoplay departments of the newspapers. One of Dallas' leading dailies went so far as to devote a two-column box on the first page to the praises of the "Stereoscopiks."

Among the prominent first-run theatres that have already introduced "Stereoscopiks" on their screens are the Rialto, New York; the Fenway, Boston; the Missouri, St. Louis; the Rialto, Denver; McVickers, Chicago; the Howard, Atlanta; the Metropolitan, Los Angeles; the Palace, Ft. Worth, and the Palace at Dallas. Some of the first-run engagements have been marked by special presentation effects built around the "Stereoscopiks" shown. When the "Runaway Taxi" showed recently at the Rivoli Theatre, New York, it was preceded by a specially staged prologue. Variety, one of the leading theatrical weeklies, singled the presentation out for the following comment:

"This was staged most advantageously. A woman planted in the orchestra pit stood up and shouted she wanted a taxi. The house doorman from the rear of the house replied that he'd get her one. Then on the set a prop taxi appeared, the doorman refusing a tip, simply remarking, 'No, thank you, Rivoli service,' as he ushered her into the cab."

The action in each of the four releases is devised so as to bring out the stereoscopic effect of the subject with a maximum of realism. The first subject, "Zowie," intersperses thrills with laughter by a clever arrangement of screen sequences. At one moment a baseball pitcher slowly winds up and then suddenly lets fly a fast ball straight at the heads of the spectators. Another highlight occurs when a fisherman hooks an especially villainous sort of sea monster and hurls it directly at the faces of the spectators.

The second subject, titled "Luna'cy," takes the audience on a highly enjoyable tour of the famous Luna Park at Coney Island. Due to the stereoscopic effect of the picture the audience experiences all the thrills of the scenic railway and toboggan slide as if actually riding on these devices of the amusement park.

One of the breath-taking incidents of "Ouch," the third of the series, takes place when a fierce looking pirate slowly points his pistol at the heads of the audience and pulls the trigger. Next, a great cannon swings up from behind an embankment aimed directly at the spectators; there is a puff of smoke, and a projectile emerges from the muzzle headed straight for the audience. The illusion is so perfect that the audience's reaction in shrieks and laughter is inevitable.

The fourth number of the "Stereoscopiks" series, titled "The Runaway Taxi," brings the audience on a wild ride.

"Sportlights" a Successful Release

ONE of the most notable box-office successes on the Pathé program during the past season has been the series of single-reel sport pictures, known as Grantland Rice "Sportlights." These pictures are produced by J. L. Hawkinson from stories written by Grantland Rice, celebrated newspaper and magazine writer on sporting activities and conductor of the nationally syndicated "Sportlights" column, which appears in over seventy dailies throughout the United States.

These sport pictures were first placed on the Pathe schedule of releases in the fall of 1923 and have been released since at the rate of one every two weeks. Their success was remarkable from the first and the close of the 1924-25 season finds them a permanent feature of hundreds of programs.

The "Sportlights" plans for the new season are especially comprehensive in view of the nationwide interest in all kinds of athletics.

A production schedule commensurate with this tremendous interest in sport has been adopted by Messrs. Rice and Hawkinson for the season of 1925-1926. Among the highlights of this program will be the filming of a series of reels, each devoted to some special sport. For example, the "Sportlights" reel devoted to the subject of baseball will cover the national game from every conceivable angle, beginning with the kid's version of the game as played in the back lot up through the bush-league brand to the World's Series and including also some interesting sidelights on the making of baseball paraphernalia.

Other interesting highlights follow:

A reel devoted to the "pro and con" presentation of similar sports. For example, who has a better chance of winning in a rough-and-tumble match—the boxer or the wrestler? Which is the livelier game and draws more crowds—football or soccer? Which is the more effective stroke—the Western stroke as used by the Washington University twice winner of the Poughkeepsie regatta or the Eastern stroke as rowed by the Columbia crew?

A "Sportlight" devoted to "Nervous Moments" in sport—the baseball thriller of three men on base in the ninth inning with two men out and two strikes and three balls on the batter; the final put in the golf championship match, and similar situations.

A reel devoted to various kinds of recreation.

A number designed to show in a highly interesting way just how the gasoline motor has affected the competitive field of speed.

Another "Sportlight" devoted to the "Rising Generation" and showing how the idea of sport has taken universal hold at the present day extending almost to the cradle. This reel, which will feature youthful contestants.

Broadway Showing June 15 For New Fairbanks Picture

DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS' latest screen production, "Don Q, Son of Zorro," will be given a Broadway premiere at the Globe Theatre on June 15.

Contrary to the belief of some this is not a screen version of "Don Quixote," but a melodramatic Spanish romance adapted from the novel "Don Q's Love Story," by K. and Hesketh Prichard, with Mary Astor in the leading feminine role.

This forthcoming United Artists Corporation release virtually is a sequel to "The Mark of Zorro," former Fairbanks film success, with the star-producer playing both the role of the son of Zorro, as well as that of Zorro himself, grown older and more sedate, but none the less adventuresome.

If Mary Pickford finishes her new picture, "Little Annie Rooney," by the first of June, as her plans now contemplate, it is very possible that she and Mr. Fairbanks will come on to New York for the opening of "Don Q" at the Globe.

Harry D. Buckley, acting general manager of the Fairbanks company, and Mark Larkin, Fairbanks' personal representative, have just arrived in New York from the Coast to make arrangements for the Globe Theatre premiere.

Ginsberg Closes Contracts in Important Territories

HENRY GINSBERG, president of the Henry Ginsberg Distributing Corporation, returned to New York last urday from the Milwaukee convention with contracts for his entire output in a number of important territories.

Contracts for the six Banner Productions and the six Royal Pictures have been closed with A. Luchese, of Philadelphia, for Eastern Pennsylvania and for Southern New Jersey.

Edward Golden of the Golden Distributing Corporation has the rights for the entire New England States.

Joseph L. Friedman, president of the Celebrated Players Film Corp., of Chicago has Illinois and Indiana.

Jack Grauman, head of the Celebrated Players Exchange at Milwaukee will distribute Banner and Royal for Wisconsin.

Lee Goldberg of the Big Feature Rights Corporation has signed for Kentucky and Tennessee.

The Creole Enterprises operating exchanges in New Orleans, Dallas and Atlanta has the balance of the South.

It is also understood that the entire continental rights has been disposed of through the London office of the Ginsberg Corporation under the management of Jeffrey Bernerd and announcements of this distribution is to be made soon.

With the closing of territorial rights, work is being rushed on the pretentious announcement and publicity campaign for the Ginsberg product.

The first Banner Production "The Love Gamble" has been completed and is now being cut and titled and with this, complete key sets of stills attractively bound in leather, with personal imprint has been sent to the different exchanges.

The second Banner to go into production is "Salvage" which will be retitled for release and the cast has practically been settled upon.

Metro-Goldwyn to Produce Six Cosmopolitan Pictures

ARRANGEMENTS have been concluded between the International Film Company and Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer for the production of six Cosmopolitan pictures for the season of 1925-26.

The first production will be a picture starring Marion Davies, who recently signed a contract with Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. The picture will be entitled, "Lights of Old New York," adapted from Laurence Eyre's stage play, "The Merry Wives of Gotham," produced by Henry Miller two season's ago at Henry Miller's Theatre, with Grace George and Laura Hope Crews in the leading roles. "Lights of Old New York" will be directed by Monta Belle, and Miss Davies will be supported by an all-star cast.

Miss Davies will also make two other pictures, one of which will be "Buddies," adapted from George V. Hobart's Broadway success of the same name, which ran for more than a year at the Selwyn Theatre, and a picture to be selected.

Other Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer productions which will bear the Cosmopolitan trade mark will be "The Temptress," adapted from Vicente Blasco Ibanez's novel of the same name, to be filmed on the same elaborate scale as his other works, "The Four Horsemen," "Blood and Sand," "Enemies of Women"; "The Torrent," also a Vicente Blasco Ibanez story, which will be presented on a pretentious scale with Aileen Pringle featured in a notable cast, and a story yet to be selected.

Booking First National's

Schine Circuit, Tulsa and Toledo Theatres, Close for Winner Group

Among wide-awake exhibitors quick to take advantage of every opportunity to obtain high grade and up-to-date product for showing in their theatres, are the owners of the Schine Circuit, the Pantheon Theatre in Toledo, and the Strand and Rialto Theatres in Tulsa, Okla.

First National has just closed a contract with the Schine Circuit, comprising twenty important towns in New York State, for the showing of its entire Winner group of fifty-two releases for the coming season. This booking is the result of past performance on the part of First National product and the high grade lineup of pictures for the new season.

Contracts have also just been closed for the entire Winner group of pictures with the Pantheon Theatre, Toledo, Ohio, and the Strand and Rialto Theatres, Tulsa, Okla.

Last week a contract was closed with Joe Philips for Winner pictures to be shown at his Rialto Theatre in Fort Worth. Negotiations are now pending with other important open-market exhibitors.

"Thank You" Started

Following the completion of "Lightnin'" a few weeks ago, Fox Film Corporation announces that work has been started on "Thank You," another of the John Golden Unit of Clean American Plays to be filmed for the coming season. George O'Brien will have the leading male role, with Jacqueline Logan playing opposite. The second leading male role has been given to Alec Francis. Cyril Chadwick will portray the leading "heavy." J. Farrell MacDonald has a character part. Others in the cast include Edith Bostwick, Vivian Ogden, James Neill, Billy Rinaldi, Maurice Murphy, Ida Moore, Robert Milasch, Lillian Lawrence, Frankie Bailey, William Courtright, Mark Fenton, Richard Cummings, Jack Ganzhorn, and Francis Powers.

Shearer Voted Princeton's Favorite

Norma Shearer is the favorite motion picture actress of the students of Princeton University. This fact has come to light with the publishing of the annual Senior Statistics, a compilation of favorate choices determined by vote each year at Commencement time and published in the Daily Princetonian. Miss Shearer achieved the honor of being voted "the most popular motion picture actress."

Miss Shearer's rise to stardom, an elevation just accorded her by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer executives, is one of the outstanding events of the season just past. Her work has contributed in large measure to some of the most successful pictures, among them "He Who Gets Slapped," "Excuse Me" and "Lady of the Night."

Miss Shearer is now playing in "A Slave of Fashion" and "The Tower of Lies."

Carol Dempster, featured in the D. W. Griffith production, "Sally of the Sawdust," a circus romance, for release by United Artists Corporation.

Exceptional "Don Q" Cast

Douglas Fairbanks Surrounded by Strong Support

With everything moving rapidly for the world premiere of Douglas Fairbanks' new film offering, "Don Q., Son of Zorro," at the Globe Theatre, June 15, announcement of the full cast of this virtual sequel to the earlier Fairbanks success, "The Mark of Zorro," is made.

Mary Astor has the leading feminine role, with Jack McDonald and Donald Crisp, the latter of whom also directs the picture, in the chief supporting roles. Others in the list of players are the Countess Stella De Lanti, Warner Oland, Jean Hersholt, Albert MacQuarrie, Lottie Pickford Forrest, Charles Stevens, Tote Du Crow, Martha Franklin, Juliette Belanger, Roy Coulson and Enrique Acosta.

The roles of both Don Q. and his father, Zorro, grown older and more sedate, but still full of fire and still adventuresome, are played by Fairbanks.

The story is from the novel "Don Q.'s Love Story," by K. and Hesketh Prichard, and was adapted for the screen by Jack Cunningham. Donald Crisp is the director, with Henry Sharp as the chief cameraman.

Many Early Sales Reported in First National Winner Group

EARLY sales on First National's Winner group of releases for the new season are coming in rapidly—more rapidly than in any previous season at this early date. Reports made by branch managers to E. A. Eschmann indicate that as soon as the summer play date contest is off the salesmen's chest, the getting of contracts on the Winner group for next season will proceed with a speed that First National has not witnessed before.

The cause of this is the widespread interest in the Winner releases aroused among exhibitors as soon as the advertising insert on these productions appeared in the trade journals, and the enthusiasm of the branch managers and salesmen in the sales plan which Mr. Eschmann and staff have inaugurated. This plan was outlined to the managers and the salesmen at the district conferences held two weeks ago in six large cities.

In Los Angeles, ten important sales for the entire group of fifty-two Winner releases were made within two days after the sales conference, and this without special effort on the part of the salesmen who were then chiefly occupied in obtaining summer play dates for current releases.

Boston, Cleveland, Buffalo, Dallas, Indianapolis, Omaha and other branches reported important Winner group sales within a few days after the sales meetings. The concensus of the reports made to Mr. Eschmann from the field is that the exhibitors with big first-run theatres were never before so keenly interested in First National's offerings for a new season as they are at the present time.

Branch managers ascribe two principal causes for this. First, the long line of box-office pictures released during the season just past and the record receipts obtained with many of them. Second, the establishment of First National stars and featured players with the public. There is strong box-office attractiveness in any cast containing the name of the company's stars and leading players.

New Norma Shearer Film Is "A Slave of Fashion"

"A SLAVE OF FASHION" is the title under which the original Samuel Shipman story featuring Norma Shearer and Lew Cody and now in production at the Culver City studios will reach the screen. This Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer production has been known under the working title "Nothing to Wear," and is being directed by Hobart Henley.

The new title accords accurately with the theme of this story, which portrays in amusing and highly dramatic fashion the trials and tribulations of an impecunious young woman whose love of finery tempts her into passing herself off as the wife of an immensely wealthy man who is aboard. This man's real wife is killed in a railroad wreck while on the way to his new and palatial home, and the girl, who is played by Norma Shearer, arrives at the mansion in her place, where she proceeds to entrench herself by inviting her whole family to live there with her. Complications ensue when she falls in love with a young man, a neighbor, thereby causing her mother to telegraph for the absent "husband," played by Lew Cody. The story ends happily when, on returning to his home, he falls in love with the girl and determines to make her his wife in reality.

A feature of this production is a sequence in colors showing one of the most elaborate ballroom sets ever shown upon the screen. The costumes in these scenes are among the most georgeous ever worn. Wigs colored to match the delicate tinted gowns are worn by the ladies, who appear against richly colored tapestries, costly furniture illuminated by magnificent chandeliers.

Mary Carr, Miss Du Pont, Estelle Clarke and Vivia Ogden are in the supporting cast.

Lionel Barrymore, supported by Mildred Harris, in "A Man of Iron," by Lawrence Marsten, directed by Whitman Bennett. This feature, the seventh of the Chadwick Nine," will be released June 1.

Scripts Being Prepared For 17 First National Pictures

THE scenario staffs of First National and of producers distributing through First National are busily preparing the continuities for fifteen productions soon to go into work. At First National's own eastern studio the following stories are in the hands of the continuity writers:

"The Unguarded Hour," which Luther Reed is adapting from Margaretta Tuttle's novel of an American girl in Rome.

"The Scarlet Saint," which Eugene Clifford and Jack Jungmeyer are adapting from Gerald Beaumont's short story, "The Lady Who Played Fidele." Mary Astor will be featured.

"The Pace That Thrills," being adapted from Byron Morgan's scenario by Raymond Harris. Ben Lyon will have the featured role.

"Men of Steel," the special production to be made under Earl Hudson's supervision. Marion Fairfax is doing the research and writing the continuity. Milton Sills and Doris Kenyon will have the leading roles in this adaptation of R. G. Kirk's story of the Pittsburgh steel mills, "United States Flavor."

"The Beautiful City" is being put in continuity form by Josephine Lovett for Inspiration Pictures as Richard Barthelmess' next stellar vehicle. Edmund Goulding wrote the scenario.

The Sawyer Lubin staff is putting the finishing touches to its next Barbara La Marr picture, adapted from Elsie Jean Jerard's story, "Florrie Finds a Gentleman."

On the West Coast, the continuities are under way for several productions.

"The Viennese Medley" is being adapted from Edith O'Shaugnessy's novel by June Mathis. Kurt Rehfeld will direct. Anna Q. Nilsson and May Allison have been engaged.

"Joseph Greer and His Daughter," Henry Kitchell Webster's novel, is also being adapted by Miss Mathis.

"We Moderns," the Israel Zangwill play, is being adapted as the next stellar vehicle for Colleen Moore.

"Classified," the Edna Ferber story which will be a Corinne Griffith production, is nearly ready for Director Al Santell to begin work. Jack Mulhall and Charles Murray have been signed. June Mathis prepared the continuity.

"The Dark Angel," the next Samuel Goldwyn-George Fitzmaurice production, is being put into continuity form by Frances Marion. This is the play by H. B. Trevelyan which had a successful Broadway run. Ronald Colman and Vilma Banky will play the leads.

"The Sea Woman" is being adapted by June Mathis from Willard Robinson's play as the next Edwin Carewe production for First National. Blanche Sweet will have the leading role.

"The Splendid Road" is being adapted from Vingie E. Roe's new novel as a Frank Lloyd production.

"The Son of Montmartre" is being prepared as the next Norma Talmadge vehicle following "Graustark." It was at one time known as "Two Women" and was written by Hans Kraely.

"The Man She Bought" is being adapted from Pearl Doles Bell's story for Constance Talmadge. Hans Kraely and Sidney Franklin are making the adaptation.

"Married Strangers" is being put into continuity as John M. Stahl's next production for First National release. This was formerly called "The Waning Sex."

"Invisible Wounds" is being adapted from Frederick Palmer's novel as the first of the Robert Kane productions to be distributed by First National.

Thomas Meighan and Lila Lee in a scene in "Old Home Week," a Paramount picture.

Milton Sills, the First National star, shortly to be seen in a typical "Milton Sills picture" —the kind both public and showmen admire.

Retained for Second Week

"Lost World" Going Strong in New Haven, Providence and Chicago

"The Lost World" played the Hyperion Theatre, New Haven, the week of May 10, and did such big business that by the middle of the week arrangements were completed with First National to bring it back the week of May 24. A similar result was attained in Providence, where it opened at the Albee Theatre on May 10 for two shows a day at increased admissions. By the middle of the week the receipts were so big that it was arranged to hold it over for an additional week.

"The Lost World" opened its Chicago run for a minimum engagement of four weeks last Monday. To date it has been knocking the spots out of the record receipts established at that theatre by "The Sea Hawk." The showing of "The Lost World" at the Wilkes Theatre, San Francisco, continues to attract big patronage.

First National in Cuba

B. Lichtig left New York on last Thursday, enroute for Havana, where he will open a new First National exchange. This bears out the recent announcement of E. B. Johnson, manager of the foreign department of that organization, of his intention of establishing a branch in that territory, and is another step forward towards carrying out the new plans laid out by Mr. Johnson, for the opening of twenty new foreign exchanges. Mr. Lichtig has been identified with the industry for the past nine years, having been the representative for Universal in Spanish speaking countries. Since 1922 he has held forth in Barcelona, Spain, where he established the Universal Exchange, and ten distributing offices in the key centers. His exceptional work there lead to his appointment as the new First National branch manager in Cuba.

Seattle Stands First

At the end of the fifth week of First National's summer play date contest Seattle held first place, with Oklahoma City second and Charlotte, N. C., third. The three branch offices had maintained this standing for three consecutive weeks.

Two From Warners

Noted Book and Play to Have Vitagraph Brand

A stage triumph of some years ago, "Wanted by the Police," and a popular story, "Ranger of the Big Pines," are to find their way to the screen as the last two releases on the Vitagraph 1924-25 schedule. Kenneth Harlan will be featured in the former and Huntly Gordon in the latter.

Both pictures will be made by Warner Bros., but each will bear the Vitagraph trademark. Kenneth Harlan is now playing the role of the principal man character, David Lacy, in "Bobbed Hair," which is now in production. It is assumed that as soon as the adaptation of this dazzling story, the composite work of twenty popular authors, is finished, the production of "Wanted by the Police" will start.

Huntly Gordon, to be featured in "Ranger of the Big Pines," already has important parts in three big Warner productions. New York critics gave high praise to his work in "My Wife and I," which has just had a highly successful Broadway premiere at the Piccadilly Theatre, and he is the John Mannering of "The Wife Who Wasn't Wanted" and Gregory Cochran in "The Golden Cocoon."

Renown Planning Campaign

Renown Pictures, Inc., who have for the season of 1925-1926 a list of thirty-five quality productions whinch includes the Tiffany Big Twelve and the fourteen Truart features, are planning an intensive selling campaign. With the line-up of features as announced, Renown will have for the exhibitor a varied program of quality pictures seldom equalled by an independent exchange.

Hamilton Signed by Paramount

Neil Hamilton has been signed to a long-term contract to be featured in Paramount pictures. Hamilton's first picture under the new contract will be "The Golden Princess," to feature Betty Bronson, in an original story by Eleanor Gates.

Schulberg Signs Marcel DeSano to Make Series of Special Films

A SENSATIONAL find in the directing field is promised by B. P. Schulberg in the person of Marcel DeSano whom the producer signed this week to a contract that calls for a series of special productions. The first of these, "The Girl Who Wouldn't Work" by Gertie D. Wentworth James, is now in the course of production. It will be one of the opening releases on the schedule of B. P. Schulberg Productions for next season.

DeSano is one of the youngest men handling a megaphone today. He was born in Roumania, and educated in Paris subsequently serving in the French diplomatic corps. Coming to America, he entered pictures through the portal of scenario writing for Universal and Paramount. He studied directing technique under the tutelage of Rex Ingram as one of his assistants. Eighteen months ago he turned his talents to "Our Gang" comedies for Hal Roach.

Commenting upon the signing of DeSano which Mr. Schulberg considers one of the most significant announcements he has made this year, the producer said: "Everyone recognizes the place of importance which the motion picture director holds today and yet with all the changing technique of the last few years, practically nothing has been done to develop new talent along these lines.

"Marcel DeSano is going to be a constructive addition to the ranks of the men responsible for next year's film attractions. He is a real find but in no sense is he lacking in experience. His achievements with the 'Our Gang' comedies should be gilt-edged guarantee to exhibitors of his knowledge of dramatic balance, box-office and entertainment values.

"His European background, his years of travel and his success in writing for the screen are invaluable equipment. He is a man of keen human insight, delightful humor and progressive ideas. It is with the utmost confidence that I am entrusting to him many of the outstanding films on our program for 1925-1926."

De Mille Signs Miller

Continuing his acquisition of specialists for the important posts of his new independent enterprise, Cecil B. De Mille has signed Arthur Miller to a long term-contract. Mr. Miller has risen to high photographic fame for his camera work with George Fitzmaurice. He will be entrusted with the photography of the first personally directed Cecil B. De Mille production under the new organization, "The Road to Yesterday." Before starting with De Mille on this production Mr. Miller will "shoot" "The Coming of Amos" starring Rod La Rocque, and directed by Paul Sloane.

Warners Sign Charles Farrell

Charles Farrell, one of the younger generation of screen players whose recent performances have brought favorable attention to himself, is to be seen in a number of forthcoming Warner Bros. productions. A telegram to the executive offices in New York from Jack L. Warner, production manager, at Los Angeles, tells of the signing by Farrell to a long term contract to appear under the Warner Bros. banner.

Mr. Farrell is best known as a juvenile. One of his most notable recent appearances was as Ted Spaulding in "Tainted Souls," the Emmett Flynn-Fox special.

BIG THREE OF "MARE NOSTRUM"

The first picture received in this country of the leading figures in the filming of Blasco Ibanez's novel, "Mare Nostrum," which Rex Ingram is directing at Nice for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. Alice Terry was the last to arrive and she is shown in this picture with Antonio Moreno, co-star, and her husband, Director Ingram, who made "The Four Horsemen," "Scaramouche," "The Prisoner of Zenda" and "The Arab."

Artclass Pictures Corp. Will Release "Guess Who?"

LOUIS WEISS, managing director of Weiss Brothers' Artclass Pictures Corporation, announces that he has purchased the rights to the series of "Guess Who?" reels, conceived and produced by R. B. Staub, in Hollywood.

"Guess Who?" is a series of special short subject novelties of single reel length. It takes the form of a guessing contest in which the audience takes part. Each patron, on his entrance, is presented with a card on which will be printed the names of twenty-five well known stars who will be shown in the reel. The card has printed instructions telling the holder to mark down the order in which the stars appear on the screen. The reel shows the stars just large enough to be readily recognized, if known, but with no hint in the titles or background which will in any way assist in the identification. A widely diversified list of stars will be used. The series will include all the important luminaries of the screen.

At the bottom of each card is a place for the name and address of the contestant, while the reverse is blank and large enough for the exhibitor to print his whole program for a week or any other important announcements which he may care to make.

The value of such a reel can be readily appreciated when the possibilities of active audience participation in the program are understood. Many forms of prizes or rewards for successful contestants can be offered. The value of popular contests is well known, and the exhibitor can induce the type of person who would never consider entering any of the usual forms of contests to take an active part in this.

The reel lends itself to many forms of advertising and exploitation which will be readily appreciated by the experienced showman, especially when the feature or any other part of his program is not pulling as well as it might. For this reason it is anticipated that there will be no difficulty in making prompt bookings when the real is offered to the exhibitor.

Mr. Weiss is now making final arrangements with the producers for the distribution of this series and further announcements of release dates will be made in the near future.

Warners Complete "Limited Mail"

Warner Bros. this week added another to their rapidly growing list of finished productions to be released on the 1925-26 program, when "The Limited Mail" was completed. This adaptation of Elmer Vance's stage hit was directed by George Hill, assisted by M. K. Wilson, and numbers in its cast Monte Blue, Vera Reynolds, Willard Louis, Tom Gallery, Edward Gribbon, Lydia Yeamans, Otis Harlan and Jack Huff.

For some of the location scenes the company went to the Royal Gorge, in Colorado, but the interiors were "shot," of course, at the Warner studios.

"The Big Parade"

Julanne Johnstone, who was leading woman in Douglas Fairbank's "Thief of Bagdad," has been engaged by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer for an important part in "The Big Parade," now being made under the direction of King Vidor with Renee Adoree and John Gilbert in the featured roles.

Charlie Chaplin in a scene in "The Gold Rush," his forthcoming United Artists release.

Something new in cross-word ideas. Estelle Bradley, leading lady with Lige Conley in Educational-Mermaid Comedies, displays the latest thing in cross-word hosiery.

Lavish Praise

Dayton, O., Critic Lauds Educational's "Voice of the Nightingale"

That Short Subjects many times surpass in entertainment value that of feature productions many times their length is again brought out in a review appearing in the Dayton, Ohio, "Herald," on the Educational subject, "The Voice of the Nightingale," one of the series of "Fables in Color," recently released by Educational Film Exchanges, Inc.

"There is a picture in town," says Murry Powers, critic on the Herald, "that all those who fret about foolish comedy fillers and all those others who see in the cinema an opportunity for artistic endeavors should view it. It is 'The Voice of the Nightingale' and it is at the Colonial.

"'The Voice of the Nightingale' is done in lovely colors and it tells a romantic little tale of why the nightingale sings only at night. How, in appreciation of a little girl's kindness in allowing the nightingale its freedom after it had fallen into a trap, it bestowed its beautiful voice upon her to use during all her waking hours.

"It is only short in length, but its merit surpasses many six-, seven- and eight-reel films."

Educational on Hand

Delegates to Milwaukee Convention Received Letters from Executives

Very much in evidence at the Milwaukee convention was the Milwaukee branch office of Educational Film Exchanges, Inc.

A large sign, reproduction of the Educational Pictures trade-mark, occupied a prominent place in the Auditorium during the three days of the convention and the offices of the local branch were decorated in an attractive manner.

During the convention, letters from the executive offices in New York were distributed to every visiting delegate, exhibitor and distributor present in Milwaukee.

Bruce Goes on Tour

Robert C. Bruce, producer of outdoor pictures, is on tour among the South Sea Islands.

Publishers of Novel to Exploit "The White Monkey"

ASSOCIATED PICTURES CORPORATION have arranged with Charles Scribner's Sons, publishers of "The White Monkey," for the most thorough exploitation these leading publishers have ever given the movie version of one of their novels. The picturization of this popular John Galsworthy novel was recently completed, and is the third Sawyer-Lubin production featuring Barbara La Marr for First National release.

Members of the Scribner firm who attended a private screening of "The White Monkey" last week, enthused over the picture and congratulated the producers on their strict adherence to the Galsworthy story. Whitney Darrow of the Scribner firm is sending a personal letter to their dealers, advising them a splendid motion picture has been made of "The White Monkey," and it is certain to meet with public approval.

Scribner's are also advising their dealers that the following material is available for window displays upon application to Bert Ennis, Director of Publicity for Sawyer-Lubin productions: Broadside sheets 18x23" showing jacket of novel, photo of Barbara La Marr and information on novel and picture; photographs 11x14" of white monkey symbolic painting; photographs 8x10" showing Barbara La Marr and members of "The White Monkey" cast grouped about the symbolic painting of the white monkey; photographs 8x10" showing striking scenes from the motion picture.

All of this material is available to dealers without charge of any kind, and as it furnishes material for splendid window displays, will be of great assistance to the exhibitor in his exploitation on "The White Monkey" which is scheduled for release on June 7th, as a First National Picture.

A sub-title contest, devised for use in exploiting "The White Monkey," has been incorporated in the press sheet, and has been outlined in detail for the benefit of exhibitors. Scribner's have donated copies of the novel to be used as prizes for the subtitle contests which is only one of many new exploitation angles given in the press sheet for this attraction.

Warners Taking Back Product from Their Franchise Holders

SINCE Warner Bros.' purchase of Vitagraph, with its extensive system of sales exchanges, they have been rapidly acquiring the Warner product heretofore held by franchise holders and placing it in the hands of the Vitagraph field representatives for distribution.

An announcement issued from the Warner Bros. New York offices this week tells of the taking over by four more Vitagraph branch offices of pictures in important western territories. On May 11th the Denver and Salt Lake City offices acquired the Warner product which had been handled by Kwality Pictures, until then the franchise holders. This included all the Warner releases to date.

On May 18th the San Francisco and Los Angeles branches of Vitagraph replaced A. Oppenheimer as distributor of the Warner product in those fields. Morgan A. Walsh is now to be representative of Warner Bros., with headquarters at Vitagraph's San Francisco exchange, W. C. Wheeler remaining as branch manager in that city, under Mr. Walsh's direction.

As was announced at the time, the Vitagraph branch offices in Kansas City and Omaha on May 4 took over the whole of the Warner product in those territories, through purchase from Film Classics, Inc.

Herbert Brenon Sails

In an effort to solve the problem of who shall play the leading role in the Paramount picture of J. M. Barrie's play, "A Kiss for Cinderella," Herbert Brenon, the director, sailed on the Berengaria for London last Wednesday for a conference with Barrie.

Turns Night Into Day

Mammoth Light Machine Installed at the De Mille Studio

Speaking of scattering sunshine—with equipment now owned by the De Mille Studio, it is possible to make a square mile of black night as light as day. The recent purchase of a 300-kilowatt generator, mounted on a trailer, completed the most modern illuminating equipment it is possible to buy. Two 1600-amperes portable generators, one 800-amperes, and one 400-amperes each with its own engine, in addition to the huge generator just secured, make it possible to generate a tremendously powerful current.

Two 30-inch battleship searchlights, several others of a smaller type, fifteen Sun arcs, 150 side arcs, and fifty spotlings, when hooked up with the portable generators, produce a flood of light which makes Old Sol envious.

This immense lighting system will be used on location in filming Cecil B. De Mille's first independently produced and personally directed picture, "The Road to Yesterday," production on which will start June 15, featuring Joseph Schildkraut, Jetta Goudal and Vera Reynolds.

Jacqueline Logan and Capt. Charles Nungesser, the French ace, in "The Sky Raider," directed by T. Hayes Hunter for Associated Exhibitors.

William C. DeMille, the distinguished Paramount director, remains today one of filmdom's choicest exponents of delightful motion picture entertainment. He is in a class by himself.

New Faces in Comedies

Educational Announces Mickey Bennett and Eddie Nelson

Two new comedy faces will be seen on the Educational Program in subjects scheduled for release during June. They are Mickey Bennett and Eddie Nelson, who will make their first appearance in Juvenile and Mermaid Comedies respectively.

Mickey Bennett is a well known juvenile and attracted much favorable attention due to his work in the Paramount production, "Big Brother." He was recently signed by Juvenile Comedies and his first picture is "Baby Blues."

Eddie Nelson is a vaudeville favorite. He has been appearing on the Orpheum and Keith circuit in his own act, "The Sunkist Kid." His first appearance in New York was a two weeks' engagement at the New York Hippodrome.

Before his vaudeville tour, Nelson was a featured comedian in many Shubert, Savage and Cort Productions. During his vaudeville tour he attracted the attention of Jack White and was persuaded to desert the vaudeville stage for a career in the popular two-reel comedies.

Nelson is a clever pantomimist, juggler and comedian and will introduce a new type in his first Mermaid Comedy, "Going Great."

Samuels Made Sales Head

Herman F. Jans, president of Jans Productions, Inc., has appointed George Samuels as sales manager and he has already left for a tour of the Middle West to close up what little territory still remains open on the Jans pictures.

The Jans unit, making "Married?" under the direction of George Terwilliger, has been working at the Glendale studios at Glendale, Long Island, the past week, and the majority of the interiors have already been shot. Owen Moore and Constance Bennett, who play the leading roles in this screen adaptation of the widely read novel by Marjorie Benton Cooke, have been working overtime to complete these scenes on schedule time.

Additions to Great Cast of "The Tower of Lies"

IAN KEITH, Claire McDowell, William Haines and Bodil Rosing have been added to the cast of Victor Seastrom's production of "The Tower of Lies," the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer production based on Selma Lagerlof's novel, "The Emperor of Portugalia." Lon Chaney and Norma Shearer head the cast, and additions will be announced shortly. Director Seastrom has begun shooting scenes involving the principal players.

Selma Lagerlof, awarded the Nobel prize in literature, has achieved an enthralling story. Norma Shearer plays the part of Glory Goldielocks, a young girl who goes out into the world to earn her own living when her father, Jan Anderson, a poor crofter, is dispossessed of his home. Lon Chaney is Jan. The girl pays off the debt incurred by her father, but succumbs to the temptations of the city. The news of her downfall is kept from her parents until one day an angry villager blurts out the facts. The shock proves too much for Jan, who thereafter lives in a world of dreams, imagining himself to be the Emperor of Portugalia, and his daughter to be the Empress.

Chaney, in the scenes portraying Jan's madness, gives full play to his remarkable histrionic abilities, particularly in the sequences having to do with the girl's return. She believes her father has made her the laughing stock of the village and takes an intense dislike to him. She attempts to run away with her mother, and Jan is drowned in trying to reach the boat which bears them off.

Schulberg Studios Center of Considerable Production Work

THERE will be no summer shut-down on the B. P. Schulberg lot where activities are already well under way for the production of a substantial portion of the program of eighteen releases for the coming season.

In the cutting room are the two pictures which conclude this year's schedule—namely "Faint Perfume" by Zona Gale and "My Lady's Lips" from John Goodrich's story. The former is a Gasnier production with Alyce Mills, Mary Alden, Russell Simpson and others—the latter a melodrama directed by James P. Hogan.

The casting office is busy selecting featured players for the three stories which will open the fall program. They are Gasnier's first 1925-1926 production, "Parisian Love" from F. Oakley Crawford's story; "With This Ring," a popular novel by the celebrated Saturday Evening Post author, Fanny Heaslip Lea—and "The Girl Who Wouldn't Work" by Marie B. Wentworth James which Marcel DeSano is prepared to direct.

In addition preliminary scenario work has begun on several other of the Schulberg stories,—namely "The Plastic Age" by Percy Marks, "Shenandoah" the celebrated American stage classic and "Dancing Days" by J. J. Bell.

Warners Acquire Two Broadway Stage Plays for Early Production

WARNER BROS. have just purchased the screen rights to two great mirth-provoking stage winners, "The Sap," in which Raymond Hitchcock scored one of his most notable fun triumphs, and "The Honeymoon Express," in which Gaby Deslys achieved the most memorable triumph of what proved her last American visit.

Though it is too early to announce either the casts or the directors, assurance is given that the utmost possible will be made of the opportunity to produce two highly colorful and screamingly funny film treats. Each piece, it is everywhere conceded, lends itself admirably to screen adaptation.

"The Sap," by William A. Grew, is a musical comedy which revealed the inimitable Raymond Hitchcock at his best and is well worthy the highest effort of whatever screen entertainer draws the star assignment from the Warners.

The story has to do with two families of young friends who, for purposes of economy, share a three room flat, and who, with conflicting ambitions and varying outlooks on life, clash inevitably.

Added to "Rugged Water"

Phyllis Haver and Dot Farley have been added to the cast of "Rugged Water," Joseph C. Lincoln's dramatic story of the life saving service on Cape Cod which Irvin Willat is producing for Paramount. Other featured roles in the picture are being played by Lois Wilson, Warner Baxter and Wallace Beery.

To Play Opposite Gloria Swanson

Anthony Jowitt, the new screen find now appearing in Paramount pictures, has been selected for the leading male role opposite Gloria Swanson in "The Coast of Folly."

"The Coast of Folly" was adapted from Coningsby Dawson's best seller by Forrest Halsey, who adapted "Madame Sans-Gene."

"The Untamed" Rudy's First

Valentino Plans Changed Regarding United Artists Release

Because of a necessary change in plans, Rudolph Valentino will star in "The Untamed" as his first picture for United Artists Corporation release, according to an announcement just made by Joseph M. Schenck, chairman of the Board.

The story of "The Untamed" is based on a novelette by Pushkin, who has come to be known as "The Shakespeare of Russia," and will be adapted for the screen by Rupert Hughes. Hans Kraly, who wrote a number of film scripts for Ernst Lubitsch, is writing the scenario. Clarence Brown will direct the production which is scheduled to start in the United Studios, Hollywood, early in June.

The action in "The Untamed" takes place during the latter part of the reign of the late Czar, but Mr. Schenck makes it very clear that the story is in no sense concerned with Russian politics or the revolution.

Valentino is shown as a cadet, as an officer of the White Guards and as a Tartar bandit, and while masquerading as a French tutor has abundant scope for his known histrionic versatility, barbaric characterization and tempestuous love-making.

Curran Now With Chadwick

It was announced from the offices of the Chadwick Pictures Corporation that Barry Curran will fill the vacancy left by Lon Young in the publicity department. His engagement with Chadwick unites an old team. Charles Reed Jones, now director of publicity for Chadwick, and Barry Curran worked together for some time on Photoplay Journal, of which Jones was the editor.

Selecting Sills Cast

Earl Hudson, eastern supervisor of production for First National, is completing the cast for Milton Sills' second starring vehicle, "The Knockout," from M. D. C. Crawford's novel, "The Come-Back." The members of the cast thus far selected are Milton Sills, Tully Marshall, Lorna Duveen, John Kolb, Frank Evans and Harland Knight. Additions are being made daily.

Tom Mix, in Washington, D. C., Amazes By His Popularity

WASHINGTON, D. C., used to pomp and pagentry as it is, proved that under the skin it is just like its sister cities when it comes to a real live cowboy and his horse. The crowds that turned out to see Tom Mix and his horse, Tony, in the nation's capital blocked traffic, got stiff necks gazing and shouted just as wildly at the visiting movie stars as the citizens of Buffalo, Boston, Chicago, Milwaukee, Detroit and twenty other towns.

In fact the residents of the beautiful city on the Potomac were even more excited over seeing Tom and Tony in person than the habitants of other Main Streets. They made such a fuss over the screen idol and his horse that one would never suspect that most of these people are in daily contact with the great rulers of the world.

Indeed, Tom and Tony stirred up so much excitement that all the big news associations wired detailed reports to their clients all over the country. Tom stole the spotlight wherever he went, they said, and on one occasion, at the White House garden party to 1,000 wounded veterans, the Chief Executive had to go unnoticed as the boys who fought "Over There" hailed the kingpin of the cowboy stars, who, incidentally, is a veteran of a few wars himself (and bears scars to prove it).

At the National Horse Show, the high water mark of Washington's social season, Tom again put everything else in the background in comparison. In a reserved box, especially decorated, with Tony regally installed in the ring, the screen star was kept busy meeting the social and political great of the world.

In the Washington papers Tom was given all sorts of publicity and every move he made was reported in detail. His visit to the White House attracted more still and movie cameramen than any other celebrity that ever visited the nation's head.

From Washington, Tom went to Baltimore, which proceeded to emulate the actions of every other city and feted and hailed the cowboy star from morn till night.

Perhaps no city will exceed or surpass the reception accorded Tom Mix in Buffalo. The Lake City simply stopped everything to honor the visiting star. The papers carried banner lines and pictures eight columns wide on the star's movements. The crowds followed his every step. It was reported by one of the papers that there were one hundred thousand visitors in town the day Tom arrived, and it attributed this influx to curiosity regarding Tom. Gerry Rudulph was Tom's advance man in Buffalo and his coming was widely heralded as no other but the genial Gerry could do.

Tom went from Buffalo to Pittsburgh, where many parties were arranged in his honor. From the Smoky City he went to Washington.

Before Tom starts West again he will visit Philadelphia and Atlantic City. Then he will jump out to Cincinnati and from there he will go direct to Hollywood and "location," stopping off at Indianapolis, St. Louis, Kansas City and Omaha.

Those cities are all prepared to receive the Western star, and, according to reports from the Fox exchanges in the territories he will visit, there is a famine in Mix prints. The demand is so great that S. O. S. calls for more have been sent to the Home office.

For instance, in St. Louis there will be forty Mix prints playing the day he arrives in town. The same situation will exist in Kansas City, where twenty-three prints will be in use the day Tom arrives.

And so goes the triumphant march across the country. The big cities are beginning to realize what the small towns have known for a long time, that Tom Mix is one of the truly great stars, worthy of the best theatres and the best presentations.

Tiffany to Film "Lightning"

"Lightning," based on a story by Zane Grey, will be one of the Tiffany "Big Twelve" announced by Tiffany Productions, Inc., for 1925-1926.

"Drusilla With a Million" Enthusiastically Received

THE distinction of being the first independent production to play the Capitol Theatre, New York, in two years, goes to "Drusilla With a Million," an Associated Arts Corporation F. B. O. Gold Bond special which opened at the huge Broadway house on Sunday, May 24th.

A complete survey of the pictures available in the entire industry, in which "Drusilla With a Million" stands out as a sure-fire box office attraction, replete with drama, heart interest, pathos and humor, prompted "Roxy" to break his rigid adherence to the rule of "Metro-Goldwyn" pictures only, and book "Drusilla" at sight.

That "Roxy" showed his usual showmanly foresight is evidenced by the enthusiastic reception tendered "Drusilla With a Million" by the huge audience that packed the Capitol Theatre all week, and the splendid reviews given the production by the metropolitan press. Below are brief excerpts from the newspapers:

The New York Daily Mirror says: "Mary Carr deports herself splendidly in a role reminiscent of 'Over the Hill', only she has an opportunity to wear nice clothes, which she does. Priscilla Bonner is a comparative newcomer whom you will love. She's sweet and youthful and sheds real tears. 'Drusilla With a Million' is good entertainment."

The New York Times says: "Sequences . . . show flashes of inspiration. Mrs. Carr delivers a sane, restrained and beautiful portrayal of Drusilla. Priscilla Bonner is excellent as the young mother. Her portrayal of the sorrow of a young mother is most convincing."

The Morning World says: "Mrs. Carr acts with fine poise and grace."

The Evening World says: "One of the best of its kind of pictures seen on Broadway in a long time. Here is a feature with a tremendous human appeal. This picture . . a knockout. Once more in short it is amply proved here that the most appealing film plays are those built around the family hearth. Movie fans who fell in love with 'Over the Hill' a few years ago will do the same with 'Drusilla With a Million', for they will see the same Mary Carr. This mother of a family of her own certainly knows the motions for the screen. She had everybody in the Capitol applauding for her yesterday, just as if she were there in person . . . ably supported by Priscilla Bonner and Kenneth Harlan. Miss Bonner, particularly, gave a masterly portrayal of the orphan who became the wife of an outcast society youth. There was one scene in particular, that in which she is grilled on the witness stand, in which she was superb."

Off to See America

Universal's S. A. F. Unit Starts Long Tour From Coast to Coast

Los Angeles made farewell with elaborate ceremonies to the huge Universal "studio on wheels" which departed from Los Angeles last week for New York to film "See America First," a picture which will have among its scenes practically every city of importance in the United States. The official farewell was staged before the Chamber of Commerce Building, with officers of the chamber conducting the ceremonies.

A pennant, bearing the signature of Los Angeles leaders in civic and political life was presented to W. E. Holah, who is to direct the trip of the big motor studio. Norman Sprowl, business manager of Universal City, represented General Manager Raymond L. Schrock in Chicago at the "Big U" convention. Reginald Denny, star of "California Straight Ahead," in which the huge motor-car was used; Harry Pollard, director; Gertrude Olmstead, Mary Philbin, Lola Todd, Olive Hasbrouck and other stars were in attendance.

First Cinemelodrama Under Way

Work is about to commence on the first of the Truart series of four cinemelodramas announced by Truart Film Corporation for 1925-1926. The pictures will again revive the melodramas of great popularity and will run the gamut of excitement and tense situations that melos are famed for. The casts include some of the leading screen players and will be produced on a lavish scale.

Harrison Ford Coming East

Harrison Ford is on his way to take the leading role opposite Bebe Daniels in her next Paramount picture, "Lovers in Quarantine," adapted from the successful stage comedy, "Quarantine," which featured Helen Hayes and Sidney Blackmer in New York.

Another great stage celebrity was added to the galaxy of stars that will appear in the pictures released through Producers Distributing Corporation during the coming season, in the signing of Leon Errol, famous Ziegfeld Follies star. Mr. Errol affixed his signature to a contract with Sam E. Rork today, to appear in a big production to be made from the current story success, "Clothes Make the Pirate," by Holman Day and published by Harper.

King for a Day

Lew Cody Honored by Fresno, Cal., Raisin Growers

Lew Cody, now playing opposite Mae Busch in Robert Z. Leonard's production, "Time, the Comedian," a Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer picturization of the Kate Jordan story, was king for a day at the annual raisin festival held in Fresno, Cal., this year, having been chosen ruler for this gala occasion.

Cody on his arrival in Fresno headed a parade through the town, and was tendered an enthusiastic reception by his subjects. During his stay in the town he was guest of the mayor and of prominent civic officials. A well known film player is chosen each year by Fresno officials for this carnival, the honor being a highly coveted one on the Coast.

Second of New Series

"The Galloping Jinx" Stars Buddy Roosevelt, for Weiss Bros. Release

Advices just received from Lester F. Scott, Jr., on the West coast indicate that the second picture in the 1925-26 series of Buddy Roosevelt and his Rough-Riding Romances is now well under way and that it will be completed within the next two weeks and shipped east.

This picture will be released under the title of "The Galloping Jinx." An entirely novel story is promised and in it some very fast action with new thrilling stunts which Buddy Roosevelt can always be depended on to supply in every reel.

This picture will follow the first picture of the series, "Reckless Courage," recently announced as completed and ready for release.

This week will see the commencement of the second picture in both the Buffalo Bill, Jr. and the Wally Wales series. Lester F. Scott, Jr., producer of these three series, states that he has lined up a lot of very excellent stories which will be used as vehicles for these three popular Western stars. He confidently states that Louis Weiss, managing director of Weiss Brothers' Artclass Pictures Corporation, which releases these pictures, will have no difficulty in repeating his successes of last year with the pictures that he is now making.

President of F. B. O. Off to Hollywood

Major H. C. S. Thomson, President and Managing Director of Film Booking Offices, left for a flying trip to Los Angeles this morning.

Major Thomson will remain at the production headquarters of the company for a few weeks, during which time he will lend his personal attention to F. B. O.'s huge program of 64 features and 76 short subjects for 1925, and confer with Studio Manager B. P. Fineman on production policies.

Selling Territories Proves Restful to Ray Johnston

W. RAY JOHNSTON, president of Rayart Pictures Corporation, returned last Monday from a trip through the Central Western territory and a weeks vacation in Iowa.

On his return, Johnston announced the closing of a franchise for the New York City territory covering the new Reed Howes series, the Billy Sullivan Series and six superior melodramas, a total of twenty-six pictures for the 1925-26 season with Merit Film Corporation. The deal was closed with Harry Thomas, the general manager and J. E. Chadwick, President of Merit, while at the Milwaukee convention.

Johnston also announced contracts with Rex Film Company of Detroit, for the Michigan territory consisting of eight Reed Howes, and twelve Billy Sullivan pictures. Also for the Michigan territory a contract with Michigan Film Exchange covering a series of fourteen five reel Whirlwind Westerns starring Jack Perrin and with the Kent Film Company for the Michigan territory of "The Street of Tears," "Safeguarded," and "Winning a Woman." The Specialty Film Company of Dallas, secured the rights for Texas, Oklahoma, and Arkansas to three Rayart specials including "For Another Woman", "Easy Money" and "The Beloved Pawn," also a series of six Reed Howes Productions. For the Chicago territory Rayart announce the sale of the Billy Sullivan Series, the Whirlwind Western series and two Rayart specials "Easy Money" and "For Another Woman" to Security Pictures Co. This covers the territory of Northern Illinois and Indiana.

Ludwig Film Company of Milwaukee secured "Easy Money" and "For Another Woman" for Wisconsin, while S. & S. Film and Supply Company of Pittsburgh secured the Billy Sullivan series and "Secret Service Sanders" for Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia; Nat Magner secured the new Rayart serial "Secret Service Sanders" for California, Arizona and Nevada, and Eltraban Film Company of Atlanta secured the same series for the six Southeastern states, also purchasing the Rayart Butterfly Comedies for the same territory. Independent Film Service Company of Dallas, secured the Rayart serial "Secret Service Sanders" and the Butterfly Comedies for Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas.

First Graphic Pictures of Buffalo secured "Winning A Woman" a Rayart release for the upper New York territory and Big Feature Rights Corporation of Louisville secured the second series of eight Reed Howes pictures for the State of Kentucky.

Mr. Johnston announced that the organization of the Trade and Commerce Bureau of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners Association had stimulated sales and bookings of Independent pictures to a great extent. The motto adopted by the new Bureau, "Double your Independent Playdates," is being featured by Independent exchanges all over the territory in the form of window displays, banners, mailers, etc., and every indication points to a big Independent boom in the months to come.

Fairbanks, Jr., Has Big Role

Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., who is under a long-term contract with Paramount has started for Red Lake, Ariz., where he will join the Paramount players already there.

He is to enact the important role of Chess Weymer in "Wild Horse Mesa," the picturization of Zane Grey's story of that name which is being directed by George B. Seitz.

Jack Holt and William Collier, Jr., in the duel scene in Paramount's "Eve's Ransom," in which Betty Compson and Mr. Holt are featured.

Three Features, Five Shorts on F. B. O. July Schedule

THREE full length feature productions and five short subjects have been scheduled by Film Booking Offices for July release.

"Twenty Years After," the tentative title of Richard Talmadge's next picture, is an adaptation of Dr. Samuel Johnson's famous story, "The History of Rasselas, Prince of Abyssinia." James Bell Smith reached back to the musty tomes of the classics to find this unusual but strikingly appropriate vehicle for the star who thinks nothing of breaking his neck in producing a thriller. Dick has surrounded himself with a very distinguished cast, including Joseph Swickard, Carmelita Geraghty, Sheldon Lewis, Duane Thompson, James Hill, Robert Carleton, and Bert Bradley. Jack Nelson will direct, with Alberta Metzetti assisting. William Marshall stands behind the cameras. "Twenty Years After" will be released on July 5th.

"The Bloodhound" by H. H. Van Loan is serving Bob Custer as his sixth vehicle for Independent Pictures Corporation and F. B. O. release. "The Bloodhound" is a fast moving action drama, with the central character a sergeant of the Royal Northwest Mounted Police, known as "The Bloodhound" because he always gets his man. Mary Beth Milford has again been selected as Mr. Custer's leading lady, with David Dunbar, Ralph McCullough, and Emily Barry prominent in support. William Reeves cranked the cameras. July 12th is set for the distribution of "The Bloodhound."

"Tizona—The Firebrand," an original story by Clifford Howard and Burke Jenkins, starring Evelyn Brent, is scheduled for July 26th release. "Tizona—The Firebrand" is melodrama in a colorful and romantic Spanish setting, in which Miss Brent devotes her talents to a somewhat different character than those she has recently interpreted.

The imposing list of short subjects releases for July is headed by "What Price Gloria?" No. 10 of "The Pacemakers" series, co-starring Alberta Vaughn and George O'Hara, based on the famous stories by H. C. Witwer, and directed by Wesley Ruggles. Paul Gangelin is responsible for the continuities and George Marion Jr. contributed the titles. "What Price Gloria?" will be released on July 5th

Jimmy Aubrey's tenth two-reel comedy for Standard Cinema Corporation and F. B. O. release is called "Etiquette," and will be distributed on July 15th.

"Don Coo Coo," No. 11 of "The Pacemakers," is set for July 19th, while "Dinky Doodle No. 11," as yet untitled, will also be shown on July 19th. This is another of the Dinky Doodle one-reel novelties directed by Walter Lanz of the Bray Studios.

July 30th will see the release of "Dr. Pyckle and Mr. Pride," a two-reel comedy, starring Stan Laurel, made for Standard Cinema Corporation and F. B. O. distribution.

Story for Fred Thompson

"The Wild Bull of Skull Mountain," a story by Marion Jackson who has been responsible for several of his other successes, has been chosen as the first picture starring Fred Thomson under his new contract with F. B. O. Casting has begun at the Studios, and Del Andrews will direct. The story is a western in locale, but departs from the ordinary western formula in many important details. Silver King, Thomson's famous horse, has been written in for a "fat" part.

A portrait bust of Lillian Gish as "Romola" was made by Gleb Derujinsky, one of the best known sculptors of New York. It was in searching for a perfect Renaissance type that Mr. Derujinsky thought of Miss Gish, who had just gone to Culver City, Cal, to begin work on "La Boheme," a Metro-Goldwyn picture. The bust will be exhibited at various New York art galleries.

Allen Dwan, Paramount director, is directing Gloria Swanson in "The Coast of Folly."

Five New Pictures

Universal Announces Vehicles Just Put Into Production

The opening of the week found Universal beginning production of five new screen plays. They are:

"Where Was I?" starring Reginald Denny with William A. Seiter directing. The cast includes Marion Nixon, Pauline Garon, Tyron Power, Lee Moran, Chester Conklin, Otis Harlan, William H. Turner, Tom Lingham and Arthur Lake.

"My Old Dutch," with May McAvoy, Pat O'Malley, Jean Hersholt and Cullen Landis. Larry Trimble is the director.

"Out of the Flood," starring Art Acord with Marceline Day, Ray Ripley, Robert Rose, William Welsh and Helen Cobb.

"A Two-Fisted Fighter," starring Edmund Cobb with Peggy Montgomery and a big supporting cast. The director is William Crinley.

"The Mocassin Flower," starring Josie Sedgwick with Edward Hearn in the leading male role. Others are Robert Walker, Jack Gavin, Harry Todd, Ben Corbett and Bob Burns. Jack O'Brien is directing.

"The Isle of Hope"

"The Isle of Hope" will be Dick Talmadge's next production for Film Booking Offices, Mr. Talmadge announced this week. Work will begin at the F. B. O. Studios, Hollywood, in a few days. The story is by James Bell Smith, who has had an effective hand in the shaping of most of Talmadge's recent vehicles. It will have a pirate, treasure hunting atmosphere, similar to that with which Robert Louis Stevenson invested "Treasure Island," and will stress particularly the comedic values of the narrative.

"Call a Cop"

Scenes of the Police Parade held recently in New York will be one of the features of the Christie Comedy, "Call a Cop," with Neal Burns, now nearing completion at the Christie Studios, Los Angeles. Four cameramen, stationed at advantageous points along Seventh Avenue, Forty-second Street and Fifth Avenue, secured excellent views of the parade. These scenes were immediately sent to California and will appear as part of the action in the finished comedy.

Rivoli and Rialto Theatres Books Fox's "The Iron Horse"

AFTER spirited bidding in the New York film market, the Rivoli and Rialto Theatres have secured the plum of the William Fox product for next season, "The Iron Horse." News has just leaked out that "The Iron Horse" has been contracted to run at the Rivoli Theatre from September 20 to October 4; then it will be transferred to the Rialto Theatre for a week or more.

Box office popularity of "The Iron Horse" was established by the successful pre-release run of nearly a year at the Lyric Theatre, New York, and the current record-breaking run in Grauman's Egyptian Theatre, Los Angeles.

This epic production based on the building of the first transcontinental railroad has already firmly established the reputation of John Ford as a director. The love story of the picture is woven about George O'Brien, the smiling young athlete who personifies the manly courage of the pioneers who spanned the continent, and beautiful Madge Bellamy.

J. Farrell MacDonald has achieved rare comedy in his role of Corporal Casey, the Civil War veteran who spurred his track layers to greater efforts with his chant of "Drill, ye Terriers, Drill."

From the day that Lincoln signed the Railroad Act, July 1, 1862, until the Union Pacific and Central Pacific engines touched noses at Promontory Point, Utah, May 10, 1869, the whole interval sweeps into the story step by step. The wedding of the rails is the epochal climax which unites the East and West and brings together the pioneer lovers of the transcontinental trail.

Independent Productions Reach Masses, Says Brandt

JOE BRANDT, president of Columbia Pictures Corporation, is on his way back home after a two months' successful trip around the country to see and sell his company's 1925-26 output of eighteen pictures, with news of a bigger and better season for independents than ever before in the past ten years of picture history.

Brandt visited the key cities and had personal talks with many of the first run exhibitors. "They are really in earnest about signing with independents," he wrote to the home office.

"This will encourage independents to tackle the production of bigger pictures with the best of stars. They really mean to go through the intentions they expressed at the Milwaukee Convention.

"With such assurance, independents can see a bigger field for their product, and consequently the prices will be right. From my own experience as a result of the many years I have spent in the field, I have come to the conclusion that the independent exhibitors mean business this time.

"The pictures made by independent producers reach the greatest masses, especially in the small towns. With the backing assured by so many of the important first run exhibitors in the larger towns, the public will be given a better opportunity to judge the quality of pictures made by independents.

"Independent exhibitors are not merely talking about backing the independent producers, but they are actually signing up to use their pictures, which is of course the real test of their intentions and the reason why we may look forward to the biggest year in the history of independent producing."

Hart Starts New Play

To Film "A Lighter of Flames" for United Artists Corporation Release

William S. Hart is working fast after his long rest and vacation. With the announcement that C. Gardner Sullivan is making the screen adaptation of "Tumbleweeds," his first production for United Artists Corporation release, comes the news that Mr. Hart will star in a screen version of his own story, "A Lighter of Flames," as his second release.

Hart makes this announcement himself with the added statement that the film adaptation of "A Lighter of Flames" is being prepared by Sada Cowan and Howard Higgin, and that the choice of this story has been approved by Joseph M. Schenck, chairman of the Board of United Artists Corporation.

"Charley's Aunt" in 25 N. Y. C. Theatres

"Charley's Aunt," having broken away from Broadway after fourteen weeks' continuous run, was presented at twenty-five houses in the Metropolitan district the week of May 18th.

Of the twenty-five, the Christie comedy played sixteen houses of the U. B. O., comprising six Keith, four Proctor and six Moss theatres.

Harry Millarde and Channing Pollock go over the script of "The Fool." The result of their numerous conferences is that the screen version of Pollock's creation is being hailed as greater than the stage presentation, which was, incidentally, one of America's most popular successes.

Additional Experts Chosen For De Mille Organization

FRED KLEY, general manager of the De Mille Studio, announces the signing of William House, to head the men's wardrobe department, and Walter Reed as location manager.

Mr. House is one of the best known costumers in theatrical circles, as for a period of three years he was heard of the costume department in New York for Lee and J. J. Shubert. He handled some 150,000 costumes covering all the past and present productions of these famous stage producers. In addition he handled the costume manufacturing department, using one hundred and ten women. More recently he organized and operated the Brooks Costume Company in New York City.

Walter Reed is one of the most experienced men in motion pictures in that part of the business which relates to the matching of exterior scenes with the requirements of specific stories.

While with Paramount pictures, Mr. Reed handled the location problems for some of the largest productions offered by that organization. In addition, Mr. Reed is a well known "gag man" and for several years was actively associated with James Cruze in the production of that director's comedy dramas.

Mr. Reed's first problem with Cecil De Mille will be the locating of an immense flock of sheep and the placing of them in territory resembling the plains of Australia. This will be for the first part of Rod La Rocque's initial starring vehicle, "The Coming of Amos."

"The Coming of Amos," by William J. Locke, has been adapted by James Creelman and Garrett Fort and will be made under the direction of Paul Sloane. It is to be the second production of the De Mille Studio.

Cecil B. De Mille Signs Tutor for Rod La Rocque

BERT SHEPHERD, who can part your hair with a boomerang, or button your coat with a bull-whip, has signed up with Cecil B. De Mille to lend his unusual talents in the production of Cecil De Mille's "The Coming of Amos," starring Rod La Rocque.

This picture will introduce La Rocque as an Australian rancher, and as he doesn't include tossing a boomerang or snapping a fifty-foot whip among his accomplishments, Shepherd has been secured to teach him a few tricks.

Shepherd's dextirity with these odd weapons is not strange, for he was born and raised in Queensland, Australia, and worked as a cowboy for years. His has been an adventurous career, for he took an active part in the Boer War, fought in the Guatemalan revolution, has hunted big game in South America, was a member of the British intelligence service during the late war, and is now appearing in vaudeville, amazing spectators with his clever boomerang and whip stunts.

Production on "The Coming of Amos" starts within a few days at the De Mille Studio under the direction of Paul Sloane and in the meantime La Rocque is getting a lot of fun out of his new toys.

Assist De Mille on First "Personally Directed" Film

ANNOUNCEMENT was made by Cecil B. De Mille today of the appointment of Frank Urson and Paul Iribe as his chief aides for the production of "The Road to Yesterday," his first personally directed offering through Producers Distributing Corporation.

"The Road to Yesterday" is about ready to go into production and De Mille in assigning Urson and Iribe to preparatory details is calling the two directors to his assistance who have for years past aided him on his biggest pictures.

Mr. Urson will turn his attention to the casting of "The Road to Yesterday," which will have medieval as well as modern sequences, while Mr. Iribe, creator of the immense sets for "The Ten Commandments," will start the designs of novel backgrounds for the photoplay Jeanie Macpherson and Beulah Marie Dix have evolved from the successful stage play by Miss Dix and E. G. Sutherland.

Joseph Schildkraut, famous stage star, has been announced for the male lead of this offering, supported by Jetta Goudal and Vera Reynolds.

"Sporting Chance" in New York

The print of "The Sporting Chance," one of the Tiffany "Big Twelve," has just arrived in New York. The picture, based on the story by Jack Boyle, and directed by Oscar Apfel, has in the cast Lou Tellegen, Dorothy Phillips, Theodore Von Eltz, Sheldon Lewis, George Fawcett and Andrew Clark. "The Sporting Chance" is a vivid drama of racing life and has one of the most dramatic race track scenes ever filmed.

Don't Crowd, Girls

Hal Roach in New York Seeking More Beauty for Comedy Work

Hal Roach, comedy producer, arrived in New York from the West Coast this week and let it be known immediately that he is looking for additional beauty talent for his company of screen players at the Culver City Studios.

"The candidates must be up to standard in every respect and will be given a thorough screen test locally before their acceptance," declared Mr. Roach. "Those that are accepted will stand an excellent chance of being introduced into leading roles in our comedies provided they make good.

"We do not intend to limit our examination of candidates to young ladies with stage and screen experience. What we are looking for primarily are good looking girls who will register effectively and pleasingly on the screen. Screen tests will be given only by appointment at the eastern office of the Hal Roach Studios in the Pathe Building. Applicants are asked to send us photographs of themselves preliminary to any appointments. Only those observing this procedure will be considered for screen tests."

"American Pluck" Print Here

The first print of "American Pluck," the first of the George Walsh series for Chadwick Pictures Corporation, has just arrived in New York and received the enthusiastic approval of those present at the preview.

Classics to Warners

The announcement of Al Kahn, president of Film Classics, Kansas City, that he had disposed of his entire interest to Warner Bros., the product to be distributed through Vitagraph, was followed this week by the announcement that he and his brother, M. A. Kahn, would continue in the distribution end of the industry, handling Preferred Pictures, the franchise for which they have held since last year.

Claire Windsor, Metro-Goldwyn player, is seen here with Erte, designer of beautiful gowns for the Metro - Goldwyn - Mayer beauties.

Charles Ray to Start

Preparations are being completed for the production of Charles Ray's second rural comedy drama for Chadwick Pictures Corporation, which will be started shortly at the Ray studios in Los Angeles. Jerome Storm, who directed "Some Pun'kins," Ray's first for Chadwick, will again direct under the supervision of Joseph De Grasse. The cast is now being chosen.

"Before Midnight"

"Before Midnight," first of the Royal Pictures to be released about July 1st by the Henry Ginsberg Distributing Corporation, is well under way at the Holywood Studios, and will be completed in two weeks. In the principal role is a veteran of the screen, William Russell, with Barbara Bedford in the principal feminine role. John G. Adolfi is directing the Royal series of pictures.

Rialto Books Mix Pictures

Tom Mix and Tony, his horse, will be at home on the screen to all friends throughout the next season at the Rialto Theatre, 42d Street and Broadway, New York City.

An announcement from the Fox Offices reveals that the contract calls for all seven of Tom Mix productions for the new season and that a definite play date has been assigned to each picture the first of which is due to reach the screen in August. The titles of the seven pictures and the order in which they will appear have not been announced. The Jackson Gregory story, "The Everlasting Whisper," which has already been completed with Claire Adams in the lead and directed by J. G. Blystone, is known to be one of Mix's early productions. Others listed and named for release during the fore part of the season are "The Lucky Horseshoe" and "The Best Bad Man."

Feature Length Comedies the Goal of Al Christie

THAT the coming season is destined to be one of great interest is evidenced by the numerous statements emanating from the various producing organizations.

It is to be a season of comedy.

Producers of motion pictures have watched with interest the tendency of the public as Mr., Mrs. and all the Little Publics have deposited their dimes and quarters at the box office and stepped "on the inside" to see—a motion picture wherein humor was outstanding.

All of which brings us to our sermon for today.

When the first feature length comedy was produced it was done so at great expense. The producers thought that if the public enjoyed the single reel, they would more than appreciate the five or six reel comedy.

However, they met with severe setback, for no distributor apparently would buy the production.

"What," they said, "a comedy in six reels? You're crazy, no one will sit through six reels of comedy. 'Stoo bad, but we don't want it."

And so for many months the finished picture lay carefully packed away in camphor and mothballs. Until an enterprising group of showmen, who were convinced of the possibilities of this film, sought out the producers and after various and sundry offers, procured the production—lock, stock and barrel—as they say back home.

The success of "Tillie's Punctured Romance"—yes, that was the production—need not be repeated. Everyone who played the picture—and who hasn't?—knows of its overwhelming success.

Still, the feature length comedy field was never developed, until Al and Charles Christie decided it was time to test an idea which they had fostered for years:

Make feature length comedies—make them with the same degree of clean, wholesome humor as they made their single and two-reel comedies.

One day Al Christie suggested to his brother, Charles, that they produce for the screen, "Charley's Aunt."

If you read trade papers and newspapers, or if you or your opposition has played this picture—anything that might be said here relative to it would be superfluous.

And now comes the announcement that "Seven Days," which Mary Roberts Rinehart wrote under the title of "When a Man Marries" and which Avery Hopwood produced for the stage, will soon be filmed at the Christie studio.

And what "Charley's Aunt" was to the English stage "Seven Days" is to the American theatregoer.

Julian Eltinge has signed with the Christie organization to make a production wherein his histrionic ability, coupled with those impersonations which have made him internationally famous as a player of exceptional ability, will have full range.

Al and Charles Christie now know their idea holds water. And they have just started. The past season's feature length offerings collectively and individually were successful.

And now there are some producers who have convinced themselves that the feature length comedy is oft times a more sure-fire success than many a so-called all star production.

However, originality is always merited and the Christie organization will continue to lead the way, when feature length comedies are the topic of conversation as well as the echo of the voice of the box office.

Christie Selects French Farce for Julian Eltinge

"MADAME LUCY," the famous French farce comedy by Jean Arlette, has been decided upon by Al. Christie as the vehicle in which Julian Eltinge and Ann Pennington will be featured. This big feature comedy will be filmed immediately following the production of "Seven Days" which is now in work with an all-star cast for release through Producers Distributing Corporation.

The Christies have been combing the market for plays and books which lend themselves to the making of feature-length pictures along straight comedy lines and the tremendous success of "Charley's Aunt" proved that the elements which make modern movie audiences laugh uproariously may be found in long established stage comedies. It has also been discovered that some of the modern French writers have caught the spirit of gay farce comedy such as it existed as far back as the days of Moliere.

In the case of Arlette's "Madame Lucy," the plot will be of course embellished by the work of an experienced American staff of comedy writers and "gag" men who know how to make two laughs grow where but one flourished before.

The Christies have made one big success with the standard English classic "Charley's Aunt" and now with "Madame Lucy" they are taking one of the best French comedies on the market and will put the American "hokum" into it for the delectation of audiences both at home and abroad.

The production of "Madame Lucy" will start about July 1st, by which time it is expected that "Seven Days" will be completed.

How to Use This Chart

First—Booking! Get accurate footage and look up date review appeared in Moving Picture World. Then you can decide if the picture will suit your audience.

Second—Play date! When you set your play date, consult this Chart to set the picture on a date that will not conflict with preceding and following pictures; avoid a sequence of similar type of story; space out your specials.

Third—Laying Out Program! This chart shows star and kind of story as well as accurate length; you can lay out a balanced program easily, avoid over—and under-length program.

Fourth—Exploitation! Through this chart find the review in Moving Picture World; this will give a good synopsis, the all-important cast and a fine line on exploitation possibilities as well as the things you'll want to soft-pedal.

Always! Turn to this Chart when you want accurate information in simple form and easy to get at a glance. AND—

$1 for Your Time

Many exhibitors tell us that Moving Picture World Guide to Releases is the most accurate available to them. We know it is the most complete in that it is the only chart containing names of stars, type of picture, and all necessary information to the exhibitor.

We want it to be absolutely accurate—Moving Picture World recognizes the importance of accurate footage information, etc.

If you notice an error in FEATURE footage, or any other major error, we will pay you $1 for the effort on your part of writing us a letter telling us the correct facts.

In many territories local censorship cuts alter the footage to a minor extent. Don't write to tell us of these unimportant variations. But in any case where you feel that our figures will work a real hardship on the exhibitor following them—shoot us the word and we will shoot the dollar for your trouble.

Moving Picture World is willing to back up its complete confidence in the accuracy of its chart with its money.

We can't do more. No one else does as much. We thank you.

PROJECTION

EDITED BY F. H. RICHARDSON

S. M. P. E. Meeting

The society of Motion Picture Engineers held its spring meeting in the Hotel Van Curler, Schenectady, N. Y., beginning Monday, May 18th, lasting until Thursday, May 21st, inclusive.

The attendance was unusually good. The writer noticed a very—and it might almost be said an unusual—spirit of friendliness and good fellowship among the engineers assembled. This, I think, is largely due to the fact that many of us have met in these meetings year after year, and have finally come to know and understand each other better. I think as each comes to know the other better, he has a greater understanding and sympathy for the work of his fellow.

I must, once again, and in the strongest possible terms, bring to your attention the enormous amount of good being accomplished by the Society of Motion Picture Engineers. I feel that I must also emphasize the fact that the influence of the Society for good in the industry increases entirely out of proportion to the age of the Society.

Home of G. E.

The meeting place was fortunate in that we not only had a very comfortable, high-grade hotel for our meeting place, but also Schenectady is the home of the General Electric Company, and the works and its laboratories are in themselves in the nature of a sight of a life time.

During the meeting the General Electric Company invited the Society to spend one afternoon at the "works" as its guest. While there the Society was treated to an elaborate and most excellent buffet luncheon. It visited the Illuminating Laboratories, where it was addressed by Mr. Ryan, the head of the laboratories, and shown an extensive and very beautiful set of pictures illustrating artificial illumination, from the first known effort of the cave man of other days down to the present wonderful and beautiful effects accomplished in the illumination of buildings, expositions and their grounds and other things.

Huge Searchlight

We also were permitted to view the operation of a huge searchlight located in the indoor testing range. I have forgotten the exact candle power of this enormous illumination unit, but it runs into the millions. It uses 200 amperes in its high intensity arc. We were also informed that a five-year contract has just been closed for the illumination of Niagara Falls in colors, using I am afraid to tell you how much power. Of course, that is just one way of saying I didn't put the figure down and don't know, but any how as I recall it, it was more than one billion.

We were taken to another laboratory, and permitted to hear the operation of a giant radio receiver or amplifier. To have heard this unique invention in operation was in itself worth at least one hundred miles of travel. When the amplifier was set at its lowest capacity, it seemed to me that the effect was almost exactly what one would expect from the voice of a giant man, say twenty or thirty feet high. At its full power, we were informed, this amplifier is audible, under favorable conditions, for a distance of about one mile. It was something like 3 ft. in diameter. We were also permitted to watch other highly interesting demonstrations.

In the evening, the General Electric Company gave the Society and its guests a banquet at the Hotel Van Curler, which was thoroughly enjoyed by everyone. The Mayor of Schenectady was present and addressed the gathering. The dinner was followed by a dance.

At midnight the same day, the projectionists of Schenectady, Local Union No. 314, P. A., called a special meeting to listen to the writer expound matters Projectional. The men were not advised of my proposed visit and only knew of it after my arrival. Therefore, the time for calling the meeting was very short and the attendance not full. I took with me William Kunzmann, of the National Carbon Co.; John Hertner, president, Hertner Electric Company; George Edwards, of the American Projection Society, New York City; Arthur Grey, Projectionist, Boston, Mass.; Max Ruben, Detroit, Michigan, and Joe Cifre, of Boston.

With all the oratory contained in that bunch, and contained under high pressure, the meeting lasted until 3 A. M. It was, I hope, profitable to the men of Local 314.

The Meeting

Now that all that is out of the way, I will tell you about the S. M. P. E. meeting. It was opened promptly on time Monday, May 18, with President L. A. Jones presiding. It was welcomed to Schenectady by Mayor Wm. W. Campbell, and was addressed by Francis C. Pratt, vice-president of the General Electric Company, who welcomed the Society on behalf of that organization. There was a short address by past President C. Francis Jenkins and an address by President L. A. Jones, who, by the way, has been a very able chief executive. Not only has he conducted the affairs of the organization well and efficiently, but also he has conducted the meetings very, very well indeed.

The treasurer's report shows the finances of the organization to be in a healthy condition; which is, of course, very gratifying.

Papers Read

The following papers were read, and were usually followed by an excellent discussion:

"An Improved Sensitometer Sector Wheel" by Mr. M. Briefer.

"How Theatres Should be Ventilated" by Mr. F. R. Still. A most excellent paper, in which it is made clear that motion picture theatres and legitimate theatres require wider and different treatment in the matter of ventilation, and that this fact very often is ignored in practice. I would strongly advise all theatre managers to procure a copy of the proceedings of this meeting, and to read this paper carefully. It will, if properly applied, be worth to them a hundred times the cost of a copy of the transactions. Among other things, Mr. Still made plain the fact that temperature is by no means the entire problem. Humidity and air movement are of very very great importance. He also made clear the fact that all odors may be removed by a properly designed air washer, and that such a washer also operates to preserve the theatre decorations by eliminating dust and disfiguring particles from the air entering the theatre. One rather queer thing was brought out, namely: that non-cooled theatres lost patronage during June and July, whereas theatres efficiently cooled showed increase in patronage, as against the rest of the year, during those months. He furthermore announced that the cool theatre which is without air movement is not a comfortable theatre, and that cool air coming through mushroom ventilators under the individual seats is very uncomfortable.

Mr. J. A. Ball read a paper "Infra-Red Photography in Motion Picture Work." Mr. J. R. Hertner read a paper entitled "Control of Series Arc Generator Sets."

and Positive Motion Picture Films" was dealt with by Dr. A. B. Hitchins. The writer gave a paper of fifty pages, with thirty-four illustrations, dealing with the early history of the Motion Picture Industry, particularly as applies to the inventions by Messrs. Thomas Edison, George Eastman, Thomas R. Matt, C. Francis Jenkins and Alfred E. Smith.

Early Projection

C. Francis Jenkins read a paper dealing partly with his claims as to early projection inventions, and partly with the transmission of motion picture by radio, in which field he is now very active. He expects in the very near future to be able to transmit motion pictures to the home exactly the same as the voice is now transmitted. He has already transmitted some excellent still pictures.

Another truly remarkable paper was by President L. A. Jones, and Lewis Townsend, it is entitled "Colored Lighting Effects for Use in Connection with the Exhibition of Motion Pictures." The paper itself was excellent, but the demonstration of the means for the use of colors in connection with theatrical work devised by Lewis Townsend, Chief Projectionist of the Eastman Theatre, Rochester, N. Y., was in the nature of a revelation.

In this work, Mr. Townsend uses a double deck, or, I think in practice a triple deck dissolving stereopticon, in front of the lenses of which are located very carefully and scientifically prepared rotating colored sectors. The effects secured were most interesting, and certainly, when put into practice with artistically prepared designs, they are going to be very beautiful indeed.

I understand that the device will be made available to the trade. I desire to compliment Mr. Townsend upon his achievement, and to point out to other projectionists the fact that what Mr. Townsend has done is proof positive that there is room for advancement in projection, always providing a man applies his brains to constructive work, gives some rein to his imagination and has that intangible but hugely important thing called "vision."

Of course Mr. Townsend had unusual opportunities in that he had the cooperation of such men as Mr. Jones and others, together with all the resources of the great Eastman laboratories at his command. However, while you and I, with less facilities, might possibly not accomplish what Mr. Townsend has, still there are always possibilities in the use of light, which is the basis of projection, and these possibilities may be worked out into various things, useful to the motion picture industry, to the profit and glory of the one who has the energy and ability to experiment intelligently and constructively.

Ladies Present

There were a number of ladies in attendance, most of them wives of members, I don't know whether or no they merely came along to keep their husbands out of mischief, but be that as it may they were loyally entertained, and shown a good time by the City of Schenectady during their stay. The General Electric certainly entertained those in attendance royally.

There were many other most interesting papers. The reports of various committees showed substantial progress along the lines of their endeavors. The theatres of Schenectady entertained the delegates, or such of them as cared to enjoy their various performances.

A Trip West

I was seated in my summer home at South Lyme, Connecticut, working like the proverbial dog is supposed to work, at peace with myself, my friends, my enemies and all the world, when out of a perfectly blue sky came a demand from the projector manufacturers that I come to New York for a conference.

The gentleman on the phone was of such standing that I did not feel justified in refusing, so to New York I went, incidentally kicking all my arrangements and work in the slats. Arriving in New York, I was asked to proceed to Milwaukee, to place certain matters before the supply dealers and exhibitors in convention there assembled, on the behalf of the projector manufacturers. The matter that I was to present seemed to be of such far-reaching importance that, very much against my inclination, I went to the Grand Central Station, introduced myself into the midst of the Twentieth Century Limited and went to bed therein, growling at myself for having interrupted important work.

On the train, next morning, I met Joseph S. Crifie, manager United Theatre Equipment Co., Boston, Mass., and R. D. Marson of the Exhibitors Supply Co., Boston, Mass., with whom I had a long friendly and most interesting conversation. They report business in Boston as being good; that while no theatre building is now under way, there are plans for considerable very excellent theatre construction in the not far distant future.

BREEZES
that really cool.

What if you do have a dozen or two wall fans buzzing around. They can't get rid of the heat and humidity your audience gives off — particularly in hot weather. They merely churn up the stale, overheated air.

What you need is AIR CHANGE—tremendous volumes of fresh, outdoor air sweeping through to give you a complete change at least once every minute. That's the one SURE way of keeping down the heat and humidity. And at the same time you get refreshing breezes that really cool.

You can bet it works—2,000 other theatres prove it.

TYPHOON FAN COMPANY

Philadelphia Jacksonville Dallas New Orleans

Arriving at Milwaukee, I found things humming loudly. At the Auditorium the supply dealers had a really splendid exhibition of various motion picture theatre supplies of which I will say more later. At the Hotel Wisconsin, you couldn't turn around without stepping on the toes of an exhibitor. The woods (and the Wisconsin) were full of them. The Wisconsin was headquarters for the theatre owners. At the Hotel Pfister, still another convention was in session, the members of which tried to pin young dinner plates in the shape of a button on everybody's coat, the said button announcing, "I am an Independent."

Dealers' Exhibit

Over at the supply dealers' exhibit, I nearly got my hand shaken off. There was J. C. Kroesen, of the General Electric, Harrison, N. J., plant; a short stout man about 6 feet tall by 14 inches through, named William Kunzman, though if anyone called him William, I really believe he would have bitten them. The man referred to is "Bill" Kunzman, without whom the National Carbon would not be complete. Bill is the boy you say good-night to in New Orleans and as like as not eat breakfast with in Seattle, Washington, if you happen to be in Seattle next morning; L. C. Atwater, N. Y. City, who is reported to eat Luxalba Condensers for lunch every day; Charles Dentalbeck, Supervisor for Projection for the Famous Players in Canada; Tex Combes, whose name will be recognized by quite some thousands on the West Coast, he being one of the genuine honest to gosh old timers out there; C. D. Struble, the Yale City Supply Co., Kansas City, Mo.; Max Ruben of the Amusement Supply Co., Detroit, Mich.; "Herb" Griffin, Sales Manager Nichols Power Co.; H. J. Smith, Acme Projector, Pittsburg, Pa., who, incidentally, is president of the Equipment Dealers' Association; E. H. Roll, Amusement Supply Co., Chicago, Ill.; L. C. Doliver, Western Theatre Supply Co., San Francisco; Mark L. Swaab, of Louis L. Swaab Co., Philadelphia, Pa.; A. Hanson, of California Motion Picture Equipment Co.; J. ("Simplex") Gelman, of the Theatre Supply Co., Cleveland, Ohio; N. C. Haefele, of the N. C. Haefele Co., Supply Dealers, Baltimore, Md.; Fred Albinger, Double Disc Shutter Co., Cleveland, Ohio; Leo Dwyer, Theatre Supply Co., Cleveland, Ohio; E. H. Roll, Amusement Supply Co., Chicago, Ill.; John Hertner, Hertner Electric Co., Cleveland, Ohio; Karl Brinkert, who has worked seven years in perfecting the Brinkert effects projector; J. F. Griffith, Chief Projectionist, Chicago Theatre, Chicago, Illinois; C. A. Willis, Projectionist, Toledo, Ohio; Jesse Grimes, Projectionist, Danville, Ill.; H. D. Taivall, Western M. P. Company, Danville, Ill.; Jas. Amette, American Amusement Co., Chicago; W. E. Schmidt, General Manager, Majestic Amusement Co., Kankakee Ill., who said he had a copy of every issue of my handbooks since their first issue; C. B. Harper, Novelty Scenic Studios, New York City; J. J. Roberts, Mgr., Southern Theatre Equipment Co., Dallas, Tex.; Ernest Carlson of Superlite Screens; J. E. McAuler, inventor of the new reflector type lamp, and many others whose names, unfortunately, I did not record.

At lunch, Kunzman, Geib, President Smith, Strauble, Reuben Dentelbeck, Tex Combs and myself, gathered around a big table and discussed and cussed many and various things, incidentally having the ingrowing nerve to stick poor Kunzman for the whole check. I have not enjoyed a meal so thoroughly for many a moon.

Much Impressed

I was much impressed with the personality of President Smith a mighty fine chap. That boy is a good diplomat, and unless I am much mistaken, a good business man also. Tex Combes said the boys on the coast would like mighty well to see Richardson again. He didn't say, however, whether they wanted to heave bricks or shake hands. I, therefore, am entitled to assume that it was the latter, though I didn't have the nerve to ask questions.

I was impressed with the excellence and the practicability of the exposition of goods made by the Equipment Dealers in the Auditorium. I also saw one or two things which caused me to stand dead still and look good and plenty. One was a new Synchronous Converter. This device is not more than 18 inches high by the same width. It is so small that I could easily pick the whole business up, yet it performs, or is said to perform the work of a double 75 Ampere Motor Generator Set. If it will do the work its manufacturers claim it will, it certainly will be a very real addition to projection equipment.

Peerless Lamp

The other apparatus is the New Peerless Reflector Type Lamp, manufactured by the J. E. McAuley Company of Chicago. This piece of apparatus is a revelation, both in its construction and its operation. It took but one look at that lamp to come to the conclusion that the low intensity has "arrived." An examination of its operation and the further opinion is expressed, "it is here to stay," and the ordinary arc is "out." I shall describe the Peerless Lamp for you elsewhere in the department a little later, but will close these remarks by saying it is a thoroughly well and substantially built and well designed apparatus which "delivers the goods," with the further remark that Doliver of the Western Theatre Supply Co., San Francisco, Calif., told me he had placed an order for 50 of them.

Wisconsin Theatre

In the evening of the first day, by invitation, I visited the Wisconsin Theatre, Milwaukee, a new and up-to-date and thoroughly charming theatre. The Wisconsin has inaugurated a one-price-for-every-seat- in-the-house admission price, which means that the orchestra, the mezzanine, with its loges and comfortable chairs, and the farthest back seat in the high balcony are all the same price—evenings, 50 cents and afternoons 25 cents.

R. W. Waterson, house manager, received me most cordially and showed me over the theatre very thoroughly.

Projection Room

Mounting to the Projection Room, I found Louis Wesphal on duty as Chief Projectionist, assisted by Projectionist Herbert Paringer. The other shift consists of Otto Trampe, and Leo Gunan. Brother Trampe is President of the Milwaukee Motion Picture Projectionist, Local Union I. A. T. S. E. and M. P. M. O.

Brother Wesphal impressed me as a very competent man. I was particularly pleased in that I received scant attention from him when I first went in. He was busy, attending to the various effects which went with the leading musical number, some of which were shown on the screen. He stepped over, shook hands, and immediately returned to his post of duty. Presently, being near him, I addressed some remark to him, but on second thought apologized saying: "Don't pay any attention to me. I don't want to in any way interfere with your work." whereupon the instant reply came: "You can't, Brother Richardson! My screen comes first," for which I pay him due honor.

The room and its installation was planned by Brother Wesphal. Its location, with consequent heavy angle of projection, and the resultant terrific distortion of the picture and too small observation ports constitute its only faults. It is probably fifteen feet front to back, with ample width and a ceiling about nine feet high. Its ventilation astonished me, and I have looked over hundreds upon hundreds of projection installations. Fresh, washed air is pulled into the room by a fan of ample size—no toy but a real ventilation fan, located in an adjoining room devoted entirely to the projection room ventilation installation. Another fan of surprisingly ample size, is devoted entirely to sucking the gases out of the various projector lamp houses. A third fan, having a sheet metal enclosure probably three or four feet wide by five or six feet high, sucks the foul air out of the projection room. I am almost afraid to print this for fear some exhibitor with a weak heart—the kind who doles out two carbons at a time and splinters the blue vault of heaven with profanity when, after a full year's use, the projectionist asks for a new intermittent sprocket—will read it and succumb to the shock.

The Projection Room is equipped with both a toilet and a shower bath. It has a separate, thoroughly ventilated rheostat room, and a separate clothes closet, of ample dimension. Its floor is of cement, hard as flint.

Projection Equipment

The Projection Equipment consists of three Motiograph DeLuxe Projectors, two double deck stage lighting effect projectors and two spot lamps. There is an automatic enclosed rewind. There is a large clock at the rear of the room.

The installation lacks some of the refinements found in our high grade eastern theatres, such as, for instance, panel boards under each observation port, each board carrying volt, ammeters, speedometers, etc., but, nevertheless, taken by and large, the Wisconsin room has it on the eastern theatres, in other ways, such as, for instance, completeness in ventilation. By the way, there is a separate and very thoroughly ventilated rheostat room adjoining the projection room. The observation ports are entirely and unnecessarily too small. I would add at least six inches to their width and four to their heighth.

My compliments to the Wisconsin Theatre, to its manager, and to the Projection Room force. The theatre is a beauty, the projection room installation about as free from criticism as any I have found anywhere and the work delivered by its projectionist distinctly high grade. So that's that!

Milwaukee Three Days

I remained in Milwaukee three days, but although when the boys found I was there only two days remaining, still they did hustle around and call a meeting of the Local, which was attended by the writer, Charles Dentleback, Supervisor of Projection for the Famous Players-Lasky Co. of Canada; Herbert Griffin, Genl. Sales Agt. for the Nicholas Power Co.; J. "Service" Gilman, of Cincinnati, and Tex Combes, San Francisco, California, all of whom addressed the gathering.

The men of Milwaukee have a good Local and are, I believe, in very considerable measure, progressive. I was very sorry indeed that there was not sufficient time to get all the men out. I suggested to the Milwaukee Local that once each year the Local have a real honest to gosh banquet. I suggested that they put some real money into it, go to the best hotel in the city, taking their wives with them, or if any of them have no wives let them borrow one for this occasion. Invite some of the progressive theatre managers to attend as their guests. Have a dance after the affair.

Cost? Sure, it will cost, but in the end it will pay large money on the investment to those who are able to visualize and appreciate the indirect results which come from such things.

I visited just one other theatre very briefly. Dropped in at the "White House" theatre to see Projectionist George Fausel. The White House has a very elaborate front. The screen is over the entrance. Beyond those two facts, I made no notes, being in somewhat of a hurry at the time.

At the Exhibitors' Convention I had the pleasure of meeting my old, valued friend, Frank Rembusch. Frank is the "war horse of Indiana," Any old time there is a battle among the exhibitors (and there certainly was one in that convention alright) you may depend upon finding Frank Rembusch parked just about exactly in its geographical center. his hat in the ring, both fists waving and his mouth full of language.

Milwaukee Progress

When I went to Milwaukee to attend and address the Exhibitors' and Equipment Dealers' convention I was not at all certain that I would have the opportunity.

Since time began and the motion industry was born, no exhibitors' convention had ever listened to even so much as a five-minute address upon projection. No man had ever been permitted to address them on that topic. Persistently and consistently the presiding officers of such conventions had refused to either himself grant the right to any one to address the exhibitors convention on projection, or to give a convention the right to itself decide whether or not it desired to hear such an address.

I made the attempt several times but never got beyond a very promptly ignored promise made by the president. I, therefore, repeat that it was with very decided doubts about the possibility of getting before the exhibitors' convention that I went to Milwaukee, and was agreeably surprised when I was granted the floor. Frankly when I saw the situation and viewed the war clouds I did not expect it at all.

Entering Wedge

But I did address them, albeit somewhat briefly, and thus the exhibitors have officially granted recognition to matters projectional. That talk was, I feel, in the nature of an entering wedge. A precedent has thus been established for other meetings and other exhibitors' conventions.

I shall hope to again be permitted to address an exhibitors' convention in the near future, when I may have time to lay before it carefully prepared data, unhurriedly gathered and as forcefully presented as I am capable of doing. I hope for this because, while the average exhibitor is coming to some sort of an understanding of the fact that better projection does really pay, still but a comparatively very small percentage of them have any adequate realization of how enormous is the aggregate loss to the combined box offices by reason of projection faults.

Helps Box Office

The average exhibitor does not yet understand that, for instance, while high grade projection cannot remedy punk work in development, poor work on the part of the photographer, stupid directing and acting—faults inherent in the production as received by the projectionist, still high grade projection can and very often will cause an audience to be at least fairly well pleased with a punk production, which with poor projection added to its inherent faults would have made it pretty awful.

Many exhibitors also fail to realize how much the box office drawing power of their fine productions may be and are injured by lack of high grade projection. Very few exhibitors have yet come to an understanding of the fact that projection properly includes many things entirely outside the projection room, and only a comparatively few understand the extent of the loss to the business as a whole by reason of equipment in poor repair or poor adjustment, EVERY CENT OF WHICH COMES BACK UPON THEM IN THE FORM OF INCREASED FILM RENTALS.

Remember This

Exhibitors will do well to remember that the motion picture industry has but one source of income, viz theatre ticket sales. Hence any and all of the overhead of the industry must, in the very nature of things, be paid, in one way or another, out of the box office receipts. If film damage amounts to so much per month, taken as a whole, that sum MUST be charged back on the box offices of the country in the form of increased film rentals.

AND RIGHT THERE IS WHERE THE EXHIBITOR HAS BEEN A BIT FOOLISH IN REFUSING TO HEAR TALKS ON PROJECTION. The individuals who attend conventions may honestly believe that THEY are committing no projectional wrong—that THEIR projection is quite all right. And in many cases that really may be true, BUT they fail to realize that THOSE WHO DO THE RIGHT THING ARE CONSTANTLY PENALIZED BY BEING COMPELLED TO PAY A SHARE OF ALL THE DAMAGE DONE BY THOSE WHO ARE NOT DOING THE RIGHT THING. They ought, therefore, to listen to those who are fully informed, and who wish to lay these matters before them and aid in reducing the damage to film, and the damage to theatre box office income caused by unnecessary damage to film.

"Better Projection Pays"

P. A. McGuire, Advertising Manager of the N. Power Company, is credited with starting the "BETTER PROJECTION PAYS" campaign, for which he should have the united thanks of the entire industry, and doubtless will one day have it, too. EVERY PROJECTION ROOM EQUIPMENT MANUFACTURER AND DEALER OUGHT TO JOIN IN THE ADOPTION OF THAT SLOGAN. No truer words were ever uttered in connection with the motion picture industry. Better projection does pay, hence let us have better projection.

And "better projection" does not necessarily apply in all cases to the individual picture being projected. Many a projectionist has a sharp, clear-cut, well-illuminated picture, who is nevertheless projectionally ROTTEN.

How is that, do you ask? Why, simply because he is, while putting a good screen image on in his theatre, literally raising a hallelujah with the screen results in theatres which must use those films when he is through. Don't smile, Mr. Exhibitor reader, because YOU may be SUFFERING FROM DAMAGE SOME OTHER PUT-A-GOOD-PICTURE-ON-MY-SCREEN-AND-TO-HELL-WITH-THE-NEXT-FELLOW, who is jamming HIS aperture tension down tight as the springs will permit in order to hold the jiggle out of a worn-out intermittent, and thus doing things to the sprocket hole edges which will make a steady picture in YOUR theatre impossible.

Junk In Use

It is a fact that in a surprising number of theatres there are today in use old god-forsaken aggregations of JUNK which should long since have been relegated to the scrap pile, and what those worn mechanisms are doing to film, and thus to the combined box offices, it is nothing short of a crime to tell.

They injure their own shows and the shows of other theatres. They lessen the enjoyment of audiences and reduce theatre patronage. Patrons may not express their objections. They do not, as a matter of fact, know what is wrong, hence cannot complain. They simply know the show is not overly pleasing, hence they stay at home about half the time. By that I mean that instead of going to the movies perhaps two or three times a week, they go maybe once, or they go to a competing theatre where more careful attention is paid to projection matters, leaving the scrap pile projector manager to wonder what on earth is the matter.

"One Moment Please"

Many small theatres still use but one projector, using that old, ought-to-be-obsolete "one moment please. Changing reels." There was a time when this "went," but that time is past. Today we have six to eight-reel features, and any interruption of continuity operates to break the thread of the story and just plain spoils the show. Patrons no longer care for a performance which is disjointed and subject to several interruptions.

I am NOT trying to sell projectors and don't suggest that every small theatre should purchase two new projectors. There are excellent ones available which may be bought quite reasonably, but I do say that even the expense of new ones will be far better business than using worn out ones or a one-projector show.

Likes the "School"

William Burnett, Newton, Iowa, says:

Just a few lines to say that the "School" is getting better all the time. I see a few new ones are getting in. I don't myself understand how any one can pass up as good a bet as the School. It certainly is helping me more than I am able to tell you.

A chap visited me recently. He surely did need to study. Told him to get the Bluebook and Lens chart and get busy. Said he would. He is a real good man basically, and will make good if he just will buckle down and "dig."

I told him how much I had improved the results upon my screen by studying the Bluebook—really STUDYING it. Before I studied up on "Optics of the Projector," I was using a wrong condenser combination, wrong "Y" distance and a wrong "X" distance, which was some considerable mess. Have everything right now, according to the lens chart, and am getting as good results upon my screen as any one could wish for. I owe it all to a certain department in the Moving Picture World and its editor, and I'll not forget that either.

I could go on telling you the various things in connection with my work which I have improved until I would have written a young book, but I won't take up more of your time, except to wish for you and yours, all the prosperity you have so well earned.

Glad to Help!

I am glad indeed that I have been able to help you, brother Burnett, BUT I don't forget that any benefit you have derived is the result of your own effort, as well as mine. You have co-operated in the constantly-made endeavor to improve motion picture projection, and the knowledge of the men engaged therein, and THAT is what really counts. Without the co-operation of study by those I try earnestly to benefit, any effort I may make must fail.

It to some extent fails when those thousands who read and do benefit by the Bluebook School stop at that, and either won't or don't even write an encouraging letter, such as yours, to say nothing of failing or refusing to answer the questions as best they can. You say I have helped you. Well, brother, I will, in return, say that you have helped the work I am trying, as best I may, to do, and in that way you have helped me.

But of all the double-dyed IDIOTS I have ever had knowledge of, are those (and they are not so few as you might think either) who just plain won't answer the Bluebook School questions because they fear they WILL help. They fear they may contribute something which will be helpful to ME. Also they fear that through them some other "Op'rater" will learn something, and thus be more nearly on a par with their tremendously high (???) level!

None So Foolish?

You think there is no one so utterly foolish? Well, you are in error, in proof of which listen to this excerpt from a letter from a man who signs his name, and then, under it, prints, in big letters: "OPERATER" —which same he does not even know how to spell, though it's not me who should criticize that for I'm a perfectly ROTTEN speller myself. The letter comes from the second city in our fair land.

* * * But at that we got to hand it to you. You're a pretty wise old guy at that. Start a "School," and a lot of guys fall for it and answer the questions, and you get wise to the things you didn't know. When it gets raining gravy down in Hell you won't be there with any fork. * * *

Can you beat that? The chap fails to recognize the fact that all or nearly all the answers which are supposed to "put me wise" are already in the Bluebook. As to the Satanic Majesty end of his loving remarks, I suppose he means to pay me a compliment by intimating that I won't be there at all, but up with the rest of the angels. Oh well, all the feeling I can manage to muster up when I get an occasional letter like that is just plain pity for the SAP who wrote it.

How Many Theatres?

The following figures are supplied by the Nicholas Power Company. I cannot vouch for their correctness, though presumably they are at least approximately so.

Number of Theatres and Seating Capacity for 1923-24

Seats	1923	1924	Gain	Loss
100 to 249	5677	5124	.....	453
250 to 499	6266	6666	400	.....
500 to 799	2921	3151	230	.....
800 and over	2365	2893	528	.....
Total for the U. S. of A.	17229	17834	605

Makes us rub our combined eyes, don't it? I know I thought the total number of theatres was diminishing. Well, anyhow, I was right on one important point, anyhow, viz: The small houses are diminishing in number and the largest ones show the greatest percentage of gain in numbers.

The Power Company comments thus:

You will note that in the 100 to 250 seat class there were 453 less in 1924 than in 1923. This indicates that the very small theatre, which operates perhaps one, two or three nights a week, is fast disappearing from the business. Theatres of larger size show gains all along the line. The figures show that the very large house is coming into greater favor than the houses under 800 seating capacity, but that the 500 seat house is holding its ground in a satisfactory manner.

It is to be noted that an analysis of the figures shows at least twelve thousand theatres in which there should be a projection equipment replacement at least once every five years. (Once every three would be far better, in my opinion.—Ed.)

According to the figures there were 1,158 new theatres built last year, and if there be an average of two projectors per theatre (many are now installing three projectors) there should have been 2,306 projectors installed in new theatres alone.

The Power Company continues at considerable length, the letter being one they are sending out to their distributors, but what has already been said is sufficient to permit me to make the point I have in mind.

Projector manufacturers certainly have not had the business the industry should have provided them during the past few years. Theatre men have, I think, "economized" to a very damaging degree in the matter of equipping new theatres with second hand or rebuilt projectors, and by keeping old projectors in use long after their true economic life has been exhausted.

Projectors Last

It is a strange fact that the average exhibitor who will keep every other part of his equipment right up to the minute, and several jumps ahead, will very often cut, prune and trim the expense account of the very heart of the whole thing until the projectionists have to operate on the very ragged edge of almost nothing. I have known of theatre managers cheerfully ordering a perfectly good organ replaced by one a bit larger and of more modern date, and in almost the next breath buying a big job lot of punk carbons because they could be had "cheap."

I have known of an exhibitor expending thousands of dollars on high class, expensive ventilation apparatus, and refusing absolutely to permit the projectionist to have his projector mechanisms overhauled, though they had run three years in a ten-hour-a-day house without any repairs, except such as the projectionist himself did, after literally prying the necessary repair parts loose from the "manager."

If the figures quoted are correct, then I would, at a guess, say that there ought to be MORE than six thousand new projectors installed every year. I don't believe there are a quarter of that number actually sold.

Bad Policy

This thing of using a projector until it is just ready to fall entirely to pieces is very poor, not to say distinctly bad policy. It reacts to the injury of the exhibitor in several ways, not the least of which is that it keeps the manufacturer with financial sails so closely trimmed to the wind that he cannot and does not do the experimenting which ought to be done, and which must be done if the equipment is to be improved and kept abreast with the times.

ONE DOLLAR A DAY WILL REPLACE YOUR PROJECTORS EVERY THREE YEARS, AND CERTAINLY UP-TO-THE MINUTE PROJECTORS, IN PERFECT CONDITION, WILL PUT ENOUGH BETTER RESULTS ON YOUR SCREEN TO PROVIDE MORE THAN ONE DOLLAR A DAY ADDED REVENUE TO ALMOST ANY THEATRE. Think it over, Mr. Exhibitor.

Bluebook School—Answers Nos. 266-270

Question No. 266—Assuming a generator of high voltage to be thoroughly and completely insulated from earth, could you stand with your bare feet on earth and handle either the positive or negative raw, uninsulated wire with your bare hands?

The following answered correctly: H. E. Hurlbutt, Oskosh, Wisconsin; A. L. Fell, Collingswood, N. J., Walter S. Johnson, Champaign, Illinois, F. H. Moore, Taunton, Mass.; S. F. Cooley, Manchester, New Hampshire; J. L. Casey, Clarendon, Texas; C. H. Hanover, Burlington, Iowa; Harry Dobson, Toronto, Ontario; M. H. Thoreau and Locksley Clark, Vancouver, B. C.; G. L. Doe, Chicago, Illinois; W. C. Whitt, Red Bluff, California; T. R. Guimond, Mobile, Alabama; G. W. Bennewitz, Sioux Falls, South Dakota, Charles C. Colby, Santa Fe, New Mexico, and W. C. Whitt, Garden City, Long Island.

Whitt made what seems to me to be an excellent answer. He said:

In order to be effective, electricity must flow from positive to negative, and unless you connect yourself in circuit so that current will flow through your body, or some portion thereof, you cannot and will not feel any effect from touching either wire separately. If one wire of a generator be grounded, then by touching the opposite polarity you would close the circuit with your body, or some portion thereof.

Doe says:

Both in theory and in fact you may stand on bare ground and handle either wire of a high voltage generator without harm, provided, I believe, you are not close enough to opposite polarity of really high voltage to receive current by induction, which is possible, though in that event the earth would have no effect, hence that fact does not affect the correctness of the answer to the question as I have made it. The question of "earth" and "induction" are really two entirely separate matters.

Johnson says:

Yes—but DON'T take such chances of complete insulation.

Casey says:

The question can be answered by saying "yes," but only with a large IF, because in actual practice there is no such thing as a thoroughly insulated high voltage conductor, hence it would be unsafe to handle either wire while standing on the ground.

Hanover says:

Theoretically yes, it would be entirely safe, BUT in practice don't experiment, because if you do you'll probably be watching your own funeral—that is, if ghosts can watch such things.

By this I mean that complete insulation, while of course not impossible is seldom or never found to exist in practice. Low voltage may be to all intents and purposes completely insulated, because of the high resistence of many classes of "ground," but when it comes to a grand resistance sufficient to withstand the pressure of say 30,000 to 60,000 volts—well I'll say there "ain't none."

Question No. 267—Does current seek to escape from positive to earth?

Every one above named "came through." In fact in one way the answer to question 266 replies to this question as well.

Hanover says:

Electric current seeks only to lower its electrical "pressure" or voltage. This may only be accomplished by escaping from, or passing from positive to negative. Insofar as concerns the positive of any electric generator, there is but one thing which is "negative" to it, and that is the negative of the same generator (for the purpose two or more generators coupled in series is one generator.) Earth is neither positive or negative to an electric generator, hence current generated by a dynamo or battery has no affinity for earth, except as it offers a possible path from positive to negative of the same generator. The answer to the question, therefore is a simple "no."

Hurlbutt says:

Current will not seek to escape from positive to earth unless the negative of the same generator be also grounded, so that it supplies a path from positive to negative of sufficiently low resistance to permit of current flow.

Brothers Thoreau and Clark spring a new one, thus:

Current does not seek to escape from the positive pole to the earth, because a generator is merely a device which causes current to CIRCULATE. Current which leaves a generator must be replaced immediately, which can only happen if there be a return or completed circuit.

Gosh! There is room for argument there, if you ask me. Whether or not this is correct I have often wondered. It opens up something which goes down pretty close to the very foundation of electrical action, or so it seems to me. IF, as we with much abandon, gaiety ASSUME, the entire voltage is consumed by, for instance, a bank of incandescent lamps which use six amperes then will you be kind enough to advise me as to just what it is that forces, pulls, coaxes, shoves or drives that six amperes back to the generator???

Now please don't for a moment imagine I am poking fun at the men who wrote this answer. I'm NOT. It just happens that they have inadvertently hit upon the one thing I've puzzled my poor brains over for all these many years. I'm really glad they sprung it just that way, for I'd like to hear the explanation of any who have nerve enough to tackle the matter. Mind you I'm not questioning that current does flow in the negative. The ammeter would immediately announce me to be full of unripe prunes if I did, BUT what I want to know is WHY it flows if the E. M. F. is all consumed in the forcing of the current through the resistance of the power device, such as an incandescent lamp. Answer me that and you'll do more than any one I know of has been able to do to date.

Question No. 268—Assuming that there is a ground on both positive and negative, will there necessarily be current leakage?

All those before named answered correctly, some assuming that current would flow, no matter how high the resistance of the ground. This I think is incorrect. If it were not, then there would be constant current flow through the air, since the air really is a high resistance conductor.

Fell says:

Under the condition named in the question, current may or may not flow from positive to negative, because the ground may have such high resistance that the pressure cannot force current through.

Thoreau and Clark, take the opposite position, they say:

If there is a ground on both positive and negative, there will be current leakage. If both have an absolute or complete ground, then there would be a short circuit, but where one or both are only partial or high resistance [illegible] the amount of current leakage would depend upon the resistance of both grounds in series.

I hold this to be in error, but have printed it in order to invite the opinion of others as to whether any current at all will flow through high resistance. For instance: Given a ground on negative having 500 ohms resistance, and a ground on positive having a thousand ohms resistance; voltage 110, would even the most delicate galvanometer show current flow? Of course in theory we would have 110 divided by 1,500 equals .07333 plus of an ampere of current flowing. The question in my mind is, however, if the "flow" would not be purely theoretical. Brothers Thoreau and Clark have the best of it on the face of things. Theoretically they and the others who answered that way are correct. My own view is that there is really no flow at all.

Question No. 269—What would happen were the uninsulated positive of one generator to come into contact with the uninsulated negative of another generator? ....

Guimond says:

The question is not complete (right, brother, but possibly that was intentional. Ed.) because there might be three very different conditions. Given two electrically separate generators, each thoroughly grounded in both of its polarities, then the positive of one might be electrically joined to the negative of the other without any electrical result whatsoever. If two separate generators were thus joined, however, and there were a fairly good ground in the polarity of either both positives or both negatives, then there would be current leakage in proportion to the combined resistance of the grounds.

Then too, if two otherwise separate electrical generators be coupled in series, and the positive of one be touched to the negative of the other, the results would be extremely discouraging to the main fuses; also if they be generators of considerable voltage and capacity, the toucher, or touchee—whichever is correct—might better wear an asbestos mask and arc goggles, because for something like .0001 of a second (until the fuse "went") there would be fireworks good and plenty.

However, presumably the question refers to generators which are in every way electrically separate units, in which case nothing at all would happen when the opposite polarity conductors of the two machines were joined, since there would be no electrical affinity between the positive of one generator and the negative of the other.

(Note: I could disbar several who neglected to consider the matter of possible grounds. Think things ALL over, men, before you write your answers. That is the why of this school—to get you to really THINK deeply of the matters treated. You are doing real well, except for an occasional minor slip, like this one.—Editor.)

Question No. 270—Describe the action of alternating current.

I shall name those who answered well, with a * after the name of those who did something more than well. Whitt*, Budge, Bennewitz*, Hanover*, Doe*, Dobson*, Thoreau and Clark*, Fell*, Guimond, Hurlbutt, More and Casey.

Fell says:

An alternating current may be defined or described as: A current which reverses its direction of flow or action periodically. Starting from 0 (zero), its voltage rises gradually, though very rapidly, through all the graduations of pressure to the maximum generated by the armature under the operating condition of field strength, etc. Having reached maximum it instantly begins to lose or reduce its pressure until it again arrives at zero.

During this operation it has been flowing out one wire of the circuit, which is at that instant the "positive," the opposite wire being the negative.

As soon as the zero voltage point has been again reached, it starts to mount again, in exactly the same manner, but the direction of flow of the current has been reversed, and now the wire which was positive is negative, and vice versa. During this alternation the voltage pressure rises to maximum and returns to zero, exactly as it did before, and the two complete half cycles of operation, called two "alternations," form one "cycle."

Speed of action may vary, but ordinarily in the opposite direction, similarly increasing commercial current is generated at 120 alternations, or 60 cycles per second, so that the current which reverses its direction of flow with every alternation, actually changes its direction of flow at the rate of 120 times per second, or 7,200 times per minute, and that many times there is actually no voltage or electrical pressure upon the lines.

The reasons for this action are set forth in pages 6 to 18, inclusive, of the Bluebook.

Bennewitz says:

Alternating current is one that reverses its direction at regular intervals, increasing from zero to its maximum strength, and decreasing to zero with the current flowing in one direction and then, with the current flowing to a maximum and again decreasing to zero. The current continues to rapidly vary thus in direction and strength as long as the circuit remains closed.

The rapidity of these changes of direction and current strength depends on the cycle of the current. Taking 60 cycle current for example, the current would increase from zero to maximum and decrease to zero with the current flowing in one direction for 1/120 of a second, and in the opposite direction for 1/120 of a second. The flow of current from zero to maximum and back to zero is called an "alternation." Two alternations together represent a cycle.

A simple demonstration of the alternating character of an alternating current can be made with an incandescent lamp (preferably a carbon lamp) and a bar magnet. If the bar magnet is held close to a lamp through which direct current is flowing the filament will be repelled from or attracted to the magnet, depending on whether the north or south pole of the magnet is presented to the lamp. The current flowing through the lamp filament generates lines of force thus creating a magnetic pole which is attracted to, or repelled from the pole of the bar magnet. Now if the magnet be brought near a filament carrying an alternating current, the filament will merely vibrate as the alternating current produces at the filament magnetic poles of alternating polarity.

Sanitation As It Should Be Considered by Exhibitors

By JOE ESLER

IT is interesting to note the marked betterment in the sanitary conditions of theatres of today as compared with the old-fashioned five-cent moving picture house of fifteen years ago. At that time this type of theatre was usually started in an abandoned store without proper ventilation and with only the elemetary means for maintaining cleanliness and other sanitary conditions.

Today many theatres are built in large, magnificent, spacious buildings equipped with all modern devices for obtaining a high degree of sanitary perfection. Most marked of these devices, and the one that is probably of the most vital importance to the patrons of this kind of an establishment, is the ventilation equipment. The marked progress in sanitation represented by the devices installed in these structures does not result from a "hit" or "miss" method. It shows much careful thought and attention on the part of the persons connected with the theatres, and their architects and engineers.

A close study of the present method of sanitation in these buildings, and the demand for betterment in this field, indicates the need for further development. This is especially true in ventilation engineering. It is well to specify, therefore, the direction in which the marked improvement in sanitation has been attained and the need for additional effort in other directions.

In a number of cities and communities there are laws which are in force regulating the minimum requirements for sanitation. The welfare of an industry, financially and otherwise, has frequently been improved where it was the aim to exceed minimum requirements set by law. The show business is an outstanding example.

For years certain theatre owners and syndicates operating theatres had struggled with the problem of supplying air to an auditorium, in the summer and winter, liberal in quantity and at a comfortable temperature. We have in mind those systems of mechanical ventilation of ample capacity which are equipped with devices for cooling the air. Ten years ago the health worker considered this condition beyond expectation, at least not to be attained within so short a period of time.

In the march of progress of conditioning air at the source of supply the question of air distribution in the auditorium has not kept apace. Investigations showed that too often the owner, the architect and the engineer gave first consideration to the aesthetic effect of the building and to the structural requirements, making it necessary, after these considerations had been carried out, for the heating and ventilation engineer to fit in his equipment as best he knew how. This results in one of the greatest problems now confronting theatre owners.

If we do not consider along with the aesthetic and structural requirements of an auditorium the scheme of ventilation, designs usually result which when carried out produce a marked variation in the quantity of air supply to the individual occupying the auditorium.

Tests made by the Health Department of Chicago have shown that where there has been little consideration given to properly arranging the outlets of the supply and exhaust system in a theatre some individuals will receive twice their quota and others only one-half. The heating and ventilation engineer in his attempt to correct this inequality increases the velocity of the discharge at certain registers, which results in drafts and other objectionable conditions. The correction of this situation is the insistence, on the part of the owners of theatres, that the ventilation scheme shall be considered of major importance, ranking with the aesthetic effect to be attained and the structural requirements, and that the architect will provide a sufficient number of supply and exhaust registers throughout the auditorium so that the air has an approximate uniform velocity as it passes over the individual.

It should be emphasized that good distribution depends upon the most effective location of registers and the number of them. The cost of installing numerous registers and properly locating them is strongly shown and no consideration given to the operating benefits of such construction. Some theatres designed in recent years have failed entirely to give satisfactory results, due to improper distribution and location of registers, and the results of inspections and tests show that in those systems which include refrigeration in them the need for close adherence to the recommendations above become of most importance.

It is not the purpose to give the impression that a ventilation system for a theatre should first be designed and the structure built around this system. It is the intention to appeal to owners and architects to consider the ventilation system of major importance because of its direct bearing on public health, the effect on the receipts where a theatre has the reputation of being poorly ventilated and the possibilities confronting the person who has the task of designing an adequate scheme of ventilation which will function properly in a building where insufficient space has been allowed for such an installation.

To Build in Norfolk

The Loew Circuit will have a large theatre in Norfolk, Va.; negotiations have been completed for the purchase of a large plot of ground in that city on Granby Street, known as the Levy block. The theatre will have a seating capacity of more than 2,600 and will involve an expenditure of more than $800,000 in its construction.

Loew's Harrisburg Opens

Jackie Coogan, Barbara LaMarr, Johnny Hines, Raymond Hitchcock, and some other 30 stage folks accompanied Marcus Loew to the opening of his Regent Theatre in Harrisburg last week. Coogan reigned supreme as a favorite with the fans who almost wrecked the hotel and theatre lobbies trying to get a glimpse of the youngster.

REX-The Wild Horse

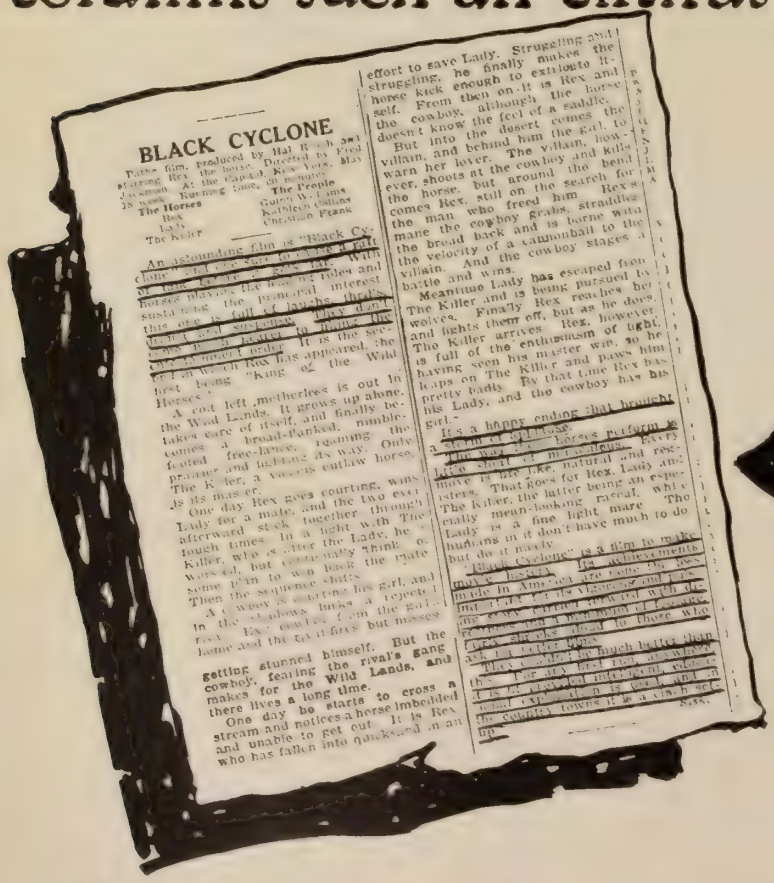
in

"BLACK CYCLONE"

Variety, as usual, calls the turn and when did you ever read in its columns such an enthusiastic review?



BLACK CYCLONE

Pathe film, produced by Hal Roach and starring Rex, the horse. Directed by Fred Jackman. At the Capitol, New York, week, Running time, 60 minutes.

The Horses

Lady
The Killer

The People

An astounding film as "Black Cyclone" is the story is fairly trite. With Rex, the horse, the principal interest centers, the picture is full of laughs, thrills, suspense and heart interest. It is full of laughs, thrills, suspense and heart interest. It is the story of a horse that is the real star. Rex has appeared, the Hal Roach has appeared, the first being "King of the Wild Horses."

A colt left motherless is out in the Wild Lands. It grows up alone, takes care of itself, and finally becomes a broad-flanked, nimble-footed free-lance, roaming the prairie and fighting its way. Only The Killer, a vicious outlaw horse, is its master.

One day Rex goes courting, wins Lady for a mate, and the two ever afterward stick together through tough times. In a fight with The Killer, who is after the Lady, he is worsted, but eventually think of some plan to win back the mate. Then the sequence shifts.

A cowboy is courting his girl, and in the shadows lurks a rejected rival. He couldn't win the girl's heart and the girl first but misses getting stunned himself. But the cowboy, fearing the rival's gang makes for the Wild Lands, and there lives a long time.

One day he starts to cross a stream and notices a horse imbedded and unable to get out. It is Rex who has fallen into quicksand in an effort to save Lady. Struggling and struggling, he finally makes the horse kick enough to extricate itself. From then on it is Rex and the cowboy, although the horse doesn't know the feel of a saddle.

But into the desert comes the villain, and behind him the girl, to warn her lover. The villain, however, shoots at the cowboy and kills the horse, but around the bend comes Rex, still on the search for the man who freed him. Rex mane the cowboy grabs, straddles the broad back and is borne with the velocity of a cannonball to the villain. And the cowboy stages a battle and wins.

Meantime Lady has escaped from The Killer and is being pursued by wolves. Finally Rex reaches her and fights them off, but as he does The Killer arrives. Rex, however, is full of the enthusiasm of fight, having seen his master win, so he leaps on The Killer and paws him pretty badly. By that time Rex has his Lady, and the cowboy has his girl.

It's a happy ending that brought a storm of applause.

The way the horses perform is the best bit of [illegible] ever seen. Every move is life-like, natural and realistic. That goes for Rex, Lady and The Killer, the latter being an especially mean-looking racial. While Lady is a fine light mare. The [illegible] in it don't have much to do but do it nicely.

"Black Cyclone" is a film to make [illegible] proud of its [illegible] and [illegible] to those who [illegible] a horse picture. It's a corker.

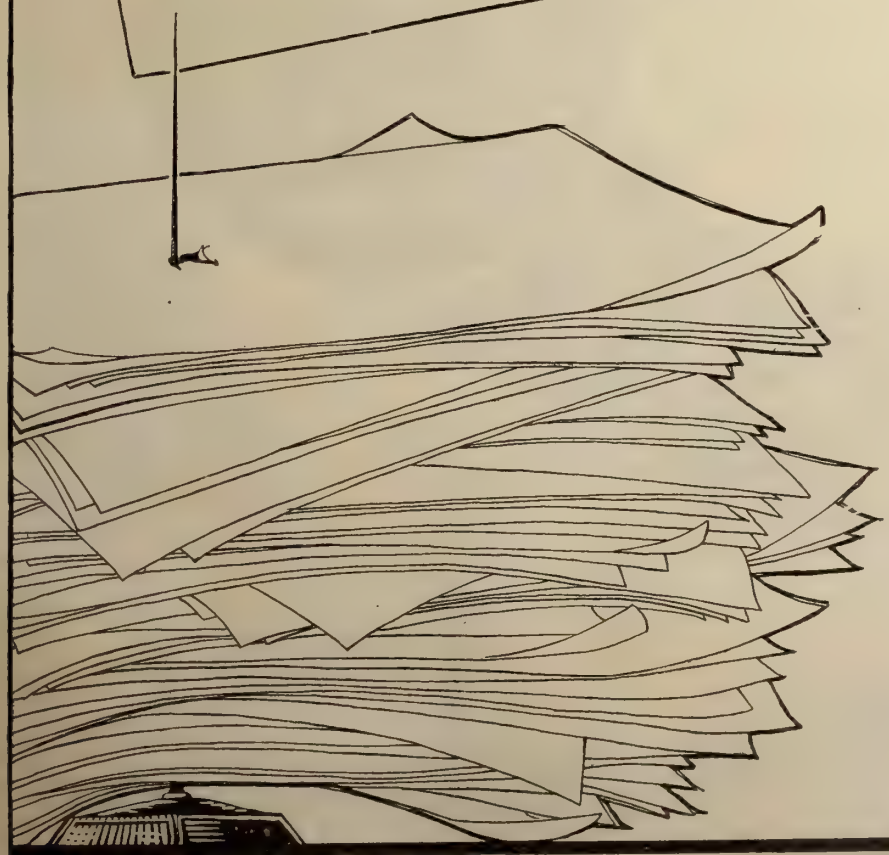
Rosemary Theatre
Ocean Park, Cal.



CONGRATULATIONS on your fine new theatre, Mr. Sams, and thank you for your wire.

With such stars lined up as Gloria Swanson, D. W. Griffith, "The Ten Commandments," Douglas MacLean, Zane Grey, Harold Bell Wright, Pola Negri, James Curwood and a host of others equally big, the Rosemary is due for very prosperous days. For, as you, Mr. Sams, and many other prosperous showmen can testify, the strongest, most reliable foundation for a theatre anywhere is Paramount Pictures.

P.S. And how those Greater Forty contracts are flocking in!

Congratulations, and many of them, on your production, ARE PARENTS PEOPLE?

I might sum up the whole thing in one word—Gem, but the picture has so many good qualities that it's a shame not to emphasize all of them.

ARE PARENTS PEOPLE? is a real story, interesting throughout. The director, Malcolm St. Clair, is a genius. The cast is ideal. I can't think of better choices than Adolphe Menjou, Betty Bronson and Florence Vidor. Betty has fully answered the question, will she make good in anything else after "Peter Pan"?

I do not know when I have been as enthusiastic over a picture as I am over ARE PARENTS PEOPLE? It is a real credit to the industry.

Lasky Says Humor Has Replaced Sex And Problem Play

Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Motion Picture Corporation, today told the company's international convention that humor had replaced the so-called sex plays and problem plays on the screen.

"The public," said Lasky, "has thrown problem plays of all kinds into the discard," and, he added, "the next 12 months will be the greatest comedy year in the history of motion pictures.

"By comedy I do not mean what is commonly called slapstick, but fast moving stories of optimistic and humorous vein."

I consider Universal's Complete Service idea the most far reaching, most revolutionary, most benecial thought for the exhibitor recently evolved. Every exhibitor with any desire for ultimate independence should make room for it on his program. Carl Laemmle always had the vision necessary to see the thing to do in a pinch, and if he would place a competent independence promoter in each territory, it would not be long until some good old oxen would be freed from the yoke.

Plain Facts About the Arrow Franchise

1—There Will Be Twenty-four Productions
2—Each One Will Be of "First-Run" Calibre
3—They Will Be Made by the Best Directors, Working With the Best Stars, from Stories by the Best Authors

THE FIRST TWO PROVE IT!

"Children of the Whirlwind"

DIRECTED BY WHITMAN BENNETT

This story—a tale of society and those who prey upon it—appeared originally as a serial in Hearst's International, after which, published as a novel by Houghton, Mifflin and Co., it quickly established itself as a "best seller." Lionel Barrymore, Johnny Walker and Marguerite De La Motte may be depended upon, under Mr. Bennett's able guidance, to make the most of each thrillingly unusual situation.

"SCANDAL STREET"

DIRECTED BY WHITMAN BENNETT

The uncounted thousands who read in Hearst's "Cosmopolitan Magazine" this fascinating narrative of motion picture life are eagerly awaiting its appearance upon the screen. The story's many values will be enhanced by a more-than-capable cast which includes Madge Kennedy, Niles Welch, Edwin August, Coit Albertson and Louise Carter, while Mr. Bennett's direction will —as always—leave nothing to be desired.

WORLD
Founded in 1907 by J. P. Chalmers

Looking 'Em Over—No. 1

First in a series of now-and-then articles weighing the promises, prospects, and probabilities of the principal distributors for the coming season.

THERE is no pastime in this game so fascinating as that of attempting advance judgment on the offerings of a coming season. There is no gamble more precarious, for scarcely a season passes that unforeseen developments do not upset all the forecaster's calculations.

The man who attempts the job had better do so with his fingers crossed, his sense of humor working, and his modesty in full flower. There is a bad cropper ahead for the man who gazes into the crystal confident that his eyes will never deceive him.

Glance at the record of the past season and recent months. Metro-Goldwyn, which seemed to be heading nowhere in particular, closed the season with the exhibitor verdict pretty nearly unanimous that it led the procession in product; Paramount, seemingly sitting atop the world, gave us a second Forty and further proof that the taller they are the harder they fall; Carl Laemmle didn't seem to have anything up his sleeve and he brought out a White List that exhibitors call their "bread and butter"; First National, despite its "One Way Streets," managed to average up well with no small part of the thanks due to contributing independents. And now it proceeds to cast the independents into outer darkness.

So it goes. Far easier to look around a street corner than to peer into next week in this business.

But we may as well attempt the job. The man who is handing out his cash and his dates has to do it. Mayhap a rough and ready once-over from New York will help.

HALF of the fortune-teller's time and space have been used up—which doesn't leave him as much as he intends to use for these attempts at analysis.

It doesn't make much difference. For my text for this week is Fox. And I can dismiss Fox in a few words. The need for words is going to come when I tackle the line-ups that don't strike me so kosher.

Frankly, I like the Fox line-up. I am sold on it. When I say that to the man on the street he usually asks, "Particularly why?" And I reply, "John Golden. That's enough. Then add Tom Mix. That's extra measure."

Not much further need of talk. In fact, only one necessity—that Bill Fox make pictures that measure up to the titles and vehicles at his command.

And from the way Bill Fox has stepped since he took his coat off a few months ago—I'm betting on his making 'em.

GIVE me a theatre starting off its Fall season and such titles underlined as "Lightin'," "Havoc," "The First Year," "Thank You," "Lazybones," "7th Heaven," "The Fool," "The Iron Horse," and you'll find me set for any "class" clientele there may be in my town.

Then give me the showmanship opportunities in such titles as "The Johnstown Flood," "Siberia," "Marriage," "East Lynne," "Part-Time Wives"—I am just skimming the line-up—and you'll find me with a pretty happy advertising and exploitation force.

Then give me Tom Mix to break a house record now and then.

And I'm satisfied.

That's the way it looks to me.

* * *

IT only remains for Bill Fox to make the pictures. Let's look that angle over. "The Iron Horse" he has made. That's a known quantity. And John Ford, who made "The Iron Horse," is on the list for quite a few of next year's. Rowland V. Lee, Victor Schertzinger, Emmett Flynn, Frank Borzage, Harry Millarde—known names on the others. And the name of Frances Marion recurs with pleasing frequency. Sterling doesn't mean any more.

It looks good.

So the fortune-teller starts off on the wrong foot by saying, "It isn't going to rain." It's always easier to dig up an alibi if you went wrong saying, "It looks like rain."

But "them's my sentiments." And I'll stick to them.

First in the Field!

The Manager's Chance to Show His Class Is on the

Short Subjects!

By HERSCHEL STUART
Managing Director, Missouri Theatre, St. Louis

TWO thousand years ago Aesop said, "Short Reels Are The Pep of the Program." Aesop did not mention music but then in his day music was not music.

The modern picture house manager uses three necessities in his entertainment: Feature pictures, short subjects, and music. The three factors are inseparable, tied together in a hang knot. No two of these factors can function successfully without the other.

Short subjects are on the honor roll. With picture house managers today the short subject salesman does not have to wait so long in the hallway as of yore. The public expects short subjects as a part of the entertainment. Competition among managers to give a variety of entertainment has increased the number of short subjects bought and caused the short subject producer to get a fairer price for his product. So today short reels are a necessity.

One reason is that they have been properly presented to the public. No program is complete without a variety of short reels. No other agency of the program gives variety as short reels do. Patrons demand variety and the answer to this demand is in giving them short reels.

In the cycle of selling short reels to managers and the manager in turn selling the idea of sitting through them, to his patrons, there have been many tragedies in short reel marketing. We used to call them fillers. There was a day when women would not sit through news reels. Later they were reconciled to the fact that news reels were in the nature of black and white photos in current newspapers of personalities and interesting events of the day and that actually news reels were more attractive because they showed the newspaper pictures in motion. The fair and fickle woman patron shied off from comedy pictures for years. But when comedy producers made a better class of comedy women came to see them and cried for more. Today the biggest idol on the screen among male stars is a comedian.

That much for news reels and comedies. There is no problem for these. Ten thousand theatres are using them every day. The demand for good comedies is greater than the supply.

TODAY a manager makes up a program much as a chef plans a well balanced dinner. We first think of an appetizer in the way of an organ solo and overture or both. We know to begin with that these units must be wholesome and please the audience. If they are dull and fail to get applause we must jerk them out after the first matinee performance. Right here we take advantage of short subjects as adjuncts. Frequently a short scenic will cause an organ solo or overture to get additional applause. And there are no finer overtures today than the single reels telling the life story of the old music masters.

In planning a show the second or third unit is a news reel. Interest in news reels is greater than ever before. Quality counts here as in every unit of the successful program. The manager must become a news editor. He must select only items that are newsy or of human interest. Five minutes of good news reel is much better than a prolonged reel of dry stuff.

Next on the program is a musical specialty from the stage. And immediately we must fall back on short subjects of sufficient power and appeal to keep up interest with patrons. Here we remember that this spot is important and must not be dull. If we have properly sensed the psychology of the audience we know our audience is ready for something of importance. The short reel in this spot must be brief and of extra quality. If there is none available we move this short up to follow the overture while the program is new. And move the news and magazine down to this the fifth spot on the bill.

Next comes the second and final stage specialty of the program. And right behind this the feature picture which is after all the basis of our table de hote. Following the feature we go slap bang into a comedy and the comedy is the piece de resistance of the show.

We are striving to leave them laughing when they leave the theatre. Hence the close of the program is so important. This comedy if of the right quality can take the curse off a bad feature. The grade of the comedy closing the show can make or break most any program. If it is of poor quality it takes the edge off all the planning we have done as maitre de hotel and we become a poor chef or poor manager and have jeopardized the confidence imposed in us by several thousand patrons.

I THINK some managers condemn short reels in general and comedies in particular without a fair trial. They make the mistake of attempting to use the subjects in their entirety. A thousand foot reel is to them a thousand foot reel. There may be three minutes of fine entertainment in a single reel magazine subject in which case the manager should use the three minutes and eliminate and forget the remaining seven hundred feet. Often a two-reel comedy looks bad in two reels but on closer analysis after screening it the second time I find there are one or two funny incidents in the reels and enough for four to seven minutes screening time on the de luxe show.

There is no excuse for a comedy that does not make people laugh and comedies are hard to judge in a small projection room without music and without at least a small audience.

Short subjects have to some extent relieved the duties of a manager. Good short subjects can help but cannot save a

HERSCHEL STUART, managing director of the Missouri Theatre, St. Louis, knows that his job is to GET THE DOLLARS INTO THE BOX OFFICE—and then give 'em a show that will bring those dollars back ten fold. He handles that job by careful selection and presentation of every element in his program including SHORT SUBJECTS—and then by ADVERTISING those short subjects.

The Missouri Theatre meets its tremendous overhead by not neglecting any possible chance to bring in a dollar. Short subjects play their part in the black ink at the end of the week. Do YOU use short subjects to their utmost? There's EXTRA MONEY in the short subjects. ADVERTISING gets it for you! —R. E. W.

Serials Turn Transients Into Regular Patrons

And as Part of His Argument Gives Us Some Delightful Reminiscenses of the "Good Old Days"

By Maurice Davis

JOHN KARZIN'S been "through the mill." He knows what he's talking about.

"Serials turn transients into regular theatre patrons," says John Karzin.

If any exhibitor would have the right to claim serials had no place in his program, John Karzin would be that man. But John runs serials, which shows what he thinks of them. John runs serials in his Olympia, Casino and Lincoln in St. Louis—and the Olympia and Casino are 10-to-11 "drop-in" Market Street houses.

If that doesn't tell you anything, the Casino is less than a block away from the Union Station, the southwest's greatest railroad terminal; the Olympia lies a block and a half away. Both of them draw much of the "between trains" trade.

And John Karzin plays serials. He says it makes regulars out of transients.

John isn't "guessing," either. The "daddy of 'em all" in this territory, John knows what he's talking about. He knows the amusement business backwards: he's watched it grow and he's grown with it since those long-ago days when he first "enlisted," back in 1905.

It's true, John Karzin says, folks waiting "between trains" bound for San Antonio "almost never" return to see the remaining chapters of a serial. But, says John Karzin—smart showman—there aren't many of this class of patrons. Besides, magazine-buyers get continued stories—serials—whether they want them or not; and like the magazine-publishers, John looks over his business from all angles. He isn't in it for his health alone.

The World's Dream was the first exclusive motion picture theatre in St. Louis. John Karzin, shown in the insert, opened it at 1413 Market street on October 17, 1906. Karzin is shown standing in the entrance to his theatre. He is the second figure from the left. Next to him is "Doc" Miller, his one-time partner. On the extreme left is one Schaefer person, advertising manager by virtue of being "Spieler-in-Chief." On the extreme right is one "Doc" person—last name forgotten—assistant advertising manager, since he was Schaefer's assistant in the gentle art of the barker.

Most of his patrons, Karzin contends, are those who drift up and down Market Street, past his houses. Many of them drifted in one week and drifted by the next. Then John Karzin caught them with a serial when they drifted in. He continued to keep them drifting in, instead of by, with successive chapters of the serial.

Homeward-bound suburbanites, waiting for late trains, stop into Karzin's houses. "The same faces drop in week after week on serial nights," Karzin asserted. "Wouldn't you figure the serials had something to do with it?"

John's a shrewd business man, credited with a fortune. He bought the first 1925-26 block of six Universal serials sold in the St. Louis office. He bought them 28 minutes after the serial sales plan reached the St. Louis exchange.

"I don't only buy serials because they 'bring 'em back'," smiled John. "I buy 'em because they're what my public wants: action pictures. Other types of theatres may want the 'heavy draymah' emotional lady stars; my stars are action-heroes—Gibson and Hoxie and Desmond and the rest of the 'Ride 'em, Cowboy!' brigade."

Twenty years in the theatre business, and John Karzin's "still young."

In October, 1905, Karzin quit his restaurant business on Market street to buy a half-interest in Miller Bros.' Nickel Odeon at 1528 Market, paying $750 for a half-interest in both the theatre and in Miller Bros.' Penny Arcade. Miller tried to outgeneral John.

So John opened the World's Dream Theatre at 1413 Market street on October 17, 1906, while retaining his half-interest with the Millers. Its 140 folding-chairs and standing room for 200 made it a "picture palace" of its day. The World's Dream got the "play;" the Miller house slid back.

One memory of those old days always draws a smile from John, a smile of remembrance that has mellowed through the years.

"We got film from Chicago, then," related John. "St. Louis had no exchanges. One Sunday morning, when I came down to the World's Dream, a Chicago film man, a brisk, smiling fellow, was waiting. He introduced himself, walked into my theatre with me, lugging a film can. Using a lead-pencil as a spool, he unwound the film for me, to show me that we had damaged it when we had it in St. Louis.

"He was so fair and square, so absolutely 'white' in his treatment of me, that he 'sold' me solidly on him. It's proved a 20-year sale. For through 20 years I've stuck to the man who played 'white' with me all that time—the film man who came down from his Chicago exchange and used a lead-pencil as a film-spool in my theatre—Carl Laemmle."

Another Laemmle memory of those days which Karzin treasures is this: Two years after the lead-pencil incident Karzin went to Chicago. A man stopped him on the street.

"Do you remember me?" he asked. Karzin shook his head. The man looked familiar to him; yet he could not recollect having met him. The stranger smiled. "I remember you," he offered. "You're John Karzin. You run a motion picture house on Market street in St. Louis. I was down to see you two years ago. My name's Carl Laemmle."

In 1908 Karzin went to Springfield, Ill., opening that city's first picture theatre at 621 East Washington street, in connection with his St. Louis houses. In those days film exchanges cared little how often a rented film was shown, as long as it was returned within a reasonable length of time. John Karzin smiles as he claims he had the world's long-distance "bicycling" championship. The film he showed in the World's Dream in St. Louis one day was shown in the Casino in Springfield the day following.

Gus Enlists With John

John had sold his half-interest in the odeon-arcade in St. Louis to the Miller Bros., who were forced to close it within a few weeks. Then Karzin decided to concentrate on Springfield. He sold the World's Dream. Springfield was "home" for him. One of his warmest friends in Springfield was a businesslike young fellow named Gus Kerasotes, who ran a candy kitchen.

John talked to Gus. Gus "enlisted," and together they opened a second theatre, the Royal at 204 South Sixth street. Gus, one of the best-liked showmen in this part of the United States, still operates the Royal along with his first-run Strand.

In 1912 John sold out to Gus and returned to St. Louis. From William Tamme he bought the Casino, his present Market street house, then forced William Flynn to sell his competing Royal to him.

That same year, 1912, he took over the Easton-Taylor, converting it from a vaudeville house to a picture house. In 1914 he built the Majestic on Franklin avenue. In 1915 he operated the Paradise Skydome at Seventeenth and Chestnut. He "had a mint" until the city banned "tent shows."

Since then he has acquired the Lincoln in 1919 and the Olympia in 1920. The Olympia he bought from the Skouras for $20,000 cash at the time they were purchasing the New Grand Central.

Has Known One Disappointment

One disappointment Karzin has known. That was when he purchased land for a 2500-seat theatre on Chestnut street, near Eighteenth. He had leased it for 99 years to the holding and operating company he headed, the $300,000 Central Union Amusement Company. Plans were drawn. Karzin and his associates were ready to build.

Then disappointment. St. Louis voted its $87,000,000 bond issue to improve the city. One of its provisions is that a beautful plaza is to cut through the city, right where Karzin's theatre was to be.

But the sun still shines. St. Louis will reimburse its citizens hurt through the condemnation of their property. John Karzin and his associates should be paid liberally. And Karzin's a shrewd businessman. He's smart enough to play serials!

Nebraska Farmers Prefer Melodramas

By Sumner Smith

THE motion picture business is an interesting gamble. Nobody can anticipate with a sure degree of success just how a certain picture will be received, what it will gross at the box offices. One puzzling angle of the problem is its probable reception in the thousands of small town theatres which form the backbone of the business.

That's a matter which the entire industry is constantly arguing. Everybody would be happy; indeed, the movie millennium might come; if it could be predicted before release dates. The small town exhibitor continues to occupy the same position of importance in the picture industry that the smaller town voter does in a national election, but it does deem a lot easier to win his vote than to supply the picture he wants.

Society Dramas Run Second

Therefore a tabulation of fan preferences as compiled by the Nebraska Farmer, "Nebraska's only farm paper," which the weekly publication has mailed Moving Picture World, is of much interest.

The fans involved are farm men and women. One question put them was as to the type of picture they prefer. Their replies showed that melodrama leads the field with 138 votes. That would have been a safe bet, it seems, because people nowadays, lacking the perils and thrills of earlier generations, turn to pictures and books for the excitement that every-day life lacks.

Second in popularity came the society drama with 115 votes; third, short comedies with 93 votes. Then came news films with 91 votes, farce comedies with 81 votes, society comedies with 77 votes and serials with 69 votes.

Another question requested preferences on mixed programs and one fine feature picture. The latter won with 209 votes, mixed programs receiving only 71 votes.

Pausing for a moment in recording the Nebraska opinions, it seems plausible, from what has already been written, to argue that the ideal program for these farm men and women consists of a good feature, preferably a melodrama or society drama; a short comedy, for short comedies ran third in the preferences, and a news reel, which occupied fourth place. In other words, Nebraskans want a well balanced program. That means that the footage of the feature must permit the inclusion of at least two other subjects on the program.

Now back to the voting.

The jazz age isn't yet only a memory, according to the Nebraskans. Asked if they're in favor of "jazz-age" pictures, they ran about even in registering 139 "yes" and 108 "no."

What stars are the most popular out in Nebraska? Tom Mix leads them all with 44 votes, Fred Thomson and Thomas Meighan tie for second place with 19 votes, Colleen Moore takes third with 18 votes. Then come Norma Talmadge, Mary Pickford, Rudolph Valentino, Gloria Swanson, Lois Wilson, "Hoot" Gibson, Harold Lloyd, Betty Compson and Pola Negri, in the order mentioned, they being the only others to rate ten votes or better.

The Most Popular Pictures

What have been the most popular pictures? Just 111 votes were cast for "The Covered Wagon." "North of 36" was second with 31, "The Sea Hawk" third with 16 and "Hot Water" fourth with 15. The only others receiving over ten votes were "When a Man's a Man," "Abraham Lincoln," "The Mine with the Iron Door," "The Thundering Herd" and "Tom Mix Pictures."

Leading the pictures Nebraskans want most of all to see is "Code of the West." It was the first choice of fifteen, the second choice of fifteen and the third of six voters. There were 33 votes for "The Covered Wagon," 32 for "The Thundering Herd" and 28 for "North of 36." Next in order came "Hot Water," "The Rag Man," "I Want My Man," "Too Many Kisses," "Peter Pan," "The Thief of Bagdad," "The Great Divide," "So Big," "Ben Hur," "The Lady," "The Ten Commandments," "America," "Abraham Lincoln," "The Sea Hawk" and "The Deadwood Coach."

The voters in this ballot numbered 351, of whom 239 were women.

Coming and Going

Sam Spring, secretary and treasurer of First National Pictures, Inc., and E. Bruce Johnson, foreign manager for the distribution of First National's film product, arrived in Hollywood from New York City last week.

To complete the recent affiliations between Marcus Loew-Metro-Goldwyn and the Gaumont theatre chain in France and Egypt, E. A. Schiller, general representative of Loew's, Inc., and J. Robert Rubin, of Metro-Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, sail on the Aquitania, Tuesday, June 9, for France.

M. C. Levee and Joseph M. Schenck left Los Angeles for the East this week.

Harry Rowson has arrived in Manhattan from London.

David Lake of Metro-Goldwyn is leaving for Australia in the near future.

Priscilla Dean has returned to Hollywood after a long personal appearance tour.

Jack Stewart is scheduled to leave for Brussels, Belgium, where he will manage a First National exchange. He has been attached to a depot for that organization in Detroit.

Joe Brandt has left for the Coast.

D. J. Mountan, head of Richmount Pictures, has returned from a European tour.

Carl Laemmle is scheduled to sail for Europe on June 20.

Peter N. Brinch, general manager of Paramount's Berlin office sailed May 30 on the S. S. France in company with Mrs. Brinch, after a visit here.

A. A. Schmidt, Sales Manager of the Western Division of F. B. O. Exchanges, and Harry Cohen, manager of the Los Angeles Exchanges, have returned from the annual convention of the organization held in Chicago.

ACQUIRE FRANCHISE HOLDERS' PRODUCT

Warner Bros. acquired the Warner product heretofore held by franchise holders in four more territories and placed it in the hands of the Vitagraph exchanges for distribution. This makes nine exchange districts in which the product has been taken over since the Warners' purchase of Vitagraph.

Up to a few days ago the Warner Bros. product in Cleveland, Cincinnati, Detroit and Pittsburgh territories was handled by the Film Classics Co. It is this product, which includes all releases to date, which was taken over in the latest transaction.

The Warners had previously acquired their product in Kansas City, Denver, Salt Lake City, San Francisco and Los Angeles.

ERDMANN HEADS CLEVELAND BRANCH

John C. Flinn, vice-president and general manager of Producers Distributing Corporation, has appointed George W. Erdmann, to the position of branch manager at Cleveland, filling the vacancy caused by the resignation of J. J. Mooney.

Levine Building a 2,600 Seat House in St. Louis

Reuben Levine of R. Levine & Co., Inc., purchased 647 feet on Gravois Blvd., St. Louis, Mo., from C. W. Beck for a consideration of $187,000.00. There will be erected on a lot 147x213 a part of the 647 feet, a theatre with seating capacity of 2,600, seven stores and forty apartments. The theatre will be ready about February, 1926.

Garard & Co., of Chicago, have underwritten the first mortgage bond issue, to finance the building at 6½% for ten years. The building will be three story brick and terra cotta trim.

This will be the third large theatre this year, running over $1,000,000 being constructed by R. Levine personally, as the owner.

The theatre buildings he has now under construction are: The Drake Theatre Bldg., Montrose and Drake, Chicago, Ambassador Theatre Bldg., Archer & Leavitt, Chicago. Levine will lease the theatre in St. Louis to some large theatre operators in St. Louis.

MONTREAL ESTABLISHES FILM BOARD OF TRADE

A strong Film Board of Trade has been established at Montreal, Quebec, this being the second of such institutions in the Dominion, the first having been organized at Toronto recently. Assisting in the formation of the Montreal Board was C. C. Pettijohn, secretary of the Film Boards of Trade for the United States, another officer present being Col. John A. Cooper, Toronto, president of the Motion Picture Distributors and Exhibitors of Canada.

W. C. Gehring of the Fox Film Corporation, Montreal, was elected president of the Montreal board, with A. Gorman of First National as vice-president. C. R. Osborn, representing Vitagraph, Inc., was elected secretary-treasurer. The members of the Montreal Film Board include the following: D. Leduc, Canadian Universal; Morris Davis, Regal Films, Limited; Ed. English, Famous-Lasky Film Service; W. C. Gehring, Fox Film Corporation; I. Sourkes, United Artists Corporation; M. West, Burpee and West; H. Feldtein, Independent Film Company; A. Gorman, First National Productions; Phil. Hazza, Educational Films; B. Allan, Film Booking Offices; Charles Lalumiere, Film de Luxe, and C. R. Osborn, Vitagraph, Inc.

This represents the leading figures in the film colony of Montreal.

UNDERWRITE SKOURAS BOND

S. W. Straus & Company of Chicago and New York have underwritten the $4,500,000 bond issue on Skouras Brother's new Ambassador theatre and office building at Seventh and Locust street, and the bonds are now being offered to the general public. Plans for the structure have been altered to eliminate the five-story tower that was to have surmounted the building proper. Under the new arrangements there will be seventeen complete floors to the building, eight of which will be devoted to the theatre and nine floors available for offices. On the ground floor will be space for several stores and shops.

Brooklyn Judge Is a Valo Producer

Both a member of the judiciary and a producer is the unique position now occupied by County Judge W. Bernard Vause of Brooklyn. Judge Vause is one of the incorporators of Valo Distributors, Inc., New York City, which recently filed a certificate of incorporation in Albany. It has listed at present 1,000 shares of no par value.

According to the Judge, Valo aims to present a yearly program of fifty-two pictures, mostly short subjects of an educational variety.

Valo, the Judge informed Moving Picture World, has elaborate plans for the future, the details of which have not yet been whipped into quite sufficient shape for their publication at this time. Among them is said to be contemplated a large studio on Long Island; also the retaining of the services of a man well known in the film industry to act in a supervisory capacity.

The Judge expressed his intention of writing some of the scenarios for the new company. He has a number of friends in the industry, having at one time, prior to his ascension to the bench, been engaged in a legal capacity by the old Vitagraph company.—T. W.

ESPY ROBBED SECOND TIME IN YEAR IN ST. LOUIS

Bandits continue to prey on the St. Louis picture theatres. Three bandits invaded the lobby of the Congress Theatre, 4025 Olive street, at 9:30 p. m. Sunday, May 24, and departed with $510. The house is owned by the Superior Theatres Corporation of which Hector M. E. Paszemoglu is head.

On May 25 near Union Station, Cullen Espy manager of the West End Lyric Theatre and Lyric Skydome of Skouras Brothers Enterprises had a revolver shoved against his chest and was forced to surrender $3,000 in cash to three bandits who had trailed his automobile from the West End Lyric. This is the second time that Espy has been held up this year. On February 9 he was stopped by two armed men as he left the West End Lyric and robbed of $2,000, the receipts for the previous Saturday and Sunday.

TIMELY APPEARANCE SAVED HAUL

Lew Lefcourt, driver for Prudential Film Delivery Service, foiled two robbers at work on a safe in the Heights Theatre, 150 Wadsworth avenue, New York City. Lefcourt's appearance shortly after two o'clock on the morning of June first frightened away the burglars, who, he later notified the police, were endeavoring to jimmy open the safe door.

Kansas-Missouri Back in Fold

Through approval of the board of directors of the M. P. T. O. Kansas-Missouri that organization this week became affiliated with the M. P. T. O. A. The affiliation of Allied, which the M. P. T. O. K.-M. joined at the organization of that body, and the M. P. T. O. A. at the national convention at Milwaukee did not necessarily mean that the Kansas-Missouri association automatically became affiliated with the national body, President R. R. Biechele explained. Kansas-Missouri was the first organization to decide to send representatives to the national convention.

"I went to the national convention merely as an onlooker," Mr. Biechele, who was elected to the board of directors of the M. P. T. O. A., said, "and had no thought of allowing my name to come up for office of any kind. My organization appointed me as an official observer at the convention—nothing else. However, when it became apparent at the convention that Allied would affiliate with M. P. T. O. A. for the good of the industry, I could not help but remember that at the M. P. T. O. K.-M. convention a few days before that there was a strong predominating sentiment to affiliate with the national body, even before the national convention. Therefore, when I was urged to accept the office as national director, I did so only subject to the consequent approval of the M. P. T. O. K.-M. directors. They have made that approval. They have approved affiliation with the national body. So, that is settled."

Hollywood Theatre to Be Independent Stronghold Seating 3,000—Ready by Jan. 1—Six New Theatres Going Up in San Francisco

WARNER BROS. announced this week they were about to start building in Hollywood a new house to be known as Warner's Hollywood Theatre at a cost of $1,500,000. They plan it to be one of the show places of the west coast.

A large first-run downtown theatre in Kansas City is being contemplated by Warner Brothers, H. M. Warner, president of the corporation, said in Kansas City this week. A definite site has not yet been selected, but negotiations will be completed within two weeks, Mr. Warner said. With the erection of the Warner Brothers' Theatre, four of the six first-run houses will be producer-controlled and the remaining two operated by a chain.

Title to the Hollywood property was taken last week and the plans are being completed by Architect Landsburg, of Los Angeles.

In announcing the new theatre, Harry M. Warner states that the Hollywood house is only the first of their theatres planned in big cities where they have been unable to obtain a show for their product. Before they are through, he stated, they intend to lease or build theatres in all big cities where first runs are now denied them.

The Warner in Hollywood will be 120 by 300 feet on a lot 196 by 300 in the heart of Hollywood and only a stone's throw from Grauman's Egyptian Theatre. It will contain many features new in theatre construction, it is also announced. The plans call for a structure built much in the shape of the New York Woolworth Building, with a 150-foot steel tower rising from the roof. This tower will have at the top a revolving beacon light with a radius of seven miles and also contain chimes to be operated from the organ pit.

The theatre will contain a balcony and seat about 3,000 persons. The architecture will be Gothic. The stage will contain a concealed tank on the order of the New York Hippodrome, which will be used for presentations. The entire theatre will be so built that it can be dressed anew whenever desired by a simple changing of lighting effects.

From the interior there will be a winding stairway to the roof and tower which will be open to the public and give a fine panorama view of the surrounding country from the Pacific Ocean to the high Sierras. The stairway will have three landings and on each landing will be a motion picture museum containing many of the first cameras and other paraphernalia.

The second floor will consist of one of the largest ball rooms in the West and plans call for a mammoth ice skating palace in the basement. There will be a sub-cellar which will be used for free parking, space being provided for 400 cars, which will be taken charge of by attendants and delivered to the owners after the performance, at the door. The Warner's broadcasting station KFWB, now located at the studio, is to be moved to the new theatre. It is planned to have the theatre completed by January 1. H. M. Warner stated that in addition to their own product, they would play the pictures of other companies and put on "the finest performance in Los Angeles."

Six Other Theatres

Samuel H. Levin, 2055 Union street, San Francisco, is having plans prepared for a theatre seating 2,500 to be erected on Polk street, near Broadway.

Contracts have been awarded by George Lagomarsino for a picture theatre to be erected at Mission and Oliver streets, San Francisco.

A picture theatre seating 350 is to be erected by Leo Ruegg on San Bruno avenue, San Francisco, at an estimated cost of $25,000.

Contracts have been awarded by B. Getz, De Young Building, San Francisco, for the erection of a picture theatre at West Portal, St. Francis Wood.

Plans are being made by the National Theatres Syndicate of Northern California for the erection of an 1,800-seat theatre at Taft, Cal.

W. S. Senn has remodeled the Palace Theatre on Union street, San Francisco, and installed new furnishings.

The Republic Theatre, San Francisco, has been taken over by Charles Michaels.

235% Dividend Is Declared by Fox

The William Fox board of directors is credited with declaring a dividend of 235 per cent. of which 200 per cent. will go to stockholders, constituting a limited number, and the remainder will be apportioned to employees who, in the judgment of the directorate, have contributed noticeably towards the company's success.

An application, it is learned, has also been made for the listing of 165,000 shares on the New York Stock Exchange. These, it is believed, will be offered at slightly below $50 per share. The total Fox assets are placed at $18,000,000.

Tips on Management, a Feature for New Jersey Convention

THE program of events for the annual convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New Jersey to be held at the new Monterey Hotel, Asbury Park, New Jersey, June 29, 30 and July 1 will be of great interest to the theatre owners of this territory because they are being planned to assist every manager and owner of a motion picture house in the running of his theatre and putting on a "Broadway" show even if the house is located in a small town. The plan is being called, by the New Jersey theatre members who are actively engaged on the various committees, "Bringing Broadway to Main Street."

Besides the official business activities that go with every convention plans are being formulated for the display part of the program which will be of help to every theatre owner from a box-office angle. Expert showmen have been employed to stage novel lighting effects and prologue presentations that can be made applicable to any house, no matter what the size, and at a very reasonable cost.

The small town theatre owner has been hampered because of his inability to give his audiences a show with a Broadway presentation. They will be shown how at the State Convention of the New Jersey Theatre owners.

Some of the few amusements that will be included in the large program of events at the convention will be fire works, water sports carnival, a midnight review dance, banquet, after dinner novelties, stunts.

The entertainment committee announces that thirty-six dollars will defray all expenses at the convention. The program of the affair, lasting three days, will be closed on the afternoon of July 1st with the water sports carnival. Silver cups, it is said, will be awarded the winners who will be picked by a board of judges including three producers and three directors.

So that the carnival may be a great success New Jersey theatre owners are urged in a letter by their chairman, Joseph Seider, to start "most popular girl" contests, the winner being eligible to enter the carnival as a representative of her respective theatre. President Seider states that motion picture stars desiring to enter the contest may do so by entering their names with Moving Picture World.

"Roxy" Will Step Into Own $6,500,000 House Next Year

S. L. ROTHAFEL, or "Roxy" as he is better known to thousands, within a year from now expects to step into his own theatre. "The Roxy," as it is already christened, will cost about $6,500,000 and seat 6,000 on 50,000 square feet now occupied by a part of the old car barn in the vicinity of 50th street and Seventh avenue, Manhattan. This is all contained in an announcement from Associated Pictures Corporation which is as follows:

"Contracts were closed this week whereby S. L. Rothafel (Roxy) now in charge of presentations at the Capitol Theatre is to realize his ambition to have his own theatre.

"Following several months of negotiations, Herbert Lubin, of Sawyer and Lubin has consummated a deal whereby Associated Pictures Corporation of which Mr. Lubin is president, will build for Roxy a 6,000-seat theatre which will be one of the world's largest motion picture theatres. It will be known as the Roxy Theatre.

"The site for the theatre contains approximately 50,000 square feet and the entire proposition, land and theatre, will run in the neighborhood of $6,500,000.

"The theatre will have many unique features and will incorporate Roxy's progressive ideas accumulated from his successful years of building and operating leading theatres in the country.

"It will be remembered that S. L. Rothafel is the pioneer of the present-day type of motion picture entertainment with music. He brought his ideas to New York from the Middle West about a dozen years ago and has subsequently opened and directed the principal motion picture entertainment which he long has held.

"It is as ROXY that Mr. Rothafel is more familiarly known to millions of radio fans throughout the United States to whom his broadcasting activities have endeared him.

"Mr. Rothafel's contract with the Capitol Theatre has still some time to run. The new "Roxy" theatre is expected to be completed in about a year."

Copyright Victory for Canada Houses

A great battle has been won by the Motion Picture Distributors and Exhibitors of Toronto, Canada, in the securing of a decision from the Copyright Committee of the Canadian House of Commons at Ottawa that the amendments to the Canadian Copyright Act now before Parliament would not affect the playing of copyrighted music in moving picture theatres.

There is still to be a new royalty tax on the playing of copyrighted music in radio performances or concerts, except when broadcast by amateur stations operated without profit. But the exhibitors of Canada are once more free to play music as they like without special reference to authors or composers.

CANADIAN GOVERNMENT FILM SALES TOTAL $21,159

That the Motion Picture Bureau of the Canadian Department of Trade and Commerce, Ottawa, operated for the past five years, is on a self-sustaining basis was indicated in the Canadian House of Commons on May 26 when information regarding the Canadian Government's film studio at Ottawa was given on the floor of the House by Hon. T. A. Low, Canadian Minister of Trade and Commerce. Low pointed out that the Canadian two and one reel pictures were being shown throughout the world, distribution having been secured through both theatrical and non-theatrical channels in all quarters of the globe.

The revenue derived from the sale of Government releases during the last 10 months of 1924 amounted to $21,159.00. The proceeds from the sale of releases to distributors in the numerous countries reaches $27,000 in the whole year.

CANADA WILL AID AMERICANS

The Canadian government offers a warm welcome and all possible co-operation to legitimate American motion picture producers who care to take advantage of her great resources and beautiful scenic backgrounds. This interesting offer may be taken as quite official, for it was voiced by none other than Raymond S. Peck, director of the motion picture bureau of the Canadian government, at the last regular meeting of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, Inc., held at the Cafe Boulevard, New York, Thursday, May 28.

REPUDIATES ATTACK ON HAYS

At a meeting of the National Presbyterian Church Assembly, held at Columbus, Ohio, a report of the Department of Moral Welfare of the Presbyterian Church in the United States, making Will H. Hays the target of an attack upon questionable motion pictures, was repudiated publicly by the church's Board of Christian Education.

VALLEY EXHIBITORS ORGANIZE

Fourteen exhibitors of the lower Rio Grande Valley, Texas, last week met in Harlington where they organized the Valley Exhibitors. They elected Dave J. Young of Brownsville as president and Roy E. Kinz of McAllen as secretary and treasurer.

FRED HAMLIN RECOVERED

Many people in the motion picture industry will be glad to hear that Fred Hamlin, publicity director of the Mark Strand, New York City, has been discharged from the hospital, where he was taken after a sudden attack of heart trouble, and is so far recovered that he will be in his office again on Monday, June 8.

Uniform Daylight Saving Period Is Sought at M.P.T.O.N.Y. Convention

Mayors, Also Conferring in Syracuse, Get Copy of Resolution—Dillon of Ithaca Succeeds Hays—Healthy Treasury

WILLIAM DILLON, of Ithaca, a veteran showman in New York State, was elected president of the New York State M. P. T.O., and Uly S. Hill, of Albany, was named as secretary, at a largely attended meeting of exhibitors constituting the Albany and Buffalo Zones, in Syracuse, on Tuesday, June 2. Louis Buettner, of Cohoes, was appointed by President Dillon, as chairman of the Albany Zone, while Jules Michaels, of Buffalo, was named to a similar position in the Buffalo Zone. About forty of the leading exhibitors in the two zones were present at the meeting, which was declared at its conclusion to be one of the most constructive gatherings of its kind ever held by the exhibitors of New York State.

During the course of the meeting a resolution was adopted and presented to the New York State Conference of Mayors, also in session in Syracuse, suggesting that there be a uniform date throughout the State for the beginning and ending of daylight saving and further suggesting that daylight saving should start the last Sunday in May, and run to the first Sunday in September. At the present time, daylight saving begins at various times and is slated in some instances to end late in September, the whole tending to bring about a chaotic condition of affairs and one detrimental to all lines of business.

Resolutions were also passed endorsing independence on the part of the producer and the exhibitor and advising exhibitors not to contract for film until they were thoroughly familiar with the selling policies of the companies.

Before the session was over, Buettner as chairman of the Albany Zone, named the following as his working commitee: Uly S. Hill, of Albany; Meyer Schine, of Gloversville; Robert Wagner, of Little Falls; Lewis Fischer, of Fort Edward; W. W. Farley, of Albany, and L. L. Connors, of Cambridge. Jules Michaels named as his working committee in the Buffalo Zone, the following: Morris Slotkin, of Buffalo; Charles Hayman, of Niagara Falls; Walter Hays, of Syracuse; Sidney Allen, of Medina; Walter Callahan, of Rochester, and Michael Wood, of Jamestown.

The first meeting leading up to Tuesday's session occurred on Monday night, in Syracuse, when the officers and board of directors of the two zones met in a conference that lasted until one o'clock in the morning. It was the original intention to nominate and elect Buettner as chairman of the state association, Buettner declaring meanwhile that while he appreciated the honor, he was not in a position to accept the nomination. Later on, with the fixing of a slate, it was decided to nominate Dillon for the presidency.

Tuesday's meeting got under way early, in fact the exhibitors began gathering shortly after breakfast. Walter Hays, the retiring president, in giving his report, said in part:

For the first time in our history, we find ourselves at the end of a fiscal year with a substantial amount of cash in the treasury belonging to the exhibitors in the Buffalo and Albany Zones.

It is my suggestion that we abolish the office of treasurer; that the offices in Albany be maintained by the Albany Zone, the same as the Buffalo office has been maintained by the Buffalo Zone; and all expenses incidental to the two zones be paid out of the respective treasuries.

Watch your step most carefully in buying for this coming season. Above all, avoid if possible buying the entire product of a producer covering a period to August 1926. Otherwise, judging by past experience, you will be paying a high price for inferior pictures which will be handed to you next spring and summer.

This season, more than ever, we are confronted with the rotten apples in the bottom of the basket. You signed your contract in the belief that you were buying an average line of product, but to my knowledge, since the early part of April, very few pictures of any merit have been released.

The price remains the same, but the quality is inferior. The public rebels and the box office suffers. It would be far better to close our theatres in summer than to offer our patrons the poor substitutes for entertainment we are receiving week after week, and which, judging by some of the pre-releases I have seen, will continue to be of the same tawdry quality.

You are paying a fancy price for a trademark, but there are dozens of pictures on the market just as good as the advertised brands being now offered, which you could buy for a fraction of the price you are paying under a contract signed many months before.

You must change your methods of conducting your business to conform to the times. Pay all you can afford for good box office products, but do not allow yourself to be snared into signing a contract covering an entire year's product, which places you absolutely at the mercy of the producer. Your contract, you may be sure, insures a nice profit to the seller on every picture, but you will be lucky if you make real money on 40 per cent. of your purchase, and you will either break even or lose on 60 per cent.

In this connection it is well to observe that whereas the product of the largest producers has shown little improvement the past season, that of the junior organization, has been forging rapidly to the front, and this program of several which I have in mind will compare with the best on the market.

If the making of some good box office pictures does not cause these organizations to lose their balance there will be plenty of business for them. My experience in the past in trying to do business with the so-called second line producer has not been satisfactory, and invariably a price that staggers me is asked for a picture of any merit, so that I have often felt that if they rode in the saddle, they would be more rapacious than the gentlemen whom we allow to control our destinies as at present.

Conditions remaining as they are, no law will be placed on the statute books of New York State by and with the support of the Hays organization without the approval of this exhibitor organization. If legislation is introduced in Albany, that is adverse to our interests, the Hays organization will lend its moral and financial support in aiding us to fight it. They could and would be better friends to us if we were better friends to them.

In connection with the session it was revealed that with all bills paid, the Buffalo Zone has a bank balance of about $2,500, and the Albany Zone, despite the fact that it has been in existence only a few months, has a balance of about $1,500.

The statement was also made at the meeting that during the past year a total of 1,500,000 contracts were made between exhibitors and exchanges and that of this number 11,000 were disputed; 3,500 being arbitrated and the remaining number being amicably settled; 17 of these questioned to the extent of going to the seventh arbitrator and only four going to the extent of entering the legal courts.

Skeletonized by-laws were discused and a set of by-laws will shortly be drawn up that will completely and satisfactorily govern the functioning of both the Albany and the Buffalo Zones.

During the session there was an interesting talk from Gabriel Hess, general counsel for the Arbitration end of the Hays organization.

The following resolution was adopted:

This body is heartily in accord with the principle of independence, both in the production and exhibitor field. We believe that the only way we can maintain our independence is not to confine out buying to any one or two companies but to give a share of our business to all distributors releasing good productions.

We strongly advise the exhibitor not to contract for any film service until he has familiarized himself with the various selling policies, the class of productions offered, and his actual requirements. Your local Zone officials will be glad to advise you on any phase which you may not understand. Do not be in a hurry to buy, conserve your play dates as they are your only protection. This season will show approximately 840 good productions, more than any one exhibitor can absorb. Take your time, do not be in a hurry to buy. Hold your play dates. Without play dates it will not matter what price you are offered later on, you would not be able to play them.

At the meeting were:

Uly S. Hill, Albany; Louis Buettner, Cohoes; J. Meyer Schine and Ben Davis, Gloversville; Lew Fischer, Fort Edward; Charles McCarthy of Hoosick Falls; Robert Wagner, Little Falls; William Dillon, of Ithaca; Charles Sesonske, of Johnstown; Walter Hays, Jules Michaels, Morris Slotkin, of Buffalo; Charles Hayman, Niagara Falls; Sidney Allen, Medina; James Roe, George Bladen, M. Fitzer, Frank Becker, Jack Griswold, George Phillips, George Dowling, R. Merriman, George Smith, Jerry Harrison and James Constantino, of Syracuse; Nick Vassileades, of Buffalo; Rae Candee, Utica; Chester and John Fennyvessy of Rochester; John Vollely, Buffalo; Howard Shannon, Rochester.

Skirboll Made General Manager of Frank Lloyd Productions

FILMING of Rex Beach's "Winds of Chance" for First National Pictures, having been completed Frank Lloyd, independent producer-director, has announced the appointment of Joseph S. Skirboll to the position of general manager for Frank Lloyd Productions, Inc.

Skirboll is one of the best known film distributing executives in the industry having been active in sales and exhibition fields for the past eighteen years. For the past two and a half years Skirboll has been Western district manager for First National Pictures with supervision over the Los Angeles, San Francisco, Portland, Seattle, Butte, Denver and Salt Lake City branch offices.

In appointing Skirboll to the managership of his producing organization Lloyd is making an effort to gain closer contact with those who release and exhibit his pictures and to obtain a better idea of the trend of public thought regarding the screen. . Skirboll will assume his new duties on June 15.

M. P. T. O. of Western Pa. Votes to Back National Body

The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Western Pennsylvania, held their regular monthly meeting at the Hotel Henry, Pittsburgh, on Friday noor, May 22nd, at which the exhibitor members were guests of the organization at a luncheon. A large and enthusiastic gahering was on hand, and the meeting was a very fruitful one. President D. A. Harris presided. Harry Davis and other members who were present at the recent National Convention in Milwaukee, made reports of the deliberations in that city.

The keynote of the meeting was the attitude manifested of not being stampeded by any action that may be taken, as the national organization, through its Board of Directors, has got things pretty well in control and have a number of propositions that will be of vital importance to al ltheatre owners, which they will announce in the near future.

Practically all of the Pittsburgh theatre owners were on hand, as well as many out-of-towners. Among these latter were: Mike Manos and R. T. Jennings, Greensburg; Chris. Wagner, Connellsville. C. E. Gable, Sharon; John Newman, New Castle; Anthony Jim and Ed. Harvey, Woodlawn; E. N. Walken and B. E. Cupler, Washington; A. P. Way, Du Bois; Frank K. Brown, Brockville and Kittanning; L. M. Conrad, Johnstown. Andrew Condoleon, Kittanning; Ed. Claffey, Sharon; M. Roth, Duquesne and Swissvale. John Stahl, Homestead; Wm. R. Wheat, Sewickley; Ben Nadler, Ambridge; T. V. Barnes, Elwood City; Andrew Battison, Yukon; Guy Ida, New Kensington and Tarentum; Bart Dattola, New Kensington; Mike Winograd, Rochester; L. M. Jones, Vandergrift; John Panoplos, Wilmerding, and Frank Panoplos, McKeesport.

A. M. P. A. HEARS TOM MEIGHAN

The value of publicity and exploitation in motion pictures was emphasized by Thomas Meighan, noted film star, who was one of the guests of honor at the A. M. P. A. luncheon at the Cafe Boulevard at noon Thursday, May 14. The star drew a sharp distinction between publicity and notoriety, holding that the latter was a detriment to the individual player and to the industry at large.

Spence Signed by Rork

Following the signing of Leon Errol to appear in an elaborate picturization of Holman Day's humorous story "Clothes Make The Pirate," Sam Rork now announces the engagement of Ralph Spence, author of the current phenomenal stage success "The Gorilla," to adapt the Day story.

In addition to being an author and a playwright, Ralph Spence has distinguish himself as a scenarist and title writer.

Burton Signed by De Mille

Clarence Burton, one of filmdom's most adaptable villains, is the latest to join the Cecil B. De Mille forces. Mr. Burton has signed a long term contract to play for the independent producer. His first role will be an important part in Rod La Rocque's starring vehicle "The Coming of Amos."

EDUCATIONAL CONVENTION

The fourth annual National convention of exchange managers and executives of Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., will be held this year in New York on June 10, 11 and 12 at the Pennsylvania Hotel, where the entire body of visiting managers and salesmen will be quartered.

HAWN WITH MACFADDEN PUBLICATIONS

Gavin Campbell Hawn, former publicity director for Mae Murray and the Murray-Leonard productions, and more recently Paramount exploiteer, has joined the staff of the Macfadden Publications as director of publicity and advertising for True Story Films Inc., a new Macfadden Enterprise.

M.P.T.O.K.-M. Plans Membership Drive

A new plan for strengthening the M. P. T. O. Kansas-Missouri is under consideration by C. E. Cook, business manager, which, if adopted, may result in strengthening the membership of the organizattion.

During the hot summer months it is planned to obtain eight or ten exhibitors from Kansas and the same number from Missouri. These exhibitors, with Mr. Cook, will tour the entire Western Missouri and Kansas territory, making their headquarters in various key centers. From each key center each day they will divide the surrounding territory and work all towns in the district. The expenses of the exhibitors would be paid by the association, they giving only their time to the organization. In view of the fact that such a plan has been highly approved by Mr. Cook there exists little doubt but that it would be instituted this summer, lasting probably more than a month.

EARL MYERS APPEALS

The verdict against Earl Myers and John Kaiser, exhibitors, at Chillicothe, Ohio, charged with operating on Sunday, found guilty by a common pleas jury, was affirmed in rulings handed down by the district court of appeals. The exhibitor's attorneys announce that they will carry the case to the Ohio Supreme court.

Directors' Meeting

The National Board of Directors of the M. P. T. O. A. were meeting in the Hotel Roosevelt, New York City, on Thursday, June 4, as Moving Picture World was going to press. The thirty members selected by the Milwaukee convention began the sessions on Wednesday. No statement of the proceedings was available at press time.

This meeting is called to discuss ways and means of furthering the cause of the independents. It is expected to name a field manager to superintend the union of all independent forces. Nathan Burkan, the New York Attorney, is a possibility, but there will be competition for this post in the newly created Bureau of Trade and Commerce.

A report on pledge cards probably will be made at the meeting.

On Wednesday of the week an important meeting of the I. M. P. D. A. was also held to discuss means of cooperation with the exhibitor organization and other plans for furthering the Independent cause. While no statement was issued at the conclusion of the meeting, reports had it that the Independents had definitely enlisted the legal aid of an individual prominent in one of the National distributing companies—outside of the Big Three—and had also progressed further toward the hiring of a capable executive to compensate the selling efforts of the Independents.

Incorporations

There was a let up last week in motion picture companies incorporating in New York State, the week producing but five and these having a small amount of capitalization. The companies that incorporated, together with the capitalization and directors, are as follows: Commercial Capital Corporation, $50,000, W. H. Tallis, E. M. James, J. M. Mullin, New York City. J. L. Barnard Productions, Inc., $25,000, J. L. Barnard, R. G. Beekhout, W. E. Huey, New York City. Raygold Theatre Corporation, $20,000, P. Wellins, M. L. Schwartz, J. Huroaitz, New York City. Ten Eyck Pictures Corporation, with A. Radeloff, Brooklyn; E. M. Barnes, A. Schimel, New York. Arch Productions, Inc., with S. E. Mecca, S. Schiff, S. Goodman, New York City, the last two named not stating the amount of capitalization.

Wanda Wiley Comes East; Meets Reviewers at Lunch

Wanda Wiley, the clever Century Comedy actress, is in New York City from the West Coast seeing the shows and just generally enjoying her first glimpse of the metropolis. From here she goes to her home in Texas and she will make a series of personal appearances in that state before beginning production again.

Miss Wiley was hostess at a luncheon to reviewers Monday at the Tavern, with Henry C. Bate of Universal as co-entertainer. She confessed to a desire to play dramatic roles but believes that comedy offers the greatest opportunity at present. Then with two of the guests Miss Wiley went—of all places—to a movie at the Strand, afterwards visiting the Tec-Art Studio where Dick Barthelmess is working. Funny idea of spending a vacation some of these stars have?

RENAMED PRINCIPAL STUDIOS

The Principal Pictures Corporation studio, lately acquired by the units producing Mermaid, Hamilton, Cameo and Juvenile Comedies for distribution by Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., have been renamed the "Education Studios."

Improvements are being added to the studio and an outlay of $100,000 is contemplated. The improvements will include new stages, wardrobe and dressing rooms, projection and cutting rooms, blacksmith and carpenter shops, making the studio one of the most up-to-date comedy producing plants on the Pacific Coast.

TAUROG-LEONARD

Norman Taurog, director of Educational-Mermaid Comedies and Julie Leonard, well known in Hollywood film circles, were married May 24 in San Francisco by Judge James Trout.

E. H. Allen, general manager of several of the units producting comedies for the Educational program, and his wife, Stephen Roberts, director of Educational-Hamilton Comedies, and Violet Wolf were witnesses.

Mr. and Mrs. Taurog will return to Los Angeles after a short honeymoon. Taurog has been again engaged as director for Educational-Mermaid Comedies for the 1925-26 season.

American Films Hold Record in Denmark Report Indicates

American motion pictures have captured over 70 per cent of the Danish market according to a recent report received in the Department of Commerce from the office of its Commercial Attache in Copenhagen. Of the 30 per cent about 20 per cent are of Danish origin and the balance Swedish, German, French and English in the order named. As proof of this statement, the report goes on to say that out of 668 films passed by the Danish censor during the period April 1, 192+, to February 1, 1925, 466 were of American origin, 131 Danish, 27 Swedish, 20 German, 15 French, 7 English and 2 Russian. These 466 American pictures had a total length in meters of 655,880 as opposed to 79,518 for the Danish and much smaller amounts for the others in the order named.

There are in Denmark at the present time about 350 motion picture theaters, of which about 250 give daily performances at least part of the year. About 38 of these with a seating capacity of about 20,000 are located in Copenhagen. Admission prices range from 70 cere to two crowns in the smaller theaters to six or eight crowns in the three or four large theaters in Copenhagen. These prices include the government tax of 40 per cent and also the cost of hat checking.

Programs are usually change once or twice a week in small theaters, but in the first run houses a picture is, as a rule, shown as long as it will draw a house. The Danish censorship rules are very strict, but pictures passed by the censor are divided into two classes, those to which children under sixteen years can be admitted and those to which admission for children of that age is denied. For the censoring of feature pictures a charge of six cere per meter is made and for other films a fee of three cere per meter is levied. Posters and advertising matter covering films must also be passed by the censor and in all cases the name of the picture must be in Danish on the film itself and on all publicity material. From the types of pictures passed by the censor it is evident that the Danish public is critical and demands film plays of a high order.

So far as the distribution of pictures is concerned, Copenhagen is the logical center for Denmark, and a number of American branch offices and agents are located there. In general, films are rented to the theaters under an arrangement whereby a certain percentage of the income from the sale of tickets, after deductions of governmental taxes, is paid to the distributing agency. In Copenhagen this charge is 12 or 20 per cent and in the Danish provincial cities and towns it is about 20 to 25 per cent.

bad feature picture. But by the aid of short subjects and music a manager can show his best taste and judgment in the display of these units.

It has been said that a manager does not make the feature picture but is responsible for every other detail of his show. His personality can be felt in that direction.

SERIALS are good for matinees where there is a majority of women and children patronage but not good where the draw is chiefly transient trade. We are not sorry to have run them continuously at the Missouri the last twelve months as this house pets practically a family draw at matinees. This applies to high-grade serials. There is not a chance for cheaply made or trashy stories in a clean house.

In conclusion my ten commandments for short subject producers follow:

(1) News reels should be news reels and not magazine reels.

(2) Broadway is not the world. Roxy, Riesenfeld and Plunkett can use your fork reel. Often we can't.

(3) Comedies must make people laugh, otherwise there is no excuse for them. Clever mechanics without laughs is waste.

(4) Short subjects must be short and with character. Few managers have even ten minutes running time for a novelty unless you have an Einstein theory.

(5) Scenics are dry without action and are best in five hundred feet. Not over.

(6) If the film you are shooting does not lend itself to melodious music, fire the camera man and go home and wait for an idea that WILL lend itself.

(7) Whiskers are out. Don't shoot the wild man in his den with film. Shoot him with lead. Nobody cares about him.

(8) Don't make a series of twelve using the same basic novelty idea. The novelty wears off after number three of the series is flashed upon the screen.

(9) Keep your eye on the reaction the reel may have with women patrons. Remember that there are not enough unattended male patrons visiting a picture theatre each week to pay for the orchestra.

(10) Remember the dog show and keep off it. The dog show runs from the opening hour until the orchestra comes on after a good lunch. It repeats again from five till seven while the orchestra goes home for a hearty dinner. Dog show reels are well paid for at one dollar per reel. Your best efforts are shown on de luxe shows with full orchestral and union stage hands accompaniment. Hitch your ambition to the de luxe show.

There's Extra MONEY in the short subject!

Kansas City Showmen Carry County Tax Fight to Court

Kansas City exhibitors will know in a few days whether or not they are to receive relief from an almost unbearable county tax burdened upon theatres of Jackson County. A committee from the M. P. T. O. Kansas-Missouri will appear before the county court soon at a special hearing on the matter.

The tax, which is considered by exhibitors as "prohibitive," is $50 a year on all houses containing less than 600 seats and $100 for larger theatres—this in addition to regular occupation license, city, county and state taxes. Exhibitors, through a form letter from M. P. T. O. K-M., headquarters, have been urged to pay up all back taxes in order that they may appear before the court with a "clean slate."

An investigation is being made by C. E. Cook, business manager of the organization, concerning the tax rate on jewelry stores, sporting goods houses and other businesses which might be considered as dealing in luxuries.

"If it becomes necessary we will confront the court with some facts which will prove conclusively that the theatre tax is purely class legislation," Mr. Cook said. "However, we do not believe in knocking the other fellow's game to help our own, and we will present no figures unless forced, through argument, to do so. There is no question about the unfairness of such a tax and I feel assured that the court, which had nothing to do with the passage of the measure, will listen to reason."

HOBLITZELL BOOKS FOX

First run representation for Fox product throughout Texas is assured through the closing of 100 per cent contracts with the important Hoblitzel circuit of theatres by James R. Grainger, general sales manager of Fox Film Corporation. By virtue of this deal the William Fox supreme attractions will be played on their national release dates in San Antonio, Dallas, Fort Worth and Houston in Texas and in Birmingham, Ala.

Famous Acquires 5 Houses in Detroit

Following the completion of the deal whereby Famous Players-Lasky Corporation takes over complete control of five theatres in Detroit owned by James Steele and W. C. Watson, rumors have it that agents for the New York corporation have been sounding out owners of theatres in many of the first-run cities of Michigan, with a view to purchase.

The Bay City deal marked the first real invasion of Michigan by Famous Players. The deal there included rights to the Regent, Washington, Wenona, State and Columbus. After a conference with Sidney R. Kent, who was in Detroit attending the Gleichman-F. P.-L. case, it was announced that Mr. Watson would remain as manager of the enterprises for Famous.

Films in Campaign

New York State is using motion pictures these days in its campaign to eradicate white pine blister rust from the state. The pictures are being shown under the direction of the State Conservation Commission in sections where there is some evidence that the rust is making headway. The State Conservation Commission has found that motion pictures are best suited as mediums of carrying messages of importance to the people, and that they attract far greater crowds than the ordinary talks, and that in such campaigns as the one now on in connection with the blister rust, that th methods to be employed can be so well illustrated that the farmers and others can do the work.

ROWLAND-CLARK ADD FOUR

Rowland and Clark Theatres, through General Manager A. S. Davis, this week announced the outright purchase of four theatres in three Pennsylvania towns, the change in ownership having taken effect on June 1. The newest links in the Rowland and Clark chain of theatres are the Jefferson and Majestic, Punxsutawney; Strand, Ridgeway and the Ritz at Indiana. These houses having been owned by McCartney, Johnson and Kurtz. W. P. McCartney, one of the owners of the quartet of houses, who has acted as General Manager, will continue in this same capacity for Rowland and Clark. Davis announced that there would be no radical change in policy at either of the firm's newest acquisitions, and further stated that the bookings will be made through Rowland and Clark Service, Inc., the same as is the policy with all other R. & C. theatres.

Egypt Offers Bigger Field for U. S. Productions

Egypt deserves the serious attention of American producers and exporters of motion pictures, states a report to the Department of Commerce from Trade Commissioner Richard A. May, of Alexandria, Egypt. There are at present in Egypt more than 40 motion picture theaters of which more than 20 are in Cairo and Alexandria. There are also a number of outdoor theaters or casinos of all sizes scattered throughout Egypt. Unfortunately, it is not possible to state with any degree of accuracy the number of American pictures shown in Egypt or their proportion with respect to those from other countries.

The Egyptian customs returns of motion picture imports show United Kingdom, Germany and Belgium all ahead of the United States as regards imports of these. However, it is such a well-known fact that most of the American pictures shown in Egypt come in by way of France or some other European country that the direct imports from the United States which were valued at 5,145 Egyptian pounds in 1924 do not reflect the actual situation.

One thing is certain, more American pictures were shown than those from any other country, the amount from the United States representing probably about 55 per cent with probably about 30 per cent coming from French producers and the remaining 15 per cent divided between German, Italian, Danish and Swedish concerns.

KEEPS HIS ARTISTS "OFF AIR"

Al Christie has banned the regular contract players with his comedy and feature organizations from making radio "appearances" on the ground that it is not fair to motion picture exhibitors to use prominent screen players in a business which is making nightly competition for movie theatres.

"We have taken this step," said Christie, "after we had been solicited several times to have 'Christie nights' on various radio stations and also after we had been given a proposition to install a radio station in our own studio in Hollywood."

WILL BUILD IN SCHENECTADY

The Famous Players-Lasky according to a published report in Albany, is looking for a theatre site in Schenectady, N. Y., for the purpose of erecting a motion picture theatre to cost in the neighborhood of $500,000. At the present time, work is under way in Schenectady in the erection of a new theatre for the Proctor interests, which will cost close to $500,000.

Fox Publicity Reorganizes with Moses as the Head

A REORGANIZATION and enlargement of the Fox departments dealing with publicity, advertising and exploitation has just been effected under the direction of Winfield R. Sheehan, general manager.

Vivian M. Moses was director of publicity and advertising. Mr. Moses still retains this position. Under Moses there have been appointed heads of departments who will have direct responsibility and jurisdiction over their separate departments.

G. K. Rudulph has been appointed publicity manager and will have charge of all classes of publicity work, including newspapers, fan magazines and trade publicity.

Donn McElwaine, formerly assistant to Moses, has been appointed manager of accessory division and will be responsible for the production of all classes of accessories including press books, exploitation books, lithographs, lobby display, folders and other printed matter. An expliotation manager will also be appointed and have jurisdiction over a home and field force of exploitation men who will be employed to put over the Fox Supreme Attractions at the various first-run centers during the coming season.

A LOBBY THAT EARNED $300 IN DURHAM, N. C.

This was not all the extra business, but the share that Don Nichols figures the lobby drew. He says that autos bumped each other while the drivers looked at the display. You can't beat that for pulling power, can you?

His Lobby Display Caused Auto Smash

Don Nichols, of the Durham (N. C.) Amusement Co., writes that he figures this lobby on The Thief of Bagdad pulled in about $300 for him. That isn't saying that it played to $300 above, but that $300 of the extra money was drawn by this lobby.

He got the idea from a lobby reproduced in this department, though he is not able to recall the issue. It is a solid compo board structure, done in water color on a kalsomine base, and decorated with cutouts. That black centre panel is not the box office.

The lights, with the exception of the illuminated star and title strips, were green. The lettering was white and worked on a flasher. Mr. Nicolas says that the flasher caused more talk than anything he has ever used, and the first day it was displayed he noticed a dozen autos bump the car ahead while the drivers watched the flasher.

It seems that the theatre is only a few doors below the corner, where the cars stop. Autos stopping to let the cars discharge passengers would halt and the following car, the driver absorbed in the sign, would bump into the machine ahead.

Gets a Weekly Ad From Bible Class

Getting efficient church co-operation is difficult, but if it can be achieved, there is nothing more valuable. For a long time W. F. Brock, of the Strand Theatre, Knoxville, Tenn., has been trying to get some co-operation, and at last he has hit upon an idea that is well worth while, and so simple that almost any house can copy it.

He effected a deal with the largest bible class in the city. This has a membership of about one thousand, and Mr. Brock supplies one thousand pay envelopes each week, printed up with spaces for the name and address of the member, the amount of his donation and the date. Above and below this data are lines for the theatre and the announcement of the coming attractions.

The cost is relatively small and for this Mr. Brock gets an absolutely gilt edged circulation, not to mention the general good will. He opened the stunt with The Mine With the Iron Door.

For the same attraction he made his lobby into a mine entrance, the idea being good not only for this but for Coming Through and other mining stories.

Van Demark Used a Caged Live Goose

About the time that Edgar Hart, up in Augusta, Maine, was letting a live rooster crow about his Easter program, Harry Van Demark, down in Houston, Texas, was using a goose to honk for The Goose Hangs High. He put this over the box office of the Queen Theatre. The goose did not like the job and complained loudly, with the result that he (or she) got the attention of all the customers.

VAN DEMARK'S GOOSE

His best bet was the borrowing of a woman who was in town to promote the sales of a brand of silverware at a prominent jeweler's. She was known as an authority on home decoration, and the store loaned her to the theatre in exchange for the advertising.

The store was given the theatre between 9 and 10 each morning, and it mailed out 20,000 invitations, under first-class postage, and each lecture was heard by a full house. At each lecture on home decoration the speaker wound up with an appreciative comment on The Goose Hangs High as typical of American home life. Having seen the picture, she could speak with full conviction, and her words carried weight.

HOW W. F. BROCK, OF THE STRAND THEATRE, KNOXVILLE, PLAYED UP THE MINE

Instead of a mine with an open door, this had to have three doors, but the customers were not particular and were appreciative of the extra measure. The photograph is rather sketchy, but the effect is that of a tree-clad hill with the mine entrances faced up with stone, and it made a strong impression to back up the name of the popular author.

This Ancient Joke Great Exploitation

It doesn't matter if it's old if you get away with it.

Universal's London office is offering prizes each week for the best example of serial exploitation on its serials.

One recent winner was Robert Brascoe, of the Garrick Theatre, Kirkdale, Liverpool, who was advertising Wolves of the North.

He used a two-color throwaway with a small black oblong in one corner, with the caption: "This is an exact reproduction of a profound and animated picture of a naked nigger with an ebony walking stick, chasing a black cat. Don't worry if you can't see the nigger, but see the greatest show with 100 per cent entertainment, Wolves of the North and The Turmoil."

On his screen he ran a slide reading: "Do you want a one pound note? Ask for the handbills going out."

That's all there was to the scheme, but practically all of the patrons got the idea that he was offering the money to the man who could find the darkey, and after a show the streets were lined with people in front of store windows and under street lamps looking for some trace of an outline. One excited patron rushed back with a bill and a magnifying glass to point out the cat.

Entering into the spirit of the thing, some of the nearby pubs (we used to call them saloons when we had them) offered drinks all 'round if anyone discovered either the cat or the coon.

It sounds almost foolish, but it made money for Brascoe and it will make money for you in a small town or a locality. Most printers have old "tint blocks" that will give you the black oblong.

A PERAMBULATOR USED TO LAUNCH A UNIVERSAL SERIAL

This was devised by J. T. Hilten, of the Odeon Theatre, Birmingham, Ala., for The Riddle Rider. That's the Odeon in the background and it will be noted that the larger half of the banner goes to the serial instead of to the feature.

A Midnight Herd

Believing that the verbal advertising would be of great help to The Thundering Herd, George E. Brown, of the Imperial Theatre, Charlotte, N. C., announced a midnight matinee. As this had been used only once before, the novelty gave distinction to the presentation and the house was crowded.

One novel angle was the careful distribution of passes for this showing to persons employed in the large plants. Few were given in any one establishment, for Brown figured that a few would tell all the rest. Evidently they did, for he played to a sustained turnaway.

He got some drag for his underline by largely advertising that "The Thief of Bagdad is after The Thundering Herd."

Addison's Latest

H. M. Addison, of Binghamton, not only got a good number, but he added to good will when he staged a recent performance of a boy's band which was sponsored by the Rotary Club.

Rotary is giving great attention to boys work, and one of the phases of the work in Binghamton is the instruction of a group of lads in music. The boys range from five to fifteen years of age and under competent instruction have attained a real proficiency.

It gave Mr. Addison a star act and pleased the Rotarians as well as the patrons.

Renamed

Working the same old jigsaw puzzle idea, Thomas G. Coleman, of the Rialto Theatre, Macon, Ga., got a touch of freshness by giving it a new name. It was in the interest of The Dressmaker from Paris, and so he called it a "costume puzzle." Giving the News $15 for prizes, it not only got interest, but sold the idea of dresses as no amount of plain type could have done.

To the same end, he gave an advance screening, that the newspapers might be able to certify as to the elegance of the costuming.

He landed fourteen shops on display of costume stills through the suggestion that their styles were as up to date as those in the picture.

AN ADAPTATION OF THE CAR END IDEA FOR EXCUSE ME

This was built by A. S. Grist, of the Strand Theatre, Asheville, N. C., and it attracted about as much attention as the Pullman car entrance without costing a tenth of what the more elaborate structure set the builders back. It brought the sales.

Makes His Passes Carry Publicity

Perambulating passes is something else again. The idea has been worked out by Roland McCurdy, who is the Universal exploiteer at Los Angeles.

He has been putting in some strong licks on The Great Circus Mystery, and of course free tickets to the first episode is a part of all serial exploitation.

The passes used on The Great Circus Mystery are at least six by nine inches and are not accepted at the door if presented with creases, so the youngsters have to carry them in their hands, and the brightly colored stock and large type make it apparent to everyone where the youngsters are headed.

McCurdy is figuring on a hat band or brassard to be used, but in this he is getting back to the source of his own idea, which consciously or not, was probably suggested by the balloon and mask stunts on other pictures. The big ticket is newer and better.

Of course if a youngster gets in a jam and gets his ticket crushed he gets in just the same.

USING A RAFFLES TO SELL THE IRON MAN

Charles Triebel, of the Pastime Theatre, Maysville, Ky., perambulated one girl in the morning and put another on the street in the afternoon. Even at that some persons approached her, but did not employ the correct form of salutation.

Sold Fashion Show and Showers, Too

L. W. Carroll, when he was over in Berlin, N. H., gave a couple of very successful fashion shows, as reported at the time. Now that he is at the Majestic Theatre, Burlington, Vt., he figured he would try it out there.

It was not easy. The storekeepers gave him the fishy eye and the emphatic negative, but finally he pumped some sporting blood into the veins of one of the storekeepers and got a grudging assent. Even after that it was not easy to talk the store into certain extra items that Carroll thought best not to mention at the opening interview, but he got what he wanted, and put on a very good looking show with eight girls.

The store was more interested when the free press work began to show in the papers, and when the Sunday before the showing Carroll worked in a photograph of the models, his collaborator began to cheer up a little. He even went into the paper for a double six.

Two of the girls were pages and the other six had six changes each, which gave 36 showings. All of the gowns were from stock and the girls were given only what they looked well in and could carry off.

The result was that the following day the store sold three dresses, two coats, four hats and many pairs of shoes, and promptly booked a fall showing.

The girls were given silver vanity cases, the four pairs of hosiery that each wore during the show, and the opportunity to buy the shoes at half price. They also had a buffet lunch and dance one night after the show and they all want to go into the fall show. They were not the sort of girls you could slip a couple of dollars to. That sort of girl can't wear the dresses.

It cost Carroll six sheets of gelatine.

Colored Jackie

Coloring contests are old, but not stale. Loew's Bijou Theatre, Birmingham, Ala., recently conducted one on Jackie Coogan in The Rag Man, with the assistance of C. D. Haug, Metro-Goldwynner.

Six pictures were to be colored as a set, and one of these was printed each day. More than 1,500 children competed, and the publisher of the Post declared it to be the most successful good-will stunt the newspaper had ever handled.

The prizes ranged from five Jackie Coogan suits to Jackie Coogan rulers, and a picture of the little star was given each contestant in addition to the 150 odd prizes, of which 100 were single passes.

It brought the house about 1,500 of reading space.

Frank J. Miller, of the Modjeska Theatre, Augusta, Ga., hooked every women's wear store in town to the fashion show in The Dressmaker from Paris.

Each of the ten stores carried two or more photographs of the style models in the picture, and a large card telling about the display of dresses, adding a few words about the store's own showing.

It helped almost as much as a staged fashion show.

Used Second Girl for His Raffle Stunt

Employing the Raffles idea for The Iron Man at the Pastime Theatre, Maysville, Ky., Charles Triebel perambulated a girl through the streets in an automobile during the morning hours in a car announcing her as "The Mysterious Margaret Morris."

Previous newspaper advertising had announced that if she were located on certain streets between two and nine P. M. and accosted with the formula "Are you the Mysterious Margaret Morris that is to appear at the Pastime in The Iron Man?" a season ticket to the serial would be presented.

A girl was put out, but not the same one sent out in the morning. Even at that, several persons spoke to her, but did not use the proper form of address and no tickets were given out.

This is the common form of working the stunt, often no Raffles is put out at all, especially where a large prize is offered. We like better, however, the form of stunt in which the prizes are such as to permit some to be won, and we think that had singles to the first showing been the prizes and a few dozen given out the results would have been much more profitable, particularly in launching a serial, where so much depends upon the attendance at the first chapter.

This Is New

Fred S. Meyer, of the Palace Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio, worked a new one on The Dressmaker of Paris.

He arranged with a store to display a costume and then offered cash and ticket prizes for the most complete and accurate description of the dress. Of course he worked the offer through the newspaper, to get the free publicity. As the stunt was worked on The Dressmaker of Paris, it was particularly apt, for it interested the women in the costume and the play at the same time.

Startled New York With Teaser Idea

One of the stunts that helped Joe Weil, of Universal, keep Smouldering Fires in the Piccadilly Theatre for two weeks was a "warning" distributed along Broadway by two girls in clown costumes decorated with hearts and dollar signs.

A Universal Release

THE CLOWN GIRLS

They carried little baskets filled with small throwaway about 5 by 7 inches, folded once so that both outside leaves showed: "Warning! Let no man be necessary to you." Inside it continued: "If you want to know why, go to the Piccadilly, etc."

Like all other advertising, it stressed the fact that Pauline Frederick played a role which no other screen star would dare attempt. This sounded interesting, and you had to go to the show to find out that the daring consisted in playing a middle aged role. "Daring" and "startling" were used in all advertising, and the dare angle was relayed to the dramatic critics in personal letters.

That this was effective was shown by the fact that most of the criticisms worked the idea into the story.

A special postcard was sent to 5,000 professional women, who were supposed to be particularly interested in this play of a business woman, and the Laura LaPlante boyish bob was worked into a window card that got into the several thousand beauty parlors between Forty-second and Fifty-ninth streets.

Because Tulsa, Okla., is handy to Pawnee, the home of Maj. Gordon Lillie (Pawnee Bill), J. W. Clark, of the Majestic Theatre, was able to borrow some of the Major's collection of Indian relics for lobby work on The Thundering Herd. He also was able to borrow a $5,000 painting for display in a store window. Then he got out handbills advertising the free lobby show and that, in its turn, advertised the picture.

Shows Lost World 2,000 Feet in Air

Horace Judge, who is looking after the publicity for First National's agency in Great Britain, has pulled another first timer. He gave a showing of The Lost World in an aeroplane before a select audience of notables and newspaper men.

He chartered one of the air boats of Imperial Airways, Ltd., installed a projection machine and projected the picture while the machine was flying over the North Sea.

Of course the London papers played it up and the provincial journals followed in their steps. It gave the picture a mention in practically every paper in Great Britain, and while it costs more to hire a passenger airplane than a taxi, the results showed a gigantic profit on the investment.

This comes close upon the heels of the showing of Black Oxen and Ashes of Vengeance on one of the crack expresses.

Parked a Banner

This is the time of year when you take a banner down to the ball park and show it to the spectators, just as you used to hike down to the football games last fall. If you have an obliging ball team, you may be interested in a little stunt of H. C. Farley's.

To advertise The Thundering Herd at the Empire Theatre, Montgomery, Ala., he sent two boys down to the park with the banner. Just before the game they came on the field with the banner folded. At once people wondered what the boys had. The lads went to several parts of the field, opened the banner and set it against the fence, as though trying out the location, but after they had tried it in all parts of the field, showing the lettering to everyone, they apparently decided that no spot was a good one, and left the field before the game was called.

Teaser Series to Sell the Rag Man

This set of teasers was used by the Orpheum Theatre, Chicago, to sell Jackie Coogan in The Rag Man. These cuts were obtained from the press book, but the interesting point is that they were used in a Chicago paper, where space is more costly by the line than most towns get for the inch. The three singles are respectively 70, 68 and 63 inches, and the blowoff is a double 80. Getting Chicago interested in a teaser stunt is different from trying to interest a small town, where every page of the local sheet is read. Comparatively few go over the theatrical advertising every day, but if they pass the page the teaser is almost certain to get attention. City teasers get boards where they stand a chance of being read, but anyone passing the theatrical page is almost certain to be attracted by this cut display and to stop and read. In the smaller places this set will make good postcard teasers, if the cost is not prohibitive. It means about four cents per address, if government postals are used, but the cumulative effect of the three cards, the latter carrying an announcement that the Sunday paper will carry the solution, is bound to be good for the box office if you have any doubts as to your ability to sell the picture on a straight campaign.

Took a Long Chance with Fine Screens

A sixty screen cut is supposed to be the proper size for a halftone to be used in newspapers, and 80 is about the limit, but the Colonial Theatre, Indianapolis, took a chance on a 120 screen cut for Dangerous Innocence. By all rights it should have been handed a messy looking puddle of ink. That is about all the reproduction should show, for it will reduce to about a 300 screen, but in the original the cut has the softness of a crayon sketch in a magazine page, with the portrait face well lighted. It's slapping Fate in the face to send a cut like this over to a newspaper office, but the Colonial probably had its fingers crossed. At any rate it produced

The Big Idea

J. M. McClure, of the Franklin Theatre, Oakland, Calif., sends in some useful suggestions with a letter which reads in part:

"I just awoke to the fact that maybe somewhere someone might find some of this stuff useful. We all have different angles of treatment and maybe my angle might help someone, just as their angles, as published in Selling the Picture to the Public, always help me."

That's the entire idea of this department. If everyone could think of all the good ideas, there would be no need for exchanging views, but since there are so many slants on every picture, your idea may help others. Even the 200-seat man in a one horse town is apt to think of a better idea than a high priced press agent; not always, perhaps, but now and then at least.

This department is merely an advertising ideas syndicate with a salary list that runs above a million dollars a year. Ever look at it in that light?

A Metro-Goldwyn Release

claims. There is wanting the note of sincerity that carries conviction. It sounds as though it had been written because the advertising man felt that something was needed, but it does not suggest that he thinks the play is all he says it is. There is nothing in the lines to sell. There is no conviction in: "Never has Mr. O'Brien been seen in a more attractive role and Miss La Plante was never more charming." That's too general. It sounds as though it had been written in lengths to be chopped off as needed. Probably the copy writer was without sufficient information and was doing the best he could, but the lines leave you cold, with the money still in your pocket and no inclination to lift it out.

Circle Style Is Greatly Improved

Recently the Circle Theatre, Indianapolis, has been using a pretty poor style of display in which much of the effect was wasted through the long and narrow style, the lower third of which was occupied by the small features. It was wasteful and to some degree unsightly. It did not impress the reader as the announcement of a superlative entertainment. It was suggestive rather of the immature efforts of a struggling house. With a quick switch the Circle has gone over to some very pretty displays, of which this is one of the most effective. This is roughly a four elevens, and instead of throwing away about thirty per cent of the space on the small features, the space is used blank to gain prominence for the panel. Possibly the small features were dropped for this engagement. They could be grouped at the end of the announcement effectively. But the main idea is that the story is put over in sentences from two to four lines long, well set, opened with leads to be still more legible, and simply but sincerely phrased. The entire space suggests high grade entertainment —class, if you want that much-abused word. It looks important and impressive and bears the same relation to the Circle's recent efforts that a copper plate does to a cheaply printed throwaway. This announcement will appeal to the patrons of the more intelligent class who can best appreciate this historical play, and the appeal is exactly suited to the subject. We are glad to see the Circle swinging back to its old form, for at its best the Circle ads take a lot of beating and at their worst they have no contenders for the tail end of the line.

A Metro-Goldwyn Release

HARD TO BEAT

Sells Forty Winks on Griffith Appeal

Using four twelves, Harold D. Barnes, of the Rialto Theatre, Burlington, Ia., has plenty of room in which to talk about Forty Winks, but he does not stuff the space with all the type the printer had. He knew he would sell better with white space, and brief copy. He gets in a jam under the title, where he hides his best appeal away in "Funny Raymond Griffith—the greatest comedian since the discovery of Chaplin and Lloyd. Remember his imitation of the cat in Miss Bluebeard?" That is more specific, and therefore more selling than some of the general lines which dot the space above, and we think that these two lines could have been taken with profit into the great open spaces to the north of the cut. They are more convincing than "The screen's biggest comedy scream," because they are more specific. We like the loose line, "Breaking all records for the running broad grin." That's not specific, but it is good selling. It's a good line to remember.

A Paramount Release

LIGHT AND BREEZY

Tells a Long Story Without Confusion

There is perhaps a little too much black type in this six tens from the Sun Theatre, Omaha, but it gets over a big story without overcrowding the space, so that the reader does not pass without reading. In addition to the announcement of The Rag Man, there is space for the comedy and the announcement of a special revue for the picture, which includes a local boys' band. This is carried in the panel in the lower centre, which is intimately joined to the title through letting the title letters form the irregular top of the panel. This not only saves space, but it makes for a better display, because this is more sightly than the formal four-sided box. The line just under the signature cut puts over the suggestion that The Rag Man is not merely a picture for the children, and starts the reader off with the proper understanding. There is less appeal to "The Kid himself," for most will remember Jackie in his first role, but "in a picture like The Kid" tells that it is away from the less popular Robinson Crusoe. The rest stands on the fact that this is Jackie, and that is about the best of the sales arguments. You can sell on that or not at all, and keeping away from a labored sales argument is a better seller than would be several hundred words of copy, no matter how well it might be written. In displaying an advertisement it is more important to know what not to say than what to tell, for if you do not tell what you should not, whatever remains is what should be said. This is not the best work the Sun has offered lately, but it is sound construction and interesting as a study in getting a lot of small lines into a space without seeming to overcrowd.

A Metro-Goldwyn Release

PUTS PLENTY OVER

Paid Part Taxi for Last Laugh Patrons

Robert Bender, of the Columbia theatre, Seattle, gave a new twist to the taxi tale when he played The Last Laugh.

All yellow taxis were bannered as shown in the cut for the week of the engagement and the Yellowgram, the advertising organ of the taxi company also carried much about the UFA production, along with an explanation of the idea.

When a cab brought patrons to the theatre the doorman gave the passengers a ticket good for twenty-five cents against the meter charge. If they took another cab when they left the performance, they received a similar ticket, which was used when their destination was reached.

These coupons were paid off at a fraction of their face rate, the company being willing to make a concession to induce a more general use of the cabs. Probably you can make a similar deal and win a whole flock of perambulators.

He's President

Frank H. Burns, of the Beacham Theatre, Orlando, Fla., has been elected President of the local Ad. Club. We don't believe there is anyone in town who knows more about good advertising than he does, so we congratulate the club on its choice.

APPLICATIONS OF COLOR SYSTEMS

TO achieve proper color combinations whether in the scenic design or lighting treatment, is one of the problems confronting the average producer. What color to use, when to use it, and how to combine it with other colors, is one of the most important factors in production work. A well conceived setting can be an utter failure if it is not properly painted and subsequently correctly lighted, and the reverse may be applied to a mediocre setting, which, simple in design, conventional in style, can be made a thing of unusual beauty.

There are so many conflicting color systems that the producer often finds himself in a bewildering maze when he tries to apply any of them or in a combination.

After all Nature is perhaps the best teacher. The fundamental color schemes are reflected in the great outdoors. The various climes having schemes which are characteristic of the environment. Color is a matter of geography and the various geographical areas are influenced by temperaments. The very complexity of these temperaments necessitates a variety of tones.

To properly interpret the scene the producer must not only be thoroughly conversant with the various natural color schemes of the particular regions, but also cognizant of the temperaments of the people. We find in the north that colors are more vivid, direct and dominating, while in southern climes a fusion of color, vivid tones in contrasting combinations with even blend; in the far east patterns, distinctly and separately individual, etc.

However, there is one color system which is general in its treatment as applies to pigments and lights, and is a source of much information. Its study will prove beneficial to the producer in arriving at a definite basis of operation.

This refers to the books on color written by the late Albert H. Munsell, founder of the Munsell Color System, and the author of a standard color atlas.

One of the reasons the writings of Mr. Munsell particularly apply to the producer is, that they are practical descriptions in the analysis of color application, combinations, etc., and logically set forth so that the fear of scientific perplexity is eliminated from the lay mind.

For instance, Mr. Munsell defines color as being of three dimensions—Hue, Value and Chroma. By Hue he means, "the quality by which we distinguish one color from another, as a red from a yellow, a green, a blue, or a purple." By Value he defines, "the quality by which we distinguish a light color from a dark one." Chroma he defines in this manner—"When we have stated that the color is blue or yellow or green, and that it is dark or light, we have indicated two of its important qualities; its Hue and its Value, but we have by no means described it completely. We may say of an emerald that it is green and that it is light, but we can say that certain grapes are green and also light, and yet there is a decided difference between their respective colors if we place them side by side. Both may be green and of the same Value of light, but the emerald is strong in color and the grape is weak in color, or grayer. It is this difference which is measured on the dimension of Chroma."

This color analysis also specifies the proper opposite or complementary colors; how to arrive at a balance in color, with valuable information on color combinations.

The producer who continues a study of color arranged in measured order will assuredly be rewarded with the discovery of many interesting possibilities resulting in noteworthy work.

The deeper one penetrates this always fascinating subject, the more clearly he will see that color harmony is only another term for color order, that order will yield order, and in such forms will lead through a series of colors which accord, and when used together will render the agreeable sensation which we always seek to "put over" with our various productions.

PURCHASE IN SAFETY

JACK LONDON wrote a story about a man who realized the limitations of his two hands and two eyes. He was a hard working individual, but came to the conclusion that in order for him to derive a benefit from his work it was necessary that he have more hands and more eyes. Within himself it was a physical impossibility to arrange for this addition, but by acquiring the services of others this physical difficulty was overcome, and he was thus enabled to accomplish more and see farther, as his other eyes and hands were constantly working for him.

This illustration defines the relationship between this department and the producer. Being a junction point for ideas, a clearing house of information relative to the best merchandise for the theatre, there are practically a thousand eyes and hands available to the man who wants to keep up with the parade.

After considerable thought and investigation it has been decided that this department will relay such information, giving the producer timely tips, and what he may wish to know relative to materials being used, books valuable in his work, and, briefly, a source through which he can confidently secure information about any product on the market, or on any question appertaining thereto, knowing

We are in a position to analyze the various products that the information received may be depended upon.
at close range, and feel confident that we can save money for producers with this service to them.

The many inquiries which are coming into this department relative to materials and other information desired have prompted us to make this suggestion:

Let us be your Purchasing Agent.

Never let anything prevent you from devising or planning some production feature every day. Draw or design a scenic scheme, a lighting effect, a color combination, a story, a musical application to a situation. It is necessary discipline and what scales and exercises are to the musician, so is the sketch and note book to the producer.

Big First Run Presentations

CAPITOL THEATRE
New York City

Featured Picture: "Parisian Nights" (F. B. O.)

Music

Selections from "Il Trovatore" (Verdi) is offered as the overture feature by the Capitol Grand Orchestra, David Mendoza conducting, Graham Harris, Associate Conductor. After the first movement curtains are drawn revealing an ensemble of thirty male voices with five soloists including three women. A very conventional box set is used as a background for the singers. Flats painted in gilt with square tile designs set across the back in folding screen fashion the ends being enclosed with two flats running from the back of the set down to returns. A border of single strand vine with irregular pointed leaves done in black. The principals are seated in alignment in gilt chairs on the stage floor. The Ensemble in alignment in two rows elevated on three step platform which is painted black. Buff ceiling piece is used on set. Set is toned with canary, amber from the sides, canary spots to flood. The singers render excerpts from the opera. S. L. Rothafel has devised a very high class musical feature in this arrangement.

Mlle. Gambarelli

This popular Ballet Mistress makes an appearance, after several weeks of absence, in a charming dance interpretation of Valse from "Coppelia" by Delibes. Setting consists of black plush drop hung back, in front of which are six green leafed sapling trees set at intervals across stage. Trees are highlighted with green from the sides with blue to tone. Green foots and flood with white and green spots on the dancer, who is dressed in an attractive ballet costume of white, satin bodice with three tiered skirt of tulle, bottom of which is trimmed with pink heart-shaped designs, a rose at the waist and the heart motif carried out in rose at the neck.

Roxy's Gang in Montmartre

Mr. Rothafel offers an excellent presentation to the picture which not only creates the atmosphere, but is effectively blended with the opening scenes of the feature. The scene in which he again introduces his "gang" is the Cafe "Au Caverne." The setting while simple is effectively designed by Clark Robinson and consists of a drop hung in two with an irregular arched opening about the width of the stage which is painted to give the appearance of overhanging jagged and jutting rocks of the cave. Back in three is another drop which is similarly painted with a circular opening midway with steps indicated leading to a supposed passage-way, which is backed with black and toned in an amber haze. Down right is a small platform upon which an upright piano is placed and scattered about the set are various tables with red-checked table cloths, chairs, etc., to dress, the set in furnishings theatrically associated with the underworld. A large hanging lamp with a metal shade is suspended from center. Amber and canary are thrown in from the sides to highlight the foreground with orange amber and canary from the front used to flood, and as spots for the various numbers. The drops are toned with blue and purple in the back which gradually diminish towards the top of the set, practically all of the lighting being concentrated in the area of the characters. This treatment lends an atmosphere of coldness, mystery and photographically accentuates the presentation. The various characters appear in costumes of the Apaches with here and there various soldier uniforms in evidence. The following program is arranged, with lyrics by Gitz-Rice, musical arrangement by Dr. Wm. Axt. The regular members of the "gang" assisted by a male ensemble of thirty, Doris Niles and the Capitol Ballet Corps of six provide the action:

(a) "Gay Paree For Me".....Gang and Ensemble.
(b) "L'Amour D'Apache" (Offenbach)..... Miss Niles and Mr. Moulan.
(c) "Mon Homme".....Miss Rice
(d) "I am the Law".....Mr. Cooms and Ensemble.
(e) "Song Bird".....Miss McKee
(f) "Marietta"....Miss Rice and Mr. Wetzel
(g) "Y Como la Va"..Capitol Ballet Corps
(h) "Ma Cherie".....Lieutenant Gitz Rice and Ensemble
(i) "So This is Paris".....Mr. Moulan and Ensemble

MARK STRAND THEATRE
New York City

Featured Picture: "The Desert Flower"

Music

Excerpts from Massenet are offered by the Mark Strand Symphony Orchestra, Carl Edouard, conducting, in a three number musical feature. The orchestra first renders the overture "Phedre." The curtains are drawn revealing six long panelled stained glass windows in conventional church design set back in two. Magenta and blue is artistically blended from the back of the windows. The balance of the set is in darkness. For the second number Amund Sjovik, Basso, dressed in a friar's costume, standing right center, sings "Elegie." Two pin spots from right and left are thrown across stage highlighting the head and shoulders of the singer. At the conclusion of the number the lights dim down and at the left of stage Madeleine MacGuigan, Violinist, garbed in purple, appears as the same lighting treatment is brought upon her, and she renders the third selection which is "Meditation," from Thais.

Divertissements

(a) Emily Day, Coloratura Soprano, renders "Summer," by Chaminade. Singer appears in front of black drop hung in one; three amber spots from overhead flooding area, the singer working in a white spot. She is gowned in a white and lavender Colonial costume, flaxen hair.

(b) Valse des Fleurs by Tchaikowsky. Mme. Klemova, M. Daks and Mark Strand Ballet Corps. The scene opens, dark stage, lights gradually brought up, revealing the eight characters dressed in colorful Colonial costumes in sing colors aligned across stage, against a black plush drop. A large oval frame drop with scrim is hung down in one. Mlle. Klemova appears standing on a gilt pedestal with M. Daks in Colonial costume, standing beside her. Canaries, Orange, Amber and White brought in color scheme.

The Prologue

Joseph Plunkett has arranged one of the cleverest novelty prologues we have seen in several weeks in Broadway theatres. The setting is simple, but its treatment and the introduction of a novelty lighting effect is its real charm. A drop screen hung back upon which is projected a rotor effect of a landscape which revolves, giving the effect of a rapidly moving landscape, the upper part is toned in a deep sky blue. In front is a hand car with the four members of the Mark Strand Male Quartette dressed in typical section hand working clothes with a working motion of the propelling bar of the hand car plus the action of the effect on the back screen lend an effect which is duplicated in the picture of the hand car travelling at a rapid pace down the track. Quartette sing a song which is not programmed. This is a good idea to be used by other theatres as it requires but a small space and is easy to stage. It's too good an effect to remain exclusively a Broadway novelty. It is an excellent prologue for The Desert Flower.

RIVOLI THEATRE
New York City

Featured Picture: "The Little French Girl" (Paramount)

Music

The overture feature, "Capriccio Italien" (Tchaikowsky), is played by the Rivoli Orchestra, with Will Stahl conducting.

Divertissements

(a) "Joe Thomas' Sax-O-Tette." Five talented and versatile musicians who know how to put over comedy business in a motion picture theatre, and maintain an artistic level. The musicians dressed in carnival costumes, short black coats with black and rose pom poms, tight fitting trousers. The set consists of light fabrics tinted rose and blue in the center and carrying off at either side are deep blue fabrics over which a figure designed panel is hung, which is tied at the bottom, meeting the tip of a small gilded box tree. A large four-way bronze screen is up center with a foliage design in black and red. Canary floods with greens, and light amber from the side with canary spot to work are used in the performing area. The musical selections are terminated with the quintette closing in one as the curtains are drawn together.

(b) "Vivian Day." This charming little dancer makes her second week's appearance in the Riesenfeld houses in a Chinese dance which is extremely Americanized. Setting consists of a large painted Buddha on compoboard backed with black plush drop. Two green lamps are used for the eyes of the statue, the fantastic outlines of the face and garb of this well-known Deity is highlighted with purple and amber. A large black and maroon figured panel is hung from above the tip reaching a spot near the head of the image. Two black lacquered floor lamps with inverted Japanese lanterns in which green lights are used are set up right and left of the statue.

(c) "Miriam Lax," Soprano, appears in front of regular close in curtains in a pink spot, dressed in evening gown, and sings "When I Think of You." (Owens and Rose.) Curtains open, revealing a setting which suggests a roof garden veranda. A festoon of deep toned small Japanese lanterns hung in one. In two borders with legs hung leaving a rectangular opening through which blue sky with a light blue base is visible. Two trellises with entwining vines are used, one on either side of the opening. A steel blue star is pointed up center. In the foreground, a dining table set for two, chairs of gilt on either side. August Werner, Baritone, joins Miss Lax in the finale of her song as she approaches the table, seating herself. Blue and green from the sides are used to tone with amber spots to work.

COLONY THEATRE
New York City

Featured Picture: "If Marriage Fails"
(F. B. O.)

Music

The overture featured by the Colony Melody Masters, selections from "Louis IV," introducing "Homeland," "Little Peach," and "Don't Bring Lulu." The latter being a novelty jazz arrangement.

A Cycle of Color

A very charming act, introducing the four Roman Sisters in an artistic novelty of rare beauty. This is one of the prettiest posing acts recently seen. A large frame occupies the stage back of which is a platform and various drops are used as scenic background for the characters, who appear in a series of poses which are accentuated with colorful light treatments and effects. An electric announcer flashes the titles of the various numbers. The following pictures are offered: "The Silence," an Indian Subject; "The Deer," a winter scene with two huntsmen; "An Oasis," an Arabian motif; "Eventide," a vision; "Moth and Flame," which introduces various effects ending with a rice-rain effect.

Colony Quartette

The male singers dressed in tuxedo, appear before the light fabrics which are toned red, blue foots and red, mixed with amber spots to work. Quartette sing many popular songs and a few excerpts from Grand Opera a la Jazz.

South Sea Entertainers

Ned Wayburn's Pango Pango Orchestra is introduced, together with eleven dancers. The entire act being arranged and staged by Mr. Wayburn. The setting is very simple—a painted palm grove in silhouette, hung back stage through which a moon box in amber is used. A netted drop hung down in one with foliage border and trees and a large vase with flowers are right, and a corner of a Spanish style house at left. The orchestra is grouped up left center and renders "Pango Moon," "Alo Ha Oe," and "Moani Keala." Ten girls dressed in Hawaiian costumes enter and do typical Hula Hula dance with a soloist in an Hawaiian costume of white silk. Canary and amber spots highlight characters from the sides with white and canary to flood during the dance numbers.

RIALTO THEATRE
New York City

Featured Picture: "Old Home Week"
(Paramount)

Music

Hugo Riesenfeld has prepared an interesting musical program for the week. The overture is Selections from "La Boheme" (Puccini), played by the Rialto Orchestra with Emanuel Baer conducting. Another Riesenfeld Classical Jazz is offered, and Gdal Saleski, first cellist of the orchestra, plays his own composition, "Hungarian Rhapsodie," accompanied by the orchestra.

Divertissements

Practically the same show as presented at the Rivoli Theatre last week is offered for a second week at this house. Betty Paulus, mezzo soprano, and Edward Atchison, tenor, sing a duet of Irving Berlin's popular song hit "Listening." An "Eccentric Toe Dance," by four members of the Rialto Ballet Corps is offered.

CAPITOL THEATRE
Chicago

Featured Picture: "A Woman's Faith"

Music

The Capitol Grand Orchestra, conducted by Albert E. Short, presents as the overture feature "Cavilleria Rusticana" (Mascagni), with a Classical Jazz number using "Swanee Butterfly" as the theme.

Divertissements

Francis A. Mangan presents five numbers in this group.

(a) "Robin Hood." A male ensemble of sixteen voices in the opening chorus. Four girls render a folk dance. Lorna Doone Jackson, soprano, sings "Oh, Promise Me," and Herbert Gould, basso, sings "Brown October Ale," assisted by the ensemble.

(b) "Irene." Marjorie Pringle, soprano, sings "My Sweet Little Alice Blue Gown," and four dancers accompany, dressed in jazz blue gown, the waltz period, crinoline blue, and colonial.

(c) "La Cupa." The Tango by Edna Hathaway and Howard Baker. Morton and Mayo in specialty.

(d) "Comedy Bits," by Jimmie Dunn.

(e) "Sweethearts." The male ensemble appear in "On Parade." Miss Jackson sings "Sweethearts." Four girls do "Wooden Shoe Dance." David Reese, tenor, sings "Every Lover Must Meet His Fate," and the finale with Miss Jackson, Mr. Reese and the Male Ensemble.

THE RENDEZVOUS OF ROMANCE

A Spanish Fantasy

A Moving Picture World Presentation
Devised by Colby Harriman

TALES of romance are as much a part of Southern Spain as the picturesque landscape. There is a particular fascination of this section which has been caught by poets, composers and artists, and a wealth of subject matter is available to the producer who desires a colorful production, one which is simple to mount, and will be popular with his patrons.

This subject is devised to translate some of the color in scene and action which is found in the ways of Southern Spain.

The setting depicts a section of a patio, the gateway leading from the highway. The arch and adjoining walls tell the tale of age, the stone work and masonry being worn and jagged. The distant landscape, with white buildings, red-roofed, in a setting of dark leaved olive trees, and a verdant background, fit as a cameo into the deep blue sky, which is beautiful with soft clouds traveling slowly across the surface. Foliage, flowers and vines are arranged to contrast with the stone work in the foreground. Some casks and water jars are used to dress the set up left.

The opening of the action is at evening, the warm tones of the sun cast a warm glow in the foreground, with a colorful treatment on the back drop. A distant bell is heard, ringing out the vesper hour, as a dark robed padre comes on from left and passes through the gateway and off towards right. A singer is heard coming up the roadway, singing a ballad. A girl, carrying a water jug, runs on from right, crosses to the gateway, looks in the direction of the singer, waves a greeting. The singer enters, finishing the song on stage. Other characters appear right and left, and a song to "Romance" is sung by the girl and boy with the ensemble. The lighting treatment takes on deeper tones as evening approaches, the foreground changing from light to darker amber and magenta blending.

A dashing young Spaniard enters, dressed in the conventional costume of a "toreador," is wildly acclaimed by the ensemble, and presently a charming senorita, dressed in a highly colored shawl and spangled dress, enters from right, greets the young man, and a spirited Spanish dance follows. The twanging strains of a guitar are heard off stage, the ensemble expectantly await the musician, and a comedy element is introduced when a goatherd appears and sings a humorous serenade, finishing with a comedy dance with one of the girls.

Some masqueraders, dressed in costumes of Spanish character, troupe in, and for a hilarious finish execute a spirited dance, which is featured with the induction of the young Spaniard and the senorita, with the ensemble as spectators and the goatherd occupying a point of vantage on the wall as he joins in the music and revelry.

The characters troupe off stage through the gateway, as the stars appear on cyclorama, and the tones deepen, highlighting the set which appears in silhouette. The two characters who first appeared end the action with a charming love song, as the sound of merriment of the others dies away in the distance.

Fig. I. GROUND PLAN OF SET

The plot is not scaled but is proportioned to permit its adjustment to any stage. An archway (II) is center, high wall (III) to right which carries off stage. In front of the wall at right center is a stone bench (IV). Up center, in the archway, a low wall (V) masks and carries off towards right, a boxed stone and piece (as shown in V) comes on stage at left of the archway, the up stage end adjoining the low wall up center. A low wall (VI) adjoins the arch up left center and carries off towards left. A ground row with set tree (VII) is up left center on the up stage side of the wall. A sky drop with the settlement buildings, church, and small set trees can be painted on the same piece or the buildings, trees, etc., form another set piece with a ground row and placed above the first row, using a blue cyclorama to back. A foliage border can be hung down in one. Foliage is used to trim the walls at extreme right and left.

SPECIFICATIONS OF UNITS

Fig. II. Stone Archway

Flat piece painted to give stone effect with a brick arch, the top surmounted with a cut out piece as outlined. The three turned figures can be made of compo board, painted and tacked on the upper piece. The thickness piece in the archway can be a piece of compo board, the edge torn out to give a jagged effect, and painted to give thickness. The thickness piece on the upper right end of the arch can be a flipper or a piece painted to give thickness and tacked on the end of the arch as shown.

Fig. III. High Stone Wall

Flat piece, high enough to mask characters who enter from right through the archway. Adjoins the arch at right of center, and carries off stage towards right. Foliage to trim right end. Flipper can be adjusted to give thickness if needed.

Fig. IV. Stone Bench

This bench is composed of three sections (for convenient striking) and occupies the area up right center in front of the wall. The ends can be made of compo board, painted to give stone effect, cut out in lines of "rock" and tacked on the end of the frame. The two ends or sides of the bench adjoin the center bench at the base of the wall. A back to the bench on the right of center side can also be made of compo board.

Fig. V. Low Wall and End

A low wall, placed on an angle up center in the archway and carries off towards right with an opening right of center wide enough to permit characters to enter and exit. The end piece should be constructed to adjoin the wall at the upper end of the arch, and curved on the right side. The upper wall can be a flat piece with a flipper for thickness and the end piece of boxed design.

Fig. VI. Low Wall

Fig. VII. Set Tree

This tree can be a part of the ground row set back of the arch and wall. A flat piece made of profile or compo board, cut out, and fastened to the row. The tree should be painted to represent a gnarled olive tree. The trunk can be given a papier mache treatment for thickness, and this might also be used in the tree-top area, the raised surfaces taking an excellent light.

Back Drop

The two trees seen through the archway and the church, houses and distant horizon can be painted on the back drop, or form a set piece, the various cut-outs being adjusted to the ground row or forming an individual set piece placed back of the ground row and set tree specified. In this case use a blue cyclorama to back and mask.

Foliage Border

A foliage border can be used to good advantage in the setting, hanging it down in one.

If desired, flowers and foliage vines can be used to dress the walls and extreme sides of the set.

SCENIC COLOR SCHEME

Warm tones, with splashes of color softly blended, should be the theme of the scenic artist. The walls, the archway, the bench should be painted in stone designs with reddish brown and gray blue combining the body of the set, the brick work in reddish tone over light brown, a deeper brown in the thickness piece of the archway, the highlighting in grayish-blue and faint purple. Light and dark green foliage border and pieces to trim the walls. The set tree painted a dark brown on a lined trunk, with a thick foliage top in highlighted dark and light greens. The base of the tree adjoining the ground row should be painted deep green, blending into a green brown and spreading to a green-yellow in the foreground, punctuated here and there with dark green clusters of vegetation. The back drop, a deep sky blue, with olive trees and a distant village painted at the lower end. The buildings, white structures with red roofs. Dark green foliage dotting spaces around the buildings. The olive trees painted similar to the set tree above noted, although deeper tones used. The distant country which forms the horizon painted with a deep blue green, and an intermediary green-yellow. The casks used to dress the foreground of the set should be painted a light brown, yellowish brown, and dark brown.

COSTUME SPECIFICATIONS:

(a) The Padre

Black robe as shown in Figure IX. Carries a large staff.

(b) The Male Singer

A peasant costume as shown in Figure X. Blue or black hat, a light blue shirt, dark trousers, red sash and golden brown or reddish brown scarf.

(c) The Female Singer

A peasant girl's costume as shown in Figure VIII. Vivid colored flowers in the hair, green kerchief hung loosely about the shoulders, light red dress, white stockings, dark shoes.

(d) Ensemble

Various color combinations in the style of the two singers.

(e) The Young Spaniard

Conventional "toreador" costume, of light material.

(f) The Senorita

Lace mantilla, silvered material. Flowered design shawl, dark spangled skirt, dark hosiery and shoes. She carries a large fan.

(g) The Goathered

Shown in Figure XI. Large black hat, with white flowing head scarf, worn under the hat. A hat strap adjusted to slip from underneath chin to nose during his song. A Red blanket skirt around dark trousers. Clumsy shoes, and "ringed" hose. Wears a large mustache, carries an old guitar.

(h) The Masqueraders

As shown in Fig. XII. White trousers and jackets, with gold braid design. Red blouse, and vari-colored sash. Head scarfs of colored silk worn under the broad dark hats, edged with white and gold board. Dancing slippers.

LIGHTING TREATMENT

The first movement depicts evening.

Use a blend of red and canary in the foots with a blue and red blend in the first border dimmed down to a degree sufficient to act as a base for the shaft lighting of orange amber from the left in one and the amber and canary from right in one. Back of the arch, highlight the set piece and tree with dark amber at the base and green at the top, the back drop or cyclorama in deep blue at the top, a green blue at the bottom with a cloud effect toned in a varigated scheme of canary and rose at the base of the drifting clouds.

As the action progresses, dim down the background in proportion to the foreground, with just a flash of orange amber punctuating a deep blue rift at the horizon, the edges of the set piece being high-lighted with a light blue, the cyclorama in deep blue, stars appearing on its face. The foreground can go into dark amber, with a rose blend from right in one which mingles with a purple tone back of the arch.

Amber, pink, magenta spots to work on the various characters during the song and dance numbers. Floods in amber and blue.

"Everyman's Wife"

William Fox's Interesting Story of Newly Married Life Has a Lot of Realistic Human Touches

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Under the intriguing title of "Everyman's Wife" which offers exceptional possibilities for exploitation tie-ups and teasers, William Fox is offering an interesting story of domestic life, with Elaine Hammerstein and Herbert Rawlinson in the leading roles.

The bais of the picture is the idea that the newly launched bark of matrimony can be very easily wrecked by extremely little things, particularly if small incidents are allowed to arouse jealousy and suspicion which are easily fed by circumstances which while apparently damaging are entirely innocent.

There is a lot of good human stuff in this picture and especially in the early reels the characters act just like real people. The starting of the quarrel between husband and wife over a cat and showing how this brought about unfounded jealously is a good touch, and it has been developed with good psychology.

In fact, the first part of the picture is more than usually entertaining, and as a whole it should please for it is better than the average program attraction. Had the latter reels held up as well, it would have been a humdinger. Plausibility has been sacrificed to bring about the desired effect, and as a consequence, the action of the leading characters is not so convincing. For a story depicting real everyday life, it would hardly seem probable that the wife would have invited the other woman to see her husband making love to her or that the ruse of having the husband make love in the dark to his own wife thinking it was another woman would have worked. The early part of the picture, however, is human, realistic and logical enough to carry the story and make it good entertainment.

Elaine Hammerstein and Herbert Rawlinson are well cast in the leading roles, Miss Hammerstein's work being especially good. Robert Cain as the philandering husband and Dorothy Phillips as his wife both give good performances.

Cast

Mrs. Randolph.....Elaine Hammerstein

Story

During the period following their honeymoon little differences crop up between the Randolph's. For instance, Mrs. likes cats but hubby does not and they have a spat over it. A few days after the cat ran away Randolph sees a cat and chases it next door. Mrs. Bradin informs him it is her cat. Mrs. Randolph sees them talking and gets jealous as her husband has left the office early. Randolph's car breaks down and Mrs. Bradin gives him a lift, they are arrested for speeding and Mrs. Randolph gets so jealous that Randolph goes to live at the club. His wife starts an affair with Bradin to get even and finally frames a scene, inviting Mrs. Bradin. The latter tells her that Bradin is always having affairs and convinces Mrs. Randolph that her husband really loves her. Bradin comes in and declares his love for his own wife in the dark, believing it is Mrs. Randolph. Randolph returns and his wife admits she has been foolish in her suspicions and they become reconciled.

"The Desert Flower"

Colleen Moore the Whole Show in First National Comedy Drama From Stage Play

Reviewed by Sumner Smith

Colleen Moore is the whole show in "The Desert Flower," Don Mullally's stage success which First National has made into a picture. June Mathis, who wrote it for the screen, has filled it full of opportunities for Colleen's light comedy and Director Irving Cummings has turned out a generally smooth-running picture.

From the opening of the picture, where Colleen is seen at home in a freight car in the desert, wearing a man's derby, caring for a baby and a chicken and bossing the tough section foreman, until the closing scenes that hint of melodrama but turn quickly back into comedy, the star's work can only be described as delightful. Every turn and twist in the plot, every bit of the backgrounds, was designed especially that she might shine, and shine she does.

The story has little to commend it but Colleen's work quite cleverly glosses over its weaknesses. Its chief value lies in Miss Mathis' many clever touches affording Colleen chances to be funny, and Colleen is so funny that most of the time the audience will watch her and enjoy her without caring whether there is any story or not.

The main theme is the regeneration of a youthful drunkard through the girl's sympathetic encouragement. At times, principally toward the end, the picture threatens to become highly dramatic, but it doesn't last long. Colleen has real emotional depth but she's such a great little humorist that they couldn't let her be serious too long.

Lloyd Hughes as the drunkard is the star's chief foil and he does acceptable work. Kate price has a good comedy part and Frank Brownlee is an excellent villain. The other players perform efficiently.

Story

Maggie Fortune lives in a freight car on a railroad that men are putting through the desert. Mike Dyer is her father-in-law. Rance Conway, heavy-drinking son of New York society, awakens her sympathy, and after a fight with Dyer she follows him to a gold mining town. Rance repeatedly breaks his promise to stop drinking, but Maggie does not despair of curing him. She stakes him and he goes prospecting, to return just as Dyer finds Maggie and threatens her. He has mastered his habit and Maggie agrees to marry him.

"Tearin' Loose"

Wally Wales Is New Hero in Fast Moving Western Released Through Artclass

Reviewed by Tom Waller

"Tearin' Loose" is one of those rip-snortin' westerns where the thought is concentrated upon perpetual action. Audiences that like up-and-at-'em, slap-bang, rough-and-tumble, hero-conquers-in-end pictures should give this offering a big hand. Incidentally it introduces a new hero for this type of film. His name is Wally Wales. He has a nice personality, a manner that is both refined and determined, is a stunt athlete, can use his mitts, ride a horse and make love. Action Pictures, Inc. produced it and Weiss Bros. Artclass is releasing it.

The story, although of a well known type, is touched up with human interest as well as thrills galore. It starts off like a comedy but this impression is allowed to prevail only for a few feet when a sloughing match ensues between the hero and the villain. The hero arouses one's curiosity by insisting upon maintaining a strange silence which causes him to be jailed at one time and suspected of an attempted burglary at another.

The villain and his sister, a wholesome but susceptible blonde, masquerade as relatives of a wealthy rancher. The hero later appears and finally succeeds in proving his identity as the true relative. In another fight which takes place between the two men on a precipice the hero finally succeeds in ex-terminating his adversary. A good suspense leads up to this final encounter which affords a nice and well-timed climax.

Length, 5,000 feet.

Story

Matt Harris frames Wally Blake and uses a letter to identify him as a relative of Dad Burns, a wealthy rancher. Harris and his sister Sally, as the imposters, are living on the Burns' ranch when Wally appears. Harris is caught while robbing the safe by Wally but throws suspicion upon the hero. Dad is waylaid by a tramp accomplice of Harris but beats him to the draw. Wally's knife is found in the cabin and he is suspected of the killing. Dad learns the true story after Harris falls off a cliff in a fight with Wally. The hero and Sally then find happiness on the ranch for the rest of their days.

"Any Woman"

Treasure Hunt and Clever Subtitles are Bright Spots in Henry King Paramount

Reviewed by Epes W. Sargent

Although it figures only casually in the plot advancement, the Treasure Hunt, which has been an English craze for more than a year, is the chief feature of "Any Woman," adapted from a story by Arthur Somers Roche. The cross country chase in a variety of vehicles from archaic Fords to scooters give a reel of very lively and amusing action with much real comedy, but the idea is dropped as abruptly as it was worked up, and the story moves back to its threadbare theme and its almost inevitable climax.

Apart from the hunt and some unusually clever sub-titles, there is not much of novelty in the story as told on the screen, and an unusually good cast is almost thrown away on a loosely constructed and never gripping story in which the plot values are poorly estimated. There is but a single scene, almost entirely without action, to motive the love interest and to account for the change from disdain to love on the part of the heroine and so the interest is never fully gained.

The story may interest through the hunt, but it seems almost incredible that Henry King should have been responsible for such a colorless direction. Miss Terry is excellent in the leading role, but a minor actress could as easily have carried the part, and much the same holds good for the other members of the cast. They are given virtually no opportunity. The picture may get over nicely in the smaller houses, but it is far from measuring up to the King standard.

Story

Ellen Linden, returning from a finishing school, finds that her father has lost his fortune. She is met at the station by Tom in a car decorated with gaudy advertising for "Here's How," a soft drink. She is disdainful of her surroundings, but rises to the emergency and obtains a position in an office. Her feelings toward Tom change, and she seeks to interest her employers in Tom's new drink. They promise financial backing but they are more interested in her. Both partners made advances, Egbert in cave man fashion and James in the more subtle attack of sending her to his summer home to make an inventory. When he overhears Tom telling Ellen that the new backing will enable them to marry, he withdraws his promise. In a treasure hunt, in which Ellen is Rand's partner, they are delayed and do not return home until early morning. Mrs. Rand threatens divorce and Tom breaks with Ellen, but realizes his error and Rand backs the soft drink company as a wedding present.

"White Thunder"

Yakima Canutt Appears as Cowboy, Mollycoddle and Masked Rider in Newest Picture for F. B. O.

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

As the newest number of a series produced by Ben Wilson and distributed through F. B. O., Yakima Canutt, the rodeo champion, is presented in a story by Kingsley Benedict who also appears in the picture, called "White Thunder."

The picture starts off with the promise of plenty of typical western action, for immediately the hero is planted as an expert horseman, a crack shot and a good fighter. Very soon he goes East to college and returns a regular mollycoddle and dude. Soon the story swings into one of the familiar variations of action melodramas, that in which a mysterious masked and gowned figure adopts a kind of Robin Hood role, striking error to the evildoer and aiding the oppressed.

Characters of this kind depend upon their romantic glamour and the dash and action with which they accomplish their raids, but the hero in this production seems to lack this pep. Also, more than the usual strain is put on the credulity of the spectator by asking him to believe that, although the hero was planted as a regular he-man at first no one, not even his sweetheart has any suspicion that he is the masked rider, although on several occasions he is found nearby after the rider disappears. Even in one case where he escapes into a room where there is no other exit the characters do not question his statement that he was merely masquerading as the rider.

In the attempt to bring about the desired ending with the hero in the post of sheriff, formerly held by his father, the title-writer has overplayed in several instances, with his explanations, as why the hero was not killed when the villain had the drop on him and these titles are liable to cause amusement although intended to be serious.

Yakima Canutt can hold his own when it comes to Western stuff, but he seems out of his element as a swell-dressed mollycoddle in flannels, with cap, cane, etc., and on the whole this picture fails to measure up to the standard of the average western, though it may appeal to some dyed-in-the-wool fans.

Story

During a feud between the cattle and sheep men, Sheriff Richards is murdered by a man with the ace of spades tattooed on his arm. His son, Chick, a squareshooting he-man, goes away to college and at the time of his father's murder returns a regular dude to the disgust of everyone, even his sweetheart, Alice, and apparently makes no attempt to solve his father's murder. Soon a mysterious white-robed rider begins to champion the sheep men, who are hounded by the cowboys under Black Morgan, each time leaving a warning scribbled on the ace of spades. Morgan finally attacks Alice, The White Rider appears, throws off his disguise and it proves to be Chick. In the fight Chick finds that Morgan is his father's murderer. Chick becomes the new sheriff and arrests Morgan, and Alice is proud to become his wife.

"The Crimson Runner"

Female Robin Hood Role Essayed by Priscilla Dean in Hunt Stromberg Melodrama

Reviewed by Tom Waller

Seldom, even in the most fantastic novels, is there to be found such a character as that essayed by Priscilla Dean in "The Crimson Runner," a Hunt Stromberg and Charles R. Rogers presentation released by Producers Distributing Corporation. Miss Dean presents a new kind of female Robin Hood—a super-woman whose quest for vengeance leads her to rob the rich to feed the poor. She openly wages her banditry and the police are made to appear like so many mollycoddles. Her bravado at times is extreme, but this is in accord with the plot, which aspires only for things superlatively dramatic.

Post-war Vienna is described by the subtitling as the city in which all of the action is laid. Some scenes are very Parisian, especially the sub-cellars of Apache-like individuals who have acclaimed Bianca Schreber, the Crimson Runner, as their leader. Bianca, portrayed by Miss Dean, receives her title after a janitor, who has burned her father and attempted to attack her, becomes police commissioner.

A lengthy amorous episode with a Count delays the realization of her vengeance. When the time does come in a boudoir adjoining a ballroom, the Crimson Runner, hitherto apparently invincible, seems to lose her ingenuity and weakly submits to a strapping by the villainous commissioner. It remains for the Count to rescue the maiden by running a sword through the inspirer of her thieving career.

The story, as adapted, has its action in spurts. There are intermittent lulls, especially noticeable during periods of drawing room conversation between the Crimson Runner and the Count. Of the many robberies and hold-ups accredited Bianca in the sub-titles, we recall only one being depicted in the action. The production, however, offers a chance for colorful posters and exploitation. It should draw the fans and provide average entertainment for the majority.

Bianca Schreber sets out to avenge herself upon a janitor whose attempted attack upon her resulted in the death of her father. She becomes a bandit, the terror of the rich and the police and a worthy missionary to the poor. The janitor becomes police commissioner and Count Bauer, with whom Bianca has become enamored, slays him in a duel. The new regime pardons the female bandit and she finds happiness in the halls of royalty.

"The Price of Pleasure"

Virginia Valli and Norman Kerry in Universal-Jewel Story of Poor Girl's Romance

Reviewed by Sumner Smith

In "The Price of Pleasure," a Universal-Jewel with Virginia Valli and Norman Kerry, motion picture audiences will enjoy one of their favorite plots—the romance of a bargain counter girl with a blue blood, their marriage and the subsequent unpleasantness caused by the rich youth's mother and sister. The picture has been well directed by Edward Sloman and boasts a fine supporting cast, including Louise Fazenda, T. Roy Barnes and George Fawcett.

The highly dramatic story has been lightened by many humorous touches. Miss Fazenda especially is clever in eliciting comedy from a servant girl role, while Barnes, as an apartment house superintendent, burlesques his part effectively. Kate Lester is well cast as the blue blood mother, and James O. Barrows and Marie Astaire have good parts.

Many fans like these romantic stories of the rise in social plane of a poor girl, and this one, developed along usual lines, should please them. Virginia Valli injects much emotion into her work and is always charming to look upon. Norman Kerry is the same handsome, self-possessed hero that he has been in previous Universal successes. Both Miss Valli and he look their parts.

Sloman has given "The Price of Pleasure" smooth direction and has photographed it against attractive backgrounds. These consist of a department store during a bargain day rush, a mansion, cafes and a rooming house.

Story

Linnie Randall bemoans the fact she has never had a good time. Garry Schuyler, dressed as a mechanic, enters the department store and overhears her. She accepts his invitation to dinner and he astonishes her by calling in a limousine. They agree on a week's round of pleasure. At the end of the week they marry. Mrs. Schuyler returns from Florida and makes life miserable for Linnie, who runs away. Accidentally struck by Garry's car, she is rushed to the hospital. He thinks her dead and suffers a brain attack. His mother takes him to Europe. Linnie, after her baby is born, becomes a dancing sensation. "The Little French Girl"

Mary Brian Scores Again and Shares Honors With Alice Joyce in Entertaining Paramount Film

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

From the audience standpoint, probably the most interesting point about "The Little French Girl," Herbert Brenon's newest production for Paramount is the fact that it again presents on the screen little Mary Brian, who created such a decidedly favorable impression by her impersonation of Wendy in "Peter Pan." So we might as well go on record right now by saying that she will not disappoint her admirers. Her role here is naturally different from the fairy-like one of Wendy, and is that of a decidedly unsophisticated ingenue, but is marked by the same unaffected and unassuming charm of innocent girlhood.

Because of the prominence of her role, Alice Joyce, as her mother, shares the limelight with Mary. Miss Joyce's role is that of a woman who is as sophisticated as her daughter is innocent, a woman with whom love is but a romantic episode lasting until a new hero comes along to arouse her fancy.

The story is based on the contrast between the severe and rugged British ideas of love and the supposedly more free and easy attitude of Continental Europe, and the drama arises from the fact that from the standpoint of the British hero and his people the mother is not morally what she should be.

A smoothly built scenario providing good continuity holds the interest although a lack of action and tendency of the director to spend much time in grouping and posing his players and telling the majority of the story in the subtitles causes a noticeable slowness of movement. There is, however, unusually beautiful photgraphy, with striking sets and exterior shots and good character development. While there is naturally no suspense as to the final outcome, it is entertaining to watch how it is worked out.

Because of the character of the mother, the picture will probably appeal more to sophisticated audiences, but Mary Brian's charm and the smoothness and beauty of the production should make it entertaining for all classes of patrons even though some may not care for this type of story.

In a different role from usual, Alice Joyce does good work and her dignity and restraint goes far to establishing sympathy for an otherwise unsympathetic character. Neil Hamilton, as the hero, effectively portrays the idea of the staid dignified type of Britisher, who seems somewhat cold and austere from an American standpoint. Esther Ralston, who appeared as the mother in "Peter Pan," gives a good performance as a girl who reveres the memory of her dead lover.

Story

During the war Owen Bradley, pleading that his leave has been cancelled, fails to visit his home and sweetheart, Toppie, in England but spends his time with Madame Vervier, with whom he is infatuated. Owen is killed in action but in accordance with his promise, his brother Giles takes Madame Vervier's daughter to his mother in England, where she soon becomes a favorite and finally engaged to a viscount. In the meantime, Giles, who has always loved Toppie, tries in vain to win her and she finally enters a convent. To prevent her and aid Giles, Alix, Madame Vervier's daughter, tells Toppie the truth and Toppie denounces Madame Vervier as a bad woman. Giles has already learned that his brother was only one of many with whom Madame had affairs. This truth finally becomes known in England and the viscount breaks his engagement with Alix. When Toppie enters a convent, Giles realizes that he really loves Alix and returning to France finds Andre is attentive to her. He soon, however, learns the truth that Alix has always loved him (Giles), so he takes her in his arms.

"If Marriage Fails"

F. B. O. Story of Married Life Worked Out on Interesting and Out-of-the Ordinary Lines

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

A story of what happened when a couple found that their marriage was not a success is unfolded in the C. Gardner Sullivan production "If Marriage Fails," which is being offered by F. B. O. with Jacqueline Logan and Clive Brook in the featured roles.

Brook, characterized as a fountain pen for his wife, who is described as a wealthy nit-wit, finds sympathy and understanding in the person of a fortune-teller, portrayed by Miss Logan. His wife is of the type who thinks it is O K to carry on an affair with other men but resents her husband's attentions to the fortune-teller. She uses underhand means to break up this match, which proves to have a back kick and the result is divorce and the marriage of the husband and fortune-teller.

While the basic idea is not new it has been given interesting treatment and the fact that there is not the usual reconciliation is an out-of-the-ordinary, but decidedly logical development.

The heroine may lose sympathy with some patrons because she gets the husband away from his wife, but this is very often the way it happens in real life. John Ince has given the picture good direction, introducing touches of "behind the scenes" in the fortune-tellers home, which are both human and amusing, and effective pictorial sequences of a supposed New York cabaret with gondolas in real water.

Jacqueline Logan, noted as a beauty, does very good work in the character role of the Italian fortune-teller and Mathilde Comont as her fat companion contributes a fine and amusing performance. Brook is congenially cast and Belle Bennett is effective in the unsympathetic role of the wife except for a tendency to overact at times. Jean Hersholt contributes an excellent characterization of a doctor who admires the heroine, and his quiet restrained grief when he is finally turned down is one of the finest bits we have ever seen on the screen.

A lack of action at times slows up the development and caused the interest to lag somewhat, and it does not seem entirely consistent to have a woman whose profession is fortune-telling so easily deceived by the wife. The picture as a whole, however, is interesting and somewhat out of the ordinary and should prove a pleasing attraction for the average patron.

"The Royal Four-Flush"

(Pathe—Comedy—Two Reels)

The "Spat" Family selects a very elegant background, that representing the throne room of a European monarch, for their latest offering, 'The Royal Four-Flush." A king and his subjects are very much perturbed over several mysterious boxes from Detroit when the "Spats," on a tour of the continent, happen by. They are called in and the mystery turns out to be a very simple one for them—that of putting a flivver together. Their mechanical endeavors may appeal to some audiences as thoroughly amusing. The king is made to appear a very ludicrous figure before his subjects, having as difficult a time to board the flivver as the average Eastener would to break in a broncho. He is finally hurled head over heels into a fountain while the machine, with the "Spats," courses through the palace walls, upsetting a curious mob in the streets outside. The king fires a canon which wrecks the car and sends the "Spats" appealing to an American warship for aid. The comedy as a whole may be considered well up to the standard maintained by this trio of comedians.—T. W.

"Honeymoon Limited"

(Fox—Comedy—Two Reels)

In this Fox Comedy, Lee Moran has the leading role. He appears as a real estate salesman who gets up a scheme of running a honeymoon special and giving away lots to newlyweds. The manager is a crook and hides the fact that an oil company has offered big money for the land. The crook uses various schemes to stop the train, starts fights among the passengers, etc., and succeeds to such an extent that when the owner in an auto catches up with it no one is left but Lee and his sweetheart and Lee claims the credit. There are a number of ingenious situations that will get the laughs, especially those aboard the train. An amusing touch is having the train crew wear wings like Cupid. It should prove an entertaining comedy for the majority of fans who like slapstick.—C. S. S.

"Air Tight"

(Educational—Comedy—Two Reels)

As usual with Christie Comedies, this one starring Bobby Vernon is built on a definite idea with the gags and slapstick being worked into the situations and not just thrown in regardless. This time, however, the plot is very slight, the action dealing entirely with a newly married couple who go in an auto on a camping tour. The girl's mother insists on going with them and the comedy grows out of the trouble she causes and the difficulties Bobby gets into with a neighbor in attempting to put up his tent, etc. The situations seem somewhat forced and there is considerable sameness in the action. Bobby Vernon has been seen to much better advantage than in this comedy which is only mildly amusing.—C. S. S.

There is a clever touch at the beginning of this Out of the Inkwell Cartoon, when Max Fleischer draws a number of "13's" and they dissolve into the little clown Ko-Ko. Fleischer then leaves Ko-Ko in charge of the negro porter and the clown proceeds to investigate a haunted house. He and his dog have some amusing experiences with the spooks. "Going Great"

(Educational—Comedy—Two Reels)

Almost always in a Jack White production there is something novel and clever, either a twist to the action, or gags or stunts along a new line. In this Mermaid Comedy distributed through Educational, Mr. White's ingenuity is shown in the second reel. The hero accidentally gets his clothes torn off and his B V D's are mistaken for racing togs. In trying to get away from the villain he outdistances the other runners, a bee stings him and as a result he breaks the jumping record. Similar accidents cause him to eclipse everybody in the pole vault and high jump and he is literally covered with medals. The entire comedy, in which Eddie Nelson has the leading role, deals with college life with Eddie as the tailor who incurs the displeasure of the coach by burning his trousers. Eddie and the porter and one of the professors are initiated into a secret society which gives opportunity to make them do all sorts of stunts. There is the average amount of amusing slapstick and while this hardly ranks up to White's best it should prove a satisfactory comedy for the majority.—C. S. S.

"Super-Hooper-Dyne Lizzies"

(Pathe—Comedy—Two Reels)

The gag of flivvers being operated by radio has been used before but it is handled with a little more thoroughness of detail in "Super-Hooper-Dyne Lizzies," a Mack Sennett offering with Billy Bevan, Andy Clyde and Lillian Knight prominently arrayed in the cast of funsters. A stunt that should provoke quite a few laughs in nearly any theatre is when Billy pushes his flivver and a dozen other cars over a precipice. The radio director of flivvers gives a dinner in honor of himself at which the guests appear in masquerade costumes. The sudden discovery that the radio shop is being robbed leads the guests to frighten an invading negro into a cloud of dust. The slapstick stuff injected at this point should amuse to a high extent.—T. W.

"Speak Freely"

(Universal—Comedy—Two Reels)

This Century Comedy featuring Edna Marian is a variation of the familiar idea of a man who suddenly has to produce his wife to please his relatives. This time he really has one but she has left him after a quarrel and he presses the maid into service. Her sweetheart, the iceman, gets jealous, the real wife returns, and there is a regular mix-up all along the line. During the course of the action the wife dresses as the maid and makes it miserable for hubby and his supposed wife and the iceman has to kiss her to keep up appearances. The wife pours ice cream down the maid's back and creates havoc generally While there is nothing new in the idea, it should be good for quite a few laughs.—C. S. S.

"Nearly Rich"

(Universal—Comedy—One Reel)

The second of the series of Universal comedies starring Charles Puffy, Universal's extremely fat star, shows him in the role of a clerk who incurs the boss' displeasure by always being late. The boss gets very kind all of a sudden when a letter comes announcing a legacy for Puffy and sends him out to get a new outfit at his expense. Puffy receives the legacy, a clock. The clothing man takes back all his clothes, the boss starts to bail him out and Puffy hits him with the clock, which breaks, disclosing a bunch of bills, and Puffy collapses with joy. It is a picture of average amusement value.—C. S. S.

Pathe Review No. 22

(Pathe—Magazine—One Reel)

"The House of Mercy," dealing with the Hospice of St. Bernard in the Alps heads "Pathe Review No. 22." Its action is unique since it deals with the rescue work of the monks in the hospice and the great assistance which is furnished them by huge St. Bernard dogs. "The Sweetheart of Hawaii" is an interesting screen study of how raw sugar is refined. The Pathecolor is of Richmond, Va., one of the "Visiting Our Own America" series.—T. W.

"Kicked About"

(Universal—Comedy—Two Reels)

This is the first of a series of two-reelers made by Century featuring Eddie Gordon who has appeared in supporting roles in a few previous issues made by this company. The action follows along conventional lines, opening with Eddie being hurled out of his home by an irate stepfather. Mounting an old nag he journeys to the city. The horse eats fruit off of a stand. This starts a row with the owner which ends in Eddie being hailed to court where he is promised his freedom if he captures a big desperado. He of course succeeds. It is slapstick comedy in which Eddie does some stunts and takes considerable mauling and hard knocks and is of average amusement value.—C. S. S.

"Riders of the Kitchen Range"

(Pathe—Comedy—One Reel)

Earl Mohan and Billy Engle have a difficult time in delivering a kitchen range in "Riders of the Kitchen Range." Earl does all of the work and in doing so provides some laughs with his awkwardness. At their destination a cook is masquerading as the mistress. She is quite attractive in her attempts to portray the role of a "siren." The comedy from here on possesses much of the familiar slapstick material. It should please the average audience.—T. W.

"The End of the World"

(Pathe—Cartoon—One Reel)

Cartoonist Terry utilizes the recent newspaper stories about a fanatic who predicted the end of the world with his animals as the characters. The creatures of his pen somehow or other all manage to crowd into an airship. Skunks cause the ship to return to earth and the animals to forget about the rumor. The cartoon should provide laughs for every patron.—T. W.

"Navy Blue Days"

(F. B. O.—Comedy—Two Reels)

Stan Laurel is the star of this two reeler, appearing as a boob sailor who learning that his superior officer has an invitation for dinner, dogs his footsteps and finally slips into the home of the girl, a Spaniard. A jealous lover starts things and there is a chase ending with the officer licking several of his pursuers, and Stan taking the credit. The situations are familiar and are mildly amusing, but they have been held too long, in fact there is not enough material to hold up for two reels.—C. S. S.

"Letter from a Rubberneck in London"

(Red Seal—Scenic—One Reel)

This issue of Gems of the Screen is a scenic of London in the form of a letter from an American to his cousin, each place that he mentions being shown. The letter also mentions interesting facts about the places of interest which include Piccadilly, Ludgate Circus, Regent Street, Trafalgar Square, Buckingham Palace, St. James, Westminster, the Tower, etc.—C. S. S.

"Wake Up"

(Educational—Comedy—One Reel)

While Cliff Bowes who usually plays the lead in Cameo Comedies appears in this one, Eddie Nelson really has the more prominent role. Eddie is a vaudeville performer who gets thrown out with his partner and they go to a two-family bungalow for a rest. The other part of the house is occupied by Cliff and Virginia Vance and the comedy is based almost entirely on the fact that the walls are so thin that in putting up pictures, the ones on the other side fall down and finally the wall breaks through. There is also some comedy with a flivver. A fairly amusing offering.—C. S. S.

band, Joe, waits outside. Nadio, unable to read the crystal, comes out and is attracted to Joe. Mrs. Woodbury arranges to have Nadio as an attraction at her party. Soon Joe and Nadio are firm friends. One night he takes her to a new place and meets his wife with Deering, a parlor sheik with whom she is having an affair. Mrs. Woodbury gets jealous and going to Nadio makes her promise to give Joe up, telling her she is to have a baby. A few days later Nadio and Dr. Gallini find Deering and Mrs. Woodbury on the roadside escaping from an inn that has been raided and brings her to Nadio's home as she is supposed to be hurt. Nadio learns that Mrs. Woodbury has lied to her and phones for Joe, who tells his wife their marriage was a mistake, that he will arrange for a divorce. He then takes Nadio in his arms.

"The White Monkey"

Barbara La Marr Has Typical Role in First National Adaptation of Novel by John Galsworthy

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

A novel with the same title, by John Galsworthy the celebrated playwright and author, furnishes the basis for "The White Monkey" Associated Pictures Corporation's newest release through First National starring Barbara LaMarr.

The signficance of the title lies in the fact that a painting of a white monkey eating fruit and scattering the rinds occupies a prominent part in the story and is symbolical of the type of role portrayed by the star.

An introductory subtitle refers to the spirit of unrest and the constant urge for something we know not what which grips rich and poor alike and this idea is worked out with two sets of characters, a publisher and his wife who like the white monkey drinks the fruit of life and scatters its rinds, holding on to the love of a former suitor, and on the other hand a poor employee of the husband, who steals to provide for his sick wife.

In the earlier part these two stories are carried along by switching from one to the other, but when the poor wife to obtain money poses for the rich wife's artist lover, the two stories dovetail and the blind faith of the poor man in his wife has its effect on the others.

Director Rosen has not entirely succeeded in clearly bringing out either the idea of the unrest or the enigma of the painting of the white monkey and much of the footage is consumed before the plot gets well under way and its trend definitely established.

There are some good touches of human interest and comedy as well as moments of pathos in the plight of the poor couple but little drama except in one scene where the wealthy husband finds his wife with the artist and she blackens her character to save the other wife who is innocent.

At least one of the situations between husband and wife is a bit daring from the sex angle, and for the husband to have doubted his wife for so long it seems his suspicious are finally very easily allayed.

The story as a whole, however, succeeds in holding the attention and provides Barbara LaMarr with a familiar type of role in which she has opportunities to wear striking costumes and should appeal to her admirers.

The star has the assitance of a competent cast with Thomas Holding as her husband and Henry Victor as the artist-lover. Flora LeBreton as the poor man's sick wife has few opportunities. Charles Mack as the poor chap and Tammany Young as his friend are both good. Tammany and George Marion, who appears as the heroine's father, are responsible for effective comedy.

Story

Fleur Forsyte marries Michael Mont, whose best friend, Wilfred Desert, falls in love with Fleur, who continues to encourage him. Desert tells Michael of his love for Fleur and that he will fight to get her away from him. Fleur professes ignorance. Michael, a kindly man, fires Bicket, his shipping clerk, for stealing books and Bicket starts peddling balloons. His wife, Victorine, is ashamed of this and goes to Michael for help. He sends her to Desert and she poses for a nude picture. Bicket is enraged and, doubting his wife, goes to Michael, who takes him to the artist, Desert. They find Fleur there and she assures Bicket his wife is innocent as she was there every time she posed. Michael tells Desert he has won and goes away. Fleur throws Desert over as she realizes she really loves Michael. She informs her father there will be a child and he tells Michael, who forgives Fleur but is haunted with doubt as to its paternity. A letter from Desert proclaiming Fleur's innocence convinces him.

"Feature Series" Continues As Feature of Pathe Review for Season of 1925-26

PATHE REVIEW'S comprehensive production program for the 1925-1926 season assures its continued popularity in the "screen magazine" field. An outstanding feature of the new season's plans will be the continuance of the feature series, with installments of each series appearing in successive issues of the Pathe Review. This policy recently inauguranted by Editor Emmanuel Cohen has proved to be an overwhelming success and has met with the approbation of both exhibitor and public from the outstart. So favorable has been the reception accorded this plan that it will be pursued during the new season with further elaborations and improvements.

In line with the very successful Pathe Review release of the Andrews-American Museum Expedition into Mongolia, under the title, "The Origin of Man," there will be released shortly the film story of Count de Prorok's Expeditions in Northern Africa—searching out the dead cities of the Sahara Desert, excavating astounding Punic relics from the site of ancient Carthage and Utica, and delving beneath the sea for a sunken city newly discovered. Staff Cameraman Maurice Kellerman is now with the expedition, recording all activities.

Another feature series now in production for fall and winter release is a series of new-type miscroscope films, made by Louis H. Tolhurst, acknowledged as the foremost motion picture microscopic expert in the industry. Mr. Tolhurst's work on short length subjects will appear exclusively in Pathe Review.

Color novelties in production include a brand-new series by Arthur C. Pillsbury, of Yosemite National Park. Mr. Pillsbury has taken the "Life of American Wild Flowers" as his subject, and by "time-lapse" photography has produced a startlingly beautiful series in which the life of each flower—"moving" and "breathing"—is shown.

The new "multiple-image" camera invented by Staff Cameraman Alvin C. Knechtel—the sensation of the past few months in technical circles—has been improved, and additional "mystery-pictures" will shortly be available. The multiple-image stories will continue to be a strong feature in the Review schedule.

Willard Vander Veer, whose "Prettiest Girl I Know" series proved one of the most successful features of the past season's program is preparing an unusually entertaining schedule of subjects designed to appeal especially to the feminine portion of motion picture audiences. "The Brides of All Lands," just finishing in production, will be released through the summer to fall; and another "girl" series, featuring the beauties of Broadway, will follow.

The helpful side of short-subjects—the sort of picture that gives you something more than entertainment—will be represented by a series now in production by Staff Cameraman Charles Charlton. It will be called "Everyman's Home." It is being produced in conjunction with Secretary Hoover of the Department of Commerce, and the Small House Service Bureau, Inc., a non-profit organization of architects. This promises to have unusual audience appeal in view of the universal interest centered in the ownership of a home—an ambition shared by the great majority of the masses that daily patronize the motion-picture theatre.

Single "feature" stories now in production for fall release constitute a remarkable series in themselves. Only subjects of universal interest, selected from all over the world, will be included.

The Pathecolor section of the reel, a never-failing standard since Pathe Review was begun five years ago, will be continued during the 1925-1926 season.

"Keeper of the Bees"

J. Leo Meehan, son-in-law of the late Gene Stratton-Porter, is at Arrowhead Springs with his company, taking the first shots on "The Keeper of the Bees" which he is directing for F. B. O. The Meehan unit will be at Arrowhead for about a week. With the signing of Josef Swickard, casting on the picture has been completed. In addition to Gene Stratton, the eleven year old granddaughter of the novelist who will play the role her distinguished grandmother wrote for her, Alyce Mills, Clara Bow and Robert Frazer will have important roles.

Bachmann Announces Deal for Schulberg N. Y. Distribution

J. G. BACHMANN, general manager of distribution for B. P. Schulberg Productions, this week closed an important deal with Sam Zierler, president of Commonwealth Film Service whereby that organization will handle the eighteen Schulberg releases for next season in the New York and Northern New Jersey territory. This will mark the Zierler's fourth year as the franchise holder for the pictures produced under B. P. Schulberg's supervision.

The contract just signed will give Common wealth local rights to the most important group of independent pictures announced for release next year. They include, "Shenandoah," the American stage classic; "The Plastic Age" by Percy Marks; "Lew Tyler's Wives," by Wallace Irwin; "With This Ring," by Fanny Heaslip Lea; "Parisian Love," by F. Oakley Crawford; "The Girl Who Wouldn't Work," by Gertie D. Wentworth-James; "Horses and Women"; "When A Woman Reaches Forty," by Royal A. Baker; "Eden's Fruit" by John Goodrich; "The Worst Woman" by Larry Evans; "Shopworn," by Patricia Wetherill; "The Aristocrat," by Larry Evans; "Dancing Days," by J. J. Bell; "Studies in Wives" by Mrs. Belloc Lowndes; "Exclusive Rights" by Evelyn Campbell; "Shamful Behavior?" by Mrs. Belloc Lowndes; "The Romance of a Million Dollars," by Elizabeth Dejans and "The Other Woman's Story" by Peggy Gaddis.

There are several large deals pending for France and Germany and Central Europe which Mr. Mountan expects to materialize within the next ten days.

Another very big deal completed by Richmount Pictures is that with Liberty Film Company of Havana, Cuba, in which Liberty Film Company secured the rights for Cuba for sixty-four Richmont Pictures; 2 serials, "Battling Brewster" and "Secret Service Sanders" and eleven two-reel Butterfly Comedies. The pictures sold for Cuba include the entire output of Rayart Pictures Corporation and six Kenneth McDonalds; six Frank Merrill, six Bill Pattons; six Ken Maynards.

An important deal for Argentine and Chile concluded just before Mr. Mountan sailed for Europe is also herewith announced whereby Sociedad General Cinematografica acquired from Richmount Pictures, Inc., the following pictures: "Law or Loyalty," starring Lawson Harris; eight five-reel western starring Ken Maynard; five James Oliver Curwoods; the Rayart Picture "Winning A Woman," starring Jack Perrin; "Safeguarded," starring Eva Novak; twelve Rayart Billy Sullivans; eight Rayart Jack Perrins and twelve two-reels Butterfly Comedies.

For the same territory of Argentine and Chile to New York Film Exchange of Buenos Aires, Argentine, 8 five-reel dramas starring Reed Howes and six five-reel Border pictures and six stunt dramas starring Richard Holt.

Pathe Gets Bout

Official motion-pictures of the Gene Tunney-Tom Gibbons battle at the Polo Grounds, New York, on Friday June 5, the winner of which will claim the right to contend for the heavyweight world title, will be photographed and released by Pathe according to the terms of a contract entered into by Elmer Pearson, Vice-President and General Manager of the Pathe Exchange, Inc., and the Polo Grounds Athletic Club; William Gibson, manager of Tunney; and Edward Kane, manager of Gibbons.

In this fistic encounter, Gene Tunney, of New York and Tom Gibbons, of St. Paul, are scheduled to box fifteen rounds.

This special Sporting feature will be produced by Pathe Exchange, Inc. For several days, Pathe cameramen have been taking training scenes of the fighters at their respective camps. Tunney is training at Saratoga Springs and Gibbons is getting into condition at Atlantic City. Both normal and slow-motion scenes are being taken.

On the evening of the fight, Pathe will cover the big sporting event from every angle with a large battery of cameras. Shots will be taken at the ringside and in both normal and slow-motion and every blow will be recorded from various angles.

The Pathe officials are greatly enthused over the contract to take the official pictures of this outstanding boxing event of the year. In accordance with the Federal law, the pictures will be distributed only in New York State.

Roosevelt Feature Shipped

Advices from Lester F. Scott, Jr., state that he has completed the second of the new series of Rough Riding Romances featuring Buddy Roosevelt. The negative and first print have been shipped and will arrive in the offices of Weiss Brothers' Artclass Pictures Corp., which will distribute the picture, some time next week. The picture will be released under the title of "The Galloping Jinx." In the cast are Buddy Roosevelt, Gloria Hellar, Ralph Whiting, Billie Bennett, J. Gordon Russell, Jack O'Brien, Louis Fitzroy, Martha Dudley, Charles Colby, Clyde McClary, Sam Blum and Leonard Trainor. The direction was in the hands of Robert Eddy and the story was by Betty Burbridge. The production is from the studios of Action Pictures, Inc., of which Lester F. Scott, Jr., is the head.

Get Print of "Crack o' Dawn"

"Crack O' Dawn," first of the new series of Harry J. Brown Productions starring Reed Howes, has arrived at the New York Office of Rayart and was pronounced an even superior picture to "Super Speed" in which Howes scored a big hit.

London Company Forms

United International Corporation Already Functioning

The United International Corporation, Ltd., of 175, Gt. Portland Street, London, England, was formed some weeks ago with a capitol of $250,000 for the purpose of buying and distributing pictures and obtaining scenarios by well known writers for film purposes.

This company has already made considerable progress, and its chairman, Sir Samuel Instone, and its managing directors, Mr. I. Jacobs and Mr. G. Instone, have spared no time in making themselves prominent in the film world. Mr. I. Jacobs was for many years a branch manager of the Stoll Film Co. Mr. G. Instone was connected, as far back as 1906, with the London & Provincial Elec. Theatres, Ltd., and the Express Film Service.

The policy of the U. I. C. is also to manufacture "Cartoons," and these are now being prepared for the world's markets. They include some comic characters which will become world-wide known under the U. I. C. trade mark.

American houses have not been slow in watching the progress of the U. I. C., and already many representatives have called at their offices with a view to fixing up workable schemes.

The object of the U. I. C. is to obtain an American Agency in England and they, having theatres of their own, can make themselves felt in booking any picture they consider should be a winner.

M-G-M's Trackless Train Gets Ovation on Massachusetts Run

AMERICA'S first Trackless Train has proved a sensation in New Bedford, Mass., where enormous crowds lined the streets and cheered the special on its arrival. Manager Dietz of the State Theatre, representatives of the press and a motorcycle escort provided by the municipality met the train at the city limits and accompanied it to the City Hall where the Mayor headed a reception committee comprised of city officials.

The Trackless Train, whose trip is being sponsored by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, then toured the principal streets, all of which were lined with curious and enthusiastic crowds. As the special passed the New Bedford Times building a bulletin was posted announcing its arrival. Several thousand people gathered about the train in front of the State Theatre, where it stopped for three hours. Thousands of folders were distributed. The press reported the occasion generously, and Manager Dietz of the State Theatre remarked that no circus parade could have drawn bigger crowds or attracted so much interest.

The train arrived in New Beford from Middleboro, where it was greeted also with enormous enthusiasm. The Park Theatre called an intermission to allow its patrons to inspect the special. In Bridgewater, Mass., the entire town turned out to crowd about the train when it drew up before the Princess Theatre.

In Brockton, Mass., the preceding stop, a tremendous ovation was given the train. With the Mayor and his party aboard the special drove through crowded streets. After a thorough canvas of the town the train drove to the Douglas shoe factories, where the president and officials of the company inspected the transport. Hundreds of workers were attracted to the windows by the bells and whistles of the train whose advent had been widely heralded by the press. On returning to the City Hall, pictures were taken by representatives of the local dailies of the Mayor and his party on the observation platform of the train, and the special then drove to the Colonial Theatre, where it was parked for an hour. Great throngs surrounded it here.

The special motorcycle police who escorted the train about Brockton were so impressed with the transport that they requested permission to accompany it to New Bedford. This permission was granted by the city authorities.

Eddie Carrier is in charge of the tour now being made by the Trackless Train. On completing the New England trip the special will cross the country from New York to Los Angeles and will then be shipped abroad to tour England and the Continent. Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer is sponsoring the entire trip in the interests of better roads and better motion pictures.

Warners Expand Western Plant Closing Vita's Eastern Studio

THE Vitagraph studios in Brooklyn were closed down last week, to remain idle for the remainder of the present year at least.

Warner Bros., who purchased Vitagraph recently have decided to increase materially the amount of production in Hollywood. Work is starting at once on the enlargement of the Vitagraph studio in Talmadge street, Hollywood. With the addition of another stage and an increase in the lighting and electrical equipment—improvements which, it is estimated, will entail a cost of a quarter of a million dollars, the Warners will be enabled to transfer entire units from their present plant.

Not only will this expansion permit Jack Warner and his associate, Bennie Zeidman, to supervise the entire Warner output, which would not be possible, of course, if some of the production work were carried on in Brooklyn, but it is in keeping with the conviction of the Warners that Hollywood is preeminently the place for picture making.

Fox Production Staff Fast Making New Season Product

THE Fox Film Corporation is leaving no stone unturned in its efforts to provide exhibitors throughout the country with the best in pictures and service. The 72-page announcement of its product for 1925-26 which appeared recently in all the national trade papers, and the enlarging and strengthening of the sales organization under James R. Grainger, general sales manager, has been the talk of the trade for the past two months.

Now come reports from California which indicate forcefully that the production staff of the West Coast Studios has been concentrating to a marked degree on maintaining exceptional quality of the produc promised and getting it out with the greatest speed consistent with the high standards set.

Work in every unit is booming along rapidly and successfully. Every director on the lot and every star under contract is working all day and far into the night.

"The Iron Horse," "As No Man Has Loved," and 'The Fool," were long ago completed and have had successful runs on Broadway.

Victor Schertzinger has finished 'The Wheel" and the picture is now on its way east. "East Lynne," with its big cast consisting of Alma Rubens, Edmund Lowe, Lou Tellegen, Frank Keenan, Majorie Daw, Leslie Fenton, Belle Bennett, Paul Panzer, Lydia Knott, Harry Seymour, Martha Mattox, Virginia Marshall, Richard Hendrick and Eric Mayne, is now in the cutting room and will be shortly received in New York. The same is true of "Havoc," which was directed by Rowland V. Lee. "Lightnin'," the latest John Ford production, has already been received in New York.

Two more John Ford pictures, "Kentucky Pride" and "The Fighting Heart," have been finished and received by the laboratories in New York.

The first Tom Mix supreme attraction, "The Everlasing Whisper," has been finished and is ready for preview.

The first two Buck Jones' pictures, "The Timber Wolf" and "Durand of the Bad Lands," have been completed. Having finished these, Jones immediately began work on "Lazybones," under the direction of Frank Borzage.

"Thank You," another John Golden play in which George O'Brien, Jacqueline Logan, Alec Francis, J. Farrell MacDonald and Cyril Chadwick are featured, is now in work under the direction of John Ford.

The Fox comedy unit has also surpassed itself in production. Five Imperial Comedies have been finished and three more are in work. Two Van Bibbers temporarily titled "The Apache" and "The Ski Jumper," are complete, and a third, "The Big Game Hunter," is well under way. The O. Henry and Mable Herbert Urner series starts soon.

Start "Coming of Amos"

Strong Cast Support Rod La Rocque in New De Mille Picture

Rod LaRocque has laid aside his resplendent London made, English-cut clothes, for the grotesque costume of an Australian sheep rancher to start production on "The Coming of Amos" at the De Mille Studio. The opening scenes of this picture were taken this week under the direction of Paul Sloane, who is handling La Rocque's first starring picture, assisted by William J. Scully.

The adaptation by James Creelman and Garrett Fort of William J. Locke's best-seller will provide a splendid opportunity for Rod LaRocque to display his dramatic ability. He is supported by an unusually strong cast, with the colorful Jetta Goudal opposite him, and with Noah Beery and Trixie Friganza in featured parts.

Arthur Miller is head camera man for this picture, while Elmer Harris has been appointed production editor.

"High and Handsome" Completed

"High and Handsome," the story of a fighting cop and how he finally brought glory to the department in a ring battle with the champion, has been finished by the Harry Garson company, after shooting fight scenes at the Vernon arena last week.

The production is the first of the new series under the F. B. O. banner, which graduated Maurice (Lefty) Flynn out of the western star class and put him in fast moving comedy drama of the type that made the late Wallie Reid famous. The former Yale star will be featured exclusively in productions of this nature hereafter.

EXHIBITORS' NEWS AND VIEWS

EDITED BY SUMNER SMITH

Ausable, N. Y., House Escapes Flames When Breeze Swerves

Disguised as a shifting breeze, Fate dealt Charles Marshall, owner of the Bridge Theatre in Ausable Forks, a winning hand a few days ago when flames swept the little Adirondack village, destroying block after block, with a resultant loss that ran into the hundreds of thousands. As the flames leaped toward the rear of the theatre the wind shifted almost in the twinkling of an eye, veering to the north. The rear of the theatre was on fire in several places but a bucket brigade managed to extinguish the flames before they found an entry into the interior of the theatre. Mr. Marshall was burned out about a year ago, but the recent occasion was the closest call and one which convinced him that after all there is such a thing as Fate.

With the exception of the loss of W. H. Linton's theatre in Utica several weeks ago, few houses in Central or Northern New York have fallen prey to the flames during the last year or so. As a general thing the exhibitors in this section of the state are extremely careful when it comes to fire hazards and the state inspectors rarely find anything serious enough to condemn.

There is talk to the effect that the Schine brothers are trying to secure an entering wedge into Utica, and to that end may be associated with W. H. Linton in connection with the new house that will be erected this summer, replacing the one owned by Mr. Linton, burned a few weeks ago. It is said that the Schines are also looking after the acquisition of theatres in Clayton and other summer resort towns.

What's all this about Tom Thornton, who runs the Orpheum in Saugerties, planning to get married a couple of months hence? Mr. Thornton has been doing exceptionally well the past winter, running a vaudeville show along with pictures every Monday night and incidentally picking up an extra piece of change by leasing his hall for dances. If rumor is correct, here's all good luck.

While Henry Seguin of the New Liberty in Rouses Point is frank in admitting that business didn't quite come up to expectations during the last few months, he is a long ways from starving. You see it happens that Mr. Seguin owns a large farm, and a few days ago he disposed of his last fall's crop of straw to the contractor to cover a new concrete highway being laid in that part of the state.

Rae Candee of the Robbins chain, whose home is in Utica, ran up against a streak of bad luck last week when he suffered from an attack of poison ivy. He enjoys the wide open spaces and spends all of his week-ends at his Adirondack camp. His hands were badly infected.

That old bean of Walter Suckno's is working these days, as was evident last week when he played "Dante's Inferno" for a couple of days and beat out the receipts of "The Covered Wagon." Mr. Suckno used advertisements in the Italian newspapers of the city and drew many from that section. Last week he had a stranded vaudeville troupe on for three days and his receipts jumped up overnight. A candy booth in the lobby, just installed, is also picking up many an extra dollar.

Roy Cronk, who has been running a picture theatre in Roxbury, has decided to give his entire time to other work and has closed the house. Mr. Cronk is connected with Sheffield Farms.

Whenever the film salesmen from Albany run down to Rhinebeck, they generally find Jacob Tremper busy in his greenhouses and more inclined to talk flowers than film.

LAURA LA PLANTE
Appearing in Universal White List attractions

Nevertheless he booked Metro-Goldwyn product last week for three days a week during the coming summer.

Walter Seaman is adding an extension to his house in Highland that will seat about 125 more persons. He also handles theatres in Marlboro and Milton.

When French and Foote, who run the picture theatre in Sherburne, buy a picture, it's a case of see Foote at his grocery and French at his home. Between the two, they make some pretty good selections, never doing things hurriedly, and the pictures shown, judging from the business, seem to suit the villagers.

Since Bill Smalley of Cooperstown has started adding to his string of houses—and the talk now is that he is to break into Delhi and Sharon Springs—he has had to increase his office help. Mr. Smalley has a most efficient secretary, however, in Miss Smith, who seems to be able to keep things running when he is out of town.

Abe Stone of the Arbor and Delaware theatres in Albany weighs something around 250 pounds, which may be the real reason why he didn't attempt to trip the light fantastic at the Film Ball the other night. Mr. Stone was on hand, however, and had a royal good time. Lew Fischer was down from Fort Edward, and while he ordinarily walks with a cane, he didn't seem to miss it for a moment as he glided round the hall.

J. J. Byck, the deaf and dumb exhibitor who is as shrewd as they make them, has just taken over a theatre in Hunter. All of Mr. Byck's holdings are in the Catskill region and his big season comes from July to September. After that he simply sits down and counts up his earnings.

The Bardavon, Liberty and Stratford in Poughkeepsie have been acquired by Famous Players, according to a report reaching Film Row during the week. The Bardavon is a particularly beautiful theatre located in the business center of the city, and long popular, not only with the citizens of the river town but also with the Vassar girls.

James Hardy, who runs Firemen's Hall in Clayville and also the village hotel, is planning to open his theatre soon. State Toopers called upon him and requested certain changes in the exits, and Mr. Hardy has been busy making these for some time past.

Uly S. Hill of the Mark Strand had the time of his life last week, taking a ride around town with the Metro-Goldwyn trackless train. Walter and Noma Suckno were also on board, as well as Jane Halloran and Carolyn Goodman.

Ben Pierce, who is connected with Young and Whitney in Ilion, paid a visit to Albany last Monday and finding that the film salesmen's ball was scheduled for that evening, remained over.

Harry Lux of the Alhambra in Utica took a few days off last week and went fishing. As to his luck, there doesn't seem to be

On petition of Thomas J. Charette, Jr., acting for Allen-Charette, Inc., the corporation conducting picture theatres in New Bedford, Fairhaven and Acushnet, the name of the corporation has been changed to Charette, Inc. George W. Allen, Jr., who formerly owned the majority interest in Allen-Charette, Inc., recently sold his interest in the corporation to Thomas J. Charette, Zoel Roy and Simon Beserosky. Mr. Charette is in active charge of the management of the corporation's theatres.

Harry Cohen, who recently acquired the Phillips Theatre in Springfield, is remodeling and redecorating the interior. The theatre will be closed for three weeks in July for certain work. Harry is going to build a marquee over the entrance.

Harry Katzes, one of the early exhibitors of the Bay State, is now owner and manager of the Seymour Hotel in Lynn. Mr. Katzes formerly operated the Central Square and Auditorium in Lynn and theatres in Salem.

Arthur J. Casey, manager of the New Bedford Theatre in New Bedford, is recovering from a slight nasal operation performed at his home in Haverhill.

Clyde McArdle, manager of the Somerville Theatre in Somerville, stepped into a new role when he broadcast over the radio a description of a circus playing Boston.

The Lake Shore Amusement Company of Shrewsbury has been incorporated. There are 250 shares of no par value. The officers are: President, Theodore Stevens; treasurer, Herbert G. Bullard, and William E. McGinnis.

Boston Lodge No. 2, Theatrical Mutual Association, has elected the following to honorary membership: Robert G. Larsen, general manager of the Boston Keith-Albee interests; Victor Morris, manager of Marcus Loew's Orpheum Theatre, Boston, and Edward Fuller, Boston representative for the Shubert theatres. M. Douglas Flattery, managing director of the Loew theatres in Boston, also is an honorary member.

anything to report—at least if there was anything, it never reached Albany.

Harmanus-Bleecker Hall in Albany, which has been playing to capacity for weeks with double features, is to be enlarged to the extent of 400 seats, making a total capacity of 2,500. Four stores will be built across the front of the theatre property.

A new policy went into effect during the past week at the Park Theatre in Glens Falls, managed by F. J. Cuneo. During the past few weeks the theatre has been re-carpeted and a new ventilating system installed, together with many other improvements. Changes are now made on Sunday, Wednesday and Friday.

Dave Seymour of the Pontiac in Saranac Lake is something of a gambler. For instance, last week he booked C. Sharp Minor along with pictures, giving the folks around Saranac Lake a musical treat that was far more enjoyed than the usual sort that requires a bromoseltzer opener in the morning. What's more, Mr. Seymour did not boost his prices for the event. Pretty good enterprise in a town situated, as Mr. Seymour says, "on top of the mountain."

Bob Wagner of the Gateway in Little Falls will have to introduce himself if he keeps on wearing that mustache. Bob is popular along Film Row. He has decided to cut out vaudeville for the summer and C. H. Moyer of the Liberty in Herkimer is doing likewise.

When it comes to being dolled all up, there has never been an exhibitor that visited Film Row who could hold a candle to Betty Feuer of the Crescent in Schenectady when she appeared last Monday. Miss Betty decided to kill a couple of birds with one stone, as it were, came over to Albany all dolled out for the Film Ball, did a bit of shopping along the Row and then danced until 3 a. m.

Gasper Battaglia of the Monroe and Lansing theatres in Troy is just back from a six weeks' trip in the South, buying fruit. Mr. Battaglia's sons are now paying a good deal of attention to the theatres but Dad still signs the checks.

It looks as though Jim Papayanakos, who has the Graylin in Gouverneur, will be a permanent resident of the northern village. He has just bought a new home and with his brother Alec in Canton and Harry in Potsdam the Papayanakos boys are once more important factors in Northern New York picture circles.

Sangster and Fitzgerald of Alexandria Bay have taken over the Elite in Theresa, run by William Henry, possession on July 1.

Canada

N. L. Nathanson, Toronto, Managing director of Famous Players Canadian Corp., Ltd., Toronto, controlling ninety theatres in Canada and representing Pantages and other interests sailed for England on May 27 from New York. It has been intimated that Mr. Nathanson will confer with Lord Beaverbrook, prominent English publisher and theatrical financier. Lord Beaverbrook, who is a former Canadian, is said to be financially interested in Famous Players Canadian Corp. The theatrical situation in Great Britain is to be investigated by Mr. Nathanson.

Henry Morton of Winnipeg, owning a chain of picture theatres in the Manitoba Capital, has spent $20,000 on the Crescent Theatre and it is now one of the most beautiful suburban houses in the city. He also owns the Gaiety, Monarch, Park, Wonderland and other houses.

News from Northern New York

The new Palace Theatre, recently acquired by Paramount in Lockport, N. Y., is being rushed to completion and will be opened in a few weeks. Three beautiful mural paintings, one over the proscenium and the others in arches at each side of the theatre, are being painted by the Lusk studios of Rochester. Work of installing the $25,000 organ has begun. The mushroom system of ventilation and heating has been installed. Under this system two plans will be available, the use of the city steam and the theatre's own heating plant as desired. The concrete should be completed this week, so that the placing of the 1,800 seats can begin next week.

Joseph A. Schuchert, Jr., is one popular guy with the employes of the Colonial and Columbia theatres, which he manages and which are owned by his dad, who, by the way, is now touring the high spots in Europe. Joe put on a big feed the other night for the employes of both houses and the fellahs are talking about it yet.

The new Lafayette Theatre in Batavia, N. Y., which has been leased by Western New York Theatres, Inc., of which F. M. Zimmerman of Buffalo is the head, will open about June 15. It is reported that the deal between the Schine Theatrical Corporation and Crosby & Houghton whereby the Schine interests take over the Dellinger Opera House in Batavia has been closed and that the new owners will install a policy of pictures and vaudeville.

Announcement is made that the Main-Go Realty Company soon will ask bids for the erection of a large picture theatre and office building in the block bounded by Webster, Tremont, Main and Goundry streets, North Tonowanda, N. Y. It is planned to have eight stores on the ground floor front in addition to the large theatre lobby. The cost of the house, it is reported, will be $300,000.

Howard J. Smith, manager of the Palace, Buffalo, has changed the policy of the house for the summer, putting on three shows a week instead of two as heretofore. Now the programs are changed Sundays, Tuesdays and Thursdays.

Manager Ray S. Averill put over the Milk Fund Fight Pictures at the Olympic, Buffalo, in fine shape. He announced in the papers that the films were rushed to Buffalo by a special airplane. A big special screening for the sport departments of the local papers was put on which brought some valuable free publicity.

Reports have reached Buffalo's Film Row that William C. Calihan has resigned as general manager of the Regorson Corporation of Rochester, so that he will be able to give his entire time to a new picture theatre which he is building in Kodak Town on the West Side. Mr. Calihan has been with the Regorson Corporation many years and is one of the oldest theatre men in Rochester in point of service.

Manager Vincent R. McFaul has given Shea Hippodrome patrons some rare music treats these days. Last week six big grand opera stars appeared in a condensed version of "Pagliacci" and received an enthusiastic reception. This week he put on Henri Kublick, violinist, and Melva Moore, coloratura soprano, in a fine program.

Herman Lorence, manager of the Bellevue, Niagara Falls, visited New York this week to look over some of the new features and new shows along Broadway.

Dan Buss of the Star Theatre, Tonowanda, hasn't bought a new car in two months. Something wrong here. We usually see Dan in a new one every eight weeks or so.

Connecticut

James Sullivan, formerly owner of the Circle Theatre in Manchester and manager of the Stratford Theatre in Stratford, has sold his interest in the latter house. Mr. Sullivan with Mrs. Sullivan and other relatives will pass the summer at a camp in Maine. He plans, however, to buy another picture theatre in the autumn.

The Princess Theatre in Rockville has been leased by Frank Mann to the S.-A. Amusement Company of Putnam. The company also operates the Palace in Rockford and theatres in Danielson and Putnam.

The new Orpheum Theatre at West Haven will be ready for opening in July.

David Weinstock, manager of the Grand Theatre in Hartford, has built up the patronage at this popular house until business now is always rated as A-1. His assistant is Jim Leverone, who has been identified with the theatrical business in Hartford for seventeen years. Jim, in addition to his duties as assistant manager, also has charge of the publicity for the Grand.

The annual presentation of Bill Jones and his orchestra on the stage of Poli's Capitol Theatre in Hartford took place the entire week of May 25. An elaborate production with a number of special scenes was built under the direction of Manager James F. Clancy.

Texas

The Hippodrome Theatre at Fort Worth, Texas, was robbed of $500 in cash last week, the robbers leaving no clue as to their identity.

The Adams Theatre Company has opened its new house at Palestine, Texas. It will be named through a contest procedure.

R. A. Landis and John Victor will soon open their new house, the National, at Breckenridge, Texas.

C. E. Stallings will open his new Airdome at Bowie, Texas, in the near future.

Incorporation: West Texas Amusement Company, Abilene, Texas; capital stock, $50,000. Incorporators: John Victor, Mrs. Laura Victor and W. D. Girand.

Maine

The Pine Tree Amusement Company of Bangor has been incorporated with a capital of $10,000. The incorporators are Archie S. Perham of Orono and Roy S. Coffin and Frank Fellows, both of Bangor.

Irene Rich, the beautiful Warner Brothers star.

Ohio

Andrew Hettesheimer, manager of the Orpheum Theatre, Cincinnati, who recently left the Good Samaritan Hospital after a major operation, has suffered a relapse and is again back in that institution. His physicians say, however, that they hope to have him back on the job in the near future. Another exhibitor temporarily absent from the ranks is C. H. Groves of the Palace Theatre, Columbus, Ohio, who is confined to the hospital with pneumonia.

F. H. Olds, who operates the Opera House at Middlefield, Ohio, has taken over the Opera House at Farmington, Ohio. At Sassafras, Ky., Troy Combs, who has had possession of the Gay Theatre for quite a few years, has disposed of it to William Combs. W. L. Boon has been appointed manager of the new Capitol Theatre, Hicksville, Ohio. The Capitol, which has 800 seats, was originally known as the Opera House.

The Sigma Theatre, Lima, Ohio, will undergo a complete remodeling process, for which work bids are being sought.

The new Park Theatre, Cleveland, Ohio, gave its initial program recently. The house, which is modern to the smallest detail, is declared to be one of the finest and best equipped family theatres in Northern Ohio.

Ike Libson, who controls all first-run theatres in downtown Cincinnati has contracted for the entire Fox 1925-26 output.

News of Chicago Territory

Carl Laemmle was in the city last week and the report was that negotiations progressed on the projected new house for Universal on Randolph street, across from the Randolph Theatre that is now under lease and operated by Universal. The lot selected for the new house is 110 feet in width and 160 feet in depth, running back to the Roosevelt Theatre alley on the south. The lease on the Randolph has about two years to run, and it is a foregone conclusion that owing to the increasing value of the ground on which the house now stands, a much larger structure will appear when the lease is up. Jones, Linick & Schaefer own the Randolph and leased the house to Universal for a term of years.

Leo J. McCarthy has joined the Chicago offices of the Balaban & Katz Midwest Circuit as representative of the A. H. Blank Enterprises, which recently affiliated with the circuit.

J. A. Langhram has sold his interest in the Lennane Theatre at Worden, Ill., to Joseph Schiller.

The new Harding Theatre of Lubliner & Trinz going up at Milwaukee and Sawyer avenue will soon be ready for opening. The house and its equipment will cost $1,000,000. Lubliner & Trinz also will open the Orchestra Theatre on Michigan avenue with a showing of the government aviation films. They will have charge of the house until the fall months, when it will revert back to the Chicago Orchestra.

The Egyptian Theatre at Gorham, Ill., has been sold to Boulton and Wallace. They have renamed it the Gorham.

Frank N. Jones, Harry Burch and D. W. Elliott have organized the Display Film Distributors with a capital of $50,000 and offices at 845 South Wabash avenue.

Marcelle Brazee has been named manager of the Cosmopolitan Theatre of the Cooney Circuit on the South Side.

H. G. Forde, G. H. Albright and G. Fried have organized the Theatrical Company, with offices at 77 West Washington street, to manufacture and deal in various accessories for picture theatres.

With the consolidation of Lubliner & Trinz and the B. & K. Midwest Circuit in effect, the first big change in the policy of Lubliner & Trinz is the addition of the Senate Theatre on the West Side to the presentation circuit of Balaban & Katz. The stage shows will continue to have their premiere at the Chicago in the Loop, then go to the Rivoli on the South Side, the following week at the Riveria on the North Side and the fourth week at the Senate on the West Side. No plans have been made as yet to include the Pantheon Theatre of Lubliner & Trinz in the new arrangement.

More than $25,000 has been spent on improvements in the Lincoln Square Theatre at Decatur, Ill., by the Balaban & Katz Midwest Circuit, the lobby being rebuilt and new equipment installed, including a large electric sign.

The new theatre going up at Elgin, Ill., for the Rubens Circuit will soon be ready for opening. The house will seat about 2,200. This will give the Rubens Circuit three houses in that city.

The many friends of Adolph Linick, treasurer of Jones, Linick & Schaefer, will be sorry to hear of the death of his wife, Mrs. Augusta Linick, at the Wesley Memorial Hospital after an operation. She is survived by her husband, a son, Leroy Linick, and a daughter, Mrs. Sidney Weisman, both of Los Angeles. The body was shipped to Los Angeles for burial.

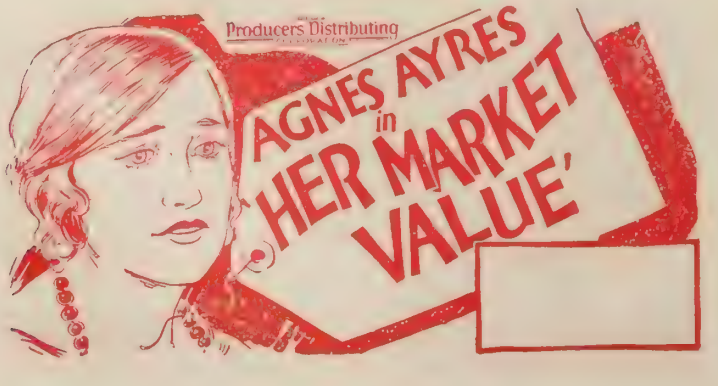
H. J. Ramsey, E. E. Alger and E. B. Ramsey have organized Midstate Theatres, Inc., at Fairbury, Ill., with a capital of $125,000 and offices in the Central Theatre Building in that city. The new incorporation will take over the leading houses in Fairbury.

Another large picture theatre is projected for Waukegan, Ill. The new house will seat 1,000 and be located on the boundary line between North Chicago and Waukegan. The managers will be Frank W. Hartzer and associates, who operate a circuit in Northern Indiana. They have recently opened a new house at Mishawaka that cost $250,000. It is expected the work on the Waukegan house will start at once. Marks Brothers recently announced a million dollar house for Waukegan, but work has not started as yet on this project.

Theatre robberies are on the increase here. Last Sunday night Lew Weil, managing director of the Bryn Mawr Theatre, was held up as he was entering his home on East Lake Terrace and robbed of the receipts of the Sunday show of the house. Two bandits pulled the job as he alighted from a taxicab, and made their escape in an automobile. The next day the Peoples Theatre at 1620 West 47th street was held up and $4,200 taken by two young bandits who walked in with drawn guns while the cashier was making up the deposit for the bank of the previous day's business. Plans are being discussed for extra guards by the exhibitors here.

Charles Carriker has closed his picture theatre at Irving, Ill., for the summer.

It is reported that when the Ascher Circuit lease on the Chauteau Theatre, their big North Side house, expires in November it will not be renewed as the circuit has started to build a large new house nearby to show its programs next fall. Five acts of vaudeville and feature pictures have made up the programs of the Chauteau and this policy will no doubt be followed in the new house.



Kansas

The Globe Theatre, Kansas City, has been leased for a term of five years by Richlyn Amusement & Realty Company, effective May 31. William Flynn and N. J. Flynn, brothers, are proprietors of the amusement company, a Kansas City concern. Besides the Globe they control the Wonderland, which is to be torn down July 1, and the Garden Theatre. Louis Oppenstein, owner of the Globe, quoted the terms of the lease at $35,000 a year. Thomas Taffe, present manager of the theatre, announces that he will resign to become associated with the Missouri theatre.

Work of tearing down another of Kansas City's movie landmarks—the Victory Theatre—began this week. The Idle Hour Theatre was razed not many months ago and the Wonderland is to be next in the path of larger downtown business buildings.

As to ill fortune, Jack Quinlan, manager of the Mainstreet Theatre, Kansas City, had more than his allotment this week. Hardly had Mrs. Quinlan been taken to a hospital to undergo an operation than 10-year-old Jack Quinlan, Jr., was taken to the hospital, suffering from appendicitis. Now Jack is wondering what fate will deal him next.

Again Frank L. Newman, owner of the Newman Theatre, Kansas City, has set the pace for advance exploitation of an event. Each year the Newman gives a birthday revue, this being the sixth annual event. It also will be a farewell performance for Mr. Newman, who will sell his Newman and Royal theatres to Paramount and become manager of three Los Angeles Paramount theatres. Sung to the tune of "I'll See You in My Dreams," with a tenor in the orchestra pit, words describing what will be seen in the revue and expressing Mr. Newman's appreciation of the patronage for the year, were flashed on the screen and the stunt proved such a hit that audiences applauded long and loud all week.

Exhibitors of Kansas who are operating theatres without permits from the state fire marshal are violating a law passed by the last state legislature and which went into effect March 17; yet Clyde S. Coffman, head of the department, has issued no regulations pertaining to the law, which deals with the construction of booths and other devices, it has been discovered. Mr. Coffman announced this week, however, that a list of rules had been prepared and submitted to legal authorities for approval.

Jay Means, owner of the Murray Theatre, Kansas City, and vice-president of the M. P. T. O. Kansas-Missouri, is planning the erection of a new theatre at Thirty-ninth street and Prospect avenue. The new house, which will seat 1,000 and maintain a straight picture policy at popular prices, will be just around the corner from the Ellsworth Theatre. The theatre is expected to be ready for opening next fall.

The following new theatres, changes in management and closings have been announced: Royal Theatre, Emporia, Kans., purchased by Harry McClure from Capitol Enterprise, under the agreement that Capitol Enterprise will do the booking for both the Royal and the Strand Theatre, also at Emporia and owned by Mr. McClure; P. & D. Theatre Company of St. Joseph, Mo., started construction of a new theatre at Nineteenth and Howard streets, St. Joseph, the cost to be $25,000; Garden Theatre, Marion, Kans., purchased by S. A. Mudd; Peskay & Dubinsky of St. Joseph, Mo., to erect $25,000 theatre, site to be selected; Midway Theatre, Fornfelt, Mo., closed; Pastime Theatre Mendon, Mo., closed, according to M. Minor, manager.

Among out-of-town exhibitors in the Kansas City territory last week were: P. S. Balley, Princess, Stanberry, Mo.; Herb Thatcher, Lyric, Abilene, Kans.; William Gabel, Grand, Beloit, Kans.; Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Christian, Beyers Theatre, Excelsior Springs, Mo.; H. A. McClure, Strand and Electric, Emporia, Kans.;

Ralph Williams Is Dead

Ralph Williams, one of the pioneer exhibitors in the Pittsburgh territory, although but 42 years of age, passed away at his home in Troy Hill on Monday morning, May 25, after an illness of several months with rheumatism.

News of the popular theatre owner's untimely death was a distinct shock to his many friends. He was universally popular and until a few months ago had been in the best of health. For the past fifteen years he had conducted the Colonial Theatre at Troy Hill and had developed the house into a consistent money-maker. Deceased was a charter member of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Western Pennsylvania. The World extends its sincere sympathy to his bereaved widow and two children in their great loss.

Denver

J. E. Sherman, manager of the Sunshine Theatre in Albuquerque, New Mexico, visited Denver to arrange summer bookings. It gets pretty hot down in Albuquerque in the summer but the Sunshine Theatre enjoys a wonderful cooling system and the temperature is many degrees lower inside than out.

Max Schubach, president and general manager of the Midwest Theatre Company, is visiting the U. S. A. Theatre of that company in Sidney, Neb. Mr. Schubach recently recovered from a serious illness and everyone is glad to see him resuming his old activities.

Carl Judge who owns and operates the Iris Theatre at Wheatland, Wyo., was a visitor in Denver this week for the first time in two years. He is arranging summer bookings and expects excellent business during the next few months.

Edward Anderson, manager of the Colonial Theatre at Pueblo, Col., which is one of the Nolan circuit of theatres, also visited Denver this week.

C. T. Thompson of Texarkana, Ark., has purchased the three-story Dambly Building, Milam street near Marshall street, and will remodel it into a 1,000-seat theatre. The new house will have a main floor and balcony and a stage 26 by 40 feet and 30 feet high. It will have ample dressing rooms for performers, a spacious lobby, etc. The cost of converting the building into a theatre is estimated at $100,000.

Pittsburgh

Peter M. Pegadiotes of the Strand Theatre, Apollo, has taken over the only opposition house in the town, Woodie's Theatre, conducted for thirteen years by Harry R. Wood. The change in ownership took place on June 1, Mr. Wood having leased the property for a ten-year term. The new owner has as partners Emanuel Pondolas and Peter G. Pegadiotes. These men plan to completely remodel and renovate both of the Apollo theatres during the summer. Mr. Wood says he hasn't had a vacation for twelve years, and accordingly is going to spend the next few months taking life easy. In all probability he and Mrs. Wood will visit Florida, after which they will return to Apollo, as "Woodie" has other interests in the town.

Mrs. Rose Blackburn, who conducts the Western Star Theatre in Hazelwood, has purchased R. B. Webb's State Theatre, Mt. Oliver. Mr. Webb, who has conducted the theatre for seven months, has other business interests but says nevertheless he intends to buy another picture theatre and is looking them over at every opportunity.

Isador Cousin, a newcomer to the theatre business, has purchased the Grandview Theatre, Duquesne Heights, from Sam Lurie and Nat Cherkosly. Lurie and Cherkosly say they are on the lookout for another theatre.

Walter Scott Butterfield, head of the Bijou Theatrical Enterprises, has added the largest theatre in Grand Rapids to his big string. It is the Powers, the lease of which had been held by E. R. Sommers for about fifteen years. While the Powers Theatre has been used as a house for the big road show attractions, Butterfield may play films.

The Regent Theatre at Grand Rapids, the largest movie house in the Furniture City, will be devoted to stock as a summer policy.

John H. Kunsky announces that none of his theatres will be closed during the summer this year. In the past Kunsky has followed the policy of closing the Madison for two weeks and the Adams for a similar period a few weeks later.

Ben Cohen of Ben and Lou Cohen, Inc., operators of a string of neighborhood theatres, was severely cut about the hands and face when the windshield of his speed boat broke under a heavy wave and scattered glass over him. He was in Grace Hospital for more than a week.

San Francisco

The National Theatres Syndicate of Northern California, which has occupied quarters in Loew's Warfield Theatre Building, San Francisco, since the organization of the circuit, has moved to the Golden Gate Theatre Building, where large quarters have been taken over on the fourth floor. The change in location was marked by a party and dance and most of the managers of the theatres came in for the affair.

West Coast Theatres, Inc., of Northern California, is now well settled in its new quarters in Loew's Warfield Theatre Building, where the entire eighth floor has been taken over. The company has brought out an issue of 6½ per cent. general mortgage gold bonds in the sum of $1,500,000, the proceeds of which are to be used to retire floating indebtedness incurred in the construction of new buildings. This circuit has more than 100 theatres in operation in thirty-three cities, with an aggregate capacity of more than 100,000. During 1924 it did a gross business of $9,569,000, representing the revenue from more than 44,000,000 paid admissions, a gain of almost 50 per cent. over the showing of 1923. Earnings in 1924, after all interest charges and federal taxes were deducted, amounted to $1,885,921.15.

Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Twillegar, of Goldfield, Nev., were recent visitors on San Francisco's Film Row, this being their first visit to the Coast metropolis in several years. They also visited Los Angeles, where they attended a lodge convention.

R. M. Reese, at one time located at Vacaville, Cal., has taken over the New Daly Theatre, San Francisco.

T. H. Borling of the Ramono Theatre, Walnut Creek, Cal., recently had the misfortune to lose the sight of one eye when a piece of steel flew into it. The injury is still causing much discomfort.

The explosion of film in the Liberty Theatre, Sacramento, recently, caused a rush for the exits, but no one was injured as the crowd was a small one. C. T. Guthrie, projectionist, was painfully burned but made his escape from the booth and turned in the alarm. Fire doors prevented the spread of the fire.

A. E. Crooks of the Rialto Theatre, Eureka, Cal., is jingling fifty dollars in gold as the result of winning second prize in the fifth week of Universal's serial exploitation contest.

Seattle

Manager J. G. Von Herberg of Jansen & Von Herberg has completed plans for a magnificent new suburban theatre in Seattle, designed to become a first-run house. The theatre and store building will occupy the entire block on the west side of North Broadway between East Harrison and East Republican streets. The site and building will represent an investment in excess of $500,000. Construction will begin immediately for a fall opening. The full frontage is 354 feet on Broadway and 100 feet on the other streets. Spanish architecture will be the style. The main entrance will be toward the southern end of the building and will have a driveway directly to the right, opening upon a broad open court and sunken gardens. In combination with the driveway another street entrance on the Republican street side will afford ample parking space. Capacity is to be 1,800 and a complete stage setting and equipment will make possible the presentation of any kind of vaudeville or road attraction. Loges will be provided on the mezzanine floor, similar to those in the company's big Coliseum Theatre.

Those who claim to know the inside of the story assert that the proposed new big theatre in Bellingham, Wash., is being promoted by Jensen & Von Herberg.

Harry Carey is now house manager of John Danz's Capitol Theatre, succeeding Arthur V. Hile, resigned.

Mr. Young, proprietor of the American Theatre, Brewster, Wash., has leased the house to Harry Dunning, former publicity man with the local Pantages and later editor of the Northwest-Inter-Mountain Film Mirror.

Rumors are current to the effect that Jack Allender, formerly of Neal & Allender, Spokane, is concluding a deal for the sale of his houses, which he is now operating on a 10-cent policy. Should the deal be with the Grombacher interests it would give them practical control of the town.

J. A. McGill of Port Orchard has been seriously ill with pneumonia but is around again after a three weeks' absence from his splendid new theatre, which was opened about six weeks ago.

Eddie Rivers, formerly press agent for the Heilig, Seattle, has assumed management of the Royal, Los Angeles, a suburban theatre seating 1,200. The house is to be thoroughly renovated. Mr. Williams, Rivers' assistant in Seattle at the Heilig, has been promoted to Rivers' position.

The Tacoma Theatre, Tacoma, is reported about to undergo complete renovation and the installation of a large organ, preparatory to the adoption of a combined picture and road show policy. This will give the Heilig interests four theatres running pictures—the Heilig, Seattle; Tacoma, Tacoma; Heilig, Eugene, Oregon, and the Grand, Salem, possession of which passes to them in September.

The Motion Picture Theatre Owners held an Eastern Washington meeting in Spokane at the Davenport Hotel. Trustees and officers were present, and Secretary J. M. Hone told some interesting news from the Milwaukee convention.

Signs for Columbia Product

The signed agreement with Ben Friedman, head of the Friedman Film Exchange of Minneapolis was received in the Columbia Pictures Corporation's home office the past week. Friedman will handle the entire 18 of the 1925-26 Columbia product, consisting of six each of Columbia Waldorf and Perfection pictures, throughout the territory of Minnesota and North and South Dakota.

BARRIERS BURNED AWAY. (6,236 ft). Star cast. This came on Saturday in place of "Dynamite Smith" which I had booked. A terrible flop. Picture old-fashioned and unappealing. Crowd walked out right and left. About three hundred feet of fire scenes which did not save it. Cost me a good day's business. Paper wasted, no comeback. Fair tone. Sunday, no. Special, no. No audience appeal. All classes town of 6,000. Admission 10-20-30. Frank H. Wolton, Park Theatre (600 seats), Lebanon, New Hampshire.

BARRIES BURNED AWAY. (6,236 ft). Star cast. Did not do much business for us, but it is not a bad show. We had a dandy print on this one. It is a program show, that's all. Tone, good. A family picture. Not a special. Fair audience appeal. Better class of town of 4,500. Admission 10-15. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (404 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

GOING UP. (5,886 feet). Star, Douglas MacLean. A good comedy with plenty of laughs and lots of thrills and very clean. It is not as good as "The Hottentot," but is well worth buying. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall Theatre, Chester, Vermont.

YANKEE CONSUL. (6,148 ft.) Star, Douglas MacLean. Surely a good picture from audience standpoint. Has everything any picture needs to please any audience anywhere, anytime. It does one good to hear the fine comments of the crowd. Tone, good. Special, no. Good audience appeal. General class town of 1,200. Admission 15-35. E. N. Prescott, Prescott Theatre (250 seats), Union, Maine.

F. B. O.

AIR HAWK. (5 reels). Star, Al Wilson. Here is a real one, with lots of everything and the best air picture that I have ever seen. All Wilson's stunts are done close up and you can see them all. Working class city of 13,000. Admission 10-15. G. M. Bertling, Favorite Theatre (160 seats), Piqua, Ohio.

ALIAS MARY FLYNN. Star, Evelyn Brent. The best crook picture we have had this season. Full of action from the first to the last reel. A sure fire money-getter. Exhibitors book this one if you want a good crook picture. N. Dix, World Theatre, Sioux City, Iowa.

CLOUD RIDER. Star, Al Wilson. Played this one on Saturday, and it pleased them all. This one is full of action, and thrills and will please both the kids and grown-ups. Tone, good. Special, no. Audience appeal, one hundred percent. Railroad class town of 2,500. Admission 10-25. H. C. Porter, Dreamland Theatre, New Albany, Mississippi.

DANGEROUS COWARD. (6 reels). Star, Fred Thomson. Jingoes why mortgage your theatre for high class stuff when this Thomson and his horse is the cure for a lot of the things what ails you "wise up"! Tone, good. Special, no. Good audience appeal. General glass town of 1,200. Admission 15-25. E. N. Prescott, Prescott Circuit (250 seats), Union, Maine.

DANGEROUS COWARD. (6 reels). Star, Fred Thomson. Fast moving action picture that pleased a Friday and Saturday crowd one hundre percent. Tone, okay. Sunay, no. Special, no. Audience appeal, ninety-five percent. Small town class town of 1,000. Admission 10-35. S. G. Harsh, Princess Theatre (249 seats), Mapleton, Iowa.

DANGEROUS FLIRT. Star, Evelyn Brent. A very fine picture. Evelyn sure is a comer and will surely make a hit with all. Charles Hirsh, Pike Theatre, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

DANGEROUS FLIRT. Star, Eveyn Brent. We played this June 3, 4, with Lefty Flynn in "Trigger Fingers," a western, with a double bill. Made an awful good bill and did good business. Regent Theatre, Blackwell, Oklahoma.

IN FAST COMPANY. Star, Richard Talmadge. An ordinary program picture that might be good for Saturday in towns liking action pictures. It is a series of acrobatic stunts and an improbable story. Picture will not appeal to the better class of people. Sunday, no. Special, no. Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall Theatre, Chester, Vermont.

MIDNIGHT MOLLY. Star, Evelyn Brent. This is our first one of this star's pictures so it did only average business at the box office, but it satisfied and we had several good comments on it. Miss Brent seemed to make a hit with our patrons, and personally we regard her as a very good actress. Ness & Ophus, Star Theatre, Erskine, Minnesota.

ON THE STROKE OF THREE. (6,757 ft). Star, Mary Carr. This is a good picture; classifies as a "program picture," and you won't be ashamed of it. Plenty of action and some plot with some acting and some directing but not over much of anything. All classes town of 3,200. Admission 10-20-30. Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, South Dakota.

RIDIN' COMET. Star, Yakima Cannut. This is not very much punkin'; the bird who wrote this story fell down on the job, which made this just a very, very ordinary picture. Tone, good. Sunday, no. Special, no. Very little appeal. Small town class town of 300. Admission 10-25. Roy E. Cline, Osage Theatre (200 seats), Osage, Oklahoma.

SCAR HANAN. Star, Yakima Canut. This boy is one of the best stunt actors on the screen and this picture is one of the best westerns that we have shown and pleased them all. F. B. O. let you make a living off their pictures and certainly have the paper and watch them next year. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Excellent audience appeal. Railroad class and miner's town of 3,500. Admission 10-35. Giles Master, Strand Theatre (750 seats), Gallup, New Mexico.

SCAR HANAN. Star, Yakima Canutt. This boy is there and has got them all beat when it comes to riding them. A good western. Tone, good. Sunday, no. Special, no. Good appeal. Working class city of 13,000. Admission 10-15. G. M. Bertling, Favorite Theatre (160 seats), Piqua, Ohio.

SILENT STRANGER. (5 reels). Star, Fred Thomson. Just one good splendid western feature that has all an action fan could ask for and Silver King also makes a big hit. Print in splendid condition. Tone, good. Special, no. Good appeal. General class town of 1,200. Admission 15-25. E. N. Prescott, Prescott Circuit (250 seats), Union, Maine.

SILK STOCKING SAL. (5,367 ft). Star, Evelyn Brent. If your patrons like a fast melodrama with lots of hokum and crook stuff give them this. Well acted, and well directed with a real good ending that is a little different. Railroad class and miners' town of 3,500. Admission 10-35. Giles Master, Strand Theatre (750 seats), Gallup, New Mexico.

THAT DEVIL QUEMADO. (4,720 ft.) Star Fred Thomson. As usual with Fred Thomson's pictures this one pleased one hundred percent. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Splendid audience appeal. C. W. Cupp, Royal Theatre, Arkadelphia, Arkansas.

THUNDERING HOOFS. (6,015 feet). Star, Fred Thomson. A fair picture. Believe this fellow will be a comer. General class city of 35,000. Admission 25-35. C. D. Buss, Strand Theatre (700 seats), Easton, Pennsylvania.

First National

ASHES OF VENGEANCE. (10 reels) Star, Norma Talmadge. About as fine a Norma Talmadge picture as we have had. Real elaborate and cast good. Should please everyone. Went over good here. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good audience appeal. Town and country class town of 1,200. Admission 10-25. C. R. Seff, New Radio Theatre (250 seats), Correctionville, Iowa.

FIGHTING BLADE. (8,729 feet). Sar. Richard Barthelmess. This is a costume drama of Oliver Cromwell times and is an instructive picture of historic interest. A swashbuckle story with Richard Barthelmess at his best; rich with spectacular appeal and replete with intrigue, adventure, and dramatic situations. Yes, highbrow stuff, but bound to please those who have the slightest idea or conception of the seventeenth period. Dorothy Mackaill is making her mark as an inspired artist and the rest of the cast are ideal in their parts. If you cater to the better class you will draw good houses on this one. City and country class town of 3,000. Admission 10-30. George W. Walther, Dixie Theatre (500 seats), Kerrville, Texas.

FLOWING GOLD. (8,005 feet). Star Anna Q. Nilsson. A fairly good picture but plot rather thin in places. Can somebody tell me where I can buy some good program pictures. I am disgusted with specials. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Not a special. Audience appeal, ninety percent. All classes town of 2,517. Admission 10-25. A. L. Middleton, Grand Theatre (500 seats), DeQueen, Arkansas.

I WANT MY MAN. Star, Milton Sills. This is a good picture but has the wrong title. The title will keep the ones away who want to see this kind of a picture and disappoint those who come to see a picture that the title conveys. A good clean picture. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, ninety percent. College class town of 2,145. Admission 10-25. Robert X. Williams, Jr., Lyric Theatre (345 seats), Oxford Mississippi.

LADY. (7,337 feet). Star, Norma Talmadge. Another costume picture with Norma weeping and leading a hard sad life. We all know that Norma can play any part that she wants to and play it perfectly, and also that is pretty in most all parts that she takes, however, we are tired of this type story. Let her be a young girl again with pretty clothes and the kiss that made her famous. She is too beautiful to play the parts she has been cast in lately. The picture drew well or rather her name did, but they walked out on me before it was over. That hurts even if you have already gotten their money. I had rather not gotten it. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Audience appeal, forty percent. College class town of 2,145. Admission 10-25. Robert X. Williams, Jr., Lyric Theatre (345 seats), Oxford, Mississippi.

LOVE'S WILDERNESS. (7,057 feet). Star, Corinne Griffith. An A. No. 1 picture. Corinne as beautiful as ever. Very good story, will please nearly everyone. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Goood audience appeal. Al casses town of 3,200. Admission 10-20-30. Chares Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, South Dakota.

ONLY WOMAN. (6,700 feet). Star, Norma Talmadge. A good picture that all my patrons enjoyed. It is just the type of drama that they want her in. Evidently didn't cost much and could be sold reasonable to the exhibitor and in my opinion will do more than many of her high class costume dramas. Tone, good. Special, yes. Sunday, yes. Appeal, ninety-five per cent. Industrial class, town of 6,000. Admission 10-30. L. O. Davis, Virginia Theatre (750 seats), Hazard, Kentucky.

Between Ourselves

A get-together place where we can talk things over

Harry Marion is our man-on-the-road.

He visits you and then comes back and, among other things, hands me a Straight From the Shoulder tip on what you say about the way this dependable tip department is running.

He's back from a trip, and he tells me that some of you argue that Straight From the Shoulder doesn't benefit you—because THE REPORTS ARE ON PICTURES YOU HAVE PLAYED ALREADY!

Well, you folks who have the late pictures!—look at it this way:

I use what I get from generous exhibitors.

Every time one of you runs a late picture—and does not report!—the other fellow who wants to know about that picture presents our dependable tips with a big, black eye!

Help me make this department fully useful, won't you, fellows?

Shoot in late tips as well as the dope on the older releases.

If YOU do it the other fellow will get the habit.

VAN.

SALLY. (8,636 feet). Star, Colleen Moore. This picture was the best that I have had of her in some time. It is a picture with enough variety in it to please any audience. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Audience appeal, ninety-five percent. College class town of 2,145. Admission 10-25. Robert X. Williams Lyric Theatre (345 seats), Oxford, Mississippi.

SANDRA. (7,905 feet). Star, Barbara LaMarr. An expensive picture, finely staged but story was flat, and improbable, however, so was the book. Miss LaMarr did the best she could with the material offered. No tone. Sunday, no. Special, no. Audience appeal, sixty percent. All classes town of 6,000. Admission 10-20-30. Frank H. Wotton, Park Theatre (600 seats), Lebanon, New Hampshire.

SANDRA. (7,905 feet). Star, Barbara LaMarr. Eight reels of slush and a story that we could get along without. Barbara needs to reduce and to cut out that pant. She bores you to death. Tone, questionable. Special, no. No appeal. Small town class of 1,000. Admission 10-35. S. G. Harsh, Princess Theatre (249 seats), Mapleton, Iowa.

SECRETS. (6,345 feet). Star, Norma Talmadge. A beautiful and impressive picture for a refined and intelligent audience. The jazz boys won't care for this one, but the majority will acknowledge it, one of the finest pictures of the year. A wonderful lesson and cast. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Audience appeal, eighty percent. All classes town of 6,000. Admission 10-20-30. Frank H. Wotton, Park Theatre (600 seats), Lebanon, New Hampshire.

Fox

ELEVENTH HOUR. (6,819 feet). Star, Charles Jones. Plenty of action, and too much hokum. Everyone thought it too bloody and over exaggerated. For those that crave action and thrills get it. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good appeal. Town and country class town of 1,200. Admission 10-25. C. R. Seff, New Radio Theatre (250 seats), Correctionville, Iowa.

END OF THE TRAIL. Star, Franklin Farnum. This is one of the reissues. I don't see where they got anything out of this reissue. Slow all the way and no action at all. Appeal, fifty per cent. Sunday, yes. Special, no. H. C. Porter, Dreamland Theatre (350 seats), New Albany, Mississippi.

GOLD HEELS. (6,000 ft). Star cast. Pretty good but no drawing power. Can't make anything with Fox's specials. They will enjoy it if you can get them in. All classes town of 4,000. R. L. Nowell, Idlehour Theatre, Monroe, Georgia.

OH YOU TONY. (6,802 ft.). Star, Tom Mix. Being a Mix of course, it is good and has one of the best races at the end that has been put on the screen and is packed with comedy which makes the Mix pictures go over. Railroad class and miners town of 3,500. Admission 10-35. Giles Master, Strand Theatre (750 seats). Gallup, New Mexico.

Metro-Goldwyn

ALONG CAME RUTH. (5,000 ft). Star Viola Dana. As usual a Viola Dana pleases in this light but entertaining type of story. It's a program but may be some programs get by better than some specials. What? Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good appeal. C. W. Cupp, Royal Theatre, Arkadelphia, Arkansas.

BANDOLERO. (7,000 feet). Star, Renee Adoree. I personally enjoy this little picture and I guess the audience did. Scenes of the bull fight are very good although somewhat faked. I will not hesitate to recommend this to any brother exhibitor. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair audience appeal. All classes town of 3,000. Admission 25-35. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

GREAT DIVIDE. (7,811 ft.). Star, Alice Terry. Four days to good business. An excellent picture. Well liked by patrons. General class city of 35,000. Admission 25-35. C. D. Buss, Strand Theatre (700 seats), Easton, Pennsylvania.

HALF A DOLLAR BILL. (5,700 ft.). Star cast. A sea picture in which little Frankie Darrow carries off the honors. Anna Q. Nilsson makes a charming heroine, and Raymond Hatton supplies the comedy. A good program picture. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall Theatre, Chester, Vermont.

HE WHO GETS SLAPPED. (6,636 ft.). Star, Lon Chaney. Just a program picture and may please some Did not go here for me and I was oversold on it as most pictures I bought from Metro. Has a number of stars in the pictures, but one who sees the first show will not send other as you would have them do. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes.

Special, no. Appeal, fifty per cent. College class town of 2,145. Admission 10-25. Robert X. Williams, Jr., Lyric Theatre (345 seats), Oxford, Mississippi.

HE WHO GETS SLAPPED. (6,613 feet). Star, Lon Chaney. This is a good picture, but is not a knockout; be sure you do not pay too much. Audience appeal, seventy per cent. Sunday, yes. Special, no. J. E. Draginis, Strand Theatre (450 seats), Yoakum, Texas.

HIS HOUR. (6,300 ft.). Star, John Gilbert. Elinor Glyn's novel of same name made into an interesting and enjoyable picture. Patrons complimented it. Cast splendid for type picture. Tone, okay. Sunday, maybe. Special, no. Good appeal. C. W. Cupp, Royal Theatre, Arkadelphia, Arkansas.

MARRIED FLIRTS. (6,705 ft.). Star cast. Fairly good program picture but one you will hardly remember much of. Business good with very few comments either way. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair appeal. College class town of 4,000. Admission 10-25, 10-40. C. W. Cupp, Royal Theatre (500 seats), Arkadelphia, Arkansas.

SHOOTING OF DAN McGREW. (6,318 ft.). Star, Barbara LaMarr. Barbara LaMarr, Lew Cody and Percy Marmont in a story of the Yukon, inspired by the poem. Good propram picture. Sunday, no. Special, no. Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall Theatre, Chester, Vermont.

SPOILERS. (8,020 ft.). Star, Milton Sills. Very good picture with Milton Sills, Noah Beery, Anna Q. Nilsson and Billie Dove. This picture will long be remembered for the fast and furious fight between Sills and Beery. Not a pretty picture for the ladies but the men and children ate it up. Sunday, no. Special, yes. Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall Theatre, Chester Vermont.

THREE WEEKS. (7,500 ft.). Star, Aileen Pringle. Only a fair program picture that does not appeal to the men at all. Went over with the ladies and flappers. "Three Weeks" has too many close-ups, too much padding and a badly inflated rental. Not a small town picture. Sunday, no. Special, no. Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall Theatre, Chester, Vermont.

WIFE OF THE CENTAUR. (6,586 feet). Star, John Gilbert. A good sex picture that will satisfy about seventy per cent. The cast and the acting is good but story is weak. The love closeups are too mushy. Put Gilbert in a he man's role and they like him. Tone, not so good. Sunday, no. Special, no. Audience appeal, seventy per cent. General class city of 500,000. Admission 10-20. William T. Meeks, Silliman's Murray Theatre, Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

WIFE OF THE CENTAUR. (6,586 feet). Star, John Gilbert. This will please where "jazz" pictures are popular. Personally, I didn't care much for it but the majority here did and that's what counts. Too sexy for me. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair audience appeal. All classes town of 3,000. Admission 25-35. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

WINE OF YOUTH. (6,600 ft.). Star, Eleanor Boardman. Well received and appreciated by the younger set. A picture of the jazz age. A modern picture of City life. This seems to be what they want. Fair tone. Sunday, no. Special, no. Appeal, eighty-five per cent. All classes town of 6,000. Admission 10-20-30. Frank H. Wotton, Park Theatre (600 seats), Lebanon, New Hampshire.

YOLANDA. (10,125 feet). Star, Marion Davies. Stung again. While it is a fine picture, it is one of those costume affairs of the fifteenth century, and therefore uninteresting to the majority of our patrons. They told me so by staying away in a body. Well, I suppose we'll learn sometime. A chance to waste money, time, and good will, is to run this kind of a picture in a small town. Tone, fair. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Appeal, ten per cent. All classes town of 6,000. Admission 10-20-30. Frank H. Wotton, Park Theatre (600 seats), Lebanon, New Hampshire.

Paramount

ALASKAN. (6,758 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. Most reports have been against this one but it pleased here and they said so. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good audience appeal. Family and student class town of 4,000. Admission 10-25. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre (600 seats), Decorah, Iowa.

VIRGINIA VALLI

Whose "K—the Unknown" and, more recently, "Up the Ladder," for Universal, attract a large following

ARGENTINE LOVE. (5,970 ft.). Star, Bebe Daniels. One of those romantic Spanish romances with the well-worn plot of an American hero winning the Argentine beauty away from a rich native planter betrothed from infancy to the heroine. You get the usual colorful cafe scenes with tango dances and fierce flirtations at the fiesta and the killing of a rival while serenading a picturesque belle perched high up in a balcony. Oh boy, hot stuff with Bebe Daniels and Ricardo Cortez in some striking close-ups. Good and a real artist. Get it by all means. It will please your people. City and country class town of 3,000. Admission 10-30. George W. Walther, Dixie Theatre (500 seats), Kerrville, Texas.

BEDROOM WINDOW. (4,550 ft). Star cast. A very good program picture. A mystery play of more than ordinary interest, but not the equal of "Grumpy." May McAvoy is very dear in this, while Ethel Wales, supplying the comedy, is fine. Sunday, yes. special, no. Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall Theatre, Chester, Vermont.

BIG BROTHER. (7,080 feet). Star cast. Tom Moore and Edith Roberts in a plain every day story of the Bowery, a picture that holds interest throughout. This type of picture would soon dispel that old worn out question, "What's wrong with the movies?" Played up the name of Rex Beach and did better than usual business. Very good program picture. Sunday, yes, special, no. Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall Theatre, Chester, Vermont.

BIG BROTHER. (7,080 feet). Star, Tom Moore. Fine. The youngster, Mickey Bennett, I think it was, was excellent. A few suggested cuss words here and there may not meet the approval of all, but they serve their purpose in showing the sincere effort of the gangster in bringing the boy up right. Charles W. Lewis, I. O. O. F. Theatre, Grand Gorge, New York.

BLUEBEARD'S EIGHTH WIFE. (5,950 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. This is a highly amusing picture in spots, but taken as a whole it is hardly substantial enough for small towns. No one seemed to take offense at the so-called suggestiveness that some exhibitors comment upon. Tone, fair. Sunday, no. Special, no. Average audience appeal. Rural class town of 500. Admission 10-30, 15-40. Charles W. Lewis, I. O. O. F. Theatre (225 seats), Grand Gorge, New York.

BREAKING POINT. (5,780 feet). Star cast. A fair program picture with Matt Moore, Nita Naldi, Patsy Ruth Miller and George Fawcett. The story of a murder, a forgotton identity and the villian who must appeal in every picture. No particular drawing power. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall Theatre, Chester, Vermont.

CHARMER. (6,076 feet). Star, Pola Negri. She's an artist but who likes her. I have lost money on every Pola Negri picture I have run. This picture is above her average in that it has more comedy relief and less passion. Tone, fair. Sunday, no. Special, no. All classes town of 3,200. Admission 10-20-30. Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, South Dakota.

CITY THAT NEVER SLEEPS. (6,087 feet). Star, Ricardo Cortez. A nice little story of New York night life which was very pleasing to the crowd. Nothing big but something about it makes it an extra good program picture. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair audience appeal. All classes town of 3,000. Admission 25-35. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

CITY THAT NEVER SLEEPS. (6,087 feet). Star cast. A very good program picture. We always get good reports on Cruze pictures. Well acted and the type of story that appeals to the audience. Tone, good. Sunday, no. Special, no. Fine audience appeal. Farmers town of 442. Admission 10-25. Johl C. Leveck, Benoit Auditorium (100 seats), Benoit, Mississippi.

CODE OF THE WEST. (6,777 feet). I put this on Saturday, and it is just the type picture that will please any class; a fine show for Saturday or any other day; a one hundred per cent. picture in every way. A. Mitchell, Dixie Theatre, Russellville, Kentucky.

CODE OF THE WEST. Star cast. A Zane Grey story that has no shooting or killing. Lots of comedy and well done character work. Owen Moore not so good in a slow part that had great possibilities. Fire scenes excellent. Constance Bennett in flapper part is great. City of 15,000. Ben L. Morris, Temple Theatre, Bellaire, Ohio.

CODE OF THE SEA. (6,038 feet). Star, Rod LaRoque. A good sea picture with a good drawing title and the sort of posters that mean dollars at the box office. The storm scenes are especially good. Many favorable comments, so class it as a good program picture. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall Theatre, Chester, Vermont.

COMING THROUGH. (6,522 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. Thomas Meighan, Lila Lee, and then throw in Wallace Beery and Frank Campean, bound to be good with such a strong cast. A story with a coal mine for a background and the hero making good. "Coming Through," with flying colors. It's a fine photoplay, well acted and well directed. City and country class town of 3,000. Admission 10-30. George W. Walther, Dixie Theatre, Kerrville, Texas.

CONFIDENCE MAN. (6,500 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. Meighan draws them in again with this one and pleased about eighty per cent. The patrons are still waiting to see him in another "Manslaughter." My patrons like to see Laurence Wheat with Meighan and tell me so, and are disappointed to not have the opportunity more often. A good program picture. Sunday, yes, special, no. Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall Theatre, Chester, Vermont.

CONTRABAND. (6,175 feet). Star, Lois Wilson. In my opinion, a good cast wasted on a weak story. Still it seemed to please here. Would class it as an average program offering. All classes town of 3,000. Admission 25-35. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

COVERED WAGON. (9,407 feet). Star cast. Return engagement. Fell flatter than flat tire. Small town class town of 1,000. Admission 10-35. S. G. Harsh, Princess Theatre (249 seats), Mapleton, Iowa.

COVERED WAGON. (9,407 feet). Star cast. After this picture had played several times all around me, it drew fine attendance for four days during very bad weather. This picture has the greatest pulling power of any I have ever played or expect to play. It seems there is no village or hamlet too small to play this picture to capacity houses. Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall Theatre, Chester, Vermont.

CROWDED HOUR. (6,558 feet). Star, Bebe Daniels. A good program picture well worth playing. Just enough war scenes to make it interesting and enjoyable. They are good scenes too, regardless of where made. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good audience appeal. College class town of 4,000. Admission 10-25, 10-40. C. W. Cupp, Royal Theatre (500 seats), Arkadelphia, Arkansas.

DAWN OF TOMORROW. (6,084 feet). Star, Jacqueline Logan. A poor picture with a London background. Sunday, yes, special, no. Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall Theatre, Chester, Vermont.

EMPTY HANDS. (6,976 feet). Star, Jack Holt. Very good. Everyone enjoyed it and commented favorably. Advertise and it will make money for you. Kind of picture as "Sinners In Heaven." All classes town of 4,000. R. L. Nowell, Idlehour Theatre, Monroe, Georgia.

FEMALE. (6,176 feet). Star, Betty Compson. A fairly good picture but by no means worth the price they got for this so-called special. It is a Betty Compson picture and that means only a good program picture so don't pay more for it. Also don't promise your patrons too much with this one. Special, no. Appeal, seventy-five per cent. Industrial class town of 6,000. Admission 10-30. L. O. Davis, Virginia Theatre (750 seats), Hazard, Kentucky.

FIGHTING COWARD. (6,501 feet). Star cast. Cullen Landis and Ernest Torrence in a very good program picture. After the "Covered Wagon" and "Ruggles," Ernest Torrence is very popular with the fans here. They liked this picture and said so. Do not forget to play up Booth Tarkington when advertising this picture. Very good program offering suitable for Sunday but not a special. Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall Theatre, Chester, Vermont.

FLAMING BARRIERS. (5,821 feet). Star, Jacqueline Logan. A good program picture with a good title. The forest fire scenes are especially good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall Theatre, Chester, Vermont.

FORBIDDEN PARADISE. (7 reels). Star, Pola Negri. All reports were that it was Pola's best picture and everyone seems to enjoy it and drew quite well, especially the town people. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good appeal. Town and Country class town of 1,200. Admission 10-25. C. R. Seff, New Radio Theatre (250 seats), Correctionville, Iowa.

FORTY WINKS. (6,203 feet). Star, Raymond Griffith. Good comedy. Pleased about eighty-five per cent. Think Griffith is a comer. Tone, okay. Sunday, no. Special, no. J. C. Hayes, Olympia Theatre, Archer City, Texas.

FORTY WINKS. (6,203 feet). Star, Viola Dana. This is very pleasing. Light but entertaining and well done. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. All classes town of 3,200. Admission 10-20-30. Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, South Dakota.

FORTY WINKS. (6,203 feet). Star, Raymond Griffith. Will certainly please and keep your audience in a happy frame of mind. Raymond Griffith is good. I notice my patrons are enjoying the lighter type of pictures such as this very much. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good audience appeal. College class town of 4,000. Admission 10-25, 10-40. C. W. Cupp, Royal Theatre (500 seats), Arkadelphia, Arkansas.

FORTY WINKS. (6,203 feet). Star, Raymond Griffith. A mighty fine feature comedy that can't be beat. Lloyd had better look to his laurels or this boy will cop a few of them. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fine audience appeal. Oil field class town of 1,000. Admission 10-25. H. E. Schlichter, Liggett Theatre (600 seats), Madison, Kansas.

GOLDEN BED. (8,584 feet). Star cast. Fine wonderful production. Many commented very highly. Play up big especially to the women, and this picture will make money for you. All classes town of 4,000. R. L. Nowell, Idlehour Theatre (210 seats), Monroe, Georgia.

GOLDEN BED. (8,584 feet). Star, Rod La Rocque. It's a Cecil B. DeMille, so it's a good one. Whoever heard of Cecil making anything but a one hundred per cent appeal picture. Tone okay. Sunday, okay. Very good audience appeal. General class, town of 3,200. Admission 10-30. Krieghbaum Brothers, Char-Bell Theatre (800 seats), Rochester, Indiana.

GOOSE HANGS HIGH. (6,186 feet). Star cast. One of the best pictures of the year. Tone, fine. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Great audience appeal. All classes city of 95,000. Admission 40-50. Guy O'Kenimer, Arcade Theatre (1,152 seats), Jacksonville, Florida.

GOOSE HANGS HIGH. (6,186 feet). Star cast. This is a real entertainment. People liked it a lot and it is particularly good for a Thanksgiving or a Christmas program. It fitted into my Mothers Day program like a million. Tone, fine. Sunday. Special, yes. All classes town of 3,200. Admission 10-20-30. Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, South Dakota.

HERITAGE OF THE DESERT. (5,783 feet). Star, Bebe Daniels. A good box office combination. Bebe Daniels and Lloyd Hughes do fine work. Used extra advertising to draw excellent attendance. Many favorable comments. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall Theatre, Chester, Vermont.

HERITAGE OF THE WEST. (5,785 feet). Star, Bebe Daniels. Good Zane Grey story. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Good audience appeal. Farmers and merchants, town of 1,650. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

HIS CHILDREN'S CHILDREN. (8,300 feet). Star cast. A picture of the jazz age with an exceptionably good cast including George Fawcett, Hale Hamilton, Dorothy Mackaill, Bebe Daniels, James Rennie and Mahlon Hamilton. A fair program picture that was spoiled by a badly cut last reel, about two hundred feet missing at the very end, leaving the picture without a moral, and a bewildered sense of not knowing what it was all about. Sunday, no. Special, no. Guy C.

Cheats "Sand Man" to Send Tips

"Dear Van and 'Gang':—Well, I am quite busy just now, with three houses to keep on the ways (and sell automobiles on the side in the spare hours)—and after most folks are in bed, I SNEAK A FEW MOMENTS FROM THE SANDMAN TO FILL OUT THA'T STRAIGHT FROM THE SHOULDER BLANK in an effort to help some exhibitor to avoid getting 'stuck' with something he don't want —or to get something he does.

"So, if you want tips on shows—(or to buy a new car!)—just remember I am at your service—all ways!"—E. N. Prescott, Prescott Circuit, Union, Maine.

Harold Lloyd and his charming leading lady, Jobyna Ralston, who will shortly be seen in his newest feature comedy for Pathe release, the title of which has not as yet been disclosed.

Sawyer, Town Hall Theatre, Chester, Vermont.

HOLLYWOOD. (8,100 feet). Star cast. In spite of many adverse exhibitor reports I class this as a very good program picture. The principal cast is composed of little known players who are supported by Screenland's best known Paramount stars. To be sure the appearance of the stars is brief, but the novelty of it it all held interest throughout the film. Comments were favorable. Used extra advertising to draw better than ordinary attendance. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall Theatre, Chester, Vermont.

HUMMING BIRD. (5,577 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. This has all the elements that go for entertainment, and besides it has a star who has lately been very much in the public eye. Paper on this is absolutely worthless, as is most of Paramount's for a small town. Had the posters conveyed some idea of the story, and less of Gloria business might have been worth while. We sell entertainment, not reputation. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. General appeal. Rural class town of 500. Admission 10-30, 15-40. Charles W. Lewis, I. O. O. F. Theatre (225 seats), Grand Gorge, New York.

KISS IN THE DARK. (5,767 feet). Star cast. Good program picture but not a special. Light entertainment but pleased. Didn't advertise as a special nor raise admission though rental paid justified it. Tone, okay. Sunday, maybe. Special, no. Good audience appeal. C. W. Cupp, Royal Theatre, Arkadelphia, Arkansas.

MANHATTAN. (6,415 feet). Star, Richard Dix. Little program picture that has most of the sexy trashy specials beat a mile. Good entertainment. Pleased. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, ninety-five per cent. Small town class of 1,000. Admission 10-35. S. G. Harsh, Princess Theatre (249 seats), Mapleton, Iowa.

MAN WHO FIGHTS ALONE. (6,337). Star, William Farnum. A fine supporting cast. The title is somewhat misleading, many expecting more action, but had no complaints, so I should say it is a good program picture. Sunday yes, special no. Guy, C. Sawyer, Town Hall Theatre, Chester, Vermont.

MONSIEUR BEAUCAIRE. (9,932 feet). Star, Rudolph Valentino. Played two days to terrible business. They didn't want to see this show here in this town. We should never have bought this show. Not a small town picture. Tone, good. Sunday, no. Fair appeal. Better class town of 4,500. Admission 10-15. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatrt (404 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

MERTON OF THE MOVIES. (7,655 feet). Star, Glenn Hunter. If you haven't booked this one, do it at once. "Merton of the Movies" is a real movie, an honest to goodness picture, one that will live with you in many moons when others will be forgotten. It has a great appeal and a human touch. Glenn Hunter, Viola Dana and DeWitt Jennings are the principals backed by a fine cast with interesting views of studios and scenes in movieland. It's different from anything else. Get it. City and country class town of 3,000. Admission 10-30. George W. Walther, Dixie Theatre, Kerrville, Texas.

NEW LIVES FOR OLD. (6,796 feet). Star, Betty Compson. The best picture Betty Compson has ever done. This is a war story that will go over big. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fine audience appeal. Oil field class town of 1,000. Admission 10-25. H. E. Schlichter, Liggett Theatre (600 seats), Madison, Kansas.

PETER PAN. (9,593 feet). Star, Betty Bronson. In co-operation with a local Sunday School, played this to capacity business. While some people were lukewarm in their appreciation, and a few were outspoken in their opinion that it did not please, at the same time there is no question that this is a picture that should be played in every theatre, if only for the approval of the children, even if they are so highly sophisticated these days. The cast of characters is perfect and the whole thing is wonderfully done. "Peter Pan" brought many strangers into our theatre from out of town. We used the "Peter Pan" buttons for distribution to the children through nearby schools, the wearing of which carried a reduction of ten cents in admission price, and they surely brought the kids. One hundred twenty-five children against a normal attendance of about fifty. And the children brought their parents. Rural class, town of 500. Admission 10-30, 15-40. Charles W. Lewis, I. O. O. F. Theatre (225 seats), Grand Gorge, New York.

SACKCLOTH AND SCARLET. (6,732 feet). Star, Alice Terry. A real special and a great audience picture. Although the cast is new with the exception of Terry they are convincing and the subject as a whole is mighty well done. Cater to the women on this as most of them have either heard or read the story. Tone fine. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Fine appeal. Oil field class, town of 1,000. Admission 10-25. H. E. Schlichter, Liggett Theatre (600 seats), Madison, Kansas.

SALOME OF THE TENEMENTS. (7,017 feet). Star cast. A good picture but no drawing power and in spite of extra advertising business was poor. Picture very favorably received. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair audience appeal. College class, town of 4,000. Admission 10-25, 10-40. C. W. Cupp, Royal Theatre (500 seats), Arkadelphia, Arkansas.

SALOME OF THE TENEMENTS. (7,017 feet). Star cast. This is one of the weak pictures of Paramount's 1925 bunch. I did not care for it and but few did. It is a story of the Ghetto and perhaps well told, but it didn't fit my small town crowd. It should have been called "Queen of the Hebrews." Tone all right. Sunday, yes. Special, no. All classes, town of 3,200. Admission 10-20-30. Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, South Dakota.

SALOMY JANE. (6,276 feet). Star, Jacqueline Logan. A poor title to exploit. Advise playing up the name of the author, Bret Harte. A good cast, including Maurice B. Flynn, Louise Dresser and George Fawcett. Fair program picture. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall Theatre, Chester, Vermont.

SHADOWS OF PARIS. (6,549 feet). Star, Pola Negri. This is the first picture ever shown here with Pola Negri, so cannot really say whether she will be of box office value or not. "Shadows of Paris" is a good program picture of the Apache type. Paper on this picture was very poor. Attractive posters mean so much in the small towns. Not a good Sunday picture, nor a special. Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall Theatre, Chester, Vermont.

SIDESHOW OF LIFE. (6,511 feet). Star, Anna Q. Nilsson. A good show. It did not draw them in; the competition down the street beat us to a frazzle at ten cents with a Wesley Barry picture. I have learned my lesson. No more of these highbrow pictures for a small town. They want stuff they can understand, with comedy and good, fast action. Better class, town of 4,500. Admission 10-15. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (404 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

SILENT PARTNER. (5,895 feet). Star, Leatrice Joy. After seeing Miss Joy in the DeMille productions, this is a distinct disappointment. The "Silent Partner" was neither knocked nor praised. It is just a program affair. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall Theatre, Chester, Vermont.

SINNERS IN HEAVEN. (6,621 feet). Star, Richard Dix. A nice little picture which will please most everybody. Both stars do fine work in this picture. Clean all the way through. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good audience appeal. All classes, town of 3,000. Admission 25-35. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

SOCIETY SCANDAL. (6,433 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. Not as good as the "Humming Bird," but it drew well and pleased, for Miss Swanson has many followers here. Rod LaRocque and Ricardo Cortez were exceptionally good. Used extra advertising to draw better than ordinary attendance. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall Theatre, Chester, Vermont.

SPANIARD. (6,676 feet). Star, Ricardo Cortez. Something worth while, worth advertising and worth a small increase in admission here. Good photography, good acting and a pleasing story. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Good audience appeal. C. W. Cupp, Royal Theatre, Arkadelphia, Arkansas.

STORY WITHOUT A NAME. (5,912 feet). Star, Antonio Moreno. A radio novel drama chock full of excitement. Story based on the newly invented death dealing radio rays. The unusual novelty of this picture will satisfy the majority. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Audience appeal eighty-five per cent. General class, city of 500,000. Admission 10-20. William T. Meeks, Silliman's Murray Theatre (740 seats), Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

STRANGER. (6,660 feet). Star cast. A dramatic success, but a box office failure. Appealed to the more intelligent class, but too sombre for average consumption. For high class trade only. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Limited audience appeal. Rural class. town of 500. Admission 10-30, 15-40. Charles W. Lewis, I. O. O. F. Theatre (225 seats), Grand Gorge, New York.

STRANGER. (6,660 feet). Star, Betty Compson. A story of London, too sordid to please the average fan. Only an ordinary program picture. Sunday, no. Special, no. Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall Theatre, Chester, Vermont.

THUNDERING HERD. (7,187 feet). Star, Ernest Torrence. A special attraction in every way. Consider it better than "North of 36." Business good; everyone pleased at advanced admission. Would not compare any of these later pictures with "Covered Wagon" as some exhibitors have done. "Covered Wagon" came first and will always be referred to by people as the peer of its kind, regardless of whether it really is a better picture or not. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Splendid audience appeal. College town class, town of 4,000. Admission 10-25, 10-40. C. W. Cupp, Royal Theatre (500 seats), Arkadelphia, Arkansas.

TIGER LOVE. (5,325 feet). Star, Estelle Taylor. A Romany story of a kidnapped bride that is good entertainment. A good program picture that is suitable for Sunday, but is not a special. Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall Theatre, Chester, Vermont.

TOMORROW'S LOVE. (5,802 feet). Star, Agnes Ayres. Best Ayres for years. Light but seemed to please. Lots of comedy and just like human beings might act. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Audience appeal eighty-five per cent. Small town class, town of 1,000. Admission 10-35. S. G. Harsh, Princess Theatre (240 seats), Mapleton, Iowa.

Generosity

Good old Dave Strayer, who sends tips from Mt. Joy Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania, has a real spirit of helpfulness, and he's certainly a square shooter. He proves it—this way:

"Van, you can keep sending me report blanks, but needn't send stamped envelopes: my reason for saying this is that I am only too glad to send in these reports on pictures as our patrons and I see them, and besides, I get my three dollars worth out of Moving Picture World without you donating stamps for me to send the reports."

Thanks, Dave. Atta boy!

TOP OF THE WORLD. (7,167 feet). Star cast. Holds the interest but not entertainment they're looking for these days. Fair tone. Sunday, no. Special, no. Fair appeal. Family and student class, town of 4,000. Admission 10-25. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre (600 seats), Decorah, Iowa.

TOP OF THE WORLD. (7,176 feet). Star, James Kirkwood. A very true adaptation of the novel of the same name. This will please the majority. Storm scenes very effective. Acting of entire cast fine. Business off on account of weather. D——n this daylight time. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair audience appeal. All classes, town of 3,000. Admission 25-35. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

TOP OF THE WORLD. (7,167 feet). Star cast. Fair picture of the program type taken from the book. One of the new famous forty. Everybody seemed satisfied. Medium box office. Tone fair. Sunday, no. Special, no. Appeal, seventy-five per cent. All classes, town of 6,000. Admission 10-20-30. Frank H. Wotton, Park Theatre (600 seats), Lebanon, New Hampshire.

TRIUMPH. (8,297 feet). Star cast. This picture drew well and pleased about eighty per cent, so I cannot agree with the exhibitors who have panned it. It was a good buy for me. Leatrice Joy is ably supported by Rod LaRocque and Victor Varconi. The press sheet is somewhat exaggerating, but that is a common occurrence. A good program picture. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall Theatre, Chester, Vermont.

WANDERER OF THE WASTELAND. (6,700 feet). Star, Jack Holt. Not much. Technicolor detracts from acting and actors. Made picture too dark. Drew well but poor condition of print caused an unsatisfactory show. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair audience appeal. Farmers, town of 442. Admission 10-25. John C. Leveck, Benoit Auditorium (100 seats), Benoit, Mississippi.

Producers' Dist. Corp.

BEYOND THE BORDER. Star, Harry Carey. Another real Carey western with plenty of action and good acting. All the Carey's are good that I have run. Tone, good. Special, no. Good appeal. Working class city of 13,000. Admission 10-15. G. M. Bertling, Favorite Theatre (160 seats), Piqua, Ohio.

HIS DARKER SELF. (5 reels). Star, Lloyd Hamilton. I can't say anything good about this inclined to be vulgar in places. Hardly the picture for a small town show. Will do for a bunch of roughnecks. Small town class and farmers town of 600. H. W. Batchelder, Galt Theatre (175 seats), Galt, California.

MIAMI. (6,317 feet). Star, Betty Compson. Here is Miami in all its beauty and glory. Heart interest and thrills. A picture splendidly done. Photography wonderful. If you do not play "Miami" you are losing a big bet. Nothing but praise from patrons. Tone, good. Special, yes. Great audience appeal. General class town of 1,200. Admission 15-25. E. N. Prescott, Prescott Theatre (250 seats), Union, Maine.

ROARING RAILS. (5,753 feet). Star, Harry Carey. Harry Carey and Edith Roberts in a very good railroad drama. Good title and good paper helped to draw them in and the picture did the rest. Good program picture suitable for Sunday but not a special. Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall Theatre, Chester, Vermont.

WELCOME STRANGER. (6,618 feet). Star cast. Was surely welcomed by all, everyone seemed to like this picture. Good comments, good attendance, good print. In my opinion good for any house anytime, so play it. Tone, good. Special, no. Fine audience appeal. General class town of 1,200. Admission 15-25. E. N. Prescott, Prescott Circuit (250 seats), Union, Maine.

United Artists

AMERICA. (14,000 feet). Star cast. An A-1 picture from every standpoint and will please all who see it except the ultra jazz crowds who seem to want nothing but flaming youths. Go after this in a big way and get the schools interested or you will flop as it will not register at the box office unless handled in this manner. It's a picture you will be proud of having played. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Appeal, ninety per cent. Industrial class town of 6,000. Admission 10-30. L. O. Davis, Virginia Theatre (750 seats), Hazard, Kentucky.

WAY DOWN EAST. Star cast. The first picture I ever repeated. After holding the attendance record for more than three years "Way Down East" played to about two-thirds the original business on a very stormy night and gave entire satisfaction. Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall Theatre, Chester, Vermont.

WHITE ROSE. (11 reels). Star cast. Too long. Very good picture of its kind. The story may be true to life but it didn't prove extra good entertainment here. Special, no. Appeal, hard to tell. Small town class town of 1,000. Admission 10-35. S. G. Harsh, Princess Theatre (249 seats), Mapleton, Iowa.

Universal

FAST WORKER. (6,500 feet). Star, Reginald Denny. Three days to fair business. Picture liked by all who saw it. General class city of 35,000. Admission 25-35. C. D.

Evelyn Peirce is the most recent girl among the thousands of extras in Hollywood to win screen prominence. Despite her beauty and considerable acting talent, this girl from Texas struggled for three years to attain recognition. Now she has been signed by the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer stock company and will receive some important roles in that organization's forthcoming productions.

Buss, Strand Theatre (700 seats), Easton, Pennsylvania.

FAST WORKER. (6,500 feet). Star, Reginald Denny. This was an excellent Denny vehicle. The comedy element went across great for us, here. It's a dandy show for everybody young and old. Tone, good. Not a special. Fine appeal. Better class town of 4,500. Admission 10-15. C. A. Anglemire "Y" Theatre (404 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

HIT AND RUN. (5,508 feet). Star, Hoot Gibson. This is a very entertaining little picture and if you can use this on a Saturday night you will please your crowd and draw a crowd. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. All classes town of 3,200. Admission 10-20-30. Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, South Dakota.

SPORTING YOUTH. (6,712 feet). Star, Reginald Denny. A very good program picture with many laughs, lots of thrills and everything absolutely clean. Not a dull moment nor any excess footage. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall Theatre, Chester, Vermont.

TURMOIL. (7 reels). Star cast. This picture did fair business. Was liked by about fifty per cent. who saw it. General class city of 35,000. Admission 25-35. C. D. Buss, Strand Theatre (700 seats), Easton, Pennsylvania.

WHITE TIGER. (7,177 feet). Star, Priscilla Dean. A program picture that failed to please. Miss Dean no longer creates any stir at my box office. Her screen appearance is usually the opportunity for a nice uninterrupted nap for the ticket seller. Miss Dean is attractive and talented, but my patrons just can't see her. "White Tiger" is just another crook story with Miss Dean in an unsympathetic role. Sunday, no. Special, no. Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall Theatre, Chester, Vermont.

WHITE TIGER. (7,177 feet). Star, Priscilla Dean. Came near paying for this one and not playing it. Thought it too old. Seven reels of good stuff. A little old but good print. Bought it right and made a little money. One hundred per cent. audience appeal. Sunday, no. Special, no. George Marlow, Washington Theatre (289 seats), Atoka, Oklahoma.

YOUNG IDEAS. (4,095 feet). Star, Laura LaPlante. This is a good picture full of comedy and thrills and will please. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Good appeal. All classes town of 806. Admission 10-20. W. C. Herndon, Liberty Theatre (250 seats), Valliant, Oklahoma.

Vitagraph

CAPTAIN BLOOD. (10,680 feet). Star, J. Warren Kerrigan. A great sea story, and Kerrigan's acting is fine. Sea stories do not draw here for some reason, also film rental too high. Lost money on it. Good tone. Railroad class town of 2,500. Admission 25-50. H. C. Porter, Dreamland Theatre (350 seats), New Albany, Mississippi.

CODE OF THE WILDERNESS. (7,000 feet). Star, John Bowers. Good western that went over okay. Should make money for you. Plenty of action. All classes town of 4,000. R. L. Nowell, Idlehour Theatre, Monroe, Georgia.

LET NOT MAN PUT ASUNDER. (8 reels). Star, Pauline Frederick. This subject was not on my contract because I read the boys Straight From the Shoulder tips on this one and knew it would not please my patrons. They don't like this kind of mush. I had to wire Vitagraph for a picture and had several good action pictures on contract with them at the time and was expecting one from my contract but instead I got this one. Suppose this was the only chance Vitagraph had to sell this one. If your attendance is not of the highbrow class stay off, it would not please. C. M. Lane, Big Sanday Theatre (200 seats), Big Sandy, West Virginia.

MAN FROM BRODNEY'S. (7,100 feet). Star, J. Warren Kerrigan. Good picture you don't need to be afraid to book this one as most any audience will like it. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Good appeal. Small town class and farmers town of 600. Admission 10-20, 10-30. H. W. Batchelder. Galt Theatre (175 seats), Galt, California.

MIDNIGHT ALARM. (6,000 feet). Star, Alice Calhoun. A very good fire picture spoiled by a bum print. Picture has good drawing power. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall Theatre, Chester, Vermont.

Warner Bros.

DARK SWAN. (6,500 feet). Star, Monte Blue. Pretty fair offering that pleased majority. The book really brought them in to see the picture. Picture is okay for whole family. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good appeal. Town and country class town of 1,200. Admission 10-25. C. R. Seff, New Radio Theatre (250 seats), Correctionville, Iowa.

LIGHTHOUSE BY THE SEA. Star cast. Very good picture. Dog wonderful, but business just fair. Charles Freeman, Regent Theatre, New Castle, Pennsylvania.

LIGHTHOUSE BY THE SEA. (6,700 feet). Star, Rin Tin Tin (dog). The best dog picture yet. Better than "Find Your Man." Good story, plenty of action, and wonderful dog. What could be sweeter. Box office fine. Tone, good. Sunday, no. Special, yes. Audience appeal, one hundred per cent. All classes town of 6,000. Admission 10-20-30. Frank H. Wotton, Park Theatre (600 seats), Lebanon, New Hampshire.

W. C. Snyder, Cozy Theatre, Lamont, Oklahoma, is another good scout who has come in on the blank with a report for "Our Gang."

Welcome to Mr. Snyder. You'll all relish his tips.

Imitation of Mr. Snyder's good will is going to be the sincerest flattery.

YOU—TOO!

Comedies

CRADLE ROBBERS. (Pathe). "Our Gang." Fairly good, but Mr. Roach's gang will lose out of he don't get a little more pep into 'em. The last two or three have been padded too much. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal, one hundred per cent. All classes town of 2,517. Admission 10-25. A. L. Middleton, Grand Theatre (500 seats), DeQueen, Arkansas.

OUT DOOR PAJAMAS. (Pathe). A good single reel with Charlie Chase. Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall Theatre, Chester, Vermont.

POOR BUTTERFLY. (Educatfonal). Star, Ruth Hiatt. Full of old time stunts that brought some laughs. It is not up to the Mermaid, but then it's impossible to ring the bell everytime. Tone, okay. Fair appeal. Better class town of 4,500. Admission 10-15. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (404 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

POOR FISH. (Pathe). Star, Charlie Chase. Here is a brand of single reel comedies that are both good, laughable, well produced, and photographed. Tone, good. Good appeal. General class town of 1,200. Admission 15-25. E. N. Prescott, Prescott Circuit (250 seats), Union, Maine.

ROCK BOTTOM. (Educational). Star, Cliff Bowes. A fairly good Cameo comedy. One or two good gags in this one. Print was in excellent condition. Tone, okay. Good appeal. Better class town of 4,500. Admission 10-15. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (404 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

SATURDAY MORNING. (Pathe). "Our Gang." A good Gang comedy as for that most all of them are. Tone, good. Good appeal. General class town of 1,200. Admission 15-35. E. N. Prescott, Prescott Theatre (250 seats), Union, Maine.

Serials

BEASTS OF PARADISE. (Universal). Star, Wm. Desmond. Just finished, and a mighty good serial. Old—but Universal gives me good prints of every episode. No special tone

INTO THE NET. (Pathe). Star, Jack Mulhall. Serials never used to get any business for me but this one is going over fine. The crowd is still holding up and I am now on the seventh chapter. Give us more serials like this one. All classes town of 3,000. Admission 25-35. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

Short Subjects

BIRDS OF PASSAGE. (Pathe). A fine filler to use with a short feature and News reel. Sufficiently novel to prove interesting and not too long to become monotonous. Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall Theatre, Chester, Vermont.

FUN FROM THE PRESS. (Producers Distributing Corp.) A take of a newspaper advertisement and witty sayings with a short act cartoon for a finish. Goes good for a change. Tone, good. Fair appeal. General class town of 1,200. Admission 15-25. E. N. Prescott, Prescott Circuit (250 seats), Union, Maine.

Independents

BAREFOOT BOY. (State Right). Star, John Bowers. A very good program picture that will please the small town patronage. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall Theatre, Chester, Vermont.

BEAUTIFUL SINNER. (State Right.). Star, Eva Novak. Another picture with a bum story in which the actors wander around lost during the taking of 5,000 feet to inflict on your patrons, in exchange for their two bits, this may be a knockout but I will be the one that gets it, if I will show a few more persimmons like this one. Not much tone. Not suitable for Sunday. Special, no. No appeal. Small town class town of 300. Admission 10-25. Roy E. Cline, Osage Theatre (200 seats), Osage, Oklahoma.

BRINGING HOME THE BACON. (State Right). Star, Buffalo Bill, Jr. Had more good comments on this than I have on the majority of specials that I run, this has a different story with lots of good comedy scattered through it. I only wish that some of the other producers would see this feature and learn how to make westerns. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, nearly one hundred percent. Small town class town of 300. Admission 10-25. Roy E. Cline, Osage Theatre (200 seats), Osage, Oklahoma.

CROSSED TRAILS. (State Right). Star, Franklin Farnum. All of Farnum's are good but he does not go over for me. All of his westerns are good. Tone, good. Sunday, no. Special, no. Good appeal. Working class city of 13,000. Admission 10-15. G. M. Bertling, Favorite Theatre (160 seats), Piqua, Ohio.

FIGHTING IN FRANCE. (State Right). Star cast. Paper on this is a knockout, and with a machine gun as a lobby will knock them cold, but watch your step, run it at regular prices and you will get by, providing you have not run any of the war films, as it is the same stuff we have all run before and your patrons will not be slow in giving you the razz. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, good. Small town class town of 300. Admission 10-25. Roy E. Cline, Osage Theatre (200 seats), Osage, Oklahoma.

FIRE PATROL. (Chadwick.) Star cast. If your patronage wants sea stories with plenty of action don't pass this one up while it is rather heavy it is nevertheless a well handled production. Tone, good. Special, no. Good appeal. General class town of 1,200. Admission 15-25. E. N. Prescott, Prescott Circuit (250 seats), Union, Maine.

LAST MAN. (State Right). Star, Bill Patton. After looking at a piece of cheese like this, it makes one wonder where some of those directors get their stories, any ten year old school girl could write as good a story, a few more punk ones like this Bill and it will be taps for you. No tone. Sunday, no. Special, no. No appeal. Small town class town of 300. Admission 10-25. Roy E. Cline, Osage Theatre (200 seats), Osage, Oklahoma.

PAINTED FLAPPER. (Chadwick). Star, James Kirkwood. A first class flapper picture with real acting, good enough for anybody that likes this kind. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good appeal. Working class city of 13,000. Admission 10-15. G. M. Bertling, Favorite Theatre (160 seats), Piqua, Ohio.

PAL O' MINE. (State Right). Star, Irene Rich. Good program picture and that is all; pleased about seventy-five per cent. Railroad class and miners town of 3,500. Admission 10-35. Giles Master, Strand Theatre (750 seats), Gallup, New Mexico.

RANGE VULTURES. (State Right). Star, Lester Cuneo. All of his are fair westerns but nothing extra big, will do for small houses that like westerns with action. Tone, good. Sunday, no. Special, no. Good appeal. Working class city of 13,000. Admission 10-15. G. M. Bertling, Favorite Theatre (160 seats), Piqua, Ohio.

THOSE WHO JUDGE. (Banner). Star, Patsy Ruth Miller. A very good picture while it is not as good as "Speed." Will compare very well with the rest of the Banners. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, seventy-five per cent. Roy E. Cline, Osage Theatre (200 seats), Osage, Oklahoma.

TRAIL DUST. (State Right). Star cast. Played this picture to capacity house. All were pleased with it that saw it for it's a real western. Good tone. Special, yes. Good appeal. All classes town of 806. Admission 10-20. W. C. Herndon, Liberty Theatre (250 seats), Valliant, Oklahoma.

WOMEN AND GOLD. (State Right). Star, Frank Mayo. I did not see this one personally but judging by comments it went over all right. If your audience likes action give this one to them. All classes town of 3,000. Admission 25-35. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

Fox Launches "Lazybones" with Charles Jones in Lead Role

"LAZYBONES" has been put into work for the screen by Fox Film Corporation from the great stage success of last season by Owen Davis. This news comes fast on the heels of the statement that Charles (Buck) Jones had been chosen for the leading male role, thereby giving the erstwhile cowboy star a brilliant opportunity to display his true histrionic ability.

A glance at the names of the other players shows that this production, like other supreme attractions being made by Fox for the coming season, will contain a superb cast. Madge Bellamy will occupy this leading female role. Others are Edythe Chapman, Leslie Fenton, Jane Novak, ZaSu Pitts, Emily Fitzroy and William Norton Bailey. As work progresses on the picture other names will be added.

The production is being directed by Frank Borzage, well known to all film fans for his successes on the screen over many years. His cinematographer will be Glen MacWilliams. The scenario was written by Frances Marion.

"Lazybones" is the name given to a village character who likes work as much as an alley cat likes a bull pup. Being lazy, however, is his only fault. At heart he is the soul of honor, and is possessed with a lovable nature that wins him friends in spite of his delinquent ways. When the situation arises, which it does—where he has to choose between sacrificing his honor and reputation to save that of another—he shows himself to be a true hero.

Ann Pennington Has Role In Metro's "Pretty Ladies"

WORD comes from the Coast that Ann Pennington has been added to the cast of Monta Bell's production of "Pretty Ladies," and will play herself in the scenes reproducing the New York Ziegfeld Follies, for which Florenz Ziegfeld has selected the most beautiful chorus ever screened. These sequences are being photographed in colors and are spectacular.

Miss Pennington, who ranks among the most bewitching and entertaining of dancers in the history of the American stage, has a large following, and will considerably enhance the popularity of this picture by appearing in it. Her presence in these scenes will, in addition, increase their authenticity, already vouched for by the cooperation of Producer Florenz Ziegfeld.

ZaSu Pitts and Tom Moore have the leads in this production.

"Pals" One of Truart Novelties

The title of the Truart Novelty feature, "The Love Child," has been changed to "Pals." The featured players in this production will be Louise Lorraine, Rex, the wonder dog, and Black Beauty, the marvelous performing horse.

"The Black Rider"

"The Black Rider," a novel from the pen of Max Brand, a romantic comedy, has been purchased for Richard Talmadge, F. B. O. star, according to announcement from Mr. Talmadge. It will be one of the later productions of his current series of eight for Film Booking Offices of America.

Lionel Barrymore Star

Lionel Barrymore, the famous stage star, has been chosen as star of the first True Story Film Company's production, "The Wrongdoers," to be offered to independent exchanges by Astor Distributing Corporation, of which Harry Rathner is president, and the offices of which are in the Loew State building.

Baker Poisoned by Oak

Eddie Baker, comedian, with Bobby Vernon Comedies, is recovering from a serious case of infection from poison oak, contracted during the production of "Air Tight." The infection was contracted under peculiar circumstances. Baker was working on an interior set constructed to represent a mountain side covered with trees and shrubs.

Change of Title

The third Lionel Barrymore Special production for Chadwick Pictures Corporation, which will be released on June 1st as the seventh of the Chadwick Nine, will be titled "A Man of Iron," instead of "A Man of Honor," as previously announced. Mildred Harris plays the leading role opposite Mr. Barrymore, and the picture was directed by Whitman Bennett.

Here is Harold Lloyd with his party and a welcoming committee at the Louisville and Nashville depot in New Orleans upon his arrival for a thirty-six hours' stay over Tuesday, May 19, on his trip to the Pacific Coast. Reading from left to right is Harold Wilkes, branch manager of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation at New Orleans; Mrs. Harold Lloyd (Mildred Davis), William H. Gueringer, assistant general manager of the Saenger Amusement Company; Harold Lloyd, John Murphy, Lloyd's production manager, and Mrs. Murphy.

Harold Lloyd Receives Royal Ovation on New Orleans Stop

HAROLD LLOYD, filmdom's young jester, was received like a royal visitor when he stopped over for thirty-six hours in New Orleans on his trip from Jacksonville, Fla., to the Pacific Coast. Mr. Lloyd was the guest of the Saenger Amusement Company during his short stay.

Filmdom's peerless laughmaker was accompanied by Mrs. Lloyd (Mildred Davis), John Murphy, his production manager, with Mrs. Murphy, and Joe Reedy, his publicist. He arrived in New Orleans Tuesday, May 19, at 9.45 p. m., and left the following Thursday at noon.

Harold Lloyd's visit to New Orleans was made interesting by a trip through the French Quarter Wednesday, May 20, followed by a luncheon at the Patio Royal, tendered by the city's younger set. Lloyd and his party were then shown through the harbor of New Orleans, the second port of the United States, on a dock board yacht. In the evening they were the guests of the Saenger Amusement Company at a dinner at La Louisiane, followed by a theatre party.

Before leaving Thursday morning Lloyd was shown through WSMB Radio Broadcasting Station atop the thirteenth floor of the Maison-Blanche Building.

"A wonderful city, a great harbor, splendid people," was Harold Lloyd's short but memorable summing up of why he would remember New Orleans.

Bryson Here on Visit

Is Taking Print of Universal's "The Phantom of the Opera" Back to England

James V. Bryson, managing director of European Motion Picture Company of Great Britain, is here on a hurried mission and his first visit since he took over the managerial reins of Universal's English agents.

He arrived recently on the "Leviathan," solely to take back a print of Universal's "The Phantom of the Opera," which he says is heavily booked throughout England and Scotland, and for which one of the greatest campaigns for a motion picture was launched in the United Kingdom.

His stay here will depend entirely on his obtaining "The Phantom." Meanwhile he is spending most of his time reviewing the film in its present form, besides seeing much of Universal's newest product that Bryson's organization will distribute.

"Bagdad" Film Breaks Record

"Bad times and business depression locally chiefly is a matter of imagination," said Fred S. Meyer, managing director of the Palace Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio, after a recent showing of the Douglas Fairbanks United Artists Corporation release, "The Thief of Bagdad."

At half past six o'clock Sunday evening, the opening day, every seat in the house was filled, and there was a big crowd being held out. This was a record. Crowds stood three hours in the lobby waiting for admission to see the picture; another record, and the picture played to more people on Sunday than it has on any day for more than four years.

Kathlyn Myers in Lead Role

Kathlyn Myers, prominent as leading woman for Tom Mix and other stars, has been chosen by Harry Garson to appear opposite Maurice (Lefty) Flynn in the Gerald Beaumont story, "High and Handsome," a comedy drama with a central character, a policeman, played by Mr. Flynn. One of the highlights of the production will be a prize fight in which Flynn will cross gloves with Tom Kennedy, once famous in the roped arena. Others in the cast of "High and Handsome" are Lydia Knott, Gene Perry and Marjorie Bonner. Harry Garson is directing the production for Globe Pictures Corporation for F. B. O. distribution.

Dorothy Mackaill, First National featured player, now scoring a decided hit in "Chickie."

Best Wit Presented by Pathe's "Topics of the Day"

"TOPICS OF THE DAY," the weekly humor film produced by Timely Films, Inc., for release through Pathe exchanges, qualifies for the tried and proved class of screen entertainment. Each issue of the film is comprised of okes and witticisms which have already been tried out upon the readers of the respective publications from which the editorial staff of "Topics" select their candidates. By the process of elimination, including actual audience tests, the best available humor gems are selected for the current release of "Topics of the Day."

It requires the combined efforts of an editorial staff of twenty-one people to carefully peruse the several thousand magazines and newspapers which arrive in the daily mail. All of the editors know from experience what goes best with audiences. They spend their evenings in various types of theatres and actually keep score on the laughter and applause results registered by each individual "Topic." Styles of jokes are just as changeable as feminine fashions. By keeping their fingers upon the public pulse, the Timely Films' staff is able to provide practically sure-fire material for each release program.

The selection of humor for "Topics" involves considerable work not apparent to the layman. Not only must the candidate qualify from a timely and humorous standpoint but there is a limit to the number of words in each one. Oftentimes, it is necessary to cut down the story. This means that the general atmosphere surrounding the original story must either be changed, eliminated or boiled down to its very meat. Again, a dialect not easily understandable, or a story with an involved point, must be clarified in order to be grasped within the short space of time a "Topic" is on the screen.

Particular care is taken that no joke bears even the slightest suggestion of ridicule toward race, color or creed; also any political reference must be absolutely impartial. This care is taken with the object of not only satisfying one hundred per cent of an audience but also not to offend even one-half of one percent of that same audience.

After the editors have made their individual selections of humor they are passed on to the managing editor who selects those he deems best and has them typed upon index cards. Once a week, the staff meets in conference and all the candidate cards are discussed and voted upon. A test reel is made of the twenty best candidates and this is tried out in several theatres. The editors, seated in various parts of these theatres keep accurate check upon the reception of each "Topic" and any that fail to "get over" are eliminated from the reel. The remaining selections comprise the current release of the subject, which is then ready for distribution through the Pathe Exchanges.

Not only are "Topics of the Day" a standby with thousands of motion picture theatres but they register equally as well in vaudeville houses, including the theatres of the Keith-Albee, Orpheum, and other big time vaudeville circuits.

Four Educational Units Rest on Finishing 1924-5 Program

ALL production work on the 1924-1925 series of comedies which were produced at the Fine Arts studios where the Hamilton, Mermaid, Juvenile and Cameo units, producting comedies for Educational distribution this season, has been finished and all companies are enjoying a short vacation awaiting the start of the 1925-26 series which will be announced by Educational in a few days.

The mermaid Comedies have completed their series of eighteen Mermaid Comedies which presented such stars as Lige Conley, Lee Moran, and Ned Sparks and Eddie Nelson. The last comedies of the series will be released during July and early August of the current year. The first of the new series will start in early September.

Mermaid Comedies which have not as yet been assigned a release date are "Beware" and "Below Zero," with Lige Conley in the leading role, and "Hot and Heavy," the final comedy with Eddie Nelson. Lloyd Hamilton still has one comedy to be released —"Waiting." The Juvenile series was completed with the release of "Baby Blues," with Mickey Bennett in the leading role. The Cameo comedies have about six single-reel subjects still to be released to complete the present series of twenty-four, but the entire series has been completed.

Educational's policy of releasing a number of excellent two and one reel comedies during the summer months will assure the first run and early subsequent run houses a supply of quality comedy subjects for the summer months when the demand for lighter entertainment is more pronounced than during the colder weather.

Steiner Units Active

William Steiner announces that Edith Thornton has started production in Hollywood on the first of her new series of society comedy dramas for the coming year. The working title is "Dorothy's Guardian" and the supporting cast includes Lou Tellegen, Eddie Phillips, Joan Standing, Gino Corrado, Lincoln Steadman, and George Fawcett. Charles Hutchison is preparing to shoot "The Sky Pirate," a thrilling stunt melodrama, while Leo Maloney is working on "The Blood Bond" a romantic western comedy drama.

F. B. O. Hard at Work on Many Big Pictures for Next Season

WITH its production guns aimed flush at the biggest program in its history, the F. B. O. Studio organization is digging into the trenches at Gower and Melrose, Hollywood, for the season's campaign.

The program, just announced by Major H. C. S. Thomson, managing director of Film Booking Offices, embraces no less than sixty-four productions.

There will be twelve special productions. The rest will be divided into star program series and short subjects, of which F. B. O. will offer a large array.

B. P. Fineman, general manager of the studios and under whose supervision the bulk of F. B. O. productions will be made, announces that work has already begun on several of the outstanding attractions.

J. Leo Meehan, noted magazine and newspaper editor, has started work on Gene Stratton-Porter's latest novel, "The Keeper of the Bees," with a cast including Robert Frazer, Clara Bow, Alyce Mills, and Gene Stratton, eleven year old granddaughter of the famous author. This promises to be one of F. B. O's most pretentious offerings.

At least three other important attractions have already been completed and are awaiting release. They are "Drusilla with a Million," F. B. O.'s most formidable production ace; "Parisian Nights" and "If Marriage Fails," the C. Gardner Sullivan production. Emory Johnson is slated to produce two specials, "The Last Edition," a newspaper story and "Happiness," which will be filmed in Sweden and Norway. Fred Thomson having signed a new contract with F. B. O. has launched the first of his new and bigger attractions, "The Wild Bull of Skull Mountain," from the pen of Marion Jackson. Fred now has his own production outfit but will continue to function at the F. B. O. studios where his biggest successes have been made. Silver King will continue to have fat parts in the Thomson vehicles. There will be eight Thomson pictures. Evelyn Brent also is under way with "Lady Robinhood," an original story in a Spanish locale. Ralph Ince is directing the little F. B. O. star. Miss Brent also will be starred in eight productions this season.

Among other F. B. O. headliners are Maurice ("Lefty") Flynn and Richard Talmadge, each of whom will appear in eight productions geared for popular patronage. Flynn has just completed the Gerald Beaumont comedy-drama, "High and Handsome" and will next embark on "Jack of Diamonds" while Talmadge has just finished "Over the Wall" and will shortly start "The Isle of Hope."

F. B. O.'s list of specials also includes "The Midnight Flyer," "The Futurity Winner," "The Isle of Retribution," and at least two Laura Jean Libby stories, all of which will go into production within the next several months. All production will continue to be concentrated at the big studios in Hollywood.

Activity in the short subject field will embrace a new series by H. C. Witwer, a series by Sam Hellman and a new series in which Alberta Vaughn will be starred, by Nell Martin, called "Adventures of Mazie."

REGINALD DENNY

Appearing in Universal's White List and adding a strong appeal by his versatility

Cutting "Sally of the Sawdust"

D. W. Griffith has completed production of his last picture for United Artists, "Sally of the Sawdust," which features Carol Dempster, W. C. Fields and Alfred Lunt in the principal roles. The interiors were made at the Paramount Long Island studio, and included among other imposing sets, a huge circus and carnival scene for which one whole stage was set aside. Exteriors were filmed at Greenwich, Conn. and along the Motor Parkway and other locations in various towns and villages on Long Island.

Theda Bara Cast Completed

With several additions and changes during the past week, Director James Young has completed casting "The Unchastened Woman," Louis K. Anspacher's well known Broadway play, which Chadwick Pictures Corporation has selected as the vehicle for Theda Bara's return to the screen. George Walsh, who had been announced previously as a member of the cast, has been displaced by John Miljan, as Mr. Walsh was unable to complete "Blue Blood," his second Chadwick picture, in time to start this production. Other additions to the cast include Dale Fuller, Eric Mayme, Mayme Kelso, Frederick Kovert and Milla Davenport. Production was started this week.

Ballance Heads Southern District

Harry G. Ballance for five years one of the Division Managers in the home office of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has been transferred, at his own request, to the Southern district. Mr. Ballance has desired for some time past to get into the field work again and accepted the position of District Manager in the South, with headquarters at Atlanta.

Mr. Ballance has been eight years with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, holding successively positions of salesman, Branch Manager and Division Manager.

Second Buffalo Bill Jr.

Artclass Pictures announces that Lester F. Scott, Jr., has started the second of the new series of Thunderbolt Thrillers featuring Buffalo Bill, Jr. This will be another feature showing new settings and unusual stories of fast moving acrobatic action. It will be released under the title of "The Desert Demon."

"Smooth as Satin," starring Evelyn Brent, an F. B. O. production.

More Players Cast to Depict Roles in Warner Bros. Films

CASTING is proceeding rapidly on those Warner Bros. productions, yet to be made, which are to be early releases on the 1925-26 schedule. Monte Blue has been selected to head the cast in the picturization of the Gregory Rogers story, "Red Hot Tires," with Patsy Ruth Miller in the leading woman's role and Lincoln Steadman, Fred Esmelton, William Lowery and Charles Conklin also in the cast. Erle Kenton is to direct.

Finishes Work on "Limited Mail"

Monte Blue, who is scoring a hit in "Kiss Me Again," following the successful launching of "Recompense," has just finished work on "The Limited Mail," while the production of Kathleen Norris's "Rose of the Wolrd," in which Patsy Ruth Miller has the title role, also has just been completed.

David Butler, who was Terry Moulton in Warner Bros.' "Tracked in the Snow Country," has been added to the cast of "The Man on the Box," in which "Syd" Chaplin starred, and work on which, under the direction of Fred Newmeyer and "Chuck" Reisner, is well under way.

Kate Toncray is playing the part of Mrs. Parker in "Bobbed Hair," featuring Marie Prevost and Kenneth Harlan, production work on which is well started, with Alan Crosland directing, and Nora Cecil has been added to the cast of "Three Weeks in Paris," in which Matt Moore and Dorothy Devore have the principal roles. Roy del Ruth is directing.

Capt. Nungesser, famous French fighting ace of the air service, one of the featured players in Associated Exhibitors' "The Sky Raider."

Casting for Three New Pictures

B. P. Schulberg is now engaged in selecting the casts for three pictures on his program of eighteen for next season. This trio now in production consists of "Parisian Love" which Gasnier will direct, "The Girl Who Wouldn't Work" to be made by Marcel De Sano and "With This Ring," Fanny Heaslip Lea's latest novel.

Larry Semon Will Star

Larry Semon, whose "Wizard of Oz" promises to be the most successful production yet made by Chadwick Pictures Corporation, will play the leading role in "The Count of Luxembourg," the internationally famous musical comedy by Franz Lehar, which has recently been bought by that company. Arthur Gregor, the director, Mr. Semon and I. E. Chadwick, President of the company, are now selecting the cast which will include several prominent players. Production will be started shortly in Los Angeles.

Independents at Work

F. B. O. Studios are hitting a fast pace. F. B. O. has the following units at work: "The Keeper of the Bees," J. Leo Meehan directing; Fred Thomson filming "The Wild Bull of Skull Mountain"; Dick Talmadge, "The Isle of Hope"; Evelyn Brent, "Lady Robinhood"; Wesley Ruggles, "The Pacemakers"; Maurice Flynn, "High and Handsome." Other independents are James Young, Theda Bara in "The Unchastened Woman"; Larry Semon, Dorothy Dwan Feature; Wallace Worsley. All-star production: Nat Ross Feature for Associated Exhibitors; Doug MacLean preparing; Schulberg active with two units.

Next Flynn Picture

A gentleman raffles will be the central character of "Jack of Diamonds," Maurice (Lefty) Flynn's next vehicle for Film Booking Offices, according to B. P. Fineman, production chief of the F. B. O. Studios in Hollywood. It is a comedy mystery drama and an aquatic carnival will be an outstanding feature of the production. Harry Garson will produce and direct the feature, which will be Flynn's seventh feature for the distributing corporation.

"Chronicles of America" Offer Fine Tie-ups for Box Office

By HARRY L. KNAPPEN,
Sales Manager of "Chronicles of America" Department, Pathe Exchange, Inc.

THE great headway made during the year by the "Chronicles of America" photoplays in establishing themselves as permanent screen fixtures in hundreds of theatres throughout the country marks a very definite and significant trend in the history of motion pictures.

The outstanding success of the "Chronicles" has been due in no small measure to the fact that both Pathe and the Yale University Press united in furnishing impressive publicity and exploitation aids.

From the start it has been the consistent aim of producer and distributor to first sell this product to the public. Wherever this has been undertaken in the right way, the "Chronicles" have remained sold. A notable example is the Crandall Theatres Circuit, of Washington, D. C., which, with the support of such groups as the D. A. R. and Yale graduates, achieved an outstanding financial success with the "Chronicles" in running the entire series at the Ambassador Theatre.

In addition to the ordinary facilities of its branch offices, Pathe put specialty men in the field whose sole mission is to keep the daily papers and other public prints liberally supplied with reading matter and to effect social group organization, thus insuring liberal attendance. In many cities Better Film Committees have been interested to the point of giving the pictures the kind of box-office support which encouraged exhibitors to run the entire series.

Big metropolitan dailies as well as small newspapers and important national magazines have freely given of their space in the furtherance of this series. That this is advertising which money can't buy is a fact of which shrewd showmen have been quick to take advantage.

A particular appeal has been made to patriotic and Americanization groups. One of the most important tie-ups effected was that recently consummated with the United States Flag Association, which is to help get the "Chronicles" additional support through local flag circles throughout the nation.

Tremendous cooperation on the part of schools and colleges also has been developed throughout the country. Boards of Education, college presidents, school superintendents, principals and teachers freely use their influence to promote attendance of both school children and grownups.

In local Parent-Teachers Associations throughout the land mothers and fathers get behind the "Chronicles" with a common object—that of causing such a box-office reaction as will encourage exhibitors to run all the "Chronicles."

By getting the cooperation of these organizations and individuals and aiming whenever practicable to show appropriate "Chronicles" on national and state holidays, exhibitors with the vision to book this product have been well rewarded for their efforts.

Exhibitors generally have been responsive to the endorsement given the "Chronicles" by The National Board of Review of Motion Pictures. As this organization is the film Bible for all individuals and organizations interested in the "Better Films" movement, this endorsement will enable them to get the kind of support they most desire in their neighborhood and community.

In a letter to the Yale University Press, Wilton A. Barrett, Executive Secretary of the National Board of Review, says:

"May I take this occasion to say that the National Board has been greatly interested in the 'Chronicles of America' Photoplay series. Each film of the series has been placed on our selected list, and it has seemed to our reviewing members that they are affording the motion picture-goers of the country a fine opportunity to see something that is worth while as entertainment and important in giving a knowledge of our country's history in terms of motion pictures."

Being placed on the selected list of this organization is about the highest honor that can be accorded this class of product.

No definite announcement is as yet forthcoming from the Yale University Press as to additional releases following the fifteen pictures already produced. It is known, however, that a large corps of experienced investigators are carrying on exhaustive research work with a view to producing several "Chronicles" simultaneously when production again gets under way. Thirty-three pictures are provided for in the "Chronicles of America" series of historical dramas. Of this number, fifteen have already been produced and are now in national distribution by Pathe. These fifteen releases comprise the following:

"Columbus," "Jamestown," "Vincennes," "Daniel Boone," "The Frontier Woman," "Peter Stuyvesant," "The Pilgrims," "Wolfe and Montcalm," "Gateway to the West," "Declaration of Independence," "Yorktown," "The Puritans," "Alexander Hamilton," "Dixie" and "The Eve of the Revolution."

JACK CONWAY

A new director to the fast growing staff at the Culver City Studios of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer is Jack Conway, late of Universal and prior to that with Pathe and Vitagraph. His first Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer picture will be Elinor Glyn's "The Only Thing," with Eleanor Boardman and Conrad Nagel in the leading roles.

Warns Against Use of Pins in Patching Film

Following the serious illness of a young woman film inspector who has been in the hospital several weeks suffering from blood poisoning, the Detroit Film Board of Trade has issued a warning to all theatre managers and motion picture projector operators against the use of pins in patching broken film.

The Detroit woman, employed at one of the leading exchanges, was inspecting a reel of film returned from a theatre when her finger encountered a pin, which scratched with such effec tha poisoning set in. For a time it was feared that her arm would have to be amputated. The practice of using pins instead of making regular patches has grown until it has reached alarming proportions, the statement reads.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Certain of Topping Its Record in 1925-1926

By Marcus Loew

THE astounding record made by Metro-Goldwyn during the past season will not only be lived up to but very greatly surpassed during 1925-26. That is the promise of both our producing and distributing organizations.

At no time during the history of motion pictures have so many consistent box office successes been made available for exhibitors or as many genuine stars developed as Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer sponsored last year.

When a company can point to such attractions as "He Who Gets Slapped," "The Navigator," "The Great Divide," "Janice Meredith," "Excuse Me," "Lady of the Night," "The Red Lily," "So This is Marriage," "Sinners in Silk," "Wine of Youth" and a score of others, it is something to talk about, to be proud of.

When a company develops such outstanding screen stars as Norma Shearer and John Gilbert it is a feather in their cap, proof that they are progressive and always on the lookout to provide something new for theatre patrons.

With our present line up of stars, featured players and directors the future looks particularly bright. I predict that next season will see Metro-Goldwyn far outdistance the field. We will have the greatest year since motion pictures came into their own. We are assured of the finest product it is possible to turn out. Louis B. Mayer and his associates Irving G. Thalberg and Harry Rapf have laid their plans well and their past performances offer conclusive proof of what is to come.

During the coming season Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer will greatly increase their activities in the development of new stars, new types of stories and unsual productions. It will be our aim to always strive to keep the entertainment value of our productions uppermost and to provide the finest, most interesting and novel attractions for the public.

Our studios at Culver City are now working at full blast, we are well into production on our 1925-26 schedule with several units constantly at work both on the lot and on location.

"If Metro-Goldwyn was "the talk of the industry" last season this will be all the more true during 1925-26. We are going to set the pace, a pace that will put us in unquestioned leadership.

John Gilbert Stars in Sabatini Story

JOHN GILBERT

CULVER CITY, Cal., May 25: Louis B. Mayer, vice-president in charge of production for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, announces that one of the starring vehicles for John Gilbert will be "Bardleys the Magnificent," by Rafael Sabatini. It will, of course, be done on a big scale like "Scaramouche" and Sabatini's other stories. One of the outstanding features is the fact that the entire film will be done in Technicolor. "Bardleys the Magnificent" is a powerful love story and will be one of the most colorful productions ever made. John Gilbert has one of his greatest roles in it. This screen version of one of the most popular novels of the day will present some of the greatest thrills ever photographed.

Successor to "Four Horsemen"

REX INGRAM

TOULON, France, May 25: Rex Ingram is making scenes for "Mare Nostrum" here. It is from the story by Vicente Blasco Ibanez, who has recently resumed his attacks on the King of Spain. The Ingram company, strangely enough, have been working aboard a Spanish sailing vessel several miles out from the harbor. This city has been the headquarters of the Ingram company during the making of the sea episodes and in addition to the noted director, Alice Terry and Antonio Moreno, who play the leading roles in "Mare Nostrum," have been here for some time. The production is said to be a most worthy successor to "The Four Horsemen" and it will be one of the releases of the Metro-Goldwyn company next season.

Director Vidor to Make "Big Parade"

KING VIDOR

NEW YORK, N. Y., May 25: Laurence Stallings, author of Broadway's biggest success, "What Price Glory?", has written "The Big Parade," an original story. It will be filmed by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and John Gilbert is the star. King Vidor will direct and among the supporting cast Renee Adoree will have the role of a French Mam'selle. The story ranges from the United States to France and is a box-office picture all the way. This production will be one of the biggest ever produced at the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios. Stallings-Gilbert-Vidor, there's a great combination for you.

Von Stroheim Making "Merry Widow"

ERICH VON STROHEIM

PARIS, France, May 25: A revival of the famous operetta, "The Merry Widow," has just been successfully launched here. It is said that the sponsors were largely influenced because Erich von Stroheim is making a screen version of the Savage piece which has already gained wide publicity. John Gilbert and Mae Murray will be seen in the leading roles and many of the sequences will be in Technicolor. It is predicted that "The Merry Widow" will be one of the outstanding pictures of 1925-26 as it will be a heart-gripping drama with plenty of comedy situations many of them enacted by Tully Marshall and George Fawcett. Incidentally, it has been brought right up to date.

Metro-Goldwyn Stars and Stories

"Flesh and the Devil" Seastrom's Next

VICTOR SEASTROM

CULVER CITY, Cal., May 25: John Gilbert, one of the biggest drawing cards on the screen, will be starred in "The Flesh and the Devil," Herman Sudermann's powerful novel. Carmel Myers will have the leading feminine role and Victor Seastrom will direct. The story is heavy drama, the kind Seastrom handles better than any other director of the day. His "He Who Gets Slapped" illustrates this. John Gilbert will also appear in one other Metro-Goldwyn release during 1925-26.

Ramon Novarro Now in Annapolis Story

RAMON NOVARRO

ANNAPOLIS, Md., May 25: Officials of the United States Naval Academy announced that Ramon Novarro and the company making the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer production, "Midshipman Sterling," would have the co-operation of the United States Government in filming the picture. William Christy Cabanne will direct and practically the entire story will be photographed at the Naval Academy. Shots of the graduating exercises with President Coolidge will be a feature. Wesley Barry, Harriett Hammond and Margaret Seddon will be in the supporting cast. Director Cabanne is a former Annapolis man and Wesley Barry has just made arrangements to take the entrance examinations for the United States Naval Academy. Ramon Novarro will star in two other Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer productions during 1925-26.

Eleanor Boardman in "The Circle"

ELEANOR BOARDMAN

NEW YORK, N. Y., May 25: Somerset Maugham's play, "The Circle," that ran for two seasons on Broadway and has since been touring the country, will be made into a motion picture by Metro-Goldwyn, according to an announcement by Nicholas M. Schenck, vice-president of that organization. "The Circle" is by the same author as "Rain." Frank Borzage will direct the picture, with Eleanor Boardman in the leading role. Malcolm McGregor, George Fawcett, Creighton Hale and Alec Francis will be prominent members of the cast. "The Circle" is ideal screen material and will be made into one of the greatest pictures of the coming season. The title is well and favorably known from coast to coast. Eleanor Boardman is one of the leading screen favorites of the day.

"The Barrier" to Be Special

NEW YORK, N. Y., May 25: Rex Beach's greatest story, "The Barrier," has been purchased for film production by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. It will be produced at the Culver City studios and enacted by a distinguished cast. This is a bigger, better and more tensely interesting story than "The Spoilers." It deals with the gold rush and is the last word in action pictures. "The Barrier" will be released by Metro-Goldwyn as a special production on their next season's schedule. The production will be placed in the hands of a director fully capable of bringing out forcibly all the highly dramatic incidents and thrills of the author's story.

Exposure of Spooks in "Mystic"

AILEEN PRINGLE

CULVER CITY, Cal., May 25: A sensational exposure of spooks, spirits and table-tapping is promised in "The Mystic," forthcoming Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer production. Aileen Pringle, Conway Tearle and Mitchell Lewis will be in the cast. It will be directed by Tod Browning, who made "The Unholy Three." Louis B. Mayer, vice-president and in charge of production for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, says this will be one of the biggest productions in the entire line-up of his company's product for next season.

To Direct "Time the Comedian"

GERTRUDE OLMSTED

NEW YORK, N. Y., May 25: Kate Jordan's famous story, "Time the Comedian," will be filmed by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer under the direction of Robert Z. Leonard. It is a story of a home breaker a big drama with comedy relief, and known to the trade as smart women stuff. Mae Busch, who is now here on a shopping tour, has one of the leading roles along with Lew Cody and Gertrude Olmsted, two of the industry's most prominent players.

Two Mae Murray Films on List

MAE MURRAY

NEW YORK, N. Y., May 25: Officials of Metro-Goldwyn announced today that Mae Murray would appear in two productions on their 1925-26 schedule. These will be finer, bigger and better pictures than any previous attractions with this star. Stories and other details will be decided upon soon after Miss Murray's return from abroad.

Glyn's "Reason Why" on Metro-Goldwin List

CONWAY TEARLE

NEW YORK, N. Y., May 25: It was announced that Elinor Glyn's latest and greatest story, "The Reason Why," would be filmed under the author's supervision with Aileen Pringle and Conway Tearle in the leading roles for release by Metro-Goldwyn next season. Jack Conway will direct. "The Reason Why" is one of Elinor Glyn's best selling novels, a great love story set in a jewelled background of wealth and elegance. A distinguished supporting cast selected from the great array of talent at the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios in Culver City will appear in support of Miss Pringle and Mr. Tearle.

New Hughes' Story to Be Filmed

RUPERT HUGHES

CULVER CITY, Cal., May 25: In an interview, Rupert Hughes said "Money Talks" and because the author believes this he has made it the title of his next picture for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. "There is no theme like the almighty dollar," said Mr. Hughes, "and it will interest everyone." Alf Goulding will direct the picture under the supervision of Mr. Hughes and it will be a successor to the author's successful hit of the past season, "Excuse Me."

Prominent Personalities Add Strength

"Slave of Fashion" Is Shearer's Next

LEW CODY

CULVER CITY, Cal., May 25: It was announced here today that Norma Shearer's first big starring vehicle for 1925-26 will be "A Slave of Fashion," by Samuel Shipman, who has innumerable Broadway successes to his credit. Lew Cody will play opposite Norma Shearer, and William Haines and Mary Carr will be prominent in the supporting cast. Hobart Henley will direct. It is a picture that radiates luxurious atmosphere, well balanced with comedy and thrills—including the most realistic train wreck ever put on the screen.

Metro-Goldwyn to Make Vollmer's "Sun Up"

CONRAD NAGEL

NEW YORK, N. Y., May 25: "Sun Up," by Lula Vollmer, has been acquired for motion picture presentation by Metro-Goldwyn. Edmund Goulding is directing the picture at the Culver City studios and the cast includes Conrad Nagel, Pauline Starke and Lucille La Verne, among others. The Broadway stage hit is a story of the Blue Ridge Mountains. It is a strong love story with a dramatic conflict, a feud and a battle to the death.

"Paris" Great Fashion Special by Erte

ROBERT Z. LEONARD

CULVER CITY, Cal., May 25: The world famous creator of women's fashions, Erte, who recently came from Paris to design costumes for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer players, presents his first American work in this picture. Pauline Starke and Lew Cody have been selected to play the leading roles. Many of the sequences are to be in Technicolor, which, of course, will greatly enhance Erte's designs. Robert Z. Leonard will direct the picture and the story is an original from the snappy pen of Carey Wilson. This picture promises to be an outstanding showmanship achievement. Leonard-Starke-Cody-Wilson and Erte are an unbeatable combination.

Two Other Shearer Films 1925-6

NEW YORK, N. Y., May 25: Metro-Goldwyn officials announce that in addition to "A Slave of Fashion," Norma Shearer will be seen in two other outstanding vehicles during the coming season. Norma Shearer is the most sought after star in pictures today, and it was for this reason that Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer put her under a long-time contract. She is a great drawing card—a great actress—a beautiful woman—screens perfectly—and wears beautiful clothes.

Connell's Novel to Be Filmed by Metro-Goldwyn

NEW YORK, N. Y., May 25: The screen rights to Richard Connell's story of a girl in the white lights and a little bit of Broadway have been acquired by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. This will be assigned to a well-known director, carefully cast and made into a production for release during 1925-26.

Shearer-Chaney in "Tower of Lies"

NORMA SHEARER

CULVER CITY, Cal., May 25: Victor Seastrom will direct Norma Shearer and Lon Chaney in "The Tower of Lies," by Selma Lagerlof. This is the same pair that scored such an unqualified success in "He Who Gets Slapped." Louis B. Mayer says that this will be one of the greatest pictures the studio has ever made. Lon Chaney and Norma Shearer have ideal roles. William Haines will be seen in one of the important parts.

"Buddies" a Marion Davies Feature

MARION DAVIES

NEW YORK, N. Y., May 25: Marion Davies, the beautiful Cosmopolitan star, will appear in another screen version of a stage success on the Metro-Goldwyn program next season. The screen rights to "Buddies" by George V. Hobart have been acquired and Miss Davies will star in it on the screen. The play ran for a year and a half in New York and toured the country with several companies.

"Never the Twain" a Metro Goldwyn

ANITA STEWART

NEW YORK, N. Y., May 25: Cosmopolitan Productions announce that they will release "Never the Twain Shall Meet" through Metro-Goldwyn, and the famous Peter B. Kyne story will be on that company's schedule for 1925-26. Anita Stewart, Bert Lytell and Huntly Gordon will be the leading players. Maurice Tourneur, conceded to be one of the most artistic and painstaking directors in the business, made the production. More than a million copies of Mr. Kyne's novel have already been sold and this story of the South Seas and California will be a wonderfully entrancing motion picture. Other members of the cast include Justine Johnstone, George Siegmann and Lionel Belmore.

"How Dare You" Another Hughes Film

CULVER CITY, Cal., May 25: Rupert Hughes has hit upon another great title for his second picture for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer for the 1925-26 season. He will call it "How Dare You." This is a theme right up to the minute, full of snap and pep.

Stage Success Is Miss Davies Feature

NEW YORK, N. Y., May 25: "Merry Wives of Gotham," the Broadway stage success by Lawrence Eyre, will be used as a Marion Davies film starring vehicle. This was announced by Cosmopolitan Productions today. Monta Bell will direct and Conrad Nagel will have the leading male role. The picture will be made at the great Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios, Culver City, Cal. Miss Davies left for the Coast last week to begin work on this picture.

Plays and Books of Note Hold Appeal

Two From Jackie for Metro-Goldwyn Release

JACKIE COOGAN

NEW YORK, N. Y., May 25: Jackie Coogan will make two productions for Metro-Goldwyn release the coming season. This was announced today by Nicholas M. Schenck, vice-president of the organization. Both productions will be authored by Willard Mack. "Old Clothes" will be one of them, a sequel to "The Rag Man," and "Dirty Face" the other. Both will present Jackie in tattered clothes as a poor little waif, the sort of role that made him famous.

"Sally, Irene and Mary" a Metro-Goldwyn Film

RENEE ADOREE

NEW YORK, N. Y., May 25: Another famous Broadway stage success is to be made into a motion picture. Eddie Dowling's knockout, "Sally, Irene and Mary," will be filmed by Metro-Goldwyn. Eleanor Boardman, Sally O'Neill and Renee Adoree will play the three title roles. William Haines will be leading man. This musical comedy at the present time has seven companies on tour and is probably one of the most successful attractions presented during the past several years. Hobart Henley will make the screen version.

Two Other Lillian Gish Films for Metro

NEW YORK, N. Y., May 25: During a conference with Nicholas M. Schenck, vice-president of Metro-Goldwyn, before her departure for Culver City, it was agreed that Lillian Gish would make two pictures for release during 1925-26. Mr. Schenck said that vehicles for Miss Gish were now being considered and that they would be on a par with all her previous successes. The productions will be made at the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios, with well known players in the supporting cast. Miss Gish is already at work at the Culver City studios.

"An Exchange of Wives" a Metro-Goldwyn Release

WILLIAM HAINES

NEW YORK, N. Y., May 25: Cosmo Hamilton has sold the screen rights of his big Broadway and road success, "An Exchange of Wives," to Metro-Goldwyn. It will be made at the Culver City studios under the direction of Hobart Henley, with Eleanor Boardman, Lew Cody, William Haines and Renee Adoree in the leading roles. It is the story of a husband who thought he could bend the wedding ring a bit without breaking it.

"Span of Life" A Metro-Goldwyn Release

NEW YORK, N. Y., May 25: Contracts have just been signed whereby Sutton Vane's famous melodrama, "The Span of Life," will be filmed by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. Lon Chaney has already been selected as the star, and the supporting cast will include Pauline Starke and William Haines. The sensational human bridge scene will show one person linked to another across a hundred-foot canyon. The stage play was successfully presented in New York and throughout the country for several seasons.

Chaney a Hit in "Unholy Three"

LON CHANEY

NEW YORK, N. Y., May 25: Lon Chaney in "The Unholy Three" was shown privately today and was conceded the most interesting story of the underworld ever filmed. Consensus of opinion is that it surpasses anything Chaney has ever done. Tod Browning directed it from a story by C. A. Robbins, and Mae Busch and Matt Moore play important roles. Chaney's characterization is destined to stand out as the most remarkable ever portrayed on the screen. The circus side-show scenes add much to the interest of the picture and there is nothing that can beat it for sheer entertainment value. It has everything that goes into the making of a great motion picture. Metro-Goldwyn officials believe that it will surpass in popularity "The Miracle Man."

Beautiful Women in "Pretty Ladies"

ZAZU PITTS

CULVER CITY, Cal., May 25: The Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Studios will be over-run with beautiful women soon. Monta Bell, who is directing "Pretty Ladies," promises more beautiful women in this production than any other made. What's more, they will be shown in Technicolor. The story was featured in the Cosmopolitan Magazine and is by Adela Rogers St. John. ZaSu Pitts, Tom Moore, Lilyan Tashman will be prominent members of the cast. Ann Pennington, famous Ziegfeld Follies star, will play herself and perform one of her remarkable dances, dimpled knees and all.

"Romola" for Release This Year

LILLIAN GISH

NEW YORK, N. Y., May 25: Marcus Loew, president of Metro-Goldwyn, let it be known today that Lillian Gish in "Romola" will be among his company's coming season's releases. "Romola" ran for 16 weeks at $2.00 top on Broadway. Dorothy Gish is featured in support of her sister and the production is made by Henry King from George Eliot's immortal story. "Romola" had long runs at the George M. Cohan Theatre, New York; the Park Theatre, Boston; Grauman's Egyptian Theatre in Hollywood, and did a tremendous business at the Capitol, New York.

"Auction Block" Stars Norma Shearer

CULVER CITY, Cal., May 25: Rex Beach's "The Auction Block" will be one of Norma Shearer's starring vehicles the coming season. Everyone knows the sort of stories Rex Beach writes, and "The Auction Block" is one of the best. It deals with the sale of human lives, a theme that interests every motion picture fan in the world. Coupled with Norma Shearer's popularity, this is an unbeatable combination. Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer will produce "The Auction Block" in a manner in keeping with the nation-wide popularity and intense dramatic situations of this yarn. This picture will rank among the finest to be released the coming season.

Elements Have Strong Box Office Pull

Nagel-Adoree in "Exquisite Sinner"

CULVER CITY, Cal., May 25: Josef von Sternberg, the new directorial genius, will produce a screen version of Alden Brooks' celebrated novel under the title of "The Exquisite Sinner." It will be one of the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer productions for the coming season. Conrad Nagel and Renee Adoree will be featured. Studio officials promise that this will be one of the surprise productions of the year. It is to be a beautifully mounted, rich production with an intense story and dramatic values.

Technicolor for Erte's Creations

NEW YORK, N. Y., May 25: Metro-Goldwyn officials announce today the purchase of a new story by Carey Wilson entitled "Monte Carlo." This will be a sequel to "Paris," and the far-famed Erte, whose fashion designs have been a feature of Harper's Bazaar for several years, will have his fashion creations presented entirely in the Technicolor process. As yet no cast has been assigned, but the players will be drafted from the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer stock company of renowned stars and featured players.

"Women and Wives" for Boardman-Nagel

CULVER CITY, Cal., May 25: Eleanor Boardman and Conrad Nagel will be featured in a screen version of "Women and Wives," the novel by Harvey Fergusson. The publisher of this book reports that it is one of the best sellers he has had in some time. The theme is young love and no better selection for the leading roles could be made. Eleanor Boardman and Conrad Nagel are favorites of the fans the world over.

Prize Screen Vehicle on M-G List

NEW YORK, N. Y., May 25: Officials of Cosmopolitan Productions announce today the purchase of Vicente Blasco Ibanez's "The Temptress," which will be filmed at the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios and released on next season's program. "The Temptress" is considered the prize screen vehicle of the year and all of the leading producing organizations bid high for the screen rights. It is a tense, brilliant and romantic story which flashes across the world from the wilderness of South America to the gilded cafes of the continent.

"Lovey Mary" to Be Screened

CULVER CITY, Cal., May 25: Sally O'Neil, the latest and greatest screen find, will appear in a screen version of "Lovey Mary," Alice Hegan Rice's great classic. It is a sequel to "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch" and the leading role is that of a saucy little girl who runs away from an orphanage.

Boardman-Nagel in "Brown of Harvard"

CULVER CITY, Cal., May 25: Rida Johnson Young's great American Classic, "Brown of Harvard," will be one of the film productions of Metro-Goldwyn's coming season schedule. Conrad Nagel and Eleanor Boardman will have the leading roles in this greatest of college stories. Studio officials promise that this will be full of pep, action and athletics, packed full of thrills and with many fine comedy situations. The stage play was one of the most successful of its kind in the history of theatricals.

Cody and Pringle in "Dance Madness"

NEW YORK, N. Y., May 25: S. Jay Kaufman, well known columnist, has written a motion picture story, "Dance Madness," in which Aileen Pringle and Lew Cody will be featured. Miss Pringle will be seen in the role of a siren and Cody in a part that he plays to perfection. "Dance Madness" is the story of a romantic love affair.

"Mysterious Island" Verne's Greatest

NEW YORK, N. Y., May 25: Nicholas M. Schenck announced today that J. E. Williamson has gone to the Coast to make a screen version of Jules Verne's great story, "The Mysterious Island." "This will be one of the most ambitious pictures ever filmed," said Mr. Schenck, "showing fights with deep sea monsters, secret passages through the crater of a volcano and an eruption that carries an island away and a thrilling attack by pirates." Mr. Williamson will make under-sea scenes for this Metro-Goldwyn release.

Ibanez's "The Torrent" for Aileen Pringle

NEW YORK, N. Y., May 25: Cosmopolitan Productions also announce today that another of the famous Vicente Blasco Ibanez stories will be on the Metro-Goldwyn schedule the coming year. It is "The Torrent" and Aileen Pringle will be featured in it, with the production to be made at the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios, Culver City. It will be made into an elaborate and massive production, fully comparable with the other great successes by the same author, including "The Four Horsemen," "Scaramouche" and "Mare Nostrum."

Fred Niblo Special for Metro

CULVER CITY, Cal., May 25: Fred Niblo, director of the masterpiece, "Ben Hur," will make one special production for release by Metro-Goldwyn during 1925-26. It will be done on a scale comparable with the greatest of this director's great films.

Buy Two for Hines

Two stories have been purchased as starring vehicles for Johnny Hines under the contract by which a series of his pictures will be distributed by First National. The recently formed B. & H. Enterprises, Inc., organized to produce the Hines pictures for First National, has purchased "The Game of Light," a story by Richard Washburn Child, formerly our Ambassador to Italy, which will be released as "The Live Wire"; and the Thompson Buchanan play, "The Cub," in which Douglas Fairbanks starred on the stage. The latter will be released under the title of "Rainbow Riley."

Work Started on "Classified"

Fortified by a newly acquired knowledge of the "Help Wanted" (male and female) situation, plus a pretty fair idea of how things stand in the "Business Opportunities" and "Auction Sales" lines, Corinne Griffith has started work in New York on "Classified," her First National screen version of Edna Ferber's fascinating story woven around the adventures and romances of a girl in the classified ad department of a metropolitan newspaper. Jack Mulhall is appearing opposite Miss Griffith as her leading man, and important parts are taken by Ward Crane and Carroll Nye.

Gets Extended Runs

Chadwick Pictures Corporation reports that the enthusiastic receptions accorded "The Wizard of Oz" in all parts of the country have resulted in extended runs in many key cities. The Franklin Theatre of Oakland, Cal., originally booked the picture for one week, and, after the third day, extended the engagement indefinitely.

Harry Thomas of the Merit Film Corporation, New York distributors of "The Wizard of Oz," has recently signed a contract for the exhibition of the comedy fantasy in all Keith and Moss Theatres in the territory.

Miss Wiley Thrills New York with Traffic Dodging Stunts

WANDA WILEY, popular star in Century Comedies, came to New York City last week on her first trip east, to be thrilled by sights of the great metropolis. Instead, she gave New York one of the best thrills it has had in many moons, by a publicity for a local charity. She risked her life in the crowded traffic lanes of Times Square and Fifth Avenue, while thousands watched, in order to help the publicity campaign for the Free Milk Fund Benefit Bouts, New York's great charity fight of the year. which the International News Reel Corporation filmed for special distribution in New York State.

Miss Wiley's breath-taking stunts for the Milk Fund came about as the result of a dare. On her first day in the city she recklessly darted through the moving traffic on Broadway, and upon being cautioned, announced her lack of fear of moving automobiles despite her recent sojourn in a Los Angeles hospital as the result of an automobile accident. She was dared to stage a traffic dodging demonstration. She accepted and it was decided to work the stunt for the benefit of the Milk Fund Bouts, then several days away.

Permission for the demonstration was obtained from the municipal authorities, who were only too willing to co-operate in a Safety First demonstration for crowded traffic intersections. It was planned to work the stunts to show how surely a person courts death or accident by dodging through traffic. Patrolman George A. Reynolds, of Traffic Squad "B," was assigned by Police Headquarters to assist in the demonstration. His part was to save Miss Wiley from speeding automobiles when she became trapped in the traffic.

The Safety First and Milk Fund tie-up was by means of banners placed on the car in which Miss Wiley moved from point to point to stage her demonstration.

The demonstration was staged three times in the Times Square district and twice on Fifth Avenue, at the busiest corner in the world, Forty-second street and Fifth avenue, and at one of the busiest hours of the afternoon. In each place the demonstration lasted from fifteen to twenty minutes and drew enormous crowds.

Miss Wiley entered into the spirit of the thing wholeheartedly and made her traffic dodging as life-like as possible and with the maximum of thrills. Taking her stand in the center of the street intersection, she would wait until traffic was flowing by her at a rapid rate and then would dart as if to dodge through the stream of cars to gain the street.

Directly in the path of the speeding auto she would hesitate, appear to be confused, teeter on one foot, scramble around and finally dodge back in the nick of time. Patrolman Reynolds entered into the game like a veteran, dashing to her assistance and drag her to safety. Miss Wiley afterwards stated that she would have been hit many times but for the quickness of the New York patrolman, and that she soon found she could rely upon him to jerk her back from beneath the wheels of the on-rushing cars. Very few of the motorists appreciated the stunt until after they saw the grinning screen star as they missed her by inches and slowed up with grinding brakes.

Several times she was trapped in extra-tricky traffic pockets, and escaped only by her quick wit and nimble feet. One, at the Fifth avenue and Forty-second street crossing, she actually lost her balance in the path of a Fifth avenue bus, bearing down with its heavy load and unable to stop suddenly. Reynolds and two other traffic officers dashed towards her. The crowd which lined the sidewalks groaned. Luck was with her —and so was Reynolds. He lifted her to safety by the coat collar.

The traffic dodging demonstration was arranged and directed by Henry Clay Bate, assistant director of publicity for Universal. It was one of the best of recent times in New York.

New Exploitation Reel

Weiss Brothers Offer Novel Publicity Free To Exhibitors.

Louis Weiss, managing director of Weiss Brothers' Artclass Pictures Corp., will offer some novel publicity and sales reels to be a part of the exhibition's contract to play the three series of five-reel western features starring Buddy Roosevelt, Buffalo Bill, Jr., and Wally Wales, respectively.

A special exploitation reel will accompany each series of eight pictures. It will be made by the star featured and will consist of 350 feet of film as a minimum. This length will be devoted to the display of a wide variety of roping, saddling and riding stunts as done by the various stars. It will explain in detail how to make a cinch knot, how to swing a lariat and rope a steer, how to saddle a horse in a few seconds. It might well be called a rodeo reel.

This special reel is in no way to be confused with the trailer made on each of the Artclass releases, but is solely designed as being of interest to the public and by such stirring of interest to draw the public to see the picture which will appear at the theatre a week or so after the stunt reel. It will be free to the exhibitors.

Burton Signed by De Mille

Clarence Burton, one of filmdoms most adaptable villains, is the latest to join the Cecil B. De Mille forces. Mr. Burton has signed a long term contract to play for the independent producer. His first role will be an important part in Rod LaRocque's starring vehicle "The Coming of Amos."

In Leading Role

Anna Q. Nilsson will have the leading feminine role in the June Mathis production of the "Viennese Medley," now in preparation at United Studios.

Kurt Rehfeld will direct the picture and work will begin soon. The role that Miss Nilsson will portray is one that ideally fits her personality and is said to be one of the biggest roles this featured First National player has had for some time.

To Begin on "Sea Woman"

Edwin Carewe is scheduled to begin photography on "The Sea Woman," soon with Blanche Sweet playing in the lead. Other members of the cast thus far selected are Victor McLaglen, Constance Bennett, Robert Frazer, Victor Potel and Monty Collins.

The continuity is being prepared by Lois Zellner. "The Sea Woman" is from the play by Williard Robinson which Margaret Anglin presented a season or two ago with marked success.

To Direct "Joseph Greer"

George Archainbaud has affixed his signature to a contract with First National Productions whereby he will direct for that company the story, "Joseph Greer and His Daughter," adapted by June Mathis from the novel by Henry Kitchell Webster. Production on this story will be rushed at United Studios.

Pick New Title

"Fighting Fate" has been decided upon as the title of the next of the Fast Action Series released by Rayart and starring Billy Sullivan. The first two releases are "The Fear Fighter" and "The Goat Getter." All are for release.

Associated Pictures' Contest Asks Public, "What Is a Wow?"

THE Associated Pictures Corporation has devised a novel exploitation stunt for "The Heart of a Siren," a Sawyer-Lubin production recently released as a First National picture. It is called "The Heart of a Siren Wow Contest," but it is more than a contest as it combines many successful forms of exploitation and gives exhibitors the benefit of large window displays, ballyhoos, etc.

The idea is to obtain a good definition for the slang word "wow." What is a wow? "It's a wow" is one of the most expressive phrases in our language but the word isn't in the dictionary and it's such a tricky one that it hasn't yet been defined.

E. P. Dutton & Co. of New York, dictionary publishers, will compile a dictionary of American slang and offer prizes for newspaper contests for a definition of wow. The contest opens at once and ends on December 31, 1925. In case of a tie, all those thus tying will be awarded equal prizes.

The first national prize is a five-tube radio frequency Standardyne receiver and a complete edition of Everyman's Encyclopedia. The winner of this prize will have his or her definition incorporated in the forthcoming edition of the Dictionary of American Slang, with due credit given the winner. The second, third, fourth and fifth prizes also will be five-tube Standardyne sets. The sixth and seventh prizes will be fifty volumes each from "The Everyman Library." There are 700 titles from which to choose.

It is planned to have the theatre owner offer a cash first prize. The second prize will be provided him—Roget's Thesaurus or a choice of two volumes in the Everyman Library. The third prize, it is suggested, would be ten tickets to "The Heart of a Siren," the fourth prize six tickets and the fifth two tickets daily for each delnition published. Winners of local contests will have their names sent into Dutton's for judgment in the national contest. Widow cards and display material will also be supplied exhibitors and dealers free.

Dutton's have issued two special window cards on the contest for use by their dealers wherever wow contests are held. These have a picture of Barbara La Marr reading "The Dictionary of American Slang" and also carry the names of her recent pictures. Exhibitors staging the wow contest are assured of having splendid window displays in the best local book and department stores. These will be arranged by Dutton's direct and show scenes from the photoplay in addition to information on the wow contest. The three-color window card prepared for exhibitors' use will command attention anywhere and can be used by all stores or on vehicles. It carries the name of the newspaper staging the contest, the name of the theatre, the name of the attraction and a picture of Barbara La Marr and is of very striking design. These are furnished free of charge and will help exhibitors put the contest over in real wow style.

John Erskine, professor of English at Columbia University, has consented to act as one of the national judges, Arthur H. Sawyer of Associated Pictures Corporation and John McRae, Jr., of E. P. Dutton & Co. being other national judges.

Joseph Mann, of the Pastime Theatre, Second avenue and Fifty-fifth street, New York City, is one of the prominent exhibitors who have formed the habit of "booking F. B. O. features."

Associated Exhibitors Active in East With Four Units Busy

PRODUCTION activities on pictures for Associated Exhibitors reached a high mark last week with four companies working on as many features in Eastern studios.

Two producing companies are finishing up pictures for Associated Exhibitors' release; while two have just begun their productions. Hugh Dierker and Henri Diamant Berger are the respective directors of the first named, and S. E. V. Taylor and E. H. Griffith are wielding the megaphone on the latter two.

Now in Cutting Room

Hugh Dierker made his last scenes on the Mae Busch and Owen Moore vehicle, "Camille of the Barbary Coast," and the picture is now in the cutting rooms. Supporting the stars are Harry T. Morey, Burr McIntosh, Tamany Young and others.

Henri Diamant Berger's unit features Hope Hampton, James Kirkwood and Louis Wolheim in a production of the Smart Set Magazine story "Lovers' Island," written by T. Howard Kelly. Other members of the cast are Flora Finch, Douglas Gilmore, Gaby France, Flora Le Breton and Ivan Linow. "Lovers' Island" will be titled and cut immediately.

S .E. V. Taylor is directing "The Miracle of Life," which introduces Percy Marmont and Nita Naldi to the Associated Exhibitors' program. Mae Busch carries stellar honors of this feature, which was adapted to the screen by Marion Leonard.

E. H. Griffith began the direction of "Headlines" for St. Regis Pictures. The story centers around a newspaper office. Alice Joyce commands the star role and her support includes Virginia Lee Corbin, Malcolm McGregor, Harry Morey, Louis John Bartels, Marion Haslup and Rubye Blaine.

First National Signs Errol, Noted Comedian, for 8 Pictures

LEON ERROLL is to become a permanent fixture in motion pictures. Richard A. Rowland, general manager of First National Pictures, Inc., announces that his company has signed the inimitable comedian on a long term contract under which he will be presented in a series of eight comedy pictures, the first one to be started late in August.

Just now the noted comedian of the wabbly knees is adding to his stage laurels in the title role of Florenz Ziegfeld's highly successful production of "Louis the Fourteenth," but what his first screen vehicle will be under the new contract has not yet been announced. Several stories, however, are being considered for him.

The signing of Errol by First National was due largely to his unusually successful performance as the Duke of Checkergovinia in the screen version of "Sally" in which he recreated the role he had already made famous on the stage in the Ziegfeld production.

In the picturization of "Sally" he appeared in support of Colleen Moore the star, for whom he made a most excellent foil. First National executives, in signing Errol, believe they have acquired a comedian who will rank second to none on the screen.

Errol's experience has been unique. Born in Sydney, Australia, he started life with the ambition of becoming a surgeon. He attended the University of Sydney School of Medicine and Surgery, but his natural instincts for clowning predominated and he became a different sort of a "cut up" than he had planned.

A quarrel with a college professor resulted in his drifting away from school to the stage. Comic portrayals of none too sober men were his first roles and they have stuck. In those days the standard make-up for a comedian was a brilliant red nose, baggy trousers and a slip-shod red tie. In a college operetta which he wrote, he adopted this make-up with great success. His mother wept at the performance. Believing he had disgraced the family, he went home, humbly prepared to renounce the stage. Then he learned that his mother's tears were those of laughter, which settled him definitely in his chosen profession.

He came to America, and his stick, spats and cut of clothes made him an object of derision in the streets of San Francisco. His English accent made it hard for him to get parts. His first work was in a beer garden in 'Frisco. The manager thought his street clothes were a character make-up and he went on "as was." He sang coster songs and was pelted with peanuts. He tried dancing. The crowd liked it. The management told him to dance, not sing. He did.

John Cort, the theatrical manager, discovered him. He played stock in Salt Lake City. He tried writing, producing and acting his own pieces. He drifted to New York in burlesque, and there Florenz Ziegfeld saw and grabbed him.

And now the renumerative movies have successfully worked their spell over the comedian

Will Write Talmadge Stories

Hans Kraely, who recently wrote "Her Night of Romance" for Constance Talmadge, and is also the author of Constance's forthcoming production, "Her Sister from Paris," has just signed a contract with Joseph M. Schenck to write eight original stories for Norma and Constance Talmadge. Mr. Kraely's story, "Her Sister from Paris," is a Sidney Franklin Production, for release by First National during Greater Movie Season.

Here you are face to face with the players who make Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer pictures. Pick out your favorites. It's more fun than working cross-word puzzles! There were a few absentees at the time this photo was taken, so you won't find such celebrated players as Lillian Gish, Lon Chaney, Marion Davies, Jackie Coogan or Buster Keaton. In the front row are: Dale Fuller, Charlie Murray, Aileen Pringle, Lew Cody, Claire Windsor, John Gilbert, Frank Currier, Norma Shearer, Mae Busch, Eleanor Boardman, Mathew Betz, Tom Moore, George K. Arthur. In the rear row are: Cecil Holland, Irving Hartley, Nigel de Brulier, Sidney Bracey, Roy Stewart, Evelyn Peirce, Miss Dupont, Ford Sterling, William Haines, Mitchell Lewis, Gertrude Olmstead, Sojin, ZaSu Pitts, Lucille La Seur, Creighton Hale, Ramon Novarro, Renee Adoree, Pat O'Malley, Sally O'Neill, Roy d'Arcy.

The symbolic white painting made famous by John Galsworthy in his most popular novel, "The White Monkey," picturized by Sawyer-Lubin under the direction of Phil Rosen, who is reading the script to Barbara Le Marr, playing the leading role of "Fleur" in this important production. Overseas Men Feted

McIntyre and Bryson Honor Guests at Laemmle Luncheon

Hugh McIntyre, general manager of Universal's branch offices in Australia and New Zealand, in New York on his first trip to America, and James V. Bryson, general manager of the European Motion Picture Company of England, Universal distributor in the British Isles, were the honor guests at a luncheon given last week in the Madison Hotel, New York City, by Carl Laemmle, president of Universal Pictures Corporation. Also present as special guests were Mrs. McIntyre and Wanda Wiley, Century Comedy star. Universal officials and department heads made up the luncheon party.

The luncheon was McIntyre's introduction to the Universal home office personnel and to Mr. Laemmle. He has been Universal's manager in Australia for several years. He was introduced by Nate L. Manheim, Universal's foreign manager, who acted as toastmaster. McIntyre made a punchful talk to the assembled Universal executives and pledged his continued fealty to Laemmle and to Universal pictures.

Ginsberg Closes Territory On All Banners and Royals

IN a whirlwind distribution campaign as outlined in previous announcements the Henry Ginsberg Distributing Corporation has closed most of the important territories for his entire output of Banner Productions and Royal Pictures.

Heading the list of purchasers is the acquisition by Bobby North of the Apollo Film Corporation for Greater New York and Northern New Jersey. The deal includes the complete output of the Henry Ginsberg Distributing Corporation consisting of six Banner Productions and six Royal Pictures.

One Banners is "The Love Gamble," a story adapted from the novel of Maisie Greig and now in its third edition. It is a story of the Bohemian life of the Boston coffee shops. It has just been completed and is now being titled, finished prints reaching New York next week. The production was made by Ben Verschleiser and directed by Edward Le Saint from a continuity by Harry Hoyt. Featured are Lillian Rich, Robert Frazer, Pauline Garon and Arthur Rankin, supported by Kathleen Clifford, Larry Steers, Bonnie Hill, Brooks Benedict and James Marcus.

The second Banner will be "Wreckage," adapted from the novel "Salvage" by Izola Forrester. This goes into production on June 8 and will be a Verschleiser production directed by Scott Dunlap.

The other Banners to follow are "The Checkered Flag," a story of the automobile racing game; "Brooding Eyes," a combination mystery and society drama and one of John Goodwin's strongest novels; "Whispering Canyon," a drama of the lumber forests of the West, and "Wandering Footsteps" a story of the reclamation of two me nfrom different circles of life.

The Royal list is headed by "Before Midnight," featuring William Russell, with Barbara Bedford in the principal feminine lead and a very strong cast. This picture is also completed and will be ready for distribution about July 1.

The balance of the Royal Pictures is now complete and the following titles have been fixed: "The Millionaire Policeman," "The Taxi Mystery," "The Phantom Express," "A Desperate Moment" and "Big Pal."

Supervising production for Royal is being taken care of by Henry Weil.

The complete list of territorial acquisitions of the Ginsberg Product is as follows: Creole Enterprises of Atlanta and Dallas for the entire South, E. A. Golden, head of the Golden distributing Corporation of Boston, the New England territory; J. L. Freidman of the Celebrated Players Film Corporation of Chicago, Illinois and Indiana; Jack Grauman of the Celebrated Film Exchange of Milwaukee, Wisconsin; Tony Lucchese of the Liberty Film Corporation of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; Lee Goldberg of the Big Feature Rights Corporation, Kentucky and Tennessee.

The year book of the Ginsberg Distributing Corporation will be in the hands of the exchanges and exhibitors by June 15. It is a pretentious four-color process art proposition with original oil paintings for each production.

Raymond Hatton, featured Paramount player, has achieved fame as a character actor. He has played several hundred varied roles during his years of service on the silversheet.

F. B. O.'s "Parisian Nights" Is Acclaimed by New York Critics

"PARISIAN NIGHTS," the secont F. B. O. Gold Bond special which played the Capitol Theatre, New York, in one month, received the enthusiastic endorsement of the New York newspaper reviewers who saw the picture on the opening day, Sunday, May 31.

Despite the week-end holiday (Decoration Day) the Capitol Theatre played to capacity audience Sunday afternoon and evening. Below are brief excerpts from the reviews:

George Gerhard in the Evening World says: "Renee Adoree . . . Walks off with all the honors. But, outside of Miss Adoree's stellar work, there are other things in "Parisian Nights" which make it worth while . . the story. . . ingeniously done. The best of these was an exhibition of scrulpture at which Parisian critics were saying that the statues were not at all life-like and then the statues, which were posed, get up and walk out of the room. "Parisian Nights" is just loaded with dyed-in-the-wool melodrama . . . it is very stirring. . ."

Rose Pelswick in the Evening Journal said: "The art critics shook their heads sadly, looked at the statues draped around the sculptress's apartment, and sighed that the lady would never be successful, because they didn't look like human figures. The anatomy, they decided, was bad.

"Elaine Hammerstein smiled, ordered the maid to turn off the lights and the critics gasped. In the darkened room what they had thought were statues got off the pedestals and walked into the next room.

"That's one of the clever touches in "Parisian Nights," at the Capitol, and there are others. It's hectic melodrama, dealing with the rival Apache bands, the Panthers and the Wolves. . . You'll like the picture if for no other reason than that there is continuous action."

Production Starts This Month On Eight First National Films

JUNE will be a busy month for First National directors and producers distributing through it.

"The Viennese Medley," from Edith O'Shaugnessy's novel of Vienna during and since the war, will go into production on June 1, with Kurt Rehfeld directing under he editorial supervision of June Mathis, who has prepared the continuity. Anna Q. Nilsson and May Allison have leading roles.

Edwin Carewe will start work on "The Sea Woman," from Willard Robinson's play, used on the stage by Margaret Anglin, on June 8. Lois Zellner prepared the continuity. Blanch Sweet and Victor McLaglen play the leads.

Henry Kitchell Webster's new novel, "Joseph Greer and His Daughter," will go into production under the direction of George Archainbaud on June 5. June Mathis prepared the continuity. Lewis Stone and Shirley Mason have the leading roles.

"The Dark Angel," the new Samuel Goldwyn-George Fitzmaurice production, will get under way on June 10, with Ronald Colman and Vilma Banky in the leads. Frances Marion made the adaptation.

Frank Lloyd is expected to start photography on Vingie E. Roe's "The Splendid Road" the latter part of June.

Inspiration Pictures has set June 8 as the date for beginning work on Richard Barthelmess' new picture, "The Beautiful City," which will be directed by Elmer Clifton. Dorothy Gish and William H. Powell will be seen in the support of the star.

While no date has been announced for starting on Byron Morgan's story for Ben Lyon, "The Pace That Thrills," this will go into production during June under the supervision of Earl Hudson. Mary Astor will be the leading woman.

Sawyer-Lubin are preparing to begin work within a short time on the new Barbara La Marr producion from Elsie Jean Jerard's story, 'Florrie Finds A Gentleman."

First National to Release "The Scarlet West" in July

THE First National Pictures, Inc., has set July 26 as the release date for "The Scarlet West," the new production sponsored by Frank J. Carroll which it recently contracted to distribute. This is the picture previously announced as "The Birth of the West." It is a western epic produced on an elaborate scale. It will be handled under the supervision of A. W. Smith, Jr., assistant to E. A Eschmann, who has had charge of First National specials during the past two years. It will be backed up by an intensive erploitation campaign. Its world's premiere engagement will take place at the Colorado Theatre in Den-

Mr. Carroll produced "The Scarlet West" in Colorado, with John Adolphi directing. Five months were consumed in filming the picture, after six months of research work. The spectacular scenes of Custer's last fight and the Indian attack on Fort Remington form two of the highlights of the picture. Permission was obtained from the United States Government for 2,000 Ute and Navajo Indians to appear in the picture, while as many soldiers and cowboys were used to oppose them.

"The Scarlet West" is a drama of the development of the West soon after the Civil War, when the Indian was still a constant menace to the frontiersmen. First National executives consider it one of the finest and most spectacular western pictures ever filmed. The vivid realism brought to bear on the reproduction of Custer's last fight makes one of the most thrilling scenes ever filmed. It is hailed as an accurate picture of the death of the famous Indian fighter with his entire

Robert Frazer, recently signed by First National as one of its permanent players, has the leading role of an Indian. The others are Robert Edeson, Clara Bow, Johnny Walker, Walter McGrail, Gaston Glass, Helen Ferguson, Ruth Stonehouse, Martha Francis and Florence Crawford.

Baum Signs Dorothy Drew

Reports From Coast Show Actress Has Made Rapid Progress.

From the coast has come glowing reports of the rapid progress of Miss Dorothy Drew. She is considered the find of 1925 by casting directors and producers and a demand for her services came to an end when Louis Baum of Ellbee Pictures, signed her to a long term contract.

"I'm glad it's over," said Miss Drew. "I'm glad to have a home in the Ellbee Studios. I was so weary of traveling from one studio to another. Now I am going to have a permanent dressing room of my own, and it'll be like settling down after a siege on the road."

Miss Drew is at present in the Catlinas, resting from the demands of the role of Martha in "Self-Defense," the first of her Lackey-Made features for the Ellbee Corporation.

New Pathe Serial

Pathe announces that July 19 has been decided upon as the definite release date of the new Patheserial "Play Ball," adapted by Frank Leon Smith from a story by John J. McGraw and directed by Spencer Bennet with Allene Ray as the star. This Patheserial follows "Sunken Silver" on the serial releasing schedule of the distributing concern.

Scenes from "Eve's Secret," with Betty Compson and Jack Holt, directed by Clarence Badger for Paramount.

SAM RORK
Veteran showman and producer who has aligned himself with Producers Distributing Corporation.

Earl Hudson Busy

With the placing in production this week of "The Pace That Thrills," Earl Hudson starts his eighth production since moving his production units of First National from Hollywood to New York last October.

At present three pictures are in the making under Hudson's supervision. Milton Sills is starred in "The Knockout," Doris Kenyon, Lloyd Hughes and Hobart Bosworth are featured in "The Half-Way Girl" and Ben Lyon and Mary Astor are co-featured in "The Pace That Thrills." Lambert Hillyer is directing Sills, John Francis Dillon the second picture and Webster Campbell the Lyon-Astor feature.

"Winds of Chance" Done

Frank Lloyd finished photography on his next special for First National, "Winds of Chance," from Rex Beach's novel of adventure in Alaska, on May 21. Cutting and titling is now in progress. The cast includes Ben Lyon, Anna Q. Nilsson, Victor McLaglen, Viola Dana, Hobart Bosworth, Claude Gillingwater, Tully Marshall, Dorothy Sebastian, Tom London, Fred Kohler, John T. Murray,

Beery Signs Paramount Contract

Noah Beery has signed a new contract with Famous Players-Lasky Corporation under the terms of which the Paramount organization will have the exclusive use of Beery's screen services for a period of years.

Fox Has Simple Schedule for His Short Subject Releases

ALTHOUGH the short subjest films to be produced and distribued by Fox Film Corporation for the coming season cover every conceivable kind of motion picture entertainment, exhibiors booking these productions will have no trouble keeping track of the release dates. A simple release schedule has been devised by the Fox company which will do away with confusion and allow exhibitors to know what is due for release by the simple expedient of looking at a chart on which will be listed, according to their variety, the multitudinous short reel films.

The Fox short subject films are divided into six groups, namely, the Van Bibber Comedies, the O. Henry series, the Married Life of Helen and Warren series, Fox Varieties, Imperial Comedies and Fox News. In all there are 174 of these.

The Van Bibbers, from the short subject classics by Richard Harding Davis, need no introduction. There will be eight of these two-reelers released during the coming season, beginning August 9, and every sixth Sunday thereafter, as follows: September 20, November 1, December 13, January 24, March 7, April 18 and May 20.

The first of the O. Henry series will be released on August 16, with the others on each sixth Sunday thereafter, as follows: September 27, November 8, December 27, January 31, March 14, April 25, and June 6.

The first of the Urner stories will be released August 23, with the subsequent ones scheduled for each sixth Sunday thereafter as follows: October 4, November 15, December 27, February 7, March 21, May 2 and June 13.

August 23 is the date set for the release of the first Fox Varieties with the others to follow on every second Sunday thereafter. Ray L. Hall, a pioneer in the short subject field, has been secured as the directing head of this unit of Fox production. With a greatly strengthened staff of cameramen, he is despatching companies to out of the way corners of the earth to bring to the screen novel subjects.

The Fox Imperial Comedies are old friends of the exhibitors and August 20, the date set for the release of the first of these laugh provokers, will be welcome to showmen who appreciate the importance of giving their audiences fifteen minutes of unalloyed mirth. An Imperial will be released every other Sunday after the date set for the first.

Fox News, "mightiest of all," is making every preparation to surpass its own great record during the coming season. In line with this policy, Truman Talley, director-in-chief of the reel, is strengthening both his editorial and camera staffs. As in the past Fox News will be released every Wednesday and Saturday, with special editions on all important events.

"Children of the Whirlwind" Made from Widely Read Story

WORD comes from Whitman Bennett, who has just turned over to Arrow Pictures Corporation, the first production under his contract with them, that "Children of the Whirlwind"—the picture in question—has had very wide circulation in print. It was published originally as a serial in "Hearst's International" where it achieved considerable publicity. After this it appeared in book form, published by Houghton, Mifflin & Co. It ranked, for a considerable period, among the "best sellers."

Lionel Barrymore heads the all-star cast. He is seen in the role of a reformed crook searching everywhere for a long-lost daughter. His work is marked by his usual polish and restraint. Johnny Walker, too, leaves nothing to be desired in his playing of the part of a reformed gangster, and Marguerite De La Motte as "Maggie Carlisle" is extremely pleasing to the eye and thoroughly capable.

Milk Fund Bouts Picture Gains Wide Distribution

UNUSUAL success is reported by the International News Reel Corporation and by the Universal Film Exchanges in New York State with the three-reel special made by the International at the big Free Milk Fund Bouts in New York City last Saturday at which Mike McTigue lost his light-heavyweight title to Paul Berlenbach.

The three-reeler is being distributed by Universal as Carl Laemmle's contribution to the Free Milk Fund, one of New York's most popular charities, sponsored by the Mayor's Committee of Women of which Mrs. William Randolph Hearst is chairman.

International News took great pains to make exceptionally good film records of the fight. A battery of twelve cameras was stationed at the Yankee Stadium where the fights took place. These included cameras for close-ups, cameras for panoramic shots of the 50,000 people present and cameras for shooting the ring from different angles. Every important phase of the various bouts was obtained.

In order to get the pictures, lights totalling more than 2,000,000 candle power had to be placed. The lights were contributed by Carl Laemmle and turned night into day for the benefit of the camera men.

The Milk Fund pictures had their New York showing in the Piccadilly Theatre, where they first were presented Sunday afternoon and where they were featured.

As fast as the film was "shot" Decoration Day night it was rushed to the laboratory. A few hours after the final decision, International's expert cutters and editors had whipped the three reels into shape with appropriate captions and subtitled.

Special messengers took prints for upstate film centers. By reason of the federal laws regulating interstate traffic of fight pictures, distribution could be made only in New York State.

The Milk Fund pictures had their Buffalo premiere in the Olympic Theatre, Sunday night, at a special performance at which sports writers, editors and prominent citizens of Buffalo were guests, in addition to the regular theatre patrons. In Albany the pictures were shown in the Majestic, beginning with the first Sunday afternoon show. This was made possible by special messenger service to the State capital. Other important up-State cities also received the prints Sunday and added the Special to their programs, featuring it in advertising and by lobby displays and banners.

Get New Titles

Three title changes are announced by Raymond L. Schrock, general manager of Universal City. Norman Kerry's latest starring vehicle, "Lorraine of the Lions," an Edward Sedgwick production, is to be known as "Beauty and the Brute." "Titans," with House Peters, will be called "The Storm Breakers," and the chapter film, "Perils of the Primitive," starring Joe Bonomo, is to be released as "Perils of the Wild."

Three Universals Slated for Broadway During June

THREE Universal Jewel productions are to be shown on Broadway during the next few weeks, two in the Strand Theatre and one in the Capitol. One of the pictures playing the Strand will follow its Broadway run with a second week in the Brooklyn Strand.

The pictures are "I'll Show You the Town," a new Reginald Denny-Harry Pollard production, which has taken the West Coast by storm and which will open in the Strand on June 7 for a week's run; "Siege," Virginia Valli's latest Universal Jewel, which will be presented in the Capitol Theatre beginning June 14, and "The Teaser," Laura La Plante's new Jewel picture, which is slated to go into the Strand later in the month. These three bookings constitute a record for Universal Broadway showings and follow an intermittent run of five Universal Jewel pictures in the Piccadilly Theatre during the last several months.

The bookings were arranged by William Herrmann, general manager of the Big "U" Exchange, Universal's New York distributors. They mark a high water mark in Universal representation on Broadway and are regarded as a happy omen for Universal's coming season, with the Second White List Jewels. "The Teaser" and "Siege" are next season's pictures and are being pre-released for the Broadway Theatres. "I'll Show You the Town" is a current release and has just arrived from the West Coast, where it received pre-release presentations, notably at the Forum Theatre, Los Angeles, as soon as it was completed at Universal City.

Macfadden Starts Picture; Publisher Outlines Plans

HERALDING the motion picture industry as one of the great opportunities for the dissemination of entertainment and knowledge, Bernarr Macfadden, head of the Macfadden Publications, announced this week that he would throw the full force of his vast organization back of his latest enterprise, the True Story Film Company, Inc., in order to make it a big and important producing companies.

Eight productions already have been scheduled by the Macfadden company and they will be released through Astor Distributing Company, of which Harry Rathner is president. "The Wrongdoers," the first Macfadden motion picture, is in production at the former Pathe studio in the Bronx, with Lionel Barrymore in the leading role and with a cast including Anne Cornwall, Henry Hull and Flora Finch. Hugh Dierker is directing.

The rise of Bernarr Macfadden and his various publications constitutes a remarkable chapter in publishing history. About twenty-seven years ago Bernarr Macfadden, then a young man of 30, began publishing a small, 5-cent pamphlet which he called "Physical Culture." In 1919 came "True Story," the magazine that has astonished the publishing world. "True Story" was an outgrowth of "Physical Culture." Immediately following "True Story" came "Movie Weekly." Then in quick succession came "True Romances," "Dream World," "Fiction Lovers," Dance Lovers," "Radio Stories," "Romances," "True Detective Mysteries," "Modern Marriage" and "Muscle Builder," and on September 15, 1924, the first edition of the New York Evening Graphic, the Macfadden daily newspaper, was published. Its daily circulation is around 200,000, giving the Macfadden Publications an estimated monthly reading public of 16,400,000.

"For many years I have seen, studied and criticized motion pictures. The motion picture business is largely identical in its various phases. You have to know how to cater to the public to whom you appeal. You have to dramatize the stories that you present in such a manner that they will not only interest your public but will have an uplifting influence, mentally, morally and spiritually.

"As the publisher of twelve magazines with a total yearly distribution of over 60,000,000, I am egotistical enough to believe that I can produce motion pictures that will teem with life as it is being lived. I believe that such productions can be made to appeal to the masses in their own language; that they can be made so human and real that they will penetrate the hearts and souls of theatre-goers."

Kane Explains Production Plans and Announces Staff

ROBERT T. KANE, for many years general manager of production at Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, announces the formation of Robert T. Kane Productions, to make four productions the coming season for First National Pictures. Oddly enough, the Kane organization starts work in the same suite at historic 6 West 48th street that saw the commencement of First National. Mr. Kane has lined up some important play material which will be shortly announced, but believes that the big thing he brings to the First National fold is "a film organization to be run on theatrical lines."

Explaining his production purposes further, Mr. Kane stated: "The producer of the future will be a co-ordinator. He is not simply going to hire a director and leave his fate in the director's hands. The business is getting too big for that. The director must take his pjlace in the new scheme of things and that will be akin to his place in the legitimate theatre at present. His art will not be harmed—indeed, it will be benefited.

"Briefly, the theatrical producer uses his knowledge of public taste to secure a good vehicle. He uses his knowledge of the business to secure the logical writer, if it is an adaptation. Then he assigns the work of direction to an able director. They cast the show together. At no stage of the game is the proposition out of the producer's hands."

Mr. Kane believes that at no stage of production should the picture be out of the producer's hands, inasmuch as the producer is working out from the exhibitor's box-office, for it is the latter that supports him and the entire industry. In his work at Famous Players, Mr. Kane set his daily plans with a file of box-office statistics at his elbow.

Colonel Douglas Young has been appointed busines manager of the Kane organization. Born in Canada and schooled—in film production—in California, Col. Young is an ex-British army officer who saw service in four wars and on a dozen fronts. He has been a student of the theatre for twenty years and interested in photoplay production for at least ten. His actual "break in" was under Henry King last year in Hollywood.

Robert M. Haas is art director. "Bob" had the art direction of many Famous Players' successes during his five years with that company, divided between the East and West Coast studios. He then joined Lillian Gish as art director of "The White Sister" and "Romola."

Julie Herne will act as story advisor to Mr. Kane. She was official story reader to Jesse L. Lasky when "The Sheik" came along. She was so impressed with its possibilities and "got over" her enthusiasm so emphatically with Mr. Lasky, that he sent her west with the story to impress her views upon the West Coast Studio officials. On her return, Miss Herne was given charge of the work of securing vehicles for Tom Meighan, Gloria Swanson, Bebe Daniels and Betty Compson, and then collaborated in the writing of the scenarios of "The Mountebank" and "Dangerous Money."

Publicity and exploitation will be in the hands of Bert Adler, who wil lalso act as Mr. Kane's "scout" under his announced policy of keeping in touch wtih the picture tastes of American exhibitors.

Moore Off to Hollywood

Will Play Opposite Peggy Hopkins Joyce in "The Sky Rocket"

Owen Moore, who has just completed eight weeks work in New York Studios, has departed for Hollywood. He has been engaged as leading man to play opposite Peggy Hopkins Joyce (Countess Morner) in "The Sky Rocket" the Hollywood story by Adela Rogers St. Johns, which is the first of the Marshall Neilan Productions. Miss Joyce has been on the coast for two weeks, and production is already under way. Earl Williams will have one of the principal roles.

One of the big scenes, a gay party, aboard Mr. Neilan's private yacht, will disclose types of female lure and loveliness such as have seldom been seen on the screen.

"Pony Express" to Depict Last Stand of Pioneers

ALMOST pretentious attempt to depict the glamourous days of the old West is taking final shape at Universal City where plans, which have been under way for two years, are now definitely completed and the first scenes of "The Pony Express," have been shot. "The Pony Express" is a novel by Edward Sedgwick, author, actor, director, newspaper man, which will be published by Grosset & Dunlap. It was inspired two years ago by the anniversary of the Pony Express.

Sedgwick at that time wrote the story and planned to make the production immediately. But various things interfered with the actual filming of anything except the atmospheric shots which were needed for the building of sets and properties, with the result that the over-head and building expense on "The Pony Express" has been carried on the books of the company for almost two years. The latest interruption to "The Pony Express" came through the necessity of Sedgwick's interpolating a number of scenes in "The Phantom of the Opera." This has been satisfactorily accomplished and Sedgwick is now working overtime on the greatest opus of his career. "The Pony Express" will depict the last stand of pioneer days, the final desperate retreat of barbarism before civilization.

"The Pony Express" has been translated into picture by Charles Kenyon and Norman Kerry and Laura La Plante will head the cast of thirty principals and several hundred super-numeraries. Raymond Schrock, general manager of Universal City, has made arrangements for the appearance of over 3,000 Indians.

How to Use This Chart

First—Booking! Get accurate footage and look up date review appeared in Moving Picture World. Then you can decide if the picture will suit your audience.

Second—Play date! When you set your play date, consult this Chart to set the picture on a date that will not conflict with preceding and following pictures; avoid a sequence of similar type of story; space out your specials.

Third—Laying Out Program! This chart shows star and kind of story as well as accurate length; you can lay out a balanced program easily, avoid over—and under-length program.

Fourth—Exploitation! Through this chart find the review in Moving Picture World; this will give a good synopsis, the all-important cast and a fine line on exploitation possibilities as well as the things you'll want to soft-pedal.

Always! Turn to this Chart when you want accurate information in simple form and easy to get at a glance. AND—

$1 for Your Time

Many exhibitors tell us that Moving Picture World Guide to Releases is the most accurate available to them. We know it is the most complete in that it is the only chart containing names of stars, type of picture, and all necessary information to the exhibitor.

We want it to be absolutely accurate—Moving Picture World recognizes the importance of accurate footage information, etc.

If you notice an error in FEATURE footage, or any other major error, we will pay you $1 for the effort on your part of writing us a letter telling us the correct facts.

In many territories local censorship cuts alter the footage to a minor extent. Don't write to tell us of these unimportant variations. But in any case where you feel that our figures will work a real hardship on the exhibitor following them—shoot us the word and we will shoot the dollar for your trouble.

Moving Picture World is willing to back up its complete confidence in the accuracy of its chart with its money.

We can't do more. No one else does as much. We thank you.

PROJECTION

EDITED BY F. H. RICHARDSON

Lecture Meeting

Some time ago the American Projection Society had proposed holding one of its lecture meetings in the demonstration room of the Nicholas Power Company, No. 90 Gold street, New York City, because of the fact that there were plenty of power and power-controlling devices, as well as a screen were available in a room, very suitable for demonstrations and lectures. This was, for some reason, given up. I don't remember exactly why. While preparing my paper on the early days of projection for the Society of Motion Picture Engineers I found that not only did the Nicholas Power have a very remarkable collection of old projector mechanisms, which they themselves did not realize they possessed until I got "Hero" Griffin rooting around in the dust-covered relics, but also that there were duplicates of several of them.

I proposed that the company give the A. B. S. such duplicates as there were. To this President Burns very properly objected. Such historic relics are right now of considerable value, and as time goes on the value will increase very rapidly. He was quite willing to agree that the A. P. S. have these mechanisms for display at its headquarters, provided they be kept safely and in good condition for examination by such men as might wish to see them. He therefore proposed to loan such duplicates as there were to the A. P. S., with the proviso that if ever that organization from any cause should, in the future fail, or disband, then the mechanisms revert to their owner.

All this appeared eminently fair, and I asked if there would be any objection to the A. P. S. reconsidering and accepting the former offer of the demonstration room for a meeting. There was none and I at once got in touch with the officers of the A. P. S., proposing that the May 21st meeting be held at the N. Power Factory, and that if it were done I would give a demonstration on the High Intensity arc, accompanied by a lecture on same; also a lecture on why high amperage is wasteful, at the same time presenting certain historical matters pertaining to the early days of projection.

This proposal was accepted by the A. P. S., the program I had outlined was enlarged by a lecture by Mr. Arthur Shultz, of the Powers Company, on photometric light readings, followed by a practical demonstration of same; also a lecture on the new reflector type arc lamp by Herbert Griffin and Lester Bowen, accompanied by a practical demonstration.

The meeting, which chanced to be the 50th lecture meeting held by the society, was duly held, and was attended by fully 150 motion picture projectionists, mostly members of the A. P. S., though I believe there were a few invited guests. John Griffith, Ansonia, Conn., was there. Cecil Roods, late of China, was present, and I noticed most of the "toppers" in New York City projection present.

Question No. 301—Quote Ohm's law, and explain how it is applied in practice.

Question No. 302—Explain how you would calculate the number of amperes a known voltage would force through a known resistance. Give an example.

Question No. 303—For purposes of calculation, what is meant by the "arc voltage constant?" Can accurate results be had by its use?

Question No. 304—How would you calculate the ohmic resistance of your projector arc?

Question No. 305—Tell us how you would calculate the area of cross section of a round wire and give two examples.

The projector mechanisms were presented on the basis named. They were accepted. President Burns of the Power Company spoke briefly and was given a unanimous vote of appreciation and thanks for the mechanisms and the use of the Power testing room for the meeting.

The lecture and demonstration by Arthur Schultz, was most excellent. and was highly appreciated by those fortunate enough to be present. It included a description of the various photometers and an explanation of their action. My own effort seemed to be well received. The demonstration of the high intensity arc consisted of a pin-hole image of the arc projected to the screen, where it was magnified probably two or three hundred times using first 120 ampers on 120 amper carbons, and gradually reducing the current. I think it was an eye-opener to the men. It was primarily, designed to bring to their attention the enormous loss incident to the high intensity if carbons be worked at less than their normal full capacity, or even over it—a point I think few of the men quite appreciate the importance of. I had intended accompanying the demonstration of the high intensity by my own observations, but while in Schenectady I was given a paper prepared by the engineering staff of the General Electric Company covering the points I had in mind so very much better than I could hope to do, that I substituted it for my own talk, to the advantage of the men who heard it. It will be published in this department very soon.

My "Why High Amperage is Wasteful" was a dull, drizzling fizzle, for the reason that I had not had time to go down and make actual tests of the pin-hole projection on which it was based. Just what was wrong I don't know, but anyhow it was plenty, because while the first image was in place on the screen, and not so bad, the next one imitated pictures of early days and landed on the wall near the screen. Just where the third one might have been I don't know.

The High Intensity lecture and demonstration and the historic matters consumed a lot of time anyhow, so I let the other go without much effort to right whatever was wrong, called it a day and gave way to Messrs. Bowen and Griffin, who talked enlightingly and interestingly on the general proposition of the reflector type arc, and gave a most interesting demonstration of the new lamp they have perfected, assisted by Mr. Schultz, who made a comparative reading as between the light of the reflector type at 24 amperes and an ordinary arc at 80 amperes, or was it 85?

The light of the reflector type lamp was much more pure in tone, and more white and brilliant. I have not the exact figures at hand, but it may be accepted as a thoroughly proven fact that the reflector type lamp working at say, 25 amperes can, and if properly handled will give results at least equal to a seventy-five ampere ordinary arc. And mind you that statement is conservative. Personally I think it will do even considerably better. In my opinion no future installation should include an ordinary arc for projection purposes. The reflector type lamp is much better, and we now have it in excellent form in any one of several makes.

The meeting was followed by a buffet luncheon. The men examined the old mechanisms with very evident and great interest. The air was filled with "Don't you remembers," for the audience contained many old timers in the profession of motion picture projection.

The meeting was unanimously voted a success. It pointed directly to the fact that the A P. S., ought to have a real lecture hall, with at least 125 amperes of current available, and means for securing any amperage from fifteen to the maximum. Is it not possible for Local Union 306 (By the way, President Joseph Basson was present, though I missed Alex Polin, the Business Agent, and Abe Horowitz, Secretary) to join with the A. P. S., in securing adequate quarters? By this I mean a suitable place for the local offices and meeting room, the latter, which must necessarily, be of good size, to be supplied with the necessary equipment along the lines mentioned, housed in an inclosure accessible only upon permit to either the local or to the A. P. S., the A. P. S., to maintain its present quarters or not, as seems best, and the A. P. S., lectures held in the union hall to be available to any union man.

Very crudely outlined, but why could not some such plan be worked out, and a really adequate demonstration room be provided, where lectures could be stagd as they ought to be—which nine times in ten, I think, require projection apparatus and current?

Not Projectionist

Charles Armentrout, Mason City, Iowa, feels a bit indignant concerning the headphone stunt, and lands on the proposition as follows:

Dear Friend Richardson: Just a few words of comment on the article published in our projection department, captioned "Colony Installation."

Under a sub-head "Big New Stunt," it speaks of Manager DeRosa's discovery of a new way to make the Projectionist "stay put." Personally I am curious to know why a man should expend energy doping out this scheme, when a ball and chain would serve the purpose just as well, or perhaps even better, and be less expensive.

Are we, the projectionists, with a determination to perfect ourselves in projection practice, to purchase technical books, spend years in study and actual practice (experience), organize for the betterment of the profession, only to be wired or chained to the projector, if you please. And you, Rich, are for it, under certain conditions.

How About Others?

The question now arises, will some one have to design some sort of a dingus to compel the orchestra leader, the stage manager, the usher, the cashier and the theatre manager also to "stay put?" Are we to have "stay put" machines for 'em all? Nay, nay, Sylvester! God forbid! Such ideas certainly are most absurd. I fail to see any good which such schemes can possibly have in shaping and developing the profession of motion picture projection.

Are we to fail to secure from the exhibitor that recognition which is due for or to energy, skill and knowledge applied to motion picture projection? Are we to have projection placed in the hands of men who will meekly permit a manager who does not even pretend to have expert knowledge of projection, to chain us to the projector, and say: "Work, you slave, work!"

No! If the manager can honestly say that the work of the projectionist he has is not satisfactory—not done as well as he would do it if he were himself in charge of projection under the same conditions, or if the work the man is doing is not pleasing to the public, then let that manager put him out, and let him STAY OUT!

I know exactly how brother Armentrout feels. I know he feels a bit hard toward my humble self for having approved of the proposal under certain conditions, those conditions being that there be two men on duty where the head phone is used, each man projecting alternately. I regret this, because Armentrout is a progressive and it hurts me to have our views run in opposition.

I have before now many times had good friends revoke their friendship because I felt impelled by duty to do things they could not approve of. But what is one to do? Unless I am guided by what I believe to be RIGHT, and am willing to stand by what I think is right, even to the extent of losing friends by so doing, if that be necessary, then WHAT EARTHLY GOOD AM I ANYHOW????

Don't Understand Conditions

I think the main trouble with this whole proposition is that Brother Armentrout, and those many others who do not approve of the headphones, and who regard it as a "ball and chain," don't quite understand actual conditions. They don't understand that, for instance, in many large cities the manager who "puts the man out" will automatically be obliged to take in his place the man the organization sends, with very little, if any choice in his selection. Also the man he has "put out" will NOT "stay put out," except as to that one theatre. He will merely be sent to another theatre, where he will repeat the practice which got him fired out of the first one.

Sounds tough, but facts are facts. I don't know how it is now, but for years in one very large city the manager had absolutely no choice whatsoever in the selection of the projectionist he must employ. He had to take the man sent him, or get none at all. Cold FACT, brother Armentrout. Cold FACT, and fact which effectually disposes of your "put him out" argument. It can't be done.

As to the orchestra leader, the usher and the rest, except for the ticket seller and cashier, they are not of sufficient importance that any one is going to be seriously inconvenienced if they don't "stay put." The Projectionist is, aside from the ticket men, the only man in the theatre whose position is of sufficient importance to demand his presence and his concentrated attention every moment of the time.

The whole orchestra could often be absent

Has it made good in other houses?

When you consider booking certain pictures, or buying certain equipment, what counts most?

It's this question, isn't it?—

Has it made good in other houses?

That's a mighty sensible question—and we would like to have you apply it to Typhoon Cooling.

Never mind what you think Typhoon will do—or what they won't do. The only question should be:

Has it made good in other houses?

And here's your answer: Loew's tried out Typhoons in one house several years ago. Since then they have installed Typhoons in one theatre after another.

The Saenger Amusement Company has all its 38 houses Typhoon-cooled—and Southern Theatre Enterprises over 50 houses.

And then there are any number of exhibitors operating two or three or more theatres—with Typhoons cooling every one.

Now, you know that these experienced exhibitors keep buying Typhoons for just one reason: Because they make good.

It is facts like these that prove Typhoon Cooling will make good in your house—that it is worth a good deal more than it costs.

WITH DISTINCT BENEFIT. I say this remembering the picture and eye-butchering orchestra lights I have often viewed, to my discomfort. The manager can go away and stay away for hours, probably without a soul even knowing it. The same is true of them all, except the ticket folks and the PROJECTIONIST. When any one of them leave the show goes flooey pretty pronto, and if the projectionist does not "stay put," much injury to the show is pretty certain to result. Anyhow, while even the ticket seller or taker might be absent for say ten minutes, at times, without anything very serious happening, if the projectionist be absent for even three minutes, there is possibility of very serious results, and probability of injury to the show, in some degree at least.

Projectionist Important

It is therefore the fact that of all the theatre staff, the constant on-the-job presence of the projectionist is of far the greater importance, and in most ways he is, after all, the one most important man in the entire theatre, though usually the one least considered.

However, to close this argument, I will say to brother Armentrout that I believe very few managers will "chain" the projectionist to the projector by a headphone or otherwise, provided the projectionist himself "stays put" with reasonable regularity. Brother Armentrout, I venture the guess, "chains" himself there, just as does any real projectionist, hence a headphone would make no material difference to him, one way or the other. Presumably if the manager calls and the man is absent from his post, but it does not happen too often, and the projectionist is able to explain his absence from his POST OF DUTY in some reasonable way, no manager would protest.

Who It Hits

THE ENTIRE HEADPHONE STUNT IS DESIGNED TO COMPEL THOSE WHO REFUSE OR FAIL TO ATTEND TO THEIR PLAIN DUTY, TO ATTEND TO IT, and I am willing to make solemn oath, from my observation, there are many men "projecting motion pictures" who having started the projector working, pretty well turn projection over to the motor and arc control, merely glancing out occasionally, and quite casually, to see that a picture really IS on the screen.

Last week I was arguing with the projectionist in a big Broadway theatre on the head phone stunt. He claimed it was not necessary to watch the screen all the time. Said I: "What about possible discoloration of the light, which might occur when you are not watching?" Said He: "They'd ring a bell down below!"

Now I don't think the man really meant that. He was cornered where he knew he had no real answer, and tried to squirm out. Coming from such a source however, it certainly did NOT sound very good.

Brother Armentrout, the "securing recognition" in my opinion rests entirely when the production of high grade efficient work, plus the ability to enter into INTELLIGENT discussion of the various things pretaining to projection, such as screen surface characteristics, auditorium lighting, speed of intermittent and its effects, etc., through a fairly long list.

Gauge of Worth

It has been my experience in life that we gauge a man's knowledge, and in any field of endeavor, largely upon his ability to produce results and his ability to DISCUSS THE PROBLEMS CONNECTED WITH HIS WORK INTELLIGENTLY. I don't think you are right, brother Armentrout, in assuming that this head phone matter has anything to do with the securing of recognition for projection and the projectionist. I understand perfectly your idea, but believe you are in error in your conclusions in that matter.

I have for years demanded that the man who pretends to project motion pictures actually projects them, and not permit a and an arc control to do it. I am unable to find valid objection to any reasonable way of COMPELLING those men who don't and up to date WON'T "stay put," to do THEIR DUTY. For years I have demanded recognition and a square deal for the men from managers. I have incurred the bitter enmity of hosts of managers in so doing, though of late an increasing number of them have come to a better understanding of me and my work, and have changed their attitude toward it and me.

I believe in FAIR PLAY, and that the manager is entitled to a square deal by the men. I believe the man who fails or refuses to do his duty, deserves little or no consideration. If he WON'T "stay put," then he should be made to "stay put," and there you are!

Please understand clearly that I am NOT hitting at the man who does his duty, stays beside his working projector, where he BELONGS, except he be UNAVOIDABLY ABSENT. To such men (of whom I am very certain Brother Armentrout is one) all honor and credit. To the others, I am perfectly willing to advocate necessary COMPULSION. Think it over. If YOU are not hit, you are not hurt. Think it over!

Rheostat Connection

John LeGamme, New Orleans, Louisiana, asks:

I had an argument with a projectionist yesterday. He and I were talking about why it was necessary for a projectionist to understand electrical action pretty well. I thought only a general knowledge was really necessary, but he held otherwise. In the course of the argument he asked if it was possible to connect a ten or twelve volt rheostat on 110 volt current. I told him it could not be done. He said I was wrong. I cannot see that such a thing is possible, but concluded to ask you, and if it can be done, please explain it fully.

A ten or twelve volt rheostat could not be used on 110 volt current alone. It could, however, be used on 110 volt current in series with another rheostat having sufficient resistance so that the two in series (which make of them really one rheostat) would not have their conductors overloaded by the current forced through by the pressure.

Looked at in one way such a query is in the nature of a "catch" question. However it is not really that because the man who really understands electrical action and rheostats would never be caught by so simple a thing. I would not approve of it for an examination question however, since when undergoing examination a man usually is nervous, and therefore lacking in mental keenness.

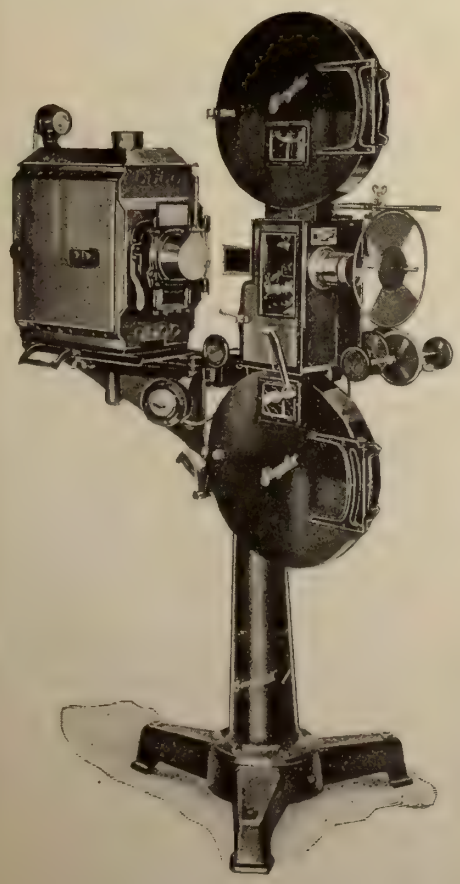
It Pays to Have the Best

FAULTY projection, due to poor design or worn out condition of Projectors is responsible for the failure of many Motion Picture Theatres.

The time has passed when patronage could be won on the merits of pictures alone. Patrons know that some "movies" afford them more enjoyment than others regardless of what pictures are shown. Tests prove that the important factor in theatre popularity now is how well pictures are presented. Or, as the owner of a large chain of theatres remarked recently, "The secret of success in motion picture theatre business today is good projection."

It is not surprising, therefore, that more and more theatre owners are installing new Simplex Projectors. For Simplex has always represented the most advanced engineering practice in projection machine design. And not only in design, but in construction — in the quality of material used; in the precision of working parts; in the improved oiling system that keeps each part functioning smoothly—and in its perfect performance, is shown the superiority of the Simplex.



There is a Simplex distributor serving your territory who will gladly demonstrate features of the Simplex which have won for it first place in its field. Or, write for full information to the Precision Machine Company, Inc., 317 East 34th St., New York.

How Things Stand

This morning a letter came which caused a smile and aroused keen interest. The smile was both for the friendliness, and the lack of real understanding. The interest was because I think many may hold the same views with regard to this department, its editor and the American Projectionist. The name of the writer is not given, because he might become involved in argument with friends—for most New York men know him, I think. His letter reads:

Dear Richardson: Have you seen the new issue of the American Projectionist? It is a corking good number. Why don't you give us such matter as the carbon discussion therein contained? It fills most of the paper, true, but just the same it is good stuff, and highly instructive.

As a member of the A. P. S. I'm "for" the American Projectionist, of course, but just the same I don't care to see it get the best of you or the projection department, because I can't forget that you are the war horse who, to all intents and purposes, all alone carried on the fight for the recognition of projection through all the years—many of them years when you were scoffed at and ridiculed for doing it. For that reason, if for no other, I want to see you and the department you have so ably made—not merely edited—continue in the lead, though also I want to see our little paper succeed too.

So stay with 'em, Old Timer! More power to you! In your department and in your books you have built up a reputation which will endure for many years.

There is a misunderstanding. I have read the current American Projectionist and fully agree with you as to the value of the article in question, though there are points therein which I believe might well be the subject of argument. In other words, while the article as a whole is splendid, still I have the nerve to take issue with the expert who delivered the lecture on some things therein contained. Either he is wrong, or the evidence of practical experience covering many years is wrong.

However, I did not start out to discuss the article, as such, here, but to talk of the general situation as regards publications dealing with motion picture projection.

The American Projectionist and the Projection Department of this paper do not in any degree interfere with each other. I have repeatedly recommended the Projectionist, to our readers—though, incidentally, I might remark that I do not remember having seen such a direct recommendation of this department in the Projectionist.

I have recommended the Projectionist because it entered the field decently and with due courtesy, NOT with the idea of superseding those already in the field for many years, but to work with them helpfully, cooperating for the good of motion picture projection and the men engaged therein. I recommended the Projectionist because it is fathered by a responsible organization, already devoted to the uplift of the profession. I did this because I well know that the more really good projection publications there are, within reasonable limits of course, the GREATER FIELD THERE WILL BE FOR EACH OF THEM, because one good publication has the effect of stimulating interest in the subject dealt with, and this reacts to cause the men to read more widely.

The American Projectionist is edited by an able, hard working, clean GENTLEMAN. George Edwards and I are firm friends, and will, I hope, remain so until Gabriel toots his horn for one or the other. We have even discussed the matter of (in the event one of us goes to One Place and the Other, after bidding the world goodbye) having a phone connection made (asbestos wire on my end of course) so we may continue to like and cuss each other indefinitely.

Different Fields

The field of the American Projectionist is essentially different from that of this department, or has been so up to date. It deals more with lectures delivered before the Society, and such things, whereas this department, which has a tremendous small town following, deals with every day problems to a large extent, plus editorials designed, for the most part, to stir up discussion (also very often "stirring up discussion" means stirring up de cussing) and MAKING THE MEN THINK.

This department and its editor earnestly and sincerely hopes the American Projectionist, may continue, and that it may get better and better. It will not be so many years now before the weight of years will force Richardson to lay aside his pen, and to cease from troubling. Today the entire field of projection is, to all intents and purposes, covered only by the American Projectionist and this department. I would like to know that when the years stop me, or the Grim Reaper calls, the work I have labored at for so many years—labored at least hard, honestly and earnestly at—will be carried forward by able hands.

There, brother! Don't waste a moment of your time worrying about either myself or this department. It could easily exist and PROSPER in and on the small town field alone, which in the very nature of things will not be covered by any strictly projectionist paper for at least many years to come, because the small town man "borrows" the projection department from the exhibitor, who is the subscriber. But even so, I find that the influence of the department grows not less, but greater in cities as the years go by. They may cuss Richardson, but all the same they want to read what he has to say, and heed a lot of it too.

Long Time

J. L. Casey, Projectionist The Pastime Theatre, Clarendon, Texas, which was merely a frame hotel and three or four nondescript buildings, surrounded by millions of acres of prairie peopled only by cattle and prairie dogs when first I saw it in about 1890, writes us after the "silence of (projection) centuries." About 1890 I was firing an engine pulling strings of freight cars across those endless prairies, running north out of Ft. Worth. I well remember that over the Clarendon hotel desk was a card reading thus: "Six miles from wood, six hundred feet to water; six feet from Hell, God bless our home!"

Brother Casey says:

It has been a long time since I last wrote our department, which I manage to find time to study each week. I also study the Handbook, which, take it from me, is SOME book. It ought to be in the hands of every projectionist and machine operator, of which there are both in this part of the country—some good and some bad.

I am making a stab at answering a few of the Bluebook School questions. Hope they will pass. Wish you might visit this part of the U. S. You would not find it so far to water as when you fired an engine through here years ago.

Seems I told that hotel card yarn before. Oh well, its good enough to bear repetition anyhow. Yes, I'd like to see that country now, but suppose I never will. It must have changed a great deal. It was pretty desolate looking then.

I have glanced over your answers, and they stack up very well, only you don't explain as much as you might. When a man just simply answers, very often though the reply is correct, I don't know whether it is merely copied out of some book, or whether he really understands the matter.

Keep at those questions brother. It may cost you a real effort, and like as not you will not always be right, but in the effort involved you will learn, and the knowledge will be fixed permanently in your mind.

Progressive

In John H. Walker, Director, Bureau of Inspection, Department of Labor and Industry, the State of Pennsylvania has a progressive official who is gradually bringing order out of what was not exactly order before.

The Department of Labor and Industry has taken several big steps in progressiveness during the past two or three years. It has officially adopted up-to-date nomenclature, so that Pennsylvania men who project pictures are now licensed as Motion Picture Projectionists, and not merely as machine operators. The Department, due, I think, largely to the influence of Director Walker, has tried to improve the laws in several ways, but, very foolishly I think, the theatre people, including the projectionists, I understand, opposed the proposed legislation, and succeeded in killing it, which action worked far more injury to themselves than to any one else.

Fortunately the Department has considerable power in the matter of making working rules, and I hope and believe this power will be used to work needed improvements.

One projosed law which was killed would have authorized a small license fee, which it was proposed to use to improve the examination, and otherwise improve things to the direct benefit of the projectionists of the state. It is a shame that this was killed.

My compliments to the Department and to John H. Walker. We need more public officials of his sort, and more departments of the kind the Department of Labor and Industry of Pennsylvania seems to be.

Definite and Real

Exhibitors who keep a careful eye on the box office find that photographic quality on the screen has an influence with patrons that is definite and real.

That's why it's worth while to make sure the picture is printed on the film that carries quality from studio to screen—Eastman Film.

Eastman Film is identified by the words "Eastman" and "Kodak" in black letters in the film margin.

What We Ate

The General Electric Company gave the Society of Motion Picture Engineers a dinner and dance at the "Asia" Restaurant, during the meeting in Schenectady. After mature deliberation I have decided to show you exactly what the G. E. did to us. The cut is of the menu given us to order from. I'll tell the world it was a doity trick to play on a respectable bunch of quite decent engineers. Cream Tomato Soup looks like a battalion of Japanese out on a lark, while just plain roast turkey looks like a funeral procession gone crazy. Take a slant at that Christmas tree wearing a kimona, down in the extreme right hand corner. It turned out to be plain tea. The column marching single file and full of hop immediately above and to the left is ice cream and cake.

Well, anyhow it tasted a darned sight better than it looked, and the sight of Colored Pictures Kelley dancing with Jay Kroesen's better .5, while shafts of bright green light from the eyes of her spouse followed them, made it all well worth while anyhow. There, darn it, I had an invitation to visit Kroesen's home and ruin some groceries, but now I won't dare go.

Voltage

John L. Fitzmaurice, Jersey City, New Jersey, wants to know the voltage of the supply in the following cities, which I shall give a designating letter for convenience in reply. Harrisburg, (A) and Pittsburgh (B), Pennsylvania; Columbus (C) and Cincinnati (D), Ohio; Evansville (E), Hammond (F), Chicago (G), Springfield (H), and East St. Louis (I), Illinois; St. Louis (J) and Kansas City (K), Missouri; Fort Scott (L) and Parsons (M), Kansas; Joplin (N), Missouri; Muskogee (O), Oklahoma; Fort Smith (P), Hot Springs (Q) and Little Rock (R), Arkansas; Shreveport (S), Alexandria (T) and New Orleans (U), Louisiana.

Gosh, friend Fitzmaurice, you don't want much. Must be going to take quite a trip. Well, anyhow here is the information you seek. I would recommend that you secure a copy of "Central Station Voltages," issued by the Lamp Committee of the National Electric Light Association. I would advise you where to get one, but the publication of that bit of information probably would cause many to apply who have no real use for the book, and as it is issued free, that would hardly be fair. Referring to the cities by letter, the voltages are (A) Harrisburg L & P Co., 120 volts; (B) Duquens L. Co., 110 volts; (C) Col. Ry P & L 120, and Munic E. L. Pl also 120 volts; (D) Union G & E Co. 120 volts; (E) So. Indiana G & E Co., 120 volts; (F) No data available—presumably same as Chicago; (G) Commonwealth Edison Co., 115 volts; (H) Illinois Co. and two others, all 110 volts; (I) no data available—presumably same as St. Louis; (J) Laclede G. L. Co. and two others, all 115 volts; (K) Kansas City L & P Co., 115 volts; (L) Ft. Scott Public Utility and one other, both 115 volts; (M) Kansas E and Utility Co., both 110 and 115 volts; (N) Munic, E. L. Pl., and one other, both 115 volts; (O) Oklahoma G & E Co., 110 volts; (P) Ft. Smith L & Tract Co., 115 volts; (Q) Citizens E. Co., both 110 and 120 volts; (R) Little Rock Ry & E Co., 110 volts; (S) So. Western G & E Co., 110 volts; (T) Munic, E. L. & W Wks, 115 volts; (U) New Orleans Ry & Light Co., 120 volts.

Now don't imagine because all these run 110 to 120 that they all do. Current at 220 is fairly common, meaning places where you must use that voltage. Glancing through the lists I find 200, 210, 230 and some other voltages, but it is a fact that not one in a hundred vary more than ten volts from 115, though there are a few freak pressures such as 118 at Georgetown, Conn.; 108 at Kensington, Conn.; 250 at Vinegar Bend, Ala., and 114 at Roswell, N. M.

Of course these small variations (not including the 250 volts), would not bother projection apparatus, and I would say that a projectionist is quite safe to take to the road with apparatus operating on current from 110 to 120, with emergency resistance to use when an occasional 220 volt station is found.

An Old Letter

Today I came across a letter dated December 11, last year. It is from P. E. Thomas, Creston, Iowa, and seems to have been somehow mislaid, together with several others. It contains interesting matter, and matter which may be of real value, hence old as it is, here it is. Thomas said:

Just read Griffith's article in December 13 issue, and am taking the liberty of suggesting that he try a color filter to tone down his light. The filter I have in mind is known as the "Wratten—series K-1," which is extensively used in cinematography. It would introduce a tinge of yellow and orange, and might prove to be the very article friend Griffith is looking for. Its price is about four dollars.

The Griffith article inspired me to make an experiment. I am projecting "Yolanda" today, which same contains some very excellent photography. The definition is fine. I introduced a Series K-1 filter between the aperture and the projection lens, which of course had the effect of altering the projection lens working distance slightly. To my surprise I observed an increase in the apparent depth of the picture. The effect was one which would cause a photographer to exclaim: "Gee whiz! Lookut!"

It might be well for some of the boys who have oodles of illumination available to investigate this filter matter. I have a hunch that it will give satisfactory results. I presume one would be called an idiot who made the prediction that the projectionist of the future will be called upon to use various sorts of filters to intensify the beauty of his projection. Perhaps not, though. Your opinion, Mr. Editor, please.

To some slight extent, and in very desultory fashion, projectionists have already experimented with color filters in projection. I doubt that projectionists will ever be called upon to take up the matter of tinting the projected light as a regular part of projection. The producer will probably prefer to himself determine, so far as he may, exactly what the tint of any scene will be. It may be taken for granted that so important a function will never be intrusted to the projectionist, if it ever is, until such time as projection rooms are universally manned by thoroughly competent projectionists.

No, on the whole I guess we may never expect it, Brother Thomas. It is hardly to be expected that at least the small town theatres will ever be able to employ men of sufficiently high calibre to be entrusted with deciding just what scenes need tinting, and what the density of the tint should be.

However, there are real possibilities for improvement in the matter of taking the glare and chalkiness out of some of the projection light now being extensively used, though that, too, has the complication that while a color screen may give perfect results with white light, when a tinted scene—and they are. as you well know, numerous—comes along, what the result will be is a matter for speculation. In effect I believe it would be necessary to remove the screen at every tinted scene.

Better Projection

May I 'umbly suggest to all those various ones who deal in projection equipment that they are standing in their own light when they fail to follow the lead of the Nicholas Power Company's live wire advertising man and help spread the "BETTER PROJECTION PAYS" slogan he inaugurated?

The Power Company merely started it and are pushing it along. They have no patent on it nor have they a monopoly on its use. Why don't you other equipment men just plain forget who started the thing going, get in the game and shove it along???

For instance, the letter heads, bill heads, every bit of printed matter and every advertisement of every equipment man in the business should carry that slogan. If this were done the RESULTS WOULD BE SURE. The average exhibitor has had the idea for such a long while that projection is just a take-care-of-itself mechanical thing, and that a "picture is a picture," within limits, of course, that it is going to require persistent effort to rouse him from that state of mind.

However, if for a few months he is unable to read a letter, a bill or an advertisement without having the fact that Better Projection Pays stare at him, it WILL have its effect. "Constant dripping, day by day, wears the hardest stone away," you know.

Bluebook School—Answers 271-275

Question No. 271—What is the total candle power of an ordinary arc the crater of which is .5 of an inch in diameter, if the c. p. is 150 candle power per square millimeter? (This question was repeated at the suggestion of G. W. Bennewitz, Sioux Falls, South Dakota.)

A. L. Fell, Collingswood, New Jersey; G. W. Bennewitz, Sioux Falls, So. Dakota; Walter Johnson, Champaign, Illinois; C. H. Hanover, Burlington, Iowa; G. L. Doe, Chicago, Illinois, and H. E. Hurlbutt, Oskosh, Wisconsin, were the only ones who made the grade on this one.

Fell says:

Multiply .5 by .5, which gives us .25. Next multiply the constant .7854 (square of diameter multiplied by .7854 equals area of circle) by .25, which gives us. 196350 of a square inch as the area of the crater in square inches. To reduce this to square millimeters we must multiply it by 645.16 (number of square millimeters in one square inch) which gives as a result the square millimeter area of the crater, which is 126.6771660. We have now only to multiply this by the candle power per square millimeter, which is 150, to get the final result, which is 19,001.575 candle power for the entire crater.

Johnson does it this way:

On page 34 of the Bluebook we find that 1 millimeter equals .03937 of an inch, hence .03937th of an inch must be equal to one millimeter. We must first ascertain how many mm. there are in one inch, to do which we divide 100,000 by 3937, which gives us 25.4 millimeter in one inch. (Gosh! Maybe that's right, I dunno! Anyhow his answer is so darned close to right that I guess it must be. A few more like this and I'll be woozy.—Ed.) The diameter of the crater is .5 of an inch, hence 25.4 x .5 is the mm. diameter, which is 12.7 mm.

The area of a circle equals n (3.1416) times x the radius squared, or as a formula, $A=NV^2$. (Hellup.—Ed). The radius is equal to one half of the diameter 12.7 mm., or 6.35 mm. Applying the formula $A=NV^2$—A=3.1416 x (6.35 x 6.35), or 126.68 square millimeters. If there is 150 candle power per square mm., then to find the total candle power we have but to multiple 126.68 by 150, which gives us 19,002+ as the candle power of the crater.

Phew! You just dare pull one more like that on me and I'll come over to Champaign and bite you. You must have made some slight error, as you are from half to one candle power too high.

Bennewitz says:

First we must find the area of the crater which is .5 of an inch in diameter. One rule for this is to multiply the square of the diameter by .7854, and .5 squared equals .25, and that multiplied by .7854 equals .196350th of a square inch. Next we must find how many square millimeters there is in .196350 of a square inch, which is done by multiplying .196350 by the number of square millimeters in one square inch, which is 645.16, the result being 126.67716600 square millimeters, which is the area of the crater in square millimeters, and of course that multiplied by the c p per square mm. (150) will produce the result sought, which is 19,001.57400 candle power for a crater .5 of an inch in diameter.

Brother Hurlbutt did it the same as Bennewitz, but gets 19,002.75 as his result, which presumably agrees with Johnsons' figuring, but I'm not going over all those figures to see where the error is. The process is right, and that is what counts, except that I'm a matter of forty-five years out of school and those formulae are now nice copper plate Greek to me.

Question No. 272—What is Meant By "Current Frequency?"

S. F. Cooley, Manchester, New Hampshire; G. L. Doe, Chicago, Illinois; W. C. Budge, Garden City, Long Island; G. W. Bennewitz, Sioux City, So. Dakota; A. L. Fell, Collingswood, New Jersey; C. H. Hanover, Burlington, Iowa; Walter Johnson, Champaign, Illinois; and T. R. Guimond, Mobile, Alabama, answered this one right. It is a bit surprising that some men replied that current frequency is the number of alternations per second.

Hanover says:

In alternating current the direction of action, or flow changes many times per second. The E. M. F. starting at zero rises to maximum, moving the current in one direction over the circuit. It then sinks again to zero, where all current flow of course ceases. It then again rises to maximum and again sinks to zero, but during this phase of operation the current moves in the opposite direction. These two phases of movement are called alternations, and two alternations are termed one "cycle," and the number of circles, (which may vary enormously), there are per each second of time is termed the "current frequency, thus: if there be 120 alternations per second there will of course be sixty cycles per second, hence the current frequenoy will, in that case, be sixty.

Bennewitz says:

Current frequency is the number of double alternations or cycles completed in one second of time. Thus, it may be stated that the frequency of a certain current or E. M. F. is "Sixty cycles per second" or merely "Sixty cycles," or the frequency in another circuit may be twenty five cycles, or any other number within a very wide range.

Fell says:

Current frequently is the number of double alternations or periods made by an alternating electric current per second of time.

Question No. 273—What is the difference between A. C. and D. C. and what kind of a generator armature, if any, is used to generate D. C.?

Fell says:

Alternating current reverses its direction on the entire system exactly the same as it does in the dynamo armature. It has a succession of electric currents which rise and fall in strength and flow alternately in opposite directions and at regular intervals.

Direct current is an electric current which is constant in direction, though not necessarily so in value. A direct current which is constant both in value and direction as the result of constant pressure, is termed a "continuous current." Direct current is the result of alternating current generated in the dynamo armature, for reasons set forth on pages eight and nine of the Bluebook, which is "commutated" into direct current by means described on pages nine and ten of the Bluebook.

Bennewitz says:

The difference between the A. C. and D. C. phenomenon is very pronounced. The fact that direct current flows constantly in one direction, presumably from positive to negative, while A. C. flows alternately in opposite directions is the significant thing. However, due to the fact that alternating current does constantly change in both direction and intensity, or E. M. F. value, certain effects which do not exist with direct current become of great importance. These effects are inductance and permittance, or as frequently named, "electro-static capacity."

Budge says:

Direct current is an electric current in which one wire of the circuit is constantly positive and the other constantly negative. Alternating current in an electric current which changes its direction of flow and value many times a second, and in such manner that the circuit wires are each alternately positive and negative many times each second of time.

Johnson says:

The difference between direct current (D. C.) and alternating current (A.C.) is just this: Direct current flows continuously in one direction. It commonly is considered as "flowing" from positive (+) to negative (−). In theory the current "flow" or action is outward from the positive brush of the generator, on the conductor attached thereto, to and through the various lamps, motors, etc., to the negative conductor and along that conductor back to the generator armature through the commutator thereof.

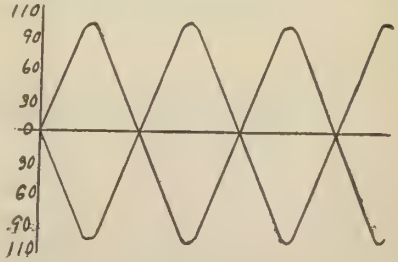
Alternating current is the current normally generated by the dynamo armature and sent out on the circuit without undergoing commutation, so that current on the entire system reverses its direction exactly the same as does the current in the armature.

Hurlbutt, Doe, Hanover, Cooley and Guimond answered correctly. I selected the foregoing for publication to illustrate how many ways a thing can be told, and how easy it is to overlook extremely important items. As illustrative of that last, see the answer of Brother Bennewitz—the only man of you all who answered who even touched upon one of the most important differences as between A. C. and D. C.

And now here is a stunt which should prove interesting and valuable. I am going to repeat this question in about two or three weeks from the time this is published, and I want you all to take these answers as a basis and give the best description you are able of the differences between the two currents, or perhaps I should say the "differences."

Whoa Maude, I forgot something! Only Hanover remarked that dynamo armatures generate A. C. only. There is no armature which generates D. C.—see pages seven and eight of the Bluebook. Did the rest of you just overlook that part of the question, or were you afraid of a "catch"?? Cooley said something which may or may not have been a correct answer to it, dependent upon what he had in mind.

Question No. 274—Explain exactly what the various things in this diagram mean—the slopes of the sides of the triangles, for instance.



Hanover, Bennewitz, Doe, Fell, Budge, and Guimond were the only ones who made good here. One man assumed it to be a two-phase diagram, and as such to be wrong, in which he is seemingly needlessly in error. The diagram is, of course, of single phase current. It is the usual, conventional diagram used to illustrate alternating current action in all standard electrical works, though often drawn in a more wavy form, which is perhaps the more correct form. See pages 1,006 to 1,012, Volumn 4 of Hawkins Electrical Guides.

I think the reply of Bennewitz, which is illustrated with a most excellent drawing, will serve for this answer very well. He says:

I have tried to explain this in the enclosed drawing to which I will add the following.

The figures from 0 to 110 represent the pressure or voltage. The upper and lower lines represent the maximum postive and negative pressure. Line 0 to 0 is the line of no pressure and also represents time. When the loops or armature coil is parallel with line 0-0 it does not cut magnetic lines and the pressure is zero. When the loop is rotated so that it is parallel with fig. 1 we have a pressure of 30 volts, at fig. 2-60 volts, at fig. 3-90 volts, and at fig. 4-110 volts or maximum positive pressure. As the loop passes the 90 degree point it starts to cut less magnetic lines and at 5 the voltage has dropped to 90, at 6 to 60, at 7 to 30 and at 180 degrees no lines are cut and the pressure is at zero. The sine curve represents the changes of strength and direction of the current.

Question No. 275—Why should the projectionist understand the effect of current frequency as applied to projection?

I was amused by one answer, the answerer's name being my secret. He said: "To keep them from showing their ignorance when such questions as No. 274 are asked."

I don't know whether the good brother had a guilty conscience or not, but anyhow his answer to 274 left several things to be desired, so mebby, brother———mebby!

Bennewitz says:

The projectionist should understand such things because he is placed in direct charge of motors and generators, often of considerable capacity; also of projection light, which may be seriously affected by low current frequency.

Here is an original one, by Budge:

There is "frequency" in motion picture projection. The screen is light and dark alternately, due to closing and opening of the projection lens by the rotating shutter of the projector. It is possible, by wrong projection speed, to have these frequencies synchronize with the A. C. current frequency if using an alternating current light source. The projectionist should understand all kinds of frequencies which occur in the projection room.

Doe says:

The projectionist must handle equipment in which current frequencies and light frequencies occur, which may interfere with each other. A man should know every possible thing about the equipment he handles. Unless he does understand he cannot hope to handle the equipment at its maximum value.

Guimond says:

For every lack of knowledge of anything a man must handle and use in his daily work there is a corresponding probability of inefficiency, which is an argument even the biggest dumbbell of them all will hardly attempt to controvert, and in my opinion it is an entirely sufficient reply to the question.

Cooley (who also gave an excellent answer to previous question) says:

Because it forms a part of the knowledge inherent in the profession of motion picture projection. It is necessary that the projectionist have at least a fair understanding of such things because he handles equipment in which current frequency occurs, and light in which illumination frequency occurs, and the latter may be seriously affected by current frequencies under some conditions; moreover in some places and under some conditions problems may arise which are allied to projection, which cannot be successfully coped with by the man who lacks knowledge of current frequency.

Magazine Valve

Some time ago Projectionist Fred Knott, Portland, Oregon, wrote regarding the location of the fire valve in the upper magazine that the location might be improved.

This I agree with, but to make the change now would involve a very much greater amount of trouble and expense than the benefit derived would justify. Such projectionists as think it worth while may, without any great amount of trouble, themselves move the fire valve back to a position which will give a more nearly "straight shot" of the film from reel to idler roller, riveting a piece of sheet metal over the old opening, of course.

Every once in a while men send in suggestions for change in various projectors, evidently believing that since the change is a relatively small one, it may be made with very little trouble and expense to the manufacturer.

Good Suggestion

What they do not know is that every change from the adopted standard involves trouble forever after; also it is not always possible, for, any one of many reasons, to make really desirable changes in construction.

I remember, not so long ago, when a projectionist sent in a suggestion for change in a certain equipment part. The suggestion was a good one basically, but when I took the matter up with the manufacturer I was informed that a short time before he had had the opportunity of securing a large stock of the parts in question at a big reduction. He had, of course, grabbed the chance, had all those parts on hand and therefore could not possibly make the change, that is, unless he was willing to ditch all those parts, which he very naturally was NOT.

Their Troubles

Make no mistake, manufacturers of projection equipment have their trials, their troubles and their tribulations, and they have 'em good and plenty, too. They are all striving to give you the best they can in both service and equipment. Theirs is a pathway lined on both sides with high, beautiful shrubs and blooming plants. YOU see the border, and it looks very beautiful. THEY pass between these beautiful borders—over a pathway in which are various dornicks, quite a few boulders, lots of broken bricks, some broken glass, rusty nails and other things invisible to YOU, but very much on the job with them.

So be patient with the manufacturer. He often smiles while you are looking, but emits a cross between a grunt and groan when you turn your back, wondering how he is going to keep you satisfied, as he really is anxious to, and at the same time prevent the sheriff from grabbing his other shirt and his extra pair of socks.

Granulation

More and more as I watch productions screened it is borne in upon my mind that granulation is one of the very worst enemies the projectionist has to contend with. I say "the projectionist" because where there is heavy granulation in the emulsion of the prints supplied him it is impossible that he put on the screen a really good picture.

This is especially true with relation to what the theatre patrons who occupy the front seats will see. The damage done by granulation in the film emulsion was impressed upon me particularly, recently, when I sat well back and was using a rather powerful opera glass to view some of the scenes. I observed that one scene stood out "sharp as a knife." It was beautiful, clear and sparkling. While the glass was at my eyes the scene changed and, good Lord, what a let down! I was several seconds realizing that the change from beauty to punkness was due to nothing under the sun but just plain emulsion granulation.

I then, using the glass, watched that production closely, and found that there was a literally enormous difference in scenes free or comparatively free from granulation and those scenes containing considerable of it. I of course very well knew before that granulation did a lot of harm to the finished results as seen upon a screen, but never before had I realized how very great the damage really is.

Since then I have watched several productions, using a glass, and find that scenes almost entirely free from it are rare, and when they do come along they are wonderfully clean and sharp.

Maybe a Giggle

I don't know much of anything about the chemistry of film making, or whatever it is that causes granulation. The matter was discussed before the Society of Motion Picture Engineers at one of its meetings a year or two ago, but I don't remember the reasons set up as to its cause, if any, were. It does seem to me, however, that if some scenes can and are practically free from it, then there is or ought to be some way of eliminating it entirely. Perhaps the laboratory sharks will giggle when I say that, but if so, why, let them laugh. Thomas Edison spent two or three years in experimentation, trying to find some method of making what amounted to an indestructible storage battery. He worked for a year or two before he even got a single reaction which looked promising. Mr. Edison made the battery all right, just as he found a substance suitable for incandescent lamp filaments, after searching almost the entire habitable surface of the globe for it.

With what has already been accomplished by men in doing "impossible" things, I have faith to believe that if granulation is undesirable—and heaven knows it IS—a way CAN and WILL be found to eliminate it. The matter is up to the laboratory men. I believe they will make good on it, too.

Write Producer

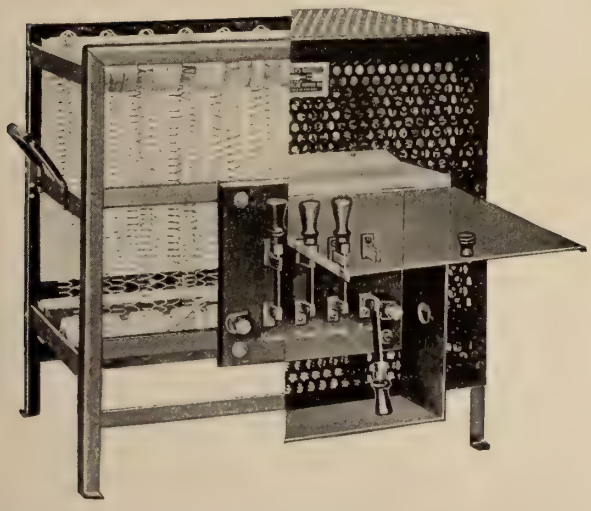
Meanwhile I would suggest to projectionists who receive films in which there is objectionable granulation (the effect which looks like the air was full of tumbling flakes), that they go to the trouble of writing to the PRODUCER, protesting that they are unable to put on a good show with the films so full of granulation. The producer may laugh at the first few letters, since he has a pretty firmly fixed idea that all our men know is how to "operate a machine," and he will wonder at your pure, unadulterated gall in presuming to even know there IS such a thing as granulation, and actually knowing its right name. By the time he has read a few dozen such letters, however, he will be very apt to begin to wonder if those "operators" (as he still probably dubs you) really are actually human after all, and do know something about the business, and the things they handle daily.

I make the prediction that if a sufficient number of you did this, or if you even kicked, in writing, to the exchange, the effect would have beneficial results in the end, and would raise you and your profession measurably in the esteem of the Powers That Be.

IMPORTANT FACTORS in GOOD PROJECTION

POWER'S

MULTIPLE COIL RHEOSTAT



Weighs less than one-third of grid type rheostat. Easily moved by one man.

Multiple Coil Units—One coil carrying five amps.—balance ten amps. each.

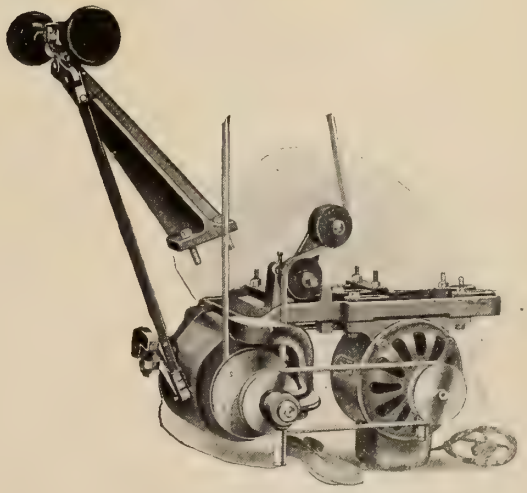
Small amperage carried by each coil allows use of small wires which permit perfect connections.

Loss of one coil does not affect others. If entire capacity of rheostat is not being used a new coil may be immediately switched in.

Coils can be replaced in a few minutes without difficulty and adjustments are easily made by means of knife switches.

Coils are special non-corrosive wire, strong and operate at very low temperature.

GOVERNOR TYPE MECHANICAL SPEED CONTROL



An assurance of absolute accuracy and dependability. Thousands in use without a complaint.

By setting lever and then simply throwing in the motor switch the projector will at once reach the exact speed for which the control is adjusted.

The speed of the mechanism will not be affected even though a change in line voltage should cause the motor speed to vary considerably.

If Power's Speed Indicator is used in connection with Power's Governor Type Mechanical Speed Control all difficulty regarding the proper timing of the picture is eliminated.

The Talk of The Industry

A Keynote for THE GREATER MOVIE SEASON

JOHN F. CASE, editor of the Missouri Ruralist, made an address at O'Fallon, Mo., May 15, 1925, before the presentation of "The Covered Wagon." At the close of his remarks, he said:

"It seems to me that into this picture the actors have put the soul of the pioneer. It lives. I can pay no greater tribute than that. And when you have seen it you will agree with me.

"I pay tribute, too, to the pioneers of the motion picture industry who, as those of long ago, visioned possibilities undreamed of by average men and pressed forward to help make a happier world.

"Motion pictures have brought the world to us of the farm and the country town. There is more than entertainment and inspiration provided by a picture like 'The Covered Wagon.' There is a lesson in God's goodness to mankind, enabling the pioneers to build.

"In publications such as the Missouri Ruralist throughout this nation the story of Paramount Pictures is being told, an advertising campaign almost as epochal as this picture itself. The national advertiser stakes his money that his product is right."

MARĒ NOSTRUM (Our Sea) Rex Ingram, Director. From the novel by Vicente Blasco Ibanez. Alice Terry and Antonio Moreno play the leading parts. A powerful love story. By the author of "The Four Horsemen," "Blood and Sand." Great panoramic sweep with tremendous battle scenes, including a gigantic sea fight. A year in production, here and abroad. Ingram dedicates this stupendous production to the world as his successor to "The Four Horsemen."

THE MERRY WIDOW Von Stroheim, Director. John Gilbert, the Prince. Mae Murray, the Widow. One of the greatest theatrical properties of history, Henry W. Savage's stage success by Victor Leon, Leo Stein, Franz Lehar. Three years on Broadway. A triumph in every capital of the world. A passionate love theme against a background of Viennese spice, dash, sparkle. A duel that's a thriller. A production that could run a year as a road show.

ROMOLA Lillian Gish starring with Dorothy Gish featured. Others in cast: Ronald Colman, William H. Powell. Henry King, Director. From George Eliot's classic novel. Ran 16 weeks on Broadway, at $2 top. Four weeks at same price Park Theatre, Boston. Twelve weeks at Grauman's Egyptian Theatre, Hollywood, same price. First popular priced engagement at Capitol, N.Y. a clean-up; held over for second week and could have run a third. Star of "The White Sister" in another big hit!

BARDELYS THE MAGNIFICENT Entirely in Technicolor. King Vidor, Director. Starring John Gilbert. With Claire Windsor and a great cast. By Sabatini, author of "The Sea Hawk," "Scaramouche." This production likewise is on a big scale, befitting Sabatini's vastly popular novel. The great lover, John Gilbert, in a dashing, love-making role. One of the big scenes is a fight on a high balcony, a gripping episode. John Gilbert in "Bardelys the Magnificent" is a real picture event!

THE BIG PARADE A big special production with John Gilbert starred as a special attraction. King Vidor, Director. Renee Adoree and a big cast. By Lawrence Stallings, author of "What Price Glory?" Broadway's greatest current success and also the sensational best-selling novel "Plumes." A vivid panorama of Doughboy adventures, loves, thrills—with powerful heart appeal. One of the biggest and most important productions ever made at the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Studios.

LILLIAN GISH Two Big Productions. This greatest star has just signed a long-term contract with Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. Her name always associated with box-office landmarks from "The Birth of a Nation," "Way Down East," "Orphans of the Storm" down to "The White Sister" and "Romola" continues to represent the surest star-draw in the business. Miss Gish will appear in two great pictures, which in story and production will do justice to her position as one of Today's Biggest Stars.

PARIS Robert Z. Leonard, Director. By Carey Wilson. With Pauline Starke, Lew Cody. Erté, the world's foremost creator of feminine fashions, gives your audiences the first Erté-gowned Fashion Special with striking Technicolor scenes. For years he has been dictating the styles of Paris and the world. Now Metro-Goldwyn has brought him to America. "Paris" comes heralded by months of advance advertising and publicity all over the country. What a showman marvel it's going to be!

NORMA SHEARER Three Important Productions. The Great Star, Norma Shearer, in three marvel-productions that will mean a fortune to exhibitors in 1925-26. One is already completed, final title to be announced. It's by Samuel Shipman, wise Broadway playwright, and has Lew Cody, too. The theme is women and clothes and smartly handled with not only luxuriousness and feminine appeal, but thrills—a breath-taking train wreck among others. And Technicolor sequences. Miss Shearer's other two starring vehicles are equally Big!

THE BARRIER Rex Beach, author. A big special in every meaning of the word. With a big All Star Cast as additional drawing attraction plus Rex Beach's fame and the box-office value of what is considered the most thrilling of this famous writer's works. Public demand brings it to the screen in a magnificent production, made into a great, new box-office sensation. Klondike days. Men of iron. Gold! Gold! And beauties caught in the gilded web of the Yukon!

THE TOWER OF LIES Victor Seastrom, Director. Starring Norma Shearer and Lon Chaney. A great special attraction with the combined names of Seastrom-Shearer-Chaney. These three personalities went into the making of "He Who Gets Slapped." Now again they appear in the Selma Lagerlof novel that won the Nobel Prize as the outstanding book of all countries. The story of a girl who goes to the city, her disillusionments and adventures, her great romance. A prize novel that will be next season's prize box-office attraction.

THE UNHOLY THREE Tod Browning, Director. Starring Lon Chaney. With Mae Busch, Matt Moore. For absorbing entertainment it has never been equalled. The novel by C. A. Robbins is one of the most amazing romances of the underworld ever unfolded to public gaze, the story dealing with a ventriloquist, a dwarf and a giant of a side show who band together in a career of crime. Those who have seen it declare it far greater than "The Miracle Man."

SALLY, IRENE AND MARY With Eleanor Boardman, Sally O'Neill, Renee Adoree, William Haines. Hobart Henley, Director. Edward Dowling's famous Broadway stage success which has seven road companies working simultaneously today, at last in pictures. Three featured women stars in one of the biggest titles that exists. Action, fun, beauties, thrills, comedies. It can be banked on as one of the sure-fire standing room attractions of the new season.

THE FLESH AND THE DEVIL The Victor Seastrom-John Gilbert Special. Seastrom as director, Gilbert as star make a marvelous money-winning combination. With Carmel Myers. From the classic novel of Herman Sudermann. A drama of the struggles between a man's passionate desires and the sins which weakness of the flesh may force him to commit. The kind of story that Seastrom will make into a tremendous audience hit. It is the successor to "He Who Gets Slapped."

LON CHANEY As an exclusive Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer star, Lon Chaney will appear in another smashing vehicle, promised to be the most exciting of his successful career as a leading box-office draw. As in his other big successes Lon Chaney will appear with an important woman star and production will be in fitting bigness. Title and details to be announced soon.

THE AUCTION BLOCK Rex Beach's powerful novel. Norma Shearer as an added attraction. What a combination! A great actress in a story of towering strength, dealing with the sale of human lives on Society's Auction Block. Man-to-man struggle for possession of silk-robed beauty! Metro-Goldwyn is producing it on a scale in keeping with the bigness of Rex Beach's name and the importance of this, his most dramatic masterpiece. A great special attraction.

THE MYSTIC Tod Browning, Director. With Aileen Pringle, Conway Tearle, Mitchell Lewis. A sensational exposure of fake spirit mediums, spooks, spirits, table tapping; beauties who bleed the rich; a tense love theme. The first great showman production to dramatize one of the big newspaper topics of Today! Made by the director of "The Unholy Three," it is a big audience draw in every sense of the word and will be backed by extensive exploitation. A winner!

MONTE CARLO Another Erté-Fashion-Triumph! Against a background of the notorious Gambling Paradise, amidst thrilling action, beauties appear, gowned in the striking fashions designed by Erté, the breath-taking creations of this fashion-genius—many in full Technicolor! Audiences are awaiting Erté-designed pictures with keenest interest! They have been receiving and will continue to receive nation-wide syndicated publicity campaigns. One of the greatest showman stunts in years.

LIGHTS OF OLD NEW YORK A Cosmopolitan Production starring MARION DAVIES. Directed by Monta Bell, a director who has had one big success after another. From the Broadway stage success by Lawrence Eyre, it gives Miss Davies a role similar to that with which she swept to success in "Little Old New York." Uproarious comedy moments mingle with gripping drama to make this production a great audience hit. Produced at the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Studios with an All-Star supporting cast. It will be nationally serialized and advertised.

THE TEMPTRESS A Cosmopolitan Production. By Blasco Ibanez, and like his other great works, "The Four Horsemen," "Blood and Sand," "Enemies of Women," "Marē Nostrum" it will be a gigantic, stirring drama. The prize vehicle of the screen year, it was sought after by many producers. A story of Beauty's mad flirtation with wealth in South America and the gilded café playgrounds of the Continent. Nationally serialized and advertised it will be backed by a tremendous exploitation campaign.

THE TORRENT A Cosmopolitan Production. By Blasco Ibanez, whose name is connected with the outstanding box-office hits of film history. "The Four Horsemen," "Blood and Sand," "Enemies of Women," "Marē Nostrum." "The Torrent" is hailed as his greatest picture story and it will be made into a powerful colossal epic of screen entertainment, featuring Aileen Pringle in a cast of big names. It will receive the special exploitation—nationally serialized and advertised—of Cosmopolitan Productions.

BUDDIES A Cosmopolitan Production starring MARION DAVIES. From George Hobart's successful play, two years on Broadway and then toured the country with several road shows. Pathos, drama, humor in a marvelous audience story. A big supporting cast and a production that will be of unusual stature. It will be given an unprecedented publicity and advertising campaign all over the country. "Buddies" gives Miss Davies the opportunity of her career for comedy and pathos.

FRED NIBLO One Big Production from the director of "The Mark of Zorro," "Blood and Sand," "Ben Hur" and other outstanding triumphs. He will make one gigantic production this year that will be worthy of his name and fame. You can depend on a truly great attraction from this genius of directors whose reputation for high-quality, beautiful mounting and intelligent handling of big stories is unexcelled. Watch for the important announcement.

THE CIRCLE Frank Borzage, Director. With Eleanor Boardman, Malcolm McGregor, George Fawcett, Creighton Hale, Alec B. Frances. From the stage success that ran two years on Broadway and toured the country. By Somerset Maugham, author of "Rain" and equally powerful. A big well-known title. And a production of magnitude. A frank presentation of tangled romances in Society's innermost places.

PRETTY LADIES Monta Bell, Director. With Zasu Pitts, Tom Moore, Lilyan Tashman, Anne Pennington. By Adela Rogers St. Johns. Based on the exciting Cosmopolitan Magazine story of a husband reclaimed from a life of wine, women and song. Anne Pennington in the "Follies" sequence. More beautiful women in this production than any ever made. And they're shown in full Technicolor.

SUN-UP The stirring Broadway stage success of two-years. By Lula Vollmer. With Conrad Nagel, Pauline Starke, Lucille La Verne. Edmund Goulding, Director. Great dramatic conflict. A passionate love. Mountain feuds. A battle to death. It has the tremendous heart interest that lives among the simple mountaineers of the Blue Ridge, quick to fight, quick to love, ready to die. A masterful play made into a virile screen romance!

NEVER THE TWAIN SHALL MEET

A Cosmopolitan Production. Directed by Maurice Tourner. With Anita Stewart, Bert Lytell, Huntly Gordon, Justine Johnstone, George Seigmann, Lionel Belmore and other big names. Peter B. Kyne's million-copy best-seller of California and the South Seas now a vivid romance of the screen, made in America and in the South Seas on a scale befitting the importance of this popular novel. Backed by a big exploitation campaign. It will be nationally serialized and advertised.

THE SPAN OF LIFE Starring Lon Chaney. With Pauline Starke, William Haines. Director, Jack Conway. The famous Sutton Vane stage play that had a remarkable stage history of success in New York, on the road and in stock. It trails a dramatic course from America to London to Africa, with thrills, throbs and powerful love motives. One scene shows a human bridge spanning a gaping chasm, body clutching body across a hundred foot expanse! Watch this one!

THE EXQUISITE SINNER With Conrad Nagel, Renee Adoree. From Alden Brooks' sensational novel "Escape." Josef Von Sternberg, Director. A son of wealth takes the gypsy road to romance and finds beautiful adventures of love. Directed by the new screen genius, it is handsomely produced, rich in beauty with a powerful romantic theme and will prove the surprise picture of the new year.

RAMON NOVARRO

Three Great Attractions. The handsome star of "Ben Hur" will be seen in three big, sure-fire hits. Thrilling love-making stories that the public wants. His first is a romance of the Annapolis Naval Academy, directed by the successful W. Christy Cabanne who is also a graduate of Annapolis. Taken with cooperation of the government. Novarro's other two big productions have equally big box-office drawing qualities. A star with a profit-following!

TIME, THE COMEDIAN

Robert Z. Leonard, Director. With Mae Busch, Lew Cody, Gertrude Olmsted. Kate Jordon's story of a home-breaker, revealing the love thief who knows no law in his preying on Youth and Beauty. A great dramatic production made by the creator of "Cheaper to Marry," and packed with unfailing box-office qualities.

MONEY TALKS!

Rupert Hughes' greatest story. Alf Goulding, Director. With Eleanor Boardman, Conrad Nagel. Successor to "Excuse Me!" with the same author, director, stars. A combination that means another clean-up. The theme is the Almighty Dollar and what it can buy of beauty, brains, honor. It's packed with those irrepressible Hughes' comedy angles—and yet with a real dramatic kick. The title is an exploitation wow!

AN EXCHANGE OF WIVES

With Eleanor Boardman, Lew Cody, William Haines, Renee Adoree. Hobert Henley, Director. Cosmo Hamilton's smashing Broadway comedy-drama. The story of a husband with young ideas. He thought he could bend the wedding ring a bit without breaking it. And when his wife starts to campaign, their adventures develop into the merriest and most exciting marriage mix-up a colony of young couples ever got into. A delight for all audiences.

THE MYSTERIOUS ISLAND

Jules Verne's companion story to "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea." It will be one of the most ambitious pictures ever filmed; showing the fight with deep-sea monsters, secret passages through the crater of a volcano, an eruption that carries away an island, attack by pirates. It is a masterpiece of adventure with undersea scenes done by J. E. Williamson. And many sequences in Technicolor. A big, thrilling entertainment!

MAE MURRAY

Two Big Productions. Mae Murray will appear in two big Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer productions in 1925-1926, in vehicles such as she has never before been seen. Coming after her great triumph in "The Merry Widow," in which she gives one of the most beautiful performances ever seen on the screen, the public will want to see this gorgeous star in her newest and greatest film successes.

LOVEY MARY

King Vidor, Director. With Sally O'Neill, the Wonder Find. By Alice Hegan Rice and a continuation of her famous "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch." The book is a classic dear to the hearts of all readers and is a story known in every corner of the country. The sunshine kid of an orphanage engages her saucy and winning personality in as delightfully human adventures as the screen has ever seen. With the new great screen personality Sally O'Neill.

WOMEN AND WIVES

The best-seller novel of Harvey Fergusson. With Eleanor Boardman, Conrad Nagel. The publisher Alfred A. Knopf reports it as one of his greatest bets. No wonder it's a money-maker at book-stores because it's built of human stuff, the joys, the tears, the drama that go to make great entertainment. That's why in its special screen production, cast with selling box-office names, it's going to be a coin-getter.

A LITTLE BIT OF BROADWAY

From Richard Connell's novel of a beauty among the white lights, her folks back home, a reputation at stake, the boy who waited and another who wanted. A heart of gold and the mud-slingers. It's got the audience wallop, the heart appeal and human interest that makes a sure-fire audience draw. Showmen picked this story and showmen are producing it for box-office profits. It's the kind every showman in the country will want. Director and important cast to be announced.

HOW DARE YOU!

A wonderful Rupert Hughes comedy romance. Remember "Excuse Me!" at the box-office. "How Dare You!" is just like it—only more so! That title with the Hughes audience angle insures pep, action, fun, and a whopping love story. A story that's right up to the second in smartness—peopled with folk that just stepped out of the pages of life and whose human story makes 100 per cent entertainment. The Director and money-winning cast to be announced.

BROWN OF HARVARD

America's most famous college classic, by Rida Johnson Young. With Conrad Nagel, Eleanor Boardman. Not only has it especial appeal for the younger generation to whom the romance of great college life is absorbing, but to every type of picture-goer it offers clean, thrilling entertainment. A surprise sensation, pep, youth, heart-interest. The story of Harvard's famous racing crew is just part of this great story.

JACKIE COOGAN

Two Great Hits. Two winning Jackie Coogan productions. By Willard Mack, who wrote "The Rag Man." They give Jackie even greater opportunities for the heart appeal and human touch. Again the lovable waif in tattered clothes. Watch for "Dirty Face," and "Old Clothes," two great titles and stories that will stir the emotions of all audiences, because they've got the recipe for human happiness—the joy, the tears, the smiles, the little troubles. Jackie in rags steals their hearts away.

DANCE MADNESS

With Aileen Pringle, Lew Cody. By S. J. Kaufman, the famous nationally syndicated author. A romantic love drama between a man of wealth and an obscure beauty whom he trails from the gilded haunts of wealth to her shabby home. Aileen Pringle, as the siren, more ravishing than in "Three Weeks." She has what Elinor Glyn calls "it"—and that's what accounts for her great popularity at the box-office. Here's an audience picture!

THE REASON WHY

Elinor Glyn's world-famous romantic novel, her successor to "Three Weeks" and "His Hour." Jack Conway, director. With the wonderful lovers Aileen Pringle of "Three Weeks" fame and Conway Tearle, who was the romantic hero of "The Great Divide." This is one of Elinor Glyn's best selling novels, a throbbing love story set in a jewelled background of wealth and elegance, with a great cast. Look forward to a sumptuous Glyn gold-getter.

THE QUALITY 52

for 1925-1926

IN 1924-25 Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer established a record for consistent money-making at the box-office that has never before been equalled by any company at any time. The season 1925-1926 finds this great organization more than prepared to continue to set the high pace which has made Metro-Goldwyn the Talk of the Industry. The studio organization, headed by Louis B. Mayer and his associates Irving Thalberg and Harry Rapf, that has shown in the current year its keen knowledge of what exhibitors want, remains intact, an assurance to showmen of business-pictures. The productions listed in the preceding pages are, picture for picture, great big attractions, destined to reap a fortune for exhibitors in the new season. Well known players, big vehicles, directors who have made the industry's successes —that's the Quality Fifty-Two! Metro-Goldwyn delivered the goods this year. You can depend on far greater clean-up attractions in 1925-1926 from the fastest-moving outfit of them all!

Dog Day Thoughts

IN the series of full-page nation-wide newspaper ads, which began this week, Producers Distributing Corporation is showing the way to the industry in handling its problem of independence versus threatened monopoly.

"The Public This Year Will Have Something to Say About Its Motion Picture Entertainment," reads the striking head on this ad copy. The argument is then expanded this way:

"A great American Industry, the motion picture, is in the throes of a struggle for its existence. Gigantic forces are in opposition within its ranks, fighting for freedom of artistic expression and competitive exhibition against the aggressions of a small but powerful group that is driving and scheming towards monopoly.

"Great theater circuits affiliated with or operated by producing companies are exhibiting to the public films manufactured in groups of such numbers as to exclude from the screens of some of the finest theaters the efforts of competitors. Monopoly, which fifteen years ago held the industry in its destructive grip, is setting the trap. Monopoly failed then—it will fail again.

"Leaders in the ranks of producing forces have rebelled against the system. Courageously they have broken the shackles of incipient mediocrity, and are carrying direct to the American public a message of better pictures and more wholesome entertainment."

The advertisement then goes on to list the production strength of Producers Distributing for the coming year—a strength that is well known to the industry.

This is carrying the battle to the public—putting the verdict up to the judgment of public opinion. This is doing more than all the resolutions, speeches, and cries for help that the industry has heard in many months. It reveals once more a high quality of intelligent direction in the affairs of Producers Distributing.

An Exhibitor Talks It Over

THEN, from Fred S. Meyer, managing director of the Palace Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio, comes another method of carrying the message to the public.

Under the heading "Independence" Meyer presents an editorial in his magazine "The Palace." It is worthy of reprinting in full, and we may be able to do so in a later issue, but we have space here for only the highlight.

After stating clearly the independent policy of his theatre, and fairly outlining both sides in the argument of theater-owning distributors versus out-and-out independents, Editor Meyer says:

"As we said before, there's much room for argument on both sides of the controversy. Paramount does NOT produce all the good pictures on the market, but it DOES offer consistency to a greater degree than anyone else. And we're just selfish enough to admit that 'self-preservation is the first law of nature' with us as with everybody else. If we can buy the BEST at equitable terms, YOU WILL BE BENEFITED. If we are forced to take the 'bitter along with the sweet,' then there'll be plenty opportunities for one or all of the 'Big 3' to invade Hamilton. And if it comes to that we're more than willing to rest our case in the hands of you—and of those whom we've tried to serve in the past five years."

Getting Around to It

SAM ZIERLER writes us: "I trust that in your series of 'advance judgments' you will give your thought on the fine quality of product available this year to independent distributors who operate under the State Rights Plan . . . . particularly the truly wonderful productions coming from B. P. Schulberg and Dr. W. E. Shallenberger."

We wont forget, Sam. And we are pleased to anticipate being able to tackle the job this year with greater pleasure than at any time in our memory of the independent market.

But, while we are at it, we may add a few chiding words to the independents who are sitting supinely at their desks wondering why play dates don't overwhelm them after the Milwaukee Convention and forgetting that even Liberty Bonds had to be SOLD.

West Gets Big Representation in M.P.T.O.A. Power—Ex-Governor of Minn. Pushed for "High Calibred" Job—Trade Bureau Is Separate Unit; Gets $35,000 Cash for Bank

By Tom Waller

THE directorate of the M. P. T. O. A. at its recent two-day session in Manhattan put into motion things which some say, may tend to make some decided changes in the coastline of national exhibitor politics. One observation is that a power, hitherto unprecedented in its volume, is placed in the hands of Central and Western showmen. Their names occupy conspicuous space in the lists of executive committees appointed by the directorate according to a late statement purporting to be a summarization of the closed meetings in the Hotel Roosevelt. These names — their prominence and their placement in executive rank—would indicate best of all that the west is in solid so far as M. P. T. O. A. government from now on is concerned.

Exclusive of the statement from national headquarters, little is to be officially gleaned in New York about some of the big things and the details of some of the other things which it would seem occupied the gross attention of the directors during the two hottest days of the year.

That which does not appear in the statement, however, reaches Moving Picture World from another channel—Michigan. Out there, it would seem, they know more about what the directors did than we do here. From those advices the directors appointed H. M. Richey as business manager of the national organization. His salary is a matter to be determined by the newly appointed finance committee but, it is said, it will not exceed $17,500.

Ex-Governor Preuss of Minnesota is said to have been pushed by a large faction in the directorate for the position of general manager of the M. P. T. O. A. Its incumbent would be subservient to the directors.

Although the statement reveals only that "a tentative budget was adopted and carried," Moving Picture World learns that this budget was the pledging by states with their notes to meet dues totaling $75,000 at the rate of ten per cent cash payment each month. Of this sum $7,500 in actual money was tendered to the directors at their meeting. Of the total sum Michigan's organization is said to have given its note for $10,000.

Under the director's decision the newly created Bureau of Trade and Commerce will function from now on as a separate unit, its funds, management and development being within its own administration, with the national organization assuming a position over it similar to that of a godparent. It will be composed of three committees, each body having five members. The directors appointed the first committee for exhibitor representation, which includes: Nathan Yamins, W. A. Steffes, L. M. Sagal, A. Julian Brylawski and Sydney S. Cohen. The next committee, representing the producers, will be designated by the I. M. P. P. D. A. These two units, forming a Committee of Ten, will then select the last representation from public service organizations.

We are advised that $35,000 in cash is the initial deposit for the Bureau's bank account. The chances for it realizing its quota of $200,000, as set down at Milwaukee, are reported to be excellent. Of the first moneys Universal is said to have turned over $10,000 to the directors with duplications of that amount promised for each month until its reported pledge of $50,000 is reached. The other $25,000 cash is said to have been tendered the directorate by the I. M. P. P. D. A. with an understanding that another $25,000 will be forthcoming before the close of this month.

This distinct disassociation of the Bureau and the M. P. T. O. A. would make it appear to some that the Bureau will decide upon who will be field marshal. There are reports that the so-called purveyor of independence and his much discussed tentative army of deputies will never be realized. Right up to the directorate's meeting the big thing for their contemplation appealed to many as being the selection of a high calibred executive for this post. The aftermath of the board's meeting for some students of the situation is that propaganda through the mails, in the form of circular letters, posters, pamphlets and campaign sheets, would be as effective at a far greater saving of finance.

Joseph M. Seider was made chairman of a committee appointed by the directorate which will have full charge regarding the execution of the arbitration plan and the standard exhibition contract as submitted by Seider in his report at Milwaukee. The committee in addition to Seider includes: R. R. Biechele, Charles L. O'Reilly, E. M. Fay, M. E. Comerford, Al Steffes, H. M. Richey, A. Julian Brylawski, Harry Davis. It is reported that Sydney S. Cohen, chairman of the board of directors, was named as a part of this committee but that he withdrew in favor of Davis.

This committee headed by Seider is one of the most important accomplishments of the directorate's conference. It will get together with producers on the newly approved contract and will also wade into the situation brought out in Milwaukee as to the inability of some exhibitors to secure film.

The Burkan plan, with its franchise system, has also been allotted to the duties of Seider's committee. Excepting to make known the names of those on his committee Seider refused to be interviewed on anything which developed during the session of the M. P. T. O. A. rulers.

The report is particularly strong in New York, however, that Nathan Burkan will shortly come into a very important position in the M. P. T. O. A. This job will not be in any managerial capacity, which is contrary to the rumors current before the salons' get-together. It is said that this noted attorney, who has waged so many court battles and headed so many investigations for the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce, will, now that that organization is re-affiliated with the national body, be retained by the M. P. T. O. A. in a legal capacity. In this respect it would seem that he would best be assigned to the committee considering his own plan and at the same time lend its members advise from the angle of the courts in threading out the intricacies of the other matters with which they are burdened.

The directorate approved the designations of a sub-committee headed by President Woodhull and made vice-presidents of the following: W. C. McLaren, Jackson, Mich.; Joseph W. Walsh, Hartford, Conn.; Theodore Hays, Minneapolis, Minn.; C. C. Griffin, Oakland, Cal. These names were included in the organization statement.

The World also learns that the directors made George A. Aarons of Philadelphia secretary of the national organization.

The M. P. T. O. A. announcement makes known that the following were approved by its directorate to constitute the executive committee at large:

Dave Adams, Concord, N. H.; Dave Bershon, Santa Monica, Calif.; J. C. Brady, Toronto, Canada; H. M. Crandall, Washington, D. C.; Frank H. Durkee, Baltimore, Md.; D. A. Harris, Pittsburg, Pa.; David J. Hennessey, Newark, N. J.; Ernest Horstmann, Boston, Mass.; William James, Columbus, Ohio; Maurice Jencks, Topeka, Kansas; Frank Koch, Rochester, N. P. White, Livingston, Mont.

The executive committee: John Ackerman, Cincinnati, O.; H. Alexander, Toronto, Canada; R. V. Bassen, Minot, N. Dak.; A. J.

Official Exception

R. F. Woodhull, national president and Sydney S. Cohen, chairman of the Board of Directors, in behalf of the M. P. T. O. A. issued on June 10 a statement taking exception to a story appearing on that date in a Broadway publication "in connection with its inference that the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America are aligning themselves with the Hays organization is misleading." The story, the statement says, is headed: "Big Shake-Up in M. P. T. O. A."

The greater part of the official bulletin concerning the activities of the directorate in New York on June 3-4 is as follows:

On Wednesday, June 3rd, 1925, at 11 A. M. the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America Board of Directors convened at the Hotel Roosevelt, New York. Those present were National President R. F. Woodhull, Sydney S. Cohen, Chairman of the Board, National Treasurer L. M. Sagal, R. R. Biechele of Kansas; A. Julian Brylawski, Washington, D. C., M. E. Comerford, Scranton, Pa.; Fred Dolle, Louisville, K.; E. M. Fay, Providence, A. A. Kaplan, Minneapolis, Minn.; Jack Miller, Chicago, Ill.; J. C. Ritter, Detroit, Mich.; J. M. Seider, Newark, N. Elliott, Hudson, N. Y.; Charles Nathan, Peoria, Ill.; Fred C. Seegert, Milwaukee, Wis.; W. A. Steffes, Minneapolis, Minn.; J. H. Whitehurst, Baltimore, Md.; Nathan Yamins, Fall River, Mass.; M. J. O'Toole, Scranton, Pa.

The Chairman, Sydney S. Cohen, called the meeting to order and gave a general report of the activities of the organization and the development of the Board of Trade and Commerce since Milwaukee.

Commenting on the Board's program of activities during the Wednesday and Thursday session, Mr. Cohen stated that on Wednesday, in order to facilitate the work on hand, special sub-committees were appointed to consider the matters to be discussed at the two days' session, and to report to the general Board on Thursday their deliberations.

The Ways and Means sub-committees governed the question of dues and recommended that the same plan be adopted as carried out during 1924 and 1925, with this alteration—theatres in towns under 2,500 population be assessed $5.00 per annum, and theatres in towns under 5,000 population at $10, per annum.

The schedule of dues now in operation is as follows:

Theatres of 500 seats or under , $26 per annum.
Theatres of 500 to 1,000 seats, $52 per annum.
Theatres of 1,000 to 1,500 seats, $78 per annum.
Theatres of 1,500 to 2,000 seats, $104 per annum.
Theatres of 2,000 to 2,500 seats, $136 per annum.
Theatres over 2,500 seats, $156 per annum.
All theatres in towns under 2,500 population, $5 per annum.
All theatres in towns under 5,000 population, $10 per annum.

Recommendations for the engaging of the services of an organization manager were made and adopted.

A committee designated as the Committee on By Laws and Legislation was appointed to revise the present Constitution and By Laws. The Committee to report at a later meeting of the Board.

That the report and recommendation regarding Arbitration and the Standard Exhibition Contract submitted by Joseph M. Seider and approved at the Milwaukee convention, be carried out by the Board of Directors, and a committee was appointed following the decision of the Board to confer with producers on the approved standard contract, and also relative to the resolution adopted at the convention regarding the inability of theatre owners to secure film.

After due deliberation and in consideration of the fact that the negotiations for the putting into operation the mandate of the convention in relation to the allocation of product, unfair competition and unfair competitive methods of circuits and chains of theatres operated by producer theatre owner, this Committee further recommended that the committee elected as above, shall also be the committee for the carrying out of the resolution in relation thereto passed at Milwaukee.

In order to keep the Bureau of Trade and Commerce a clearly defined organization for the purposes so named, Trade and Commerce, it was decided to keep the funds, management and development of this Bureau as a a distinct unit; and not directly a part of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America Organization although under its guidance and patronage. A Committee consisting of five exhibitors, Nathan Yamins, W. A. Steffes, L. M. Sagal, A. Julian Brylawski and Sydney S. Cohen, was appointed—alternates Jake Wells and James Ritter. This Committee to have full and complete authority to work in conjunction with Universal's representatives, Film Booking Offices and the Independent Motion Picture Producers and Distributors Association and other producing companies under consideration.

The committee of ten to select an additional committee of five (not yet named), from public service units so that the Bureau of Trade and Commerce may function in direct contact with production, exhibition and patronage, as expressed by producer, distributor, exhibitor and the public.

The action of the National Treasurer, L. M. Sagal and Chairman of the Board, Sydney S. Cohen, in depositing the money advanced by Universal, F. B. O. and the I. M. P. P. D. Association, for the Bureau of Trade and Commerce, as a separate entity from the treasury of the organization, was endorsed by the Board, and this precedent will be established in relationship to Board of Trade and Commerce Finance.

A tentative budget was adopted and carried by the representatives of the various states present.

The National Convention at Los Angeles will take place the first week of June, 1926. A Committee has already been appointed and is at work on the proposed plans.

Woodhull to Address N. J. Conventionees on June 29

R. F. Woodhull, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, will attend the opening session of the sixth annual convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New Jersey, at the New Monterey Hotel, Asbury Park, N. J., June 29. It is expected that his keynote speech at Asbury Park will touch upon subjects of vital importance to New Jersey theatre owners, including Sunday opening.

Joseph M. Seider, president of the New Jersey State organization, this week announced the designation of the committee on attendance for the convention as follows: Sidney E. Samuelson, Sussex County, Chairman; Mortimer Lewis, Atlantic County; Morris Kitinsky, Bergen; J. Fox, Burlington; Lewellyn Pizor, Camden; A. D. Austin, Cape May; Norman Newis, Cumberland; Eugene Steinhardt, Essex; Benjamin Schindler, Gloucester; Leon Rosenblatt, Hudson; L. Rosen, Hunterdon; Pierson Hume, Mercer; Sherman Dennis, Monmouth; Al Roth, Morris; Leo Juskowitz, Middlesex; I. M. Hirschblond, Ocean; A. W. Hill, Salem; L. Gerard, Sommerset; Alexander Okin, Union; George Kirby, Warren; Louis Gold, Passaic. The ladies committee on Entertainment of Ladies includes: Mrs. R. F. Woodhull, Mrs. Charles Hildinger, Mrs. Sidney Samuelson, Mrs. Henry P. Nelson, Mrs. William Keegan, Mrs. Benjamin Schindler and Mrs. I. M. Hirschblond.

One of the outstanding features of the convention will be the cooperation given to the New Jersey showmen by one of the leading exponents of the art of staging presentations and prologues. This will take the form of a campaign which will have its inception at the convention and will have for its clogan: "Bringing Broadway to Main Street." President Seider has arranged with the expert to have a number of interesting events shown to the theatre owners and demonstrated for their benefit.

New York Zone Breaks from State Unit, Albany Correspondent Learns

Albany and Buffalo Zones Will Uphold Organization—Reason for Secession Unknown; Say N. Y. Ignored Pledges and Letters

By C. L. Grant

WITHOUT publicly advertising the fact, motion picture exhibitors in the New York zone are no longer functioning with the Albany and the Buffalo zones of the New York State M. P. T. O. The metropolitan zone has apparently seen fit to divorce itself from the others. During the past months, it has paid absolutely no attention to letters or telegrams from the other two zones. This fact has just become known and the outcome is uncertain.

Just what is behind this apparent lack of harmony on the part of the three zones in New York State, is unknown. At the convention in Buffalo a year ago, the exhibitors decided to divide New York State into three zones, as a means of bettering conditions for the exhibitor and in enabling matter to be handled more expeditiously than upon a statewide basis.

It was decided at the Buffalo convention that each of these zones was to function independently of the other for the welfare of the theatre owner in its own territory, but that each zone was to act in unison upon matters of importance pertaining to the state at large. So far, so good.

At this convention, it was decided that the sum of $14,000 was to be contributed into a treasury and that New York City's share was to be $8,000, while the exhibitors in the Buffalo Zone would be called upon to contribute $4,000, and that those in the Albany Zone were to give $2,000.

It was estimated at that time that approximately one-half of the $14,000 would be necessary to meet the cost of statewide work, and that the remaining one-half was to remain in the treasury to establish a fund which would grow and which might be available to meet some future emergency.

It is said that exhibitors in various parts of the state expressed dissatisfaction at the manner employed in the New York City headquarters and the expenditure of money, which ran, it is alleged, as high as $15,000 a year.

Just what has caused New York City to secede from the other zones can only be surmised. When the subject of a complete reorganization was broached at the Buffalo convention, exhibitors in New York City and vicinity appeared favorable to the idea and are said to have pledged their support. In a discussion of ways and means to bring about a reduction of operating expenses, it was decided to abolish the office of secretary which was costing a matter of $5,200 a year, in addition to traveling expenses.

It was decided to remove the headquarters from New York City to Albany in order that they might be closer to the seat of pending legislation, the idea also being advanced that the headquarters in Albany could be handled at less cost than if maintained in New York City. Headquarters were moved to Albany, with the idea of installing the offices in the Mark Strand building.

T.O.C.C. Querying on Summer Close

The Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce at its meeting this week approved the sending of a questionnaire to its members, determining whether it be their sentiment to close their theatres during the summer months, July and August. If such were effected it would entail the darkening of about 600 theatres in Greater New York.

The list of questions is being drafted by Secretary Moross. Those filled out and returned will be referred to the board of directors. It is said that the number received will determine the board's action in this respect.

Reported Break Laid to Recent T.O.C.C.-M.P.T.O.A. Alignment

By Tom Waller

WHEN the report from Albany, that the New York Zone seems to have broken away from the state organization, was brought to the attention of Charles O'Reilly, the worthy chairman of the T. O. C. C. lapsed into a fit of oratory which wound up by meaning something and nothing. Thus the report from Albany stands as it is with the head of the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce, which organization is the fiscal agent for the New York Zone, finally accepting the news and answering the question "Yes or no?" with: "You may say for publication that I have no comment to make."

Despite the fact that William Dillon was elected to succeed Walter Hays as president of the M. P. T. O. of New York State, that a secretary was elected and committees appointed, O'Reilly emphatically yelled in his Times Square suite this week that the meeting at Syracuse was purely a regional affair He seemed to abhor, as something ungrammatical, the writer's reference to the gathering at Syracuse on June 2 as a "convention."

The writer had to indulge in a half dozen telephone calls and several visits to the T. O. C. C. wigwam before he bumped into the T. O. C. C. chief. "Too busy to give you even three minutes," was his greeting as he swept into his private office.

Before going to lunch the writer apprehended Sam Moross, the secretary. Moross, also, was busy but not quite as elusive as his senior. He also maintained the there had been no convention, that the Syracuse gathering was only a regional meeting but—that no invitation had been extended the New York Zone. Therein seems to smoulder the fire first detected by the World's Albany man.

Asked if the Manhattan area had paid its dues into the State organization, Moross rather haughtily replied:

"That is a personal matter and not one to be discussed with the press."

The matter of dues is also touched upon in the Albany story regarding the reported break. Reminded that a State president had been elected at a convention at which there were only two zones represented, Moross refused to attempt to offer any further explanation except that the New York zone had taken no action to officially divorce itself from the State body and that Charles O'Reilly was better versed in the intricacies of affairs of state than himself.

Upon finishing lunch the writer returned to the wigwam just in time to see O'Reilly and several of his followers under full steam for the exit. It was then one o'clock and O'Reilly had been in his sanctum but an hour.

This time the wigwam chief had a chance to experience all the thrills of a prominent foreigner arriving in this country for the first time and being besieged by reporters at the pier. He was locked up in the elevator with his friends and this reporter for a drop of nine floors.

O'Reilly, within the tiny and stuffy craft, wrung his hands and appealed to his friends that he was not a censorer of news and that national organization matters were taking up all of his time. By the time the ground floor was reached he had covered a lot of verbal ground, mostly irrelevant to the subject except to pay the World's Albany man the compliment of being a "detective."

From what he said in the downward flight

New York Zone Breaks

ing the importance of having the state headquarters in their midst, shook off the lethargy of several years past and the Albany Zone was formed at a meeting at the Hotel Ten Eyck, at which contributions were voluntarily given to the amount of approximately $1,500.

Syracuse later became a part of the Buffalo Zone, with nearly 100 per cent. of the exhibitors of that city joining. Rochester showed like enthusiasm and as a result the Albany and the Buffalo Zones are today functioning but without any assistance or co-operation from New York City.

To all intents and purposes, the New York City section has simply taken their hats and departed, walking out without even so much as a goodbye. It is claimed that the New York City exhibitors have discredited their obligations and have signally failed to make good their financial pledges. It is further claimed that not a single communication on state matters sent from the other two zones has been even so much as acknowledged.

Just what the outcome will be no one seems to know. Both Albany and Buffalo are strong financially and declare that even if turned down by New York City, they will be able to go it alone, although admitting in the same breath that a far greater work could be done with a complete unification of New York State from the standpoint of the exhibitor.

Reported Break Laid

—and the elevator was a local—Mr. O'Reilly's dictum for tradepapers, newspapers and magazines is that they should not publish stories unless they are authenticated by the signature or the signatures of the subject or the subjects included therein.

The usual crowd was surging about Times Square when O'Reilly, his friends and the reporter, reached the fresh air. Things were still the same as far as the Albany report went. "Yes or no?" pursued his weary interrogator.

"Mr. Dillon is a good man. He should have been elected three or four years ago," O'Reilly finally volunteered.

Other well known figures in New York exhibitor circles, however, were not startled by the news from Albany. One of them, particularly conversant with the situation, was inclined to lay the break to the recent alignment of the T. O. C. C. with the M. P. T. O. A., in view of the fact that up until that time the entire State had remained outside the fold of the national organization.

JAPAN CENSORSHIP FEES

The Department of Commerce has received a cable from Acting Commercial Attache Rhea at Tokyo, Japan, stating that the National Centralized Motion Picture Film Censorship regulations effective July 1 provide censorship fees of five sen (about 2½c) for each three meters of original films and two sen on duplicate films.

The duty on films, whether new or previously exposed, into Iraq (Mesopotamia) has been changed from 20 per cent ad valorem to 5 rupees per kilogram. One kilo represents on an average 120 meters of film and the rupee in Mesopotamia is now quoted at about 3½ rupees to a dollar in American currency.

State Rights Sales

Progress Pictures Company of St. Louis this week secured the Rayart serials, "Secret Service Sanders" and "Battling Brewster," for the St. Louis territory while Security Pictures Company of Chicago, secured the same pictures for Northern Illinois and Indiana. First Graphic Exchanges of Buffalo secured the six Rayart Superior Melodramas for the Upper New York Territory, while Liberty Film Corporation of Philadelphia purchased the Kenneth Harlan release "For Another Woman" for Eastern Pennsylvania, South New Jersey and Delaware.

Under a contract recently closed between Richmount Pictures, foreign distributors for Rayart Pictures, and Juan Kuntzler, of Sociedad General Cinematografica of Buenos Aires, the latter concern secures the entire Rayart output, with the exception of serials, for the 1925-26 season. Richmount have also closed with Australian Films, for the entire new Rayart output for Australia and New Zealand.

Celebrated Players Film Corporation of Chicago has acquired the distribution right to thirteen of the Chadwick Picture Corporation's productions for next season. Celebrated Players, whose territory includes Northern Illinois and Indiana, distributed the "Chadwick Nine," the 1924-25 product of this producer.

M. H. Hoffman of the Tiffany-Truart Productions announced on his return from Cleveland that he has closed the franchise for the Tiffany Big Twelve based on the books and stories of famous authors and the Truart Blue Ribbon, Novelty and Cinemelodrama series, with Harry Charnas, president of the Standard Film Service of Cleveland. The territory included in the deal with the Standard Film Service includes Ohio, Kentucky, Michigan, Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia. The Tiffany and Truart products will be handled through the exchanges of the Standard Film Service located in Cincinnati, Cleveland, Pittsburgh and Detroit.

One of the most important franchise deals closed this year was consummated between J. G. Bachman, general manager of distribution for B. P. Schulberg Productions, and Ben Amsterdam, representing the Trio Productions of Washington, D. C. This deal calls for the distribution by Trio of thirty Schulberg pictures constituting the producers' output of two seasons.

Louis Weiss, managing director of Weiss Brothers' Artclass Pictures Corporation, announces that he has sold his three series of western pictures to the Enterprise Distributing Corporation of Atlanta, Ga., for the territory included in Georgia, North and South Carolina, Alabama, Florida, Louisiana and Mississippi. This deal concerned eight Rough Riding Romances featuring Buddy Roosevelt, of which "Reckless Courage" and "The Galloping Jinx" are ready for release; eight Thunderbolt Thrillers featuring Buffalo Bill, Jr., with "Quicker'n Lightnin'" ready for release and the "Desert Demon" now in work; and eight Action Stunt-Thrillers featuring the new Western star, Wally Wales, of which "Tearin' Loose" is ready and "The Hurricane Rider" ready for production.

Chadwick has completed arrangements for the distribution of thirteen of its coming pictures through the Standard Film Service Co., Inc., of Cleveland. Standard has contracted for the following territories: Ohio, Kentucky, Michigan, West Virginia and Western Pennsylvania.

FILM IN SEMINARY

The sisters of St. Mary's Seminary at Hooksett, N. H., witnessed a motion picture show for the first time when they attended the presentation of "Peter Pan" at the school, Saturday, May 30. Exhibitors of Manchester were responsible for the showing, supplying the machine, screen and films.

WILLIAM R. FERGUSON

W. R. Ferguson Heads Metro-Goldwyn Exploitation

Major Edward Bowes of Metro-Goldwyn, announces that William R. Ferguson has become exploitation manager of the corporation, following the resignation of Eddie Bonns from this post.

Howard Dietz, director of advertising and publicity, will supervise the exploitation department.

Mr. Ferguson has been prominently associated with Goldwyn and Metro-Goldwyn for the past six years, and has at various times covered every territory in the country as director of extensive exploitation campaigns, waged in key centers in connection with important pre-view showings.

Previous to joining the Metro-Goldwyn forces, Mr. Ferguson discharged managerial duties with marked success in various New England theatres, among them the Scollay Square Olympia, the Gorden's Washington Street Olympia, all in Boston, the Olympia at Lynn, Mass., and the Olympia at Chelsea, also in Massachusetts.

Before entering his business career in the theatre, Mr. Ferguson was a newspaper man, having been advertising and circulation manager for the Gloucester Daily Times, and for the Lynn (Mass.) News. He was previously associated with the sales promotion department of the Boston Herald Traveler.

WARNS AGAINST COPYRIGHTED MUSIC

In the near future a bulletin, excerpts of which follow, answering an avalanche of questions which have poured into the M. P. T. O. Kansas-Missouri in the last three months, will be distributed to Kansas exhibitors by the association:

"We have been informed time and again that it is almost impossible to operate a theatre without using some copyrighted music. The playing of one copyrighted piece constitutes an infringement which may cost an exhibitor a great many times more than his license, the attorney fees and court costs of a single case amounting to more than $250. It may be possible to secure a 20 per cent rebate for all members of this association. However, we cannot assure non-members of the association that they will receive a rebate this year at this late date. We can say only that we will do our utmost to obtain it.

FREDERICK WYANNE-JONES

"Siegfried" for Shubert Theatres; Opens at N. Y. Century August 23

"SIEGFRIED," the sonorous German motion picture version of the Richard Wagner opera, with the Wagner music score throughout, will be shown at the Century Theatre, New York City, beginning an indefinite run on August 23.

This arrangement is made possible as a result of the decision reached by Messrs. Lee and J. J. Shubert, after seeing the Colossal Fritz Lang-Ufa production, to road show it in not less than twenty-nine American cities. "Siegfried" will be given an ornate presentation, with a prologue.

It is also stated that this arrangement brings the Shuberts into the motion picture industry in a definite and permanent way.

The announcement regarding the releasing arrangements for "Siegfried" was made by Frederick Wynne-Jones, managing director of Ufa-Usa, representing the German company in the United States, at a luncheon at the Hotel Astor on June 8, the day prior to the sailing of Mr. Wynne-Jones for Berlin, where, with Mr. Lee Shubert, and the German directors of Ufa, final touches will be given the Ufa-Shubert releasing agreement.

Speaking to representatives of the motion picture trade press, Mr. Wynne-Jones reviewed the outstanding achievements of Ufa since the activities of the Germans following the armistice were brought to the attention of American audiences. The recital was not at all embellished, Mr. Wynne-Jones merely setting forth the facts. In one instance he admitted that the Germans appreciate their short-comings in matters relating to costuming, and, again, the speaker said the need for a better scenario department is keenly felt in the Berlin studios and this will be attended to.

Regarding the efforts of American producers to effect an alliance on the exchange basis, that is: interchanging stars, directors, etc., Mr. Wynne-Jones said he doubted the wisdom of such a plan. He gave it as his opinion that, since the Germans have set out to do serious work in a serious way, any outside influence might tend to disturb this plan. The speaker expressed his thanks to the motion picture trade press, to the editors and special writers for their uniform kindness in their treatment of Ufa pictures as shown in the United States. He also announced "Manon Lescaut," "Metropolis" and "Faust" as coming Ufa productions.

A statement issued from the New York offices of Ufa, in the Loew State Theatre Building, on June 9, sets forth the following:

"Leo and J. J. Shubert will actively enter motion picture production and distribution through an arrangement with the Ufa organization of Berlin, according to Frederick Wynne-Jones, managing-director of Ufa-Usa, American representative of the German company. By this agreement 'Siegfried,' with Wagner's music synchronized to the film, will be released on August 23rd, at the Century Theatre and following, in 29 Shubert theatres in as many cities.

"A number of future special productions will be made from plays produced or controlled by the Shuberts and these super-features will be road-showed through the Shubert circuit. Wynne-Jones sails on the Aquitania this evening (Tuesday) and will meet Lee Shubert in Berlin, where details of the agreement will be settled. It is to be a mutual agreement, with the theatrical company holding up its share of the expense and sharing in the profits.

"When in Berlin Wynne-Jones will also confer with Erich Posmer, head of Ufa on two proposals for American release of the Ufa product by large distributing organizations here, with reciprocal showing in the Ufa circuit of theatres, throughout Central Europe of the American product.

"By aligning with Ufa the Shuberts will be able to begin immediate production of super-specials, the Ufa studies at Neubabelsberg and Tempelhof, being now in operation. American as well as German film and legitimate stage stars will be used in these productions, as well as directors from both countries."

Expansion of Pathe Business Creates New Sales Division

EXPANSION to meet increasing business of Pathe Exchange, Inc., has brought about the creation of a new sales division—the Mid West, the appointment of a new district manager to preside over it, the transfer of three branch managers and the appointment of a fourth branch manager. These changes in operation and personnel were announced this week by General Sales Manager J. E. Storey.

The new district has been created by dividing the former Central district into two divisions, the Central and the new Mid-West. Pathe now has the following five Sales Divisions: the Eastern District, comprising the New York, Newark, Boston, New Haven, Albany and Philadelphia branches; the Mid-West District, comprising the Chicago, Double "I," Milwaukee, Minneapolis, Omaha, Des Moines and Detroit branches; the Central District, comprising the Indianapolis, Pittsburg, Buffalo, Cleveland, Cincinnati and St. Louis branches; the Southern District, comprising Kansas City, Oklahoma City, Memphis, Charlotte, Atlanta, Dallas, New Orleans and Washington branches; and the Western District, comprising the Los Angeles, San Francisco, Portland, Butte, Salt Lake City, Denver, and Seattle branches.

Fred C. Aiken has been promoted from the managership of the Chicago branch to the position of Mid-West district manager. He will be replaced at Chicago by J. S. Gillick, who has been the manager of the Double "I" branch. Succeeding Mr. Gillick will be H. D. Graham, former manager at St. Louis; and T. G. Meyers, who has been Omaha manager, will take charge of the St. Louis branch. The newly appointed branch manager, F. W. Gebhardt, formerly special representative of "Chronicles of America" Omaha.

Educational Holds Successful Sales Convention

Friday, June 12, concluded the fourth annual sales convention of Educational Film Exchanges, Inc. The convention was called to order Wednesday, June 10, at 10:30 A. M. at the Pennsylvania Hotel by Mr. E. W. Hammons president of the organization, who expressed his appreciation of the splendid work done by the field men during the past year. Mr. Hammons then announced the line-up of product for the coming year.

This was followed by a resume of the past year's business by Mr. Kirkpatrick, Assistant General Manager, then Mr. D. J. Chatkin, Acting Sales Manager of Educational led the discussion on sales methods and problems.

The morning of the second day of the convention was given over to the producers. Captain George McL. Baynes, president of the Kinograms Publishing Corporation, Charles Christie, business manager of the Christie Company, and Lupino Lane, newly signed to make a series of "Lupino Lane Comedies" addressed the visiting managers. The afternoon session opened with an address by Gordon S. White, Director of Advertising and Publicity for Educational who outlined the advertising plans of the organization for the coming year and propounded a plan whereby the managers could assist in the "Greater Movie Season" campaign."

CHANGES IN DISTRIBUTION DEPARTMENT

George W. Weeks, Paramount distribution manager, announced several changes in personnel.

Phil Reisman, formerly general manager of Paramount Canadian Exchanges, has been appointed divisional sales manager at the Paramount home office, succeeding Harry Ballance, who requested a transfer to one of the southern territories as district manager.

Morris Milligan, Paramount district manager of Cincinnati, Louisville and Indianapolis, has been advanced to the post vacated by Mr. Reisman. He will make Toronto headquarters. Charles Reagan, Paramount Indianapolis branch manager, has been appointed to Mr. Milligan's former office and F. E. Wagoner, Indianapolis salesman, will succeed Mr. Reagan.

These changes went into effect Monday, June 8.

Albert Warner Goes to Europe to Look Into Foreign Situation

FURTHER invasion of Europe is contemplated by Warner Brothers in building up a foreign exchange system to cover all countries where motion pictures are shown in addition to the exchanges they recently took over with the purchase of Vitagraph. These exchanges consist of 10 in England, 7 in France, 1 in Belgium, 1 in Switzerland and 1 in Africa, the company announces.

With the increase in product this new season and with their first grip on the foreign exchange situation through their new offices, according to Albert Warner, his firm intends to branch out until they will be represented in every country in Europe and the Far East. This naturally follows up the increase in the Warner exchanges in the United States in Canada, which with the 8 new exchanges recently announced, will number 37.

Albert Warner will sail for Europe for a survey of theatrical properties in foreign cities, and from what he reports after a four months trip through England and Continental cities, Warner Bros. will decide whether to enter the foreign theatre field at the same time they are getting underway their first-run theatres in this country.

Warner sails on the Leviathan Saturday, June 13 and will be accompanied by Mrs. Warner. Gus Schlesinger, manager of foreign distribution for the Warners, who returned to the United States recently after seven months abroad with glowing accounts of Warner Bros. outlook for the next season in foreign countries, will go to Europe and join Warner as soon as he is able to leave the hospital where he has been confined for several weeks with a severe illness.

Concerning the theatre end of his journey, Mr. Warner did not care to go into deals other than to say that it was being given serious consideration, and much would depend upon how he found conditions abroad.

"It never has been our habit," he added, "to say we are absolutely going to do a thing until we are sure. However, upon my return, I rather imagine I will have something to say regarding the foreign theatre situation which will be of considerable interest to Warner Bros. at least."

ALBERT WARNER

BONNS RESIGNS FROM METRO

Eddie Bonns, who has been director of exploitation for Metro-Goldwyn since the merger and before that for the Goldwyn company, has resigned so that he may greatly enlarge his activities and include industrial exploitation in his work.

Bonns, who at the present time is writing a book on exploitation, also feels that he needs more time for his work. He will not make any connection with any other company for the present, devoting his energies to the completion of the book. When this is completed and ready for publication he will announce his new affiliations.

LAUD MOSS' COLONY

To build a theatre and satisfy the wants of all, is a considerable exploit for any man. The building of the Colony by B. S. Moss was not so much a matter of dreaming, but rather of patient investigation, mingled with a considerable admixture of downright romance. Mr. Moss now says that four words overheard in the auditorium pleased him more than anything that has been said or written of the Colony. A lady and a gentleman, having looked over the foyer and entered the auditorium, stopped a moment, when the lady said to her escort: "Well,—isn't this charming?"

RESIGNS FROM CENSORSHIP BODY

Ansel W. Brown, of Pulaski, who has been connected with the New York State Motion Picture Commission almost from the time of its organization in 1921, and who has been in charge of the office located in the State Capitol at Albany, has resigned and has been succeeded by Earl Leonard, a well known Democrat of Saratoga Springs. The position pays $3,500 a year. Mr. Brown plans to return to his home and engage in the real estate business.

A. M. P. A. MOVES

The A. M. P. A. decided at its most recent meeting to change its place of festive occasions from the Cafe Boulevard to the White Horse Tavern. Jim Loughborough, beloved press agent, was the guest of honor, having decided to return to bright Broadway from western wildernesses.

Uruguay Uses Triple Features; Shows 98% American Films

NEARLY 98 per cent of the motion pictures shown in Uruguay are of American origin and in spite of repeated efforts to introduce pictures from other nations foreign productions offer little competition, says Consul O. Gaylord Marsh, of Montevideo, in a report to the U. S. Department of Commerce.

Mr. Marsh, in a resume of the situation, states there are at least six distributing agencies in Montevideo, with 62 theatres having an average capacity of 350, and there are about 38 important theatres in the interior of the republic. Theatres usually give their first performance at 4:30 (3:00 on Sunday and holidays) with a second at 9:00 p. m. Three features usually constitute a performance but tickets may be purchased for a single film, two films or the whole show, prices being graded accordingly. Programs change nearly every day on account of the neighborhood character of most of the theatres.

Luxurious society dramas and farce comedies are the best drawing cards, says Mr. Marsh. These are censored by a commission which rules out those of immoral character and forbids the admission of children to films having scenes of questionable tendency.

La Sociedad Cinematografice de Montevideo, announces Mr. Marsh, is an organization of many theatre owners in Montevideo for the purpose of regulating the prices of admission and the manner of exhibiting films. A prominent distributor supplies most of the members with daily programs at a fixed charge, which generally includes 22 pictures a month. The smaller agencies follow this same method in supplying their trade, which consists principally of secondary "fill in" pictures.

PARAMOUNT OPENS NEW OFFICES

The formal opening of Paramount exchanges in Buenos Aires, Argentina, and Santiago, Chile, was announced this week by E. E. Shauer, general manager of the foreign department of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. The first releases of Paramount pictures through this new organization, which will be known as Paramount Films, S. A., are scheduled for June 1st, in Argentina, Uruguay, Paraguay, Chile, Peru and Bolivia, the territory under the jurisdiction of the Buenos Aires office.

JACQUELINE LOGAN WEDS

Jacqueline Logan, the charming star of the C. Gardner Sullivan F. B. O. Gold Bond production, "If Marriage Fails—?" playing at B. S. Moss' Colony Theatre, New York, was married June 4 to Ralph James Gillespie, former real estate man.

The wedding took place at the bride's home in Hollywood, with only a few intimate friends at the ceremony.

HAT PIN STIRS CINCINNATI

"A Yell That Shook Theatre Is Echoed in Police Court" is the head given a two-column boxed story in a recent issue of the Cincinnati Times-Star, one of the city's leading dailies. It referred to an audience in the Alhambra Theatre, one of Cincinnati's large downtown theatres, being thrown into a near-panic when a woman in the audience stuck a man with a pin and accused him of molesting her. The man ran from the theatre but was captured by a passing patrolman. He was later released.

GIVE LUNCHEON TO BALLANCE

On the eve of his departure for his new post as district manager of Atlanta, Ga., Harry Ballance, formerly Eastern divisional sales manager of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, was guest of honor at a luncheon given at the New York Athletic Club by S. R. Kent and his cabinet, composed of the department heads of the Paramount distribution department.

Those present included Mr. Kent; George W. Weeks, general manager of the distribution department; John D. Clark, western divisional sales manager; A. M. Botsford, Charles E. McCarthy, Mel A. Shauer, Claud Saunders, George Spidell, G. B. J. Frawley, and John Hamell, New York district manager; Milton Kusell, New Jersey manager; J. J. Unger, New York branch manager, and A. O. Dillenbeck, representing Hauff-Metzger Advertising Agency.

NEW HOUSE FOR SYRACUSE

Purchase of three pieces of real estate in the 600 block of South Salina street by Thomas Hogan, attorney and realty operator, as the site of a new Syracuse theatre, became known the other day. The deal is reported to involve a sum totaling $300,000. According to the report, Hogan has been approached by a theatrical firm with a long-term lease for a theatre.

Coming and Going

Sol Lesser has returned to Manhattan from the West.

Most of the national directors who were in New York last week attending the conference at the Hotel Roosevelt have returned to their homes.

Jack Lloyd of the Griffith organization is in Europe.

Joseph Aller of the Rothacker-Allen laboratory sailed on the Aquitania this week for Europe.

Hal Roach left New York earlier in the week for the Coast.

Sam E. Morris, general manager of distribution for Warner Brothers, is on a visit to Chicago and the Middle West in connection with the opening of the new Warner Brothers exchange in Milwaukee.

Hal Wallis, Warner Brothers studio publicity representative on the West Coast, is in town for a couple of weeks.

J. G. Bachmann returned this week from a fortnight's trip to the Schulberg Exchanges in the middle West.

S. S. Krellberg, Sales Manager of Chadwick Pictures Corporation left New York last week on a tour of this company's exchanges.

George Marion, Hollywood title writer, is preparing to leave for New York next week.

Burton George arrived in New York last week for a busy visit.

Fred Kennedy Myton, West Coast Scenario chief at the F. B. O. Studios, is going to New York to confer with John Brownell, Eastern Scenario Editor, and assist in the selection of stories for next year's program.

Theatre Activities in Detroit, Mich.

James N. Robertson, head of the Robertson Theatrical Enterprises, Detroit, announces plans for three new theatres to be completed within the next year. One will be on the East Side of Detroit and the other on the West Side. Present Robertson houses average about 2,500 in seating capacity.

W. S. Butterfield, who recently purchased Grand Rapids' only road show theatre, the Powers, will turn it into a motion picture theatre, according to rumors. This is the first invasion of Grand Rapids by the Butterfield hosts and now gives Butterfield a hold in every big city in the state outside of Detroit.

Fred De Lodder has purchased the Grosse Pointe Park Theatre, giving him a string of four big neighborhood houses on the East Side. Jacob Sullivan, general manager for De Lodder will also supervise and book the new house.

REBUILDING VT. OPERA HOUSE

A committee of residents of Bellows Falls, Vt., has been appointed to prepare plans for the reconstruction of the Opera House, which was razed by fire last month.

HARRY D. BUCKLEY

For the past two years acting general manager of the Douglas Fairbanks Pictures Corporation, who was recently elected a member of the Board of Directors of the United Artists Corporation

Rowland and Clark Stage Big Contest

Exceptionally successful was the contest sponsored by the Rowland and Clark Theatres, Pittsburgh, which has just ended, in which the winning candidates are to enjoy a week's vacation at Atlantic City, each successful candidate being privileged to select her mother or a friend to accompany her.

Each of the eleven R. & C. Theatres was a unit in the contest and each theatre will have a representative, or rather two representatives in the trip to the great American seashore resort. They will leave the city on July 8th, and Miss Kathryn Kean, Editress of the Film Forecast, will have charge of the party.

An idea of the magnitude of the affair can be gleaned from the fact that some of the candidates had as high as 240,000 votes, and some of the theatres had as high as fifty candidates working for the prize. Judicious handling of the candidates resulted in a tremendous interest, especially toward the close of the contest. Milton D. Crandall, publicity director for the Rowland and Clark Theatres, planned the entire contest.

INTERNATIONAL GIVES LUNCHEON

Officials of International Newsreel entertained at luncheon, at the Hotel Hamilton, in Washington, on Wednesday afternoon, June 3, all those who had participated in making the remarkable motion pictures of laying a smoke screen around the dirigible "Los Angeles," which are shown in the current issue of International Newsreel.

The honor guests of the occasion were Lieut. Stanley E. Ridderhoff, Lieut. Frank G. Cowie and Lieut. H. D. Palmer, the pilots of the three bombers. Also present were U. K. Whipple, Norman Alley, Herman Stockhoff, J. C. Brown, Wm. Hearfield, Frank McKechnie, Edward Morrison, Harry Van Tine and Joseph Morrison, International Newsreel cameramen; Lieut. T. T. Patterson, of the Bureau of Aeronautics; Charles Parmer, feature writer of the Washington Herald and Universal Service; Jim Ring, of the Washington Times; Frank Walker, of International News Service, and officials of International Newsreel.

Connecticut Realizes $250,000 Per Year on New Film Tax

Exhibitors and film distributors of Connecticut were given a severe jolt by the General Assembly, when both the House and Senate, just before adjourning, passed a bill imposing a tax and censorship on films exhibited in the Nutmeg State. The tax provision levies $10 on the first 1,000 feet of film and 50 cents for each additional 100 feet on each screen subject. This tax is imposed upon the distributors and, according to sponsors of the new law, will bring a revenue of approximately $250,000 each year to the state. It likewise will increase, it is estimated, the cost to exhibitors of approximately 18 cents for each subject shown.

The censorship provision of the law authorizes the state tax commission to revoke the registration of any film, "which the commissioner may find to be immoral or of a character to offend the social or religious sensibilities of any element of society." The commissioner also may delete any part of a picture, which may excite racial, religious or moral prejudices. News reels of current events alone are excepted.

The law further authorizes that an agent of the commission shall be appointed with headquarters in New Haven for the purpose of administering the act. The salary for this agent has been fixed at $4,500 a year.

Small House Going Says Chicago Writer

Harry M. Beardsley in the Daily News, Chicago, says that the small neighborhood theatre is fast disappearing, as the event of the chain theatre with its chain store methods has secured the upper hand over the small independent theatre owner. The advent of a new movie deluxe theatre in the neighborhood business districts has been known to increase store rentals as much as 300 per cent in certain districts.

Despite the great building activity of the last few years in this city, he says the number of theatres have decreased. He cites Jack Miller's figures from the Chicago Exhibitors' Association that in 1921 the city had 385 theatres showing moving pictures or combinations and on January 1, this year, there was only 308 exclusive movie houses and 26 combination houses.

The movie circuits operating the chain of both Loop and the outlying houses secure the pick of the films for first and second runs, while the independent exhibitors are forced to wait for a third or fourth showing. While the night crowds which are attracted to the big movie houses do not buy when they pass the brightly lighted store windows, they remember the displays and this brings many new customers to the wideawake merchant who is established close by the big theatres.

Aids for Greater Movie Season Give Impetus to National Drive

Plans Now Under Way Will Make Event Not Only Summer Business Builder But Future Stimulant as Well

By WILL H. HAYS
President, Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc.

GREATER MOVIE SEASON has been tried. It has proved that it is profitable to all exhibitors who participate in it. In the Northwest in the South, in California, large and small exhibitors, having seen direct and lasting good result, have also predicted still greater possibilities in the making of the season a national affair with a national service bureau to handle details.

Exhibitors have requested me to establish that. Last year, Mr. H. M. Richey, general manager of the motion Picture Theatre Owners of Michigan, Inc., deferred a Greater Movie Season campaign until 1925 in order to have behind his effort the force of a national drive. In 1922 when I attended the opening of the "Northwest Go to Movie Week" in Minneapolis, Mr. W. A. Steffes, chairman of the Allied States Organization, pointed out how much could be achieved by complete cooperation. In Philadelphia and New Orleans, I am informed, similar movements wereindividually successful.

In San Francisco for three years, in Los Angeles and smaller California towns last year Greater Movie Season was a great stimulant and the men back of the campaigns have continually urged a National Movement.

Where exhibitors have united and worked in harmony, results never have failed to exceed expectations.

Greater Movie Season answers what many theatres have asked for: one undivided effort to lift summer business and build permanently throughout the fall.

Bakersfield, Calif. concentrated upon Greater Movie Season last year and theatres there broke all house records, according to the statement of Harry C. Arthur Jr., then general manager of West Coast Theatres, Inc. In other towns located in the same valley as Bakersfield where no effort was made, business remai.ed poor.

What is true of Bakersfield may be true elsewhere.

Greater Movie Season presents no advantages that are exclusive to large theatre circuits, whose annual gross can pretty well be reckoned in advance and expenditures arranged to fit that figure. I have in mind the smaller exhibitor, working from month to month, who usually can hope only that July and August will be no worse than last year. Here we believe is a means that will make them better.

He can beat the summer depression by cooperating with his fellow exhibitors who face the same problem: by organizing a committee and appointing one general manager and allocating to each member some specific share of the local campaign for which we have laid the general foundation.

This national service bureau has no huge appropriation to spend. We have provided, however, the necessary funds for establishing a staff competent to secure, first, the active co-operation of public bodies with millions of members who naturally include the share of those who attend motion pictures only when specially urged; to effect commercial tie-ups by which national advertising and window displays throughout the United States will carry the "Go-to-Movies" theme; to provide advertising and publicity for exhibitors' own use; to syndicate and publish through newspapers and magazines material that will help to build respect and added patronage for motion pictures; to furnish exploitation service by mail, and in person when possible, to exhibitor committees; and to prepare for theatres, posters and accessories that will be s ld at cost.

The campaign has aspects wider than to increase patronage during a certain definite period. August has been chosen for the business stimulant which any great national drive coming at more or less a dead and unexpected time, must entail. Greater Movie Season begins then. It continues—not for a week or a month, but for as long as theatres, by the entertainment they afford, justify the enthusiastic support that this season will inspire nationally.

Our exploitation men will work with exhibitor committees. Our staff will continue to promote motion picture interest wherever the written or spoken word can aid in patronage and good-will; and I feel that to the extent that the theatres will accept that aid and operate collectively, their business will reflect the effort.

The members of our association realize that in order for this campaign to be a success, they must supply pictures of a quality worthy of such a demonstration so that when the people go to see the Greater Movie Season picture they will be satisfied that what we have said about the improvement in motion picture entertainment is true. The campaign will arouse interest in motion pictures, but it will be the programs themselves that will be the final testimony that will win the case.

U. S. Navy Aids in Pushing Movie Season

The U. S. Navy has swung behind Greater Movie Season in battle formation. For the first time since the war—although in individual instances the Naval Recruiting Stations have lent their aid to specific pictures—a complete national tie-up has been effected between the movies and the navy. Washington, quick to appreciate the immense public interest the screen will command during July and August, has instructed all naval recruiting stations throughout the United States to display special posters linking Greater Movie Season with the fleet's Australasian Cruise.

No less than six thousand five hundred of these posters will occupy the Navy's streetboards in almost every city from coast to coast.

"Greater Movie Season Means Better Pictures on Display. The Navy's Australasian Cruise Shows the World in a Navy Way!"

That is the message the Navy will broadcast and each recruiting office stands ready to turn its efforts in such direction as exhibitor-committees may ask.

Governor Smith of New York Endorses Greater Movie Season

GOVERNOR "AL" SMITH of New York is a movie fan. He is more than that. He has his own projection machine. And his endorsement of Greater Movie Season is characteristic of him.

"Of course I believe in a Greater Movie Season.

"All of us are always hoping that the motion picture will realize the full extent of its genuine possibilities.

"If you are going to make this a season of better pictures I can look forward to some more entertaining evenings in my home with my picture machine.

"Naturally I wish the movement success."

Advertisements, Cuts, Mats, Part of Greater Movie Season Co-Operation

"TO clinch any campaign use newspaper advertising. To clinch this campaign use more!" says an editorial that accompanies an unusual array of copy, designs and lay-outs for Greater Movie Season. "Every dollar spent means not only an immediate return but also a continuous return; for Greater Movie Season is institutional, not keyed to one picture or to five pictures but to a whole year's program. What you do now will build patronage permanently."

Thirty-five examples of advertisements, from full page smashes down to two-inch single-column teasers hit that objective. Sound constructive thought is evident throughout them—constructive but not ponderous; for the copy catches both the gala spirit of the occasion and the human-interest "behind the screen" appeal that registers with regular picture-goers no less strongly than with those who must be "sold."

Quoting the introduction of a full-page:

"Celebrate Greater Movie Season . . . From yesterday's flickers to today's masterpieces—yes, real ones! . . . From penny arcades to theatres of ease and elegance where most of us go to see and be seen—and don't we? . . . From the battered piano to splendid orchestra accompaniments! Plenty to celebrate!"

The drive's objective is well expressed. The new season's motion picture have arrived, the improvement both on the screen and in the entertainment surrounding it is driven home by frank comparisons with movies as they used to be. That vein is followed in a quarter-page headed, "Don't long for the 'good old days!'" illustrating the entrance to an old nickelodeon in sharp contrast with a modern auditorium.

Copy that for three years has stood the test of Los Angeles and San Francisco campaigns will be immediately recognized by California exhibitors in the three-column advertsement "Are You Behind the Times?" This is an appeal for fair judgment by people who are still prone to regard motion pictures from old-fashioned viewpoints. Experience on the Coast showed that this persuasion won instant and favorable reaction. To repeat it, thus bringing it to the notice of all exhibitors, reveals a sound conception of responsibility on the part of the national service bureau.

"Entertainment is for sale and entertainment means just as much to the critics as to the friends of motion pictures," according to a statement from the Greater Movie Season bureau. "The man who rarely attends picture theatres may or may not have perfectly good reasons for his absence; but we have endeavored to present to him the very important facts that motion pictures today represent the efforts of leaders in every art, while, in most cases, the presentation of those pictures, the music and divertissement also entail considerably more thought than goes into the average theatrical performance at $2 a seat."

Many suggestions are made for co-operative advertising, chief of which is a full-page lay-out that should find ready acceptance by stores when newspaper space-sellers are enlisted with local activities. "Things are not as they used to be!" the streamer reads, and in individual lay-outs below latest models of men and women's clothes, automobiles, radios, phonograph records and electrical equipment are illustrated in striking contrast with their former styles. The copy for each store is written, requiring only the addition of names and addresses to complete the display. The central position tells of the new productions and the Greater Movie Season

Posters Speak Volumes in Few Words

EXHIBITORS' advice—"Say it quickly, briefly, and use big type to drive it home"—governed the selection of Greater Movie Season posters from numerous block and pictorial sketches submitted by prominent New York artists. By a process of elimination, the block designs chosen follow a color scheme of blue and yellow with an additional red in the case of the twenty-four sheet.

This particular stand has been devised to meet requirements both of theatre groups and the individual house conducting the campaign. To balance a red-disk bearing the slogan "Let's Go!" an unoccupied space is left in the upper right-hand side where, it is suggested, the current attraction can be posted, also on a red disk, if the stand is used as part of ones theatre's display; while for all purposes the "Let's Go!" message can be blocked out with a Second, Third and Fourth week announcement to carry the season along.

One-sheet; blue and yellow

The block one-sheet and three-sheet combine visibility and poster-effect with a certain artistic distinction that will blend harmoniously with any lobby display.

On the four color pictorial one-sheet the Girl in the Ticket-Box strikes a note familiar to every picture-goer. Passing a ticket across the marble slab with the happy "How Many? . . . Thank you!" around the aperture in the glass, she is an essential part of every theatre, typical of it, and in every way a sounder "selling-argument" than the usual symbolic figure with a helmet, a spear and pennants of film.

The window card is aimed at every window: a reminder in the form of a slate which asks "What Shall I do Today?" Beneath a space wherein each store can write its own message, strong lines of script proclaim: "Go to the Movies. It's Greater Movie Season."

By special arrangement with the Morgan Lithograph Co., of Cleveland, Ohio, a price of three cents a sheet has been fixed for block-posters, six cents for the four-color pictorial one-sheet and three cents for the window card.

World Tour Among Prizes for Greater Movie Season Essays

A NATIONAL newspaper contest with a trip for two around the world as the capital prize and trips to Miami and Los Angeles for second and third, has been arranged as one of the interest-builders for Greater Movie Season. The Red Star liner, Belgenland, beginning her second world cruise November 25th, will carry the winners from New York to the Orient, India, Egypt and Palestine, Italy, the Riviera and Spain, returning to New York April 6th, after a tour of 132 days. First class expenses will be paid throughout, including shore excursions under the guidance of the American Express Company.

The winner of the second prize will have the choice of a trip for two to Los Angeles or Miami, while the third prize is whichever tour the second winner does not elect to take. The winners will be guests of the Miami or the Los Angeles Chambers of Commerce during two weeks with transportation and hotel expenses paid.

According to plans the Will H. Hays office has formulated, the contest takes the form of an essay on motion pictures, not longer than 300 words, and debars only professional writers and employees of theatres and newspapers that participate.

It will be placed with one newspaper in each city or town where Greater Movie Season is celebrated, with preliminary announcements during July, and closing date towards the end of August. In addition to the principal prizes, local awards will be arranged—donations by stores, commercial firms and theatres—so that the extent of co-operation between merchants and theatre-owners may be widened immeasurably.

Working in conjunction with exhibitor-committees, the national bureau will handle details of syndication. A special press-sheet has already been prepared. Conditions governing the contest, feature stories and advertising displays for newspaper use, quite apart from theatre material, are contained in this sheet. Pictorial one-sheet posters for newspaper delivery wagons, newsstands and billboards, together with slides to accord each co-operating theatre full benefit of the publicity, are included among the contest accessories.

As a means not only of promoting interest in advance but also of maintaining it throughout the season, this contest, which is perhaps the most ambitious yet attempted between newspapers and motion pictures, stands as one of the high-lights of the Greater Movie Season direct-to-the public campaign.

"Are Parents People?"

Paramount Presents Betty Bronson in a Version of Alice Duer Miller's Clever Domestic Problem

Reviewed by Epes W. Sargent

Although there are three featured players in "Are Parents People?" the chief interest naturally centers in Betty Bronson, who is taking her first "regular" role in this clever story of domestic troubles by Alice Duer Miller.

This story probably was selected because the child is the prime mover of the action, but it would seem that the scenarist or the powers that be feared to give her too great a responsibility, and so the story sags somewhat in its development. It is a pleasant enough entertainment, but lacks the snap and verve that could have been injected into the story had the production experts been more confident of Miss Bronson's ability to carry the burden of the plot. Whether she could have done this is still a problem, since she is not given the opportunity and it still remains to be seen whether she is a carefully coached precocity or a real actress, but she shows many moments of natural charm that give promise of development, though in a few places her work is conventional and almost perfunctory. On the whole she does very creditably with what she gets.

Adolphe Menjou is the real star and not since "Forbidden Paradise" has he had such a congenial role and the only trouble is that he plays it so brilliantly that he takes from Florence Vidor her share of the sympathy. You feel that she is wholly in the wrong, though the story runs that they are equally at fault. Lawrence Grey was a clean-cut Dr. Dacer, rather young yet to be a successful practitioner, and certainly too young to be the accepted attendant at a young ladies' seminary, but in the development of the story he is given very little opportunity.

A fault of the script is the lack of love interest. Too much of the interest has been thrown to the parents and too little given the efforts of the girl to reunite them. A much better story would have resulted from a playing up of this angle. On the other hand, the scenarist has bravely resisted the temptation to dump in a lot of girls' school stuff. There are no dormitory pillow fights or other extraneous local color. She sticks to that section of the story she elects to play up. Andre de Beranger was capital in his one chance, but the teachers at the school were too overdrawn, which seems to be a fault of direction rather than acting.

In spite of its structural faults, however, "Are Parents People?" is a pleasant and often sprightly entertainment, and should give reasonable satisfaction to most classes. It is not great, but it is good, thanks mostly to Menjou.

Story

The Hazlitts are high strung and imagine themselves incompatible, where it is merely that they never have learned to give and take of married life. Their separation falls heavily upon Lita, their young daughter, still of boarding school age. Lita reads that estranged parents can be united through a common fear for their offspring. When she is blamed for a romantic letter written by her sentimental room mate to a picture star, she does not clear the situation with an explanation but sees in this happening the desired opportunity to reunite her parents. She leaves a note that she has gone "to end it all" and proceeds to the home of a young physician who has engaged her interest. Her parents spend an agonized night while she comfortably dozes in an easy chair in the home of the doctor, who is all-ignorant of her presence, and the morning brings a matrimonial reconciliation and the start of a new matrimonial venture between Lita and the physician.

"Wildfire"

Vitagraph Offers Aileen Pringle in Entertaining Racing Melodrama Based on Successful Play

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Several years ago "Wildfire," written by the well-known authors George V. Hobart and George Broadhurst proved so successful as a melodrama that it was later made into a musical comedy and it has now reached the screen as a Vitagraph production with Aileen Pringle as the star.

It is a racing melodrama which follows the general lines of productions of this type with the outcome of the action depending on the heroine's horse "Wildfire" winning a big race. After the preliminaries are dispensed with everything revolves around this one situation.

There is the usual melodramatic villainy, with the former owner of the stables using crooked methods to keep the horse from winning, but there are two points that give the story added interest: the first is the fact that additional drama results from the fact that because of a former quarrel the hero determines to beat the titular owner of the stables, not knowing that they are now owned by the heroine who is his sweetheart, and next the clever manner in which the heroine thwarts the villain's plans by allowing him to make love to her and giving the jockey the signal to prevent him from throwing the race.

There is a good satirical note at the opening where a society to stop race track gambling is shown as using wheels of chance at a bazaar to raise money, and the big climax, the race, is well handled, the shots of the two horses running neck and neck being especially fine and providing good punch. There is some good and out of the ordinary comedy in the character of the conceited negro jockey who has his own valet. Practically the entire appeal has been placed on the racing scene and although there is plenty of intrigue there is not much real action in the other scenes except where the stable catches fire and this has been toned down so as not to cause an anti-climax.

As is often the case, there are inconsistencies and the entire story rests on a rather implausible situation, for had the heroine done the logical thing she would have told the hero that she was the real owner of the stables, also, after waiting patiently for him for five years she seemed almost eager to believe all the rumors that tended to blacken his character. Then, too, some of the angles which are built up in the earlier reels are dropped and no further mention made of them.

Aileen Pringle does good work as the heroine in a role which differs from her usual run as there is no playing up of the sex angle, and her support is entirely satisfactory.

While not as peppy as some others of its type, "Wildfire" should prove a pleasing attraction for patrons who like racing melodramas.

Story

Claire Barrington, anxious to marry her sister Myrtle to Ralph Woodhurst, whose father is opposed to horse racing, hides the fact she is the real owner of the Duffy stables. John Duffy, former owner, still holds notes on the stables given by Claire's father and he seeks to have Claire marry him, but she loves Garrison, who has been away for five years. Just a little while before the big race in which her horse, Wildfire, is to run Garrison returns and meeting Duffy recalls that Duffy persecuted him in the army. Garrison tells Claire he is out to break the owner of the Duffy stables. To do this he buys Jackdaw, the only horse that can beat Wildfire. The Duffy stables are set on fire and Garrison is blamed. Claire hates him as fiercely as she loved him before and believes he is a crook. A new jockey, Chappie Raster, is to ride Wildfire and Duffy plans to have him throw the race unless he gets a signal with a handkerchief. Claire lets Duffy make love to her and gives the signal and Wildfire wins. It develops that Duffy is responsible for the crooked work and Garrison finally is forgiven by Claire.

"Silent Sanderson"

Harry Carey's Newest is Virile Melodrama of Cattle Country and the Alaskan Gold Fields

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

At the outset "Silent Sanderson" the newest Hunt Stromberg production starring Harry Carey, which is being released through Producers Distributing Corporation gives every evidence of being a regular "Western" story of the cattle country.

With the apparent suicide of the hero's brother, there comes a lapse of several years and a change of location and from this point on it is a story of Alaskan dance halls and great snow covered open spaces working up to a climax in the hero's cabin miles away from any other human habitation.

The story is melodramatic and the situations have been built up with a good degree of melodramatic tenseness which will probably hold the interest of the average patron, but the force of the story is weakened by more than ordinary dependence on coincidence in the hero arriving in the dancehall just in time to rescue the girl and the bringing together of the three main characters so many years later and thousands of miles from the scene of their former meeting. It also seems more convenient than probable that the villain would have so blatantly boasted in unknown company of his murder of the hero's brother.

Carey's role is first that of a self-sacrificing big brother, then that of a man who suffers in silence over the death of this brother and the seeming perfidy of his sweetheart. This leads to a loss of sympathy for him in the heartless and almost brutal manner in which he treats this woman. There is also a gruesome note in the situation where the villain is left in the snow and becomes the prey of wolves.

There is no doubt about this being red-blooded melodrama and there are some good fights, plenty of deep-dyed villainy and the usual virility of the rugged stories of the outposts of civilization where might makes right and "Silent Sanderson" should prove a satisfactory attraction for audiences that like this class of production. Harry Carey's fans will probably like it also even though his role is not an entirely heroic or sympathetic one.

"The Bandit's Baby"

Variety of Angles of Appeal in Fred Thomson's Newest Should Make It a Good Box-Office Bet

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

While "The Bandit's Baby," the newest of the series distributed through F. B. O. starring Fred Thomson, is an out-and-out Western, such as this star's fans have learned to expect of him, various other entertainment angles have been introduced that should make it appeal to a wider circle of patrons and prove one of his biggest box-office successes.

First, of course, is Fred's winning personality and ability as an athletic Western type, next is his wonderful horse, Silver King, which has added a lot to his previous offerings; then there is a cute baby that will "get" the feminine contingent and a lot of the men as well. All of these are present in a story that holds the interest, introducing some clever and intelligent acting by Silver King, together with a snappy horse race, and a thrilling melodramatic climax involving good human interest in which the star gallops ahead of a train to save the baby. Then there is, of course, the inevitable romance, villainy and fast action that is typical of Westerns.

Dyed-in-the-wool Western fans may feel that some of the hard riding and fighting has been sacrificed to the scenes in which the baby figures, and this is true, but at the same time the different angles have been well balanced and we believe that with the majority the human interest and comedy with the baby will more than make up for this deviation from the usual, and the rattling melodramatic climax will more than satisfy the action fans.

Fred is there with the goods as usual, but Silver King and the baby certainly give him a run for the honors. Particularly is this true of the scene in the cave where the horse acts as a nurse for the baby, getting him his rattle, bottle of milk, etc., and really acting with remarkable intelligence; and there is a lot of good comedy in these sequences, as well as the scenes where Fred acts as a judge at a baby show.

There are also a number of clever and amusing subtitles, especially those at the finish where Fred tells the girl he is not strong for getting married but he would do anything to be able to keep her little baby brother, and she retaliates by accepting him, saying she would do most anything to get Fred's horse.

The supporting cast is entirely capable and is headed by a new leading lady, Helen Foster, who is small, attractive and has a winsome, sympathetic appeal.

For the average house "The Bandit's Baby" looks like a good box-office bet.

Length, 5,291 feet.

Story

Tom Bailey, falsely accused of murder and robbery, is a fugitive and easily eludes the sheriff. A rodeo is to be held and the home town has no chance to win without Tom, so the sheriff grants him amnesty for the day if he will ride his horse, Silver King. Tom accepts and is grabbed by the committee to also judge a baby show as everyone else spurns the job. Tom gives the prize to the little chap entered by Esther Lacey. Esther plans to run away and go to her brother in Tucson, but her cruel stepfather, Hartigan, a blackguard, takes the money. He also lures Tom to the place and binds him, hoping to turn him over to the sheriff and get the reward. Tom gets away and wins the race and eludes the sheriff. After seeing Esther safely on the train he takes the baby to his cave and cares for him. Hartigan, learning that Esther and her brother are returning, plans to wreck the train by causing a collision with a freight. The agent saves the train by running the freight onto an unused cut-off. Tom, knowing the baby is playing on this old track, races by a short cut and just saves him. A confederate has double-crossed Hartigan, who dies when the train plunges over the embankment. Esther's brother proves that Hartigan is the murderer and Tom and Esther decide to share each other's lot.

"Siege"

Fine Handling of Unusually Dramatic Story Should Make This a Big Box-office Attraction

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

In the picturization of Samuel Hopkins Adams' novel, "Siege," which is being released as a Universal Jewel, one of the second "White List," Universal has a production which we believe will provide excellent entertainment for the majority of patrons.

The outstanding point of appeal is the stirring, virile drama. The story concerns the clash of temperaments between a bright young woman with thoroughly modern ideas and an elderly, iron-willed, domineering woman of wealth and power who rules everyone with whom she comes in contact, with an iron hand, and who holds on to the customs and traditions of the past.

The title, which suggests continued conflict, is appropriate both figuratively and literally, for the whole story concerns the siege of the young couple to win the older woman's approval and batter down her will. Svend Gade has expertly directed this picture. With a minimum of footage he has definitely established his characters and almost from the very start there is present in practically every scene the conflict of wills and personalities that makes real drama.

The story is smoothly developed, with excellent continuity and without surplus footage, and so finely is the drama and suspense in every situation maintained that the interest never has a chance to wander and the action moves forward rapidly.

The entire cast give fine performances, and while Virginia Valli and Eugene O'Brien are the stars, Mr. O'Brien's role is subordinate to that of the two women, and even Miss Valli's role is overshadowed by that of the forceful old lady portrayed by Mary Alden. This character absolutely dominates the story and as usual Miss Alden rises to the occasion. Her performance is a wonderful one and the manner in which she depicts the iron-willed, old-fashioned woman and at the same time shows that she has also a sentimental side and a sense of humor makes one of the screen's finest characterizations.

With a real story to begin with, finely acted, smoothly directed and filled with virile and sustained drama, "Siege" should prove a big box-office attraction.

Story

The great Ruyland Iron Works, one of New England's largest industrial plants, is absolutely dominated by a little elderly iron-willed lady, known as Aunt Augusta, the head of the house of Ruyland, and all the stock is owned by the members of the family, who do her bidding unquestioningly. Finally, however, she decided Kenyon will be her successor and that he must marry Alberta Ruyland. Kenyon, however, has already married Frederika secretly. Aunt Augusta clings to the traditions of the past, while Frederika typifies the modern woman. So it becomes a state of siege to win over Aunt Augusta. Norval Ruyland, who was born dumb, is the only one to become friendly. Roses left daily for Frederika make Aunt Augusta believe she is clinging to an old admirer and Kenyon finally gets jealous and Frederika leaves. Norval discloses the fact that he sent the roses and, committing suicide, gives his stock to Frederika, who seeks to turn it over to Aunt Augusta, as with Kenyon's it carries control of the works. Aunt Augusta, stating she will not accept charity for Frederika, who has become reconciled to Kenyon, dashes away in her old-fashioned rig. Kenyon and Frederika follow in an auto and Frederika, clinging to the horses, stops them. Aunt Augusta, stating that they showed real Ruyland courage, says she was wrong about Frederika and takes her in her arms.

"Eve's Secret"

Betty Compson Has Congenial Role in Paramount Story of the Duke who Loved a Peasant

Reviewed by Epes W. Sargent

Were it not for the ducal titles and other evidences of royalty and the more pictorial settings of a mythical country, "Eve's Secret" might well be a story of here and today. In this respect it differs from the usual Balkan type of play, and is much closer to the appreciation of the average patron, and gains more sympathetic interest.

Miss Compson apparently delights in a chance for a bit of a masquerade in peasant dress, and this story gives her a very charming opportunity, for in the opening scenes she makes a most delightful little child of nature, who is later developed through Parisian training into a finished woman of the world. She gives a sincere and earnest performance.

Jack Holt is distinguished as the fire-eating Duke of Poltava, but the acting honors go to William Collier, Jr., as the masquerading tailor who breaks the bank at Monte Carlo, or its screen counterpart. It is a fine bit of work. Lionel Belmore as the Baron also contributes to the success of the play, but the others are given little opportunity.

The sets are magnificent, but most of the story lies in beautiful natural landscapes, apparently at Del Monte and Monterey. The story moves fluently to its climax with a strong flavoring of comedy, and should prove one of the most acceptable of Miss Compson's recent offerings.

Story

Angered at discovering his fiancee in the arms of another man, the Duke of Poltava kills his rival in a duel and vows that he will have no more to do with ladies of title, but will seek charm and chastity among the peasantry. Eve, the niece of the village shoemaker, attracts his attention, and he has her educated in Paris. Graduated into a woman of fashion, Eve resents the Duke's proprietary manner, and particularly his practice of fending off all other admirers either by scaring or shooting them. Prince Boris, her latest worshiper, goes the usual course and in revenge Eve accepts an invitation to supper with him, not knowing that the Prince has fled and that the invitation is a trap laid by the Duke. When she finds herself caught, she escapes through the window and sups with the lion of the hour, an unknown nobleman who has repeatedly broken the bank at the Riviera resort where the Duke has taken her. In the course of the supper he reveals himself as the nephew of the tailor in her old home. Intending to spend his uncle's legacy in a week of delirious revelry, he finds himself a near-millionaire. The Duke interupts the tete-a-tete, but Eve pleads for the boy's life. Forced into a duel by the rash youngster, the Duke refuses to kill him, and is himself wounded, but Eve now knows her secret. It is the Duke she really loves—and she tells him so, since he no longer will ask.

"Beggar on Horseback"

Imaginative Stage Fantasy Picturized by Paramount Is Triumph of Technical Cleverness

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Unlike anything ever presented on the screen is "Beggar on Horseback," James Cruze's picturization for Paramount of George S. Kaufman and Marc Connelly's stage play; so much so that it is next to impossible to convey through the medium of words a comprehensive idea of this production.

The distinguishing point is the fact that the majority of the footage is devoted to the picturization of a weirdly fantastic dream or, as the hero himself describes it when he awakens, a nightmare. Pure fantasy, these sequences which bring into play every trick of the camera and the studio mechanic show a multitude of scenes in which unbridled imagination have been given full play. The hero does not move from one scene into the next but by means of a dissolving effect, in kaleidoscopic fashion, finds himself in increasingly fantastic surroundings.

The sets, the actions, the costuming of the characters are all in keeping. The persons he sees in the dream are all acquaintances of real life, but they are all out of their true perspective, their characteristics and mannerisms which impressed him are terrifically exaggerated. Most of these people are members of his rich fiancee's family, and a strange lot they are as he sees them. The girl jazzes and shimmies continually, the father, wearing a huge cap, smokes a huge cigar, talks over a huge telephone and uses a huge cup as an ashtray. The girl's brother's bow tie is an enormous affair and her mother goes around with a rocking chair fastened to her back. The hero sees himself with his sweetheart on a comic opera type of farm with milkmaids in dancing costumes and a tiny cow and hen giving impossible quantities of milk and eggs.

The hero goes all through these episodes clad in pajamas and a dressing gown, even seeing himself married in a big church in this garb, with the wedding attendants in fantastic costumes and even the minister jazzing through the ceremony. His wife's family have dozens of freak relatives and there are hundreds of butlers, dancing masters, etc. He becomes so irked that he kills the entire family and is tried in a futurist courtroom and found guilty of being highbrow and put in jail where he has to write jazz.

The idea behind this picture is undoubtedly clever and as screened it represents a triumph of technical cleverness in imaginative picturization and in this respect is a triumph for Director James Cruze, the artists who designed the weird sets, the cameramen and in fact the entire studio staff, but we very seriously doubt its popular appeal.

Considerably more than the necessary amount of footage seems to have been used in working up to the dream situation and the manner in which the hero gets out of his engagement to the rich girl so that he can marry his sweetheart is weak. The picture, however, will be judged largely on its fan-

NEWS AND REVIEWS OF SHORT SUBJECTS AND SERIALS

"Baby Blues"

(Educational—Comedy—Two Reels)

Little Mickey Bennett is a busy kid in this Juvenile Comedy distributed through Educational. First a mischievous little baby brother keeps him on the run, then the chase of a canary that has escaped ends in literally wrecking his grouchy uncle's pet and bird store. A row with the village "tough kid" causes Mickey to seek refuge in a baby show. He disguises as a baby and wins the prize, a nice fat check which soothes the old man's feelings over the wreck of his shop. Except for the uncle, all of the action is carried on by a clever bunch of kids and there is considerable typical kid humor that will especially please the younger generation. The two-year old baby practically steals the picture. We don't know his name, but he has appeared in several other Educational comedies and it is remarkable the variety of things they make this child do, and the way he seems to enjoy it. Grown-ups will like the baby and there are several amusing bits, so that this comedy should register well with the average patron.—C. S. S.

"Gridiron Gertie"

(Universal—Comedy—Two Reels)

Except for the fact that the various situations are a little more closely knit together than usual, this Century Comedy distributed through Universal is of the same type as the majority of Wanda Wiley's starring vehicles. It is slapstick depending largely on cleverly devised but improbable situations involving stunts and trick stuff. Much of this is of a familiar sort but there are some new and cleverly handled scenes in a football game in which Wanda disguised as her sweetheart succeeds in scoring the winning points. She slides all the way across the field, another time she goes sailing through the air with the ball when it is kicked, and again she escapes with the ball by going through a hole in the ground, etc. The picture contains the average amount of amusement for the slapstick fans and is up to the average of this star's vehicles.—C. S. S.

"Ice Cold"

(Universal—Comedy—One Reel)

This is another of Universal's series featuring Arthur Lake and Olive Hasbrouck in comedies that concern young folks in the "sweet sixteen" class. This time, Arthur pulls a bluff, tells the gang he is going to Newport and gets a job as a soda jerker instead. Eddie and Olive find him and bring the gang along to kid him, they start a mild riot pelting each other with ice cream etc. Arthur wins however, as this takes a lot of ammunition and he is working on a commission basis. It is fairly amusing and is up to the standard of the majority of the series. Growing boys and girls will especially like it as it deals with experiences that are real to them.—C. S. S.

"Props' Dash for Cash"

(Educational—Cartoon—One Reel)

Earl Hurd's newest "Pen and Ink Vaudeville" cartoon for Educational shows Props pressed into service as ticket-seller in the theatre. A crook bores a hole in the cash register and the money drops out. Another crook steals the register and Proper chases him by auto, motorboat and finally by submarine, even walking along the ocean bottom. He secures and returns the register only to find it empty. The money is discovered in the boss' hat and Props is forgiven. It is up to Earl Hurd's standard and contains a number of ingenious and amusing bits.—C. S. S.

"Pathe Review No. 24"

(Pathe—Magazine—One Reel)

"Pathe Review No. 24" is headed by an exhibition of the light fantastic rendered by the well known Albertina Rasch dancers. The Pathecolor section is devoted to charming "shots" of Fourgeres, an ancient fortress town in France. "Beaks and Bills," showing various species of birds at work during the meal hour, is the title of this chapter of 'The Secrets of Nature' series.—T. W.

"Thundering Landlords"

(Pathe—Comedy—Two Reels)

Moving day for a tired newspaper reporter is the theme of "Thundering Landlords," a Hal Roach two-reeler. Glenn Tryon is featured as the weary scribe. His wife and that of a contractor's are two very pretty women. The cast also includes: Fay Wray, Noan Young, Irene Allen, Marjorie Whiteis, "Husky" Hanes and Jim Finlayson. The comedy has mainly to do with Tryon and his family. A monkey pitching china ware and crockery at a negro maid furnishes a lot of laughs. This occurs while a flivver caravan, groaning with furniture and the family, is on its way from an apartment to a partly constructed bungalow. Housekeeping before the domicile is prepared for a house warming and how Tyron keeps union men on the job until the house is built all go to furnish the circumstances which make this comedy worth while entertainment.—T. W.

"Call a Cop"

(Educational—Comedy—Two Reels)

As usual with Christie Comedies there is a definite idea that runs consistently through the entire subject in this one starring Neal Burns, and while there is considerable rough and tumble it has been cleverly worked into the situation so that really "Call A Cop" is more farce than slapstick. Neal, en route to meet his girl is arrested for speeding and hires a thug to take his place expecting a "five day" sentence. The judge gives him six months. The thug breaks jail and chases Neal and the "plot" is further complicated by an inheritance left Neal, which both he and the thug try to get. Neal even tries to break into jail, but without success. He chokes his girl and the cop says "Treat 'Em Rough," a false alarm turns out to be a real fire, etc. Finally, there is a chase all over the lawyer's house in which his porter, Neal, the girl and the thug participate. It is an exceedingly fast-moving comedy with action in every foot and a goodly number of laughs and clever situations and should please the majority of patrons—C. S. S.

"Twinkle-Twinkle"

(Pathe—"Sportlight"—One Reel)

How stage and screen stars keep physically fit is the subject Grantland Rice emphasizes in an entertaining manner in his latest "Sportlight" entitled "Twinkle-Twinkle." The "Our Gang" youngsters are shown first in the studio school and then at play. Douglas Fairbanks and Bill Tilden in a tennis match; Jobyana Ralston and Harold Lloyd on the squash court; Valentino boxing, Charlie Ray chinning the bar and Jack Dempsey and his wife horse back riding are some of the subjects. One very attractive effect is obtained from a practice dance by Gilda Gray on a moonlit beach. —T. W.

"Queen of the Round-Up"

(Universal—Western—Two Reels)

Josie Sedgwick is the featured player in this Universal Western with Edmund Cobb playing opposite. The main point of interest is the fact that Miss Sedgwick does some good stunts of horsemanship such as riding a bucking broncho, usually performed by the male stars, and she does them well. The story involves rustling of horses and the plot of the villainess to keep the heroine from appearing as Queen of the Round-up and is of average interest. The action largely following the usual routine, but there are some real shots of a rodeo showing lossing, bull-dogging, etc. Altogether it is above the average of the usual short western. —C. S. S.

"The Outlaw"

(Universal—Western—Two Reels)

Jack Perrin and Louise Lorraine are featured in this Universal-Mustang, Jack appears as an outlaw who rescues a girl in a runaway and it is love at first sight. Jealousy of one of Jack's assistants causes him to kidnap the girl for ransom, and gives Jack the opportunity to defy his own gang and rescue her. Jack "goes straight" and they face the future together. It will be seen that this is one of the several varieties of familiar western themes and it runs true to type without deviation from the usual formula. It has a fair share of typical western action and should satisfy spectators who like conventional western material—C. S. S.

"Dog Biscuits"

(Universal—Comedy—One Reel)

In this issue of Universal's "Sweet Sixteen" Comedies released under the Bulls Eye Brand, Olive Hasbrouck makes biscuits for her friends Arthur and Eddie. Though one or two are so light they float away, the others, like the proverbial bride's biscuits, are like bullets. In attempting to get rid of them by throwing them out of the window Olive's father and mother are hit and seem to be intoxicated. Arthur gets in bad by feeding one to the dog and as a result the dog retaliates by tearing Arthur's trousers and chasing. The situations are all familiar and obvious and only mildly amusing. This issue is not up to the standard of the majority of the series.—C. S. S.

"Pathe Review No. 26"

(Pathe-Magazine One Reel)

"Pathe Review No. 26" is headed by scenes depicting the coming into existence of ordinary pins. This is shown to be quite an industry and a striking point is the scrupulous care used to see that these necessary little articles are absolutely sanitary. This section is followed by pathecolor scenes of the Turrets of Amboise, France. The concluding number entitled "Acrobatics ala Mode" shows by means of a "process camera" the successive motions in an acrobatic stunt, each remaining on the screen and merging into the next movement so that comparison can be made.—T. W.

"The Runaway Balloon"

(Pathe—Cartoon—One Reel)

Cartoonist Terry depicts the radio as a veritable life-saver in "The Runaway Balloon." A gas bag breaks away from its moorage and the farmer, in his curiosity to locate the S.O.S. radio call, is caught by the balloon's anchor and dropped in Iceland. Still clinging to his receiving set he wards off approaching bears by sending in a call for jazz music. The cartoon is highly amusing.—T. W.

"Hair Cartoon"

(Red Seal—Cartoon—300 feet)

Marcus performs his familiar stunt of drawing heads and by rearranging the hair changing them into well-known persons. The first is like an echo from the past, for it is Josephus Daniels, Secretary of the Navy under President Wilson. The other subjects include David Belasco, Mary Garden and Henry Ford with one of his flivvers.—C. S. S.

"Beggar on Horseback"

tasy. While mildly amusing, there is not enough comedy to make it stand up from this angle, and even for those who appreciate its cleverness there would seem to be too much of the fantasy which runs on and on through a multitude of changing scenes. The fact that this is a weird dream is soon established and after this there is no new element. In fact even after the round of cyclonic panorama almost has you in a whirl there is interpolated a pantomime, and again the fantastic angle is taken up for a lot more scenes as weird as before.

Frankly, we doubt if the great majority of spectators will find this picture entertaining after the novelty of the first few scenes has worn off. They will probably wonder what it is all about and even if they do not consider it rather nonsensical may lose interest long before the picture is finished.

Story

Neil McRae, a poor composer, though he hates jazz and is writing a symphony has to orchestrate jazz music to make a living. Across the hall is his sweetheart, Cynthia, an artist, and together they are preparing a pantomime. Neil has one pupil, Gladys Cady, a member of an eccentric new-rich family, and she takes him to meet her people. Neil's friend, Dr. Rice, suggests that he marry Gladys and finish his symphony. When Cynthia, sacrificing her own love, seconds the motion, Neil proposes and is accepted. He is threatened with a nervous breakdown and Dr. Rice gives him medicine. He falls asleep and has a weird and fantastic dream in which everything is seen out of its true perspective, the little mannerisms of the Cadys are all exaggerated. He sees himself in his pajamas and dressing gown going through weird experiences, starting with a wedding in a church where everybody, including the minister, jazzes. At the bride's home he meets dozens of freak relatives and sees hundreds of butlers, footmen, dancing masters, etc. In desperation he kills Gladys and the whole family is tried in a futuristic courtroom and sentenced to write jazz forever in the Cady factory. He sees himself on a farm with Cynthia that resembles a musical comedy setting; finally Cynthia appears as a nurse and stabs him. Awakening, he realizes he is still engaged to Gladys, but she releases him, saying it was a joke and leaves him free to marry Cynthia.

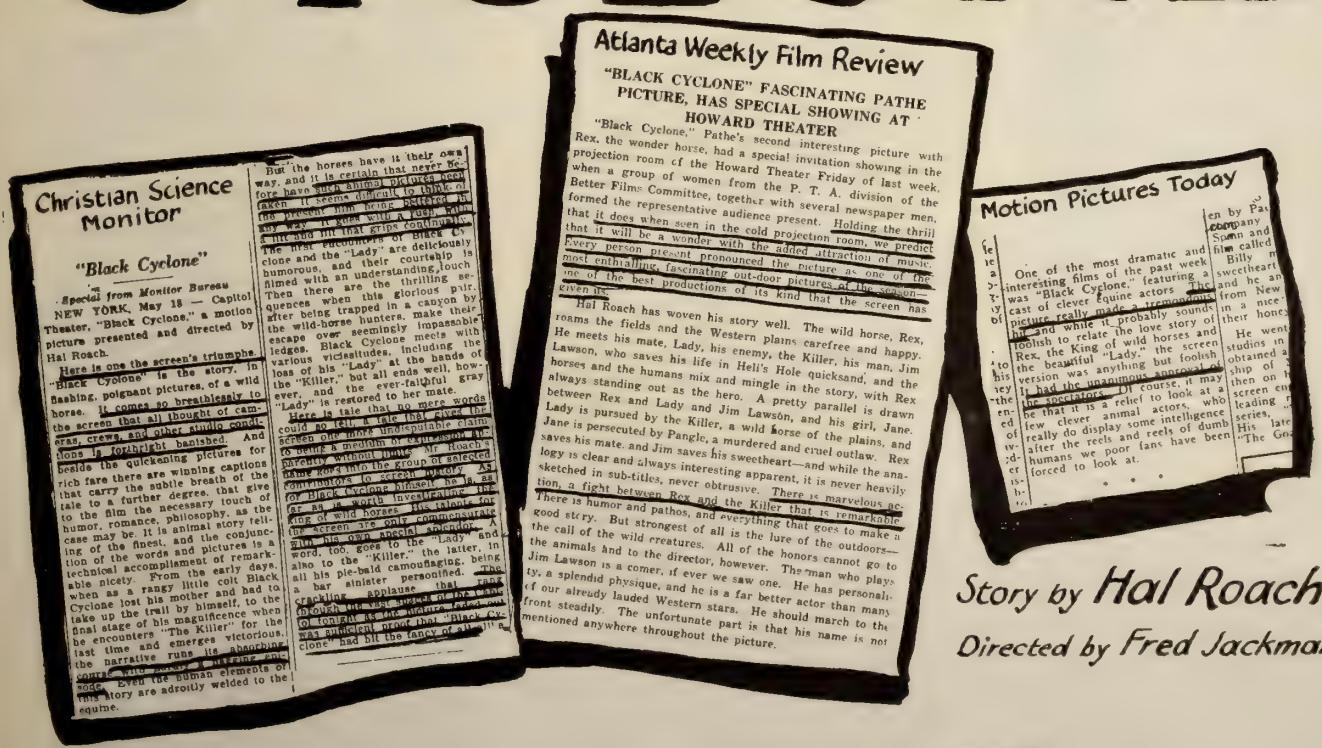
REX—The Wild Horse
CYCLONE"



Christian Science Monitor
"Black Cyclone"
Special from Monitor Bureau
NEW YORK, May 18 — Capitol Theater, "Black Cyclone," a motion picture presented and directed by Hal Roach.
Here is one the screen's triumphs.
"Black Cyclone" is the story, in flashing, poignant pictures, of a wild horse. It comes so breathlessly to the screen that all thought of cameras, crews, and other studio conditions is forthright banished.
Atlanta Weekly Film Review
"BLACK CYCLONE" FASCINATING PATHE PICTURE, HAS SPECIAL SHOWING AT HOWARD THEATER
"Black Cyclone," Pathe's second interesting picture with Rex, the wonder horse, had a special invitation showing in the projection room of the Howard Theater Friday of last week, when a group of women from the P. T. A. division of the Better Films Committee, together with several newspaper men, formed the representative audience present. Holding the thrill that it does when seen in the cold projection room, we predict that it will be a wonder with the added attraction of music. Every person present pronounced the picture as one of the most enthralling, fascinating out-door pictures of the season—one of the best productions of its kind that the screen has given us.
Hal Roach has woven his story well. The wild horse, Rex, roams the fields and the Western plains carefree and happy. He meets his mate, Lady, his enemy, the Killer, his man, Jim Lawson, who saves his life in Hell's Hole quicksand, and the horses and the humans mix and mingle in the story, with Rex always standing out as the hero. A pretty parallel is drawn between Rex and Lady and Jim Lawson, and his girl, Jane. Lady is pursued by the Killer, a wild horse of the plains, and Jane is persecuted by Pangle, a murdered and cruel outlaw. Rex saves his mate, and Jim saves his sweetheart—and while the analogy is clear and always interesting apparent, it is never heavily sketched in sub-titles, never obtrusive. There is marvelous action, a fight between Rex and the Killer that is remarkable. There is humor and pathos, and everything that goes to make a good story. But strongest of all is the lure of the outdoors—the call of the wild creatures. All of the honors cannot go to the animals and to the director, however. The man who plays Jim Lawson is a comer, if ever we saw one. He has personality, a splendid physique, and he is a far better actor than many of our already lauded Western stars. He should march to the front steadily. The unfortunate part is that his name is not mentioned anywhere throughout the picture.
Motion Pictures Today
One of the most dramatic and interesting films of the past week was "Black Cyclone," featuring a cast of clever equine actors. The picture really made a tremendous hit, and while it probably sounds foolish to relate the love story of Rex, the King of wild horses and the beautiful "Lady," the screen version was anything but foolish. It had the unanimous approval of the spectators. Of course, it may be that it is a relief to look at a few clever animal actors, who really do display some intelligence after the reels and reels of dumb humans we poor fans have been forced to look at.

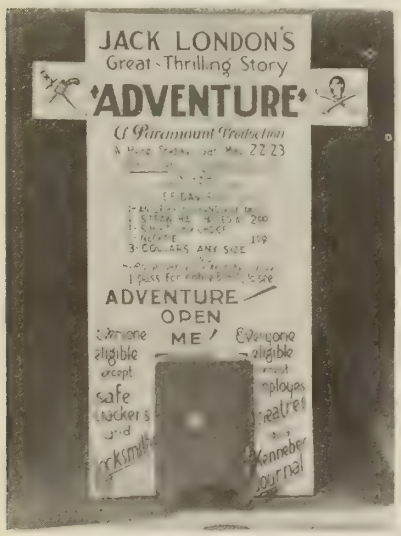
SELLING the PICTURE to the PUBLIC

EDITED BY EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Edgar Hart Develops a New Safe Idea Good for a Number of Current Titles

USING a safe or locked box as storage space for prizes of greater or less value has been a lobby stunt for a number of years. It is good on treasure or thief titles and can be worked over to other features, but Edgar Hart, just before he left the Opera House, Augusta, Maine, put some new frills on the old idea, which other managers will find useful.



The chief appeal of his stunt is that it can be worked for merchant cooperation.

Edgar has been transferred to Portsmouth, N. H., where he will have personal charge of the Colonial Theatre, and keep an eye on the other local houses of the Gray Circuit, but he wanted to leave Augusta with a good P. P. C., and he tied the safe to Adventure, arguing that it was something of an adventure to open a safe without knowing the combination.

Gave Out Tips

Of course the first thing was to get the safe. That was easy, as the town is big enough to have safes in stock, so a nice shiny one was borrowed and set up in the lobby.

Inside were placed orders for a straw hat, a shirt, 3 collars and a necktie, contributed by a local firm, and a pass for the entire family, given in the name of the Kenebec Journal, to assure the newspaper cooperation.

The combination of the safe was known only to the man who reset it, but the last three figures were given to Mr. Hart for advertising use.

This gave the newspaper a chance to come out and announce that a tip would be printed daily, and the following day "A Safe Tip" was shoved up against a local advertisement.

This gave all the advertisers a good showing, for it was announced that the tip would be set against one of the advertisements, and the six point line was so inconspicuous that the advertising section had to be scanned closely. The first tip read: "Safe tip. Turn once to right to 40, it opens then at 35."

This was the final operation, and the following day the second operation was given and the third was revealed the third day. This left only the starting point to be discovered.

The safe was surrounded by a crowd all day long and well into the evening. Anyone was at liberty to try, and the most persistent visitor was O. B. Frost, a well-known contractor and City Treasurer. The last day of the contest he paid two visits, and with only the starting point to be determined, he finally succeeded in opening the box.

Meantime there was a strong daily story, real local interest, and an unusually good business for Adventure. There was a good hook-up with the local merchants who contributed the safe and the prizes, and by getting more prizes, this angle can be extended.

The hot weather is here. You need business helps. Here is one that will jazz things for a week.

Buddy's Covers

Buddy Stuart's program for the Fenway theatre, Boston, for Mothers' Week is about as nice as they come. Just a crayon sketch without fancy printing, but it got over better than anything else we have seen because the woman looked like a mother and not like a freak artists's idea of what a mother ought to look like. He had another good one for music week, but not so good; you don't get them that good every few months.

Buddy uses the one design for his program front and for his window cards and ones, hooking them all up and at the same time saving the cost of extra art work. There are quite a few tricks like that he learned long ago.

Useful Letters

Something out of the ordinary has been prepared by Leon J. Bamberger, of Paramount exploitation, for Mme. Sans Gene.

Gloria Swanson has a letter written by the original Mme. Sans Gene in 1809 and another written by her husband, the Duke of Danzig, one of Napoleon's generals.

Bam has had these photostated for window display, along with translations of the text. These and a printed explanatory card to complete the window display are being sent to those who have the play booked. They can be had from the Paramounteers, and should prove very useful.

Add Mr. Addison

Add H. M. Addison, of the Binghamton, (N. Y.) Theatre, to the list of those who caught the take-a-chance week idea on the first bounce. His feature was "In Love With Love," backed by a Keith-Albee vaudeville bill, including a child artist who held a reception on the stage Saturday afternoon, when all the kiddies were treated to ice cream and souvenirs. The papers not only played the week up for extra space, but they took the story out of the usual Sunday and first-night stuff and gave a special two column head in both instances. That's a by-product of the idea. You can steal extra space.

Local stunts are fine for hot weather. Try one and you will use many.

TWO BOYS AND A BANNER HOGGED A 2,000-BOY PARADE

It really was in observation of National Bicycle Week in Seattle, but Robert Bender, of the Columbia Theatre, got in a banner for Head Winds and lifted the cream of the notices at a small cost. This beats the circus parade stunt.

Special Theatre Car

Louis Cohen and Louis Richmond, of the Jefferson theatre, Springfield, Mass., have a new idea. Two nights a week a special car is started from the suburbs, making two stops only and running express to the theatre. All patrons from this outlying territory are carried to the theatre free, the car being run two nights a week. The car is chartered by the theatre at a small cost. As the cars hold close to a hundred persons, the small investment will bring to the downtown house many who might not otherwise consider the three mile trip—for Springfield surely covers the ground. We marched over the route the other day in a Shrine parade and we know.

This is a far more practical stunt than the special cab service, and less costly. It will work even better for a house drawing from feeder towns. Talk the matter over with your street car company, and point out that a free car a couple of nights a week will make for more fares on other nights. That will help to cut the charter costs.

Production Hints from Edward L. Hyman

Managing Director, Mark-Strand Theatre, Brooklyn

Four musical presentations, Johnny Hines in "The Crackerjack," who was prevailed upon to make personal appearances at the theatre the first three days of the week and also to speak on the radio in our regular Sunday night program, and two short film subjects made up a show which ran 2 hours and 15 minutes, divided in this order: the picture itself used up 1 hour and 19 minutes, while the two short film subjects, namely, the Topical Review and "Balto's Race to Nome," a vivid re-enactment of the obstacles encountered in getting the antitoxin serum to the beplagued cities in northern Alaska, required 8 and 20 minutes respectively. This left 28 minutes for the four musical presentations from the stage.

Each of the four deluxe performances was opened with "The Big Bass Viol" by Bohannon, a basso solo. The interior of an old-time music store, with a grandfather's clock and old-time furniture, were the props used to give it a "not so long ago" appearance. The basso was attired as an old man seated on a high chair playing a big bass viol. Light blue overhead spots were used to bring out the soloist. Four minutes for this presentation.

The orchestra played as the overture an M. L. Lake orchestration, programmed as "In Remembrance," denoting a thought in film and music for the nation's heroes who are here no longer but are still remembered. A glimpse backward through the years—in memoriam. To bring out the effect of an accompanying trailer showing the remaining veterans of the G. A. R., and the return of the World War in triumphal march down Fifth Avenue, spots of red, white and blue on the canopy stage ceiling and on the musicians were used. Six minutes for this number.

The soprano solo, "The Moon and I," from the Gilbert and Sullivan comic opera, "The Mikado," was used as the basis of a special set in which six members of the ballet assisted the singer. The back-drop was Japanese landscape and properties included blossom trees at either side of the stage. Singer in correct costume was kneeling on a cushion center stage and on each side of her were three of the ballet also in costume. Effects included a five-foot moon, water ripples and clouds. Lights were light pink, light blue and light green. Four minutes for this presentation.

Following the Mark Strand Topical Review came a "Popular Revuette" as follows: "Yearning," a soprano solo; "Ukulele Lady," a contralto number; "The Melody That Made You Mine," a basso solo; "Dog on the Piano," a piano number; "Merry Widow Waltz" by the premiere danseuse and her partner; "Opera a la Carte" by the xylophonist of the orchestra; and "Florida" by the Ensemble. As a back-drop the gold draw curtains were used with a pinao to the left and xylophone to the right. For the closing number, "Florida," the draw curtains opened showing a California landscape with orange trees to the foreground. Oranges on the trees had lights inside which were light for a strong finish. This presentation took up 14 minutes.

Held Up Business on Charley's Aunt

Although J. M. McClure, of the Franklin theatre, Oakland, Calif., had "Charley's Aunt" booked for three weeks, he did not advertise the fact. Wednesday of the first week the copy read "only four days more," and even Friday morning the papers carried "a two-days'" line. Friday evening he turned loose fifty small boys to work the residential section calling extras and adding that "Charley's Aunt" was held over at the Franklin.

Five autos, manned by observers, followed the boys to see that they stuck to the job and also to bail them out in case of an arrest. Several of them were taken to the station house and immediately bailed out, with a news story on Saturday to help things along.

The result was that the second week's business was only a few dollars short of the opening week, and the third week there was only a slight drop below the second. He helped the third week along with a mail campaign. As a result "Charley's Aunt" played to more persons than any other attraction in the history of the house.

VINTON SHOLL BOUGHT THESE SANS GENE WINDOWS WITH COUNTERFEIT MONEY

The "gold" Sans Gene coins, supplied through exchanges, were given a druggist and a typewriter and record store, and one coin was given with each purchase. The typewriter window also hooked to the Liberty magazine's offer of a prize for a story for Miss Swanson. This is of one of the Used for the Empire Theatre, San Antonio.

A First National Release

A FLASHY SHADOW BOX ON SALLY FROM DON NICHOLS

Used in Durham, N. C. The box consists of a front, a middle section and a backing, with a cutout of Sally in ballet costume. The four stills in the corners are separately boxed and lighted from behind with special lamps. The main lighting was red and white.

Thundering Herd Broke All Records

Hooking up with about everything in town gave Ralph Noble a new record for the Palace Theatre, McAlester, Okla. He smashed everything in sight with The Thundering Herd.

He started his posting three weeks in advance, with a number of one-sheet cutouts affixed to business buildings in addition to his regular stands. He also had two stock banners which were perambulated to all the nearby towns before being used for the lobby display. A buffalo cutout, also intended for the lobby, was displayed in the foyer two weeks ahead.

Several window hooks were used, including one with a ten-cent store, which advertised "a thundering herd of bargains," adding that buffalo nickels would work wonders. The store did so well on the sale that it is open for other hooks, though previously tie-ins had been refused.

A special prologue of Indian dances was staged by the dramatic coach of the High School, using girls from the classes, and this, of course, was fully advertised to the schools.

Even more important was a special Saturday morning matinee at a ten-cent admission, when half an hour of the program was devoted to a music memory contest conducted by the Supervisor of Music in the public schools. This was Music Week and he was glad to frame the program of selections and judge the contest, a prize being given in each grade. Some 400 children attended.

A pass was given the Commander of the Legion to be given some member attending a meeting just prior to the opening, and this gave a lot of advertising for the small investment.

A bank was hooked to a display of buffalo nickels, and several stores made fine displays of stills.

Two fine looking boys in the uniforms of West Point cadets were on duty in front of the Tivoli Theatre, Chattanooga, during the recent run of Classmates and they helped C. B. Stiff get the receipts he thought he should on this picture.

Had Novel Folder for Broken Laws

A. C. Kadlowec, of the Orpheum Theatre, Akron, Ohio, got out a novel folder for Broken Laws.

A drive had been started against Jaywalking, and the entire town was sitting up and taking notice. Mr. Kadlowec got out a 5 by 6-inch folder, in three folds, which gave the traffic signal lights in colors. This made a four-color job, since three colors of lights are used in Akron, but the interest excited in the folder was so great that the folder was well worth its cost. And the story was so simply told that anyone could get the idea at a glance, where the most elaborate newspaper explanation would have been confusing.

The connection, of course, was the fact that you were breaking the law when you disobeyed or ignored the traffic lights. Only one of the six pages carried an advertisement for the picture, but that was all that was needed.

The folder carried the endorsement of the Director of Safety.

Full Lobby Front Costs Only $4.25

M. W. Larmour, of the National Theatre, Graham, Texas, sends in a sketch of a very nice lobby he built on Monsieur Beaucaire at a cost of only $4.25. He does not figure the labor cost as he and his partner did all of the work.

His items were thirty cents' worth of heavy wrapping paper for a banner, two dollars' worth of compoboard, fifty cents' worth of paint and forty-five cents for a three-sheet.

A Wrapper Banner

The wrapping paper banner ran across the top of the lobby. Below was a false front with two arched entrances with a solid panel in the centre with a heart-shaped opening. One foot back of the opening was a cutout of Valentino and the girl from the three-sheet, mounted on a flat backing and lighted by concealed lights, the cutout mounted a couple of inches in front of the backing and not pasted to it.

The entire structure was done in yellow, lavender and green to match the heralds on this production, and for less than five dollars he had a display that got everyone's attention and stressed the value of the offering. And it was all built so that he can use it in whole or part on other pictures.

Hung Four Pages

Generally a hanger is limited as to copy, but down in St. Louis the Kings and Rivoli theatres put out a four-page milk bottle hanger on Oh Doctor, working with Will Foster, of the National Dairy Association.

The basis of the hanger was the fact that both Denny and Miss LaPlante advocated milk as a food and tonic, and this fact was also taken over into the newspapers as well as penetrating practically every kitchen in town, 174,000 folders being used.

The cost was split between the houses and the association.

Bill Goldman, of the theatres, was the prime mover, with his assistant manager, Al Marks, and Maurice Davis, Universalist helping.

A VIVID FRONT ON STRAIGHT THROUGH FROM BIRMINGHAM

The banner was bright red with white letters and arrow and the base of the centerpiece was the same red. The result was a strong selling display produced at small cost by R. M. Kennedy for the Royal Theatre. It made a regular business.

Makes An Event of New Screen

Everything is grist that comes to Edgar Hart's net, to mix metaphors. Recently the Grey Circuit authorized a new screen and stage setting for the Opera House, Augusta, Maine.

Edgar did not merely rig it and then shoot an item into the papers. He made it a big night, with a dedicatory speech by the Mayor in which he dedicated the screen "not only to the amusement but to the education and the help of the young people, that they may become better citizens."

After the dedication the spots were dimmed up blue on the screen, coming to full blue, then dimming out as the red came up, merging through purple to full red. Meanwhile a white letter slide told that the screen was dedicated to the public. Reversing the lights brought it back to the dim blue, upon which the main title of The Girl from the Limberlost was projected.

It not only got standing room for a Friday evening, but it brought the curious for about a week, and everyone thought the picture was better because the screen was better.

HOW GEORGE J. SCHADE PUTS OVER HIS THEATRE

He shares the boards with the current attraction, in this instance Playing With Souls, for he has built his house on the First National Trade Mark. This particular sign adjoins one of Sandusky's most favored restaurants. There are others.

Sells His Balcony for Entertainments

Mike Marks, of the Venango Theatre, Oil City, Pa., has a great idea to shoot along matinee business.

His house is built with a spacious foyer in back of his balcony, with several side apartments. His idea is to sell this upper floor at matinees to clubs or private hostesses who may wish to entertain.

A club may hold a meeting, after which it can entertain, with the members dividing their time between the show and the social side; card parties may be given, or general entertainments, precisely as in the ball rooms of hotels. He even has a couple of maids who are placed at the disposal of the hostess in serving refreshments, checking wraps and performing other services.

The charge for the floor is practically what a hall would cost, and the balcony solves one of the problems of the hostess, who can entertain without disturbing their own homes.

The Venango is the local Paramount theatre and Exploiteer Bill Robson is helping Mr. Marks put the scheme over. If you have the right sort of floor plan upstairs, and a small matinee business, you can follow this scheme with immediate profit and have all the good will and advertisement as extra velvet.

Another Identity

To ensure a large business on The Lighthouse by the Sea, because it was felt that getting them in would send them out pleased, was the Movie Album, staged by the State Theatre, Trenton, N. J.

Slides of well known players, and some not too well known, were flashed on the screen for identification and the fans crowded in to show how well they knew the stars, and went out to root for Rin-Tin-Tin.

It merely transfers a well-known newspaper stunt to the screen, but it works.

HERE'S THE FIRST CIRCUS CRASHER OF THE 1925 SEASON

J. J. Madden, of the Wells Theatre, Norfolk, Va., used it to play tag with the Sparks Circus parade, and told 40,000 people that The Dressmaker from Paris preferred the Hudson sedan, which was ample rental. Note the top banner for the window lookers.

Sold the Goose On a Definition

Feeling that The Goose Hangs High would scarcely sell itself on the title, E. D. Turner, of the Imperial Theatre, Asheville, N. C., offered a ten dollar cash prize and seven ticket prizes for the best suggestion as to the origin of the title. The prize went to the "honk" version. There are two generally favored explanations, both of which are given in the press book.

Asking the origin of the phrase and explaining that the adage merely suggested the happy ending of an engrossing story, Mr. Turner managed to get considerable interest in the play itself for his ten dollar investment, and the newspaper space alone was worth many times that cost.

A plaster-of-paris goose on a shelf above the entrance was one of his lobby stunts, but we are still waiting to hear from the perambulating goose on this title.

Geese on the street have been used on a number of other titles, but one seems to have tried it on this most appropriate subject.

One real help to Mr. Turner's campaign was an editorial style advertisement in the society section.

Adapted Poster

The Tower Theatre, St. Paul, got out a very strong one sheet in red on white, using the Los Angeles poster copy for Excuse Me. The originals were 24-sheet size, but that did not prevent the Tower from realizing that the copy would be just as good in a smaller size, and it got a fine result, particularly as it had an exceptionally bright red.

This is the copy which lists the outstanding comedy hits of past years and makes Excuse Me, the hit for 1925. It's good copy and will work just as well in a newspaper space as on a 24-sheet.

Most managers have used the laughing record for lobby work, but E. A. Zorn, of the Stratford Theatre, Poughkeepsie, put most of his advertising material on Charley's Aunt in the windows of an empty store and shot the laughing record through the transom, to gain attention. He got it—also the business.

A COMBINATION CUTOUT AND STILL FRAME FROM TURNER

Jack Turner, this time, used for The Crowded Hour at the Gala Theatre, Birmingham, Ala. The high coloring of the lithograph gets attention to the frame of stills where the photographs alone might be passed with only a casual glance.

Used Airplane Map for The Air Mail

E. B. Roberts, of the Majestic Theatre, Austin, Tex., struck a novel lead on The Air Mail. He induced the Statesman to print a sectional map of the city as seen from an airplane, and prizes were given those making the most correct and neatest assembly.

This stunt is not as simple as it sounds, for the sections were pretty much alike and it took careful joining to get them pasted correctly. There were $7.50 and ten pairs of tickets for prizes and there were comparatively few correct pasteups in the hundreds of replies received.

The same newspaper also collaborated in a model airplane contest made by boys or girls under 16. The title of the picture had to be painted on the fuselage, and the seventy-five models entered were used for a lobby display. Each entrant was given a ticket with ticket praises for the best.

The model plane idea has been very generally used through the southwest and with decided success.

Using Advance Books

Most exhibitors use more or less elaborate announcement books, similar to their special announcements in the trade papers. Harry F. Storin, of the Leroy Theatre, Pawtucket, R. I., is reminded by the appearance of this season's crop that last year he got extra books from Goldwyn. These were pasted with labels to the effect that they contained information as to coming attractions, and were placed on the table in the ladies' rest rooms, where they could be looked over by patrons as they rested up. Probably it will not be possible to get many extra copies, but even your own copy will interest visitors, but put a "Please do not remove" plea.

Had Special Boxes for These Kisses

Candy makers have been kept busy in Southern Enterprises towns of late, for right on top of a general drive on candy kisses for Too Many Kisses came A Kiss in the Dark. The results were so good on the first experiment that most manufacturers came in gladly on the second deal.

Most of the managers used ordinary paper bags, but D. Roscoe Faunce, of the Strand Theatre, Birmingham, Ala., found he could get small pasteboard boxes, specially printed, at a trifling cost, and he had 5,000 made up, printed all six sides for A Kiss in the Dark, and put them out through three attractive girls.

This cost more than paper bags, but the slight additional cost brought in much more in effect, and well repaid the additional outlay. They looked like more, so they suggested more.

Another Warning

With all newspaper humorists working overtime on the automobile petting parties idea, H. C. Farley, of the Empire Theatre, Montgomery, Ala., horned in for Too Many Kisses.

With the approval of the Montgomery Safety Council he put out a hundred tack cards with the copy: "Bulletin. Montgomery Safety Council. Maybe the cause of many accidents is Too Many Kisses. See Richard Dix in Too Many Kisses. Empire, beginning Monday."

A Dog Story

Jack Burk, of the Baker (Oreg.) Theatre, hired a tramp to perambulate the streets, calling out: "Watch Out, The Thundering Herd is Coming."

The man was arrested and arraigned, but Burke got him out by explaining that the man was a ballyhoo and not a lunatic. The story got into the news items, though we do not believe that any policeman would have arrested the man as insane, when The Thundering Herd was being advertised unless Burke saw him first. Just goes to show you can dog a story into the news items through the police court.

Ben Amsterdam worked a perambulator for Johnny Hines in "The Early Bird" at the Colonial theatre, Philadelphia, in the shape of a huge rooster masquerade costume.

Most costumers have one or more such dresses on rental, and the stunt gets attention because it is unusual.

Advertising Features Real Business Boost

Most advertising films have a comeback like the hind leg of a mule, but one advertising picture raised business 28 per cent on its tryout in Beloit, Wis., and really was a local sensation.

This was My Home Town, with Wesley Barry, which is sponsored by the makers of about twenty national products. The idea back of the picture is trade in your home town, and the picture was brought to Beloit by the Lions, an international business club.

Lions Roared Loudly

T. P. Ronan, of the Majestic Theatre, a Balaban & Katz house, agreed to run it with his regular feature, and the Lions, in conjunction with the local merchants and municipal officials, arranged a parade that included everything from the G. A. R. to the Boy Scouts and which was headed by the Mayor and his official staff, supported by a company of the Wisconsin National Guard.

There was a window trimming contest, a school children's essay contest and numerous other side issues and all centered about the Majestic where for four days there was a big matinee business and a nightly turnaway. The answer seems to be that the picture was frankly propaganda and not offered in the guise of a feature, and so it not only got over, but was put over by the interested merchants.

Looking for Ray

Nyman Kessler, of the Atlantic, Mass., theatre, sends in a throwaway card offering $500 reward for Raymond McKee, supposed to have escaped from the Atlanta penitentiary. It's an advertisement for "The Silent Accuser," and depends on the reward line for its punch. He plays safe by throwing up the title, house and date. Sometimes it is better to hold these down, so it looks less like a theatre advertisement, but it all depends, and if you play up the data, you are likely to get it over before it is thrown down.

Mr. Kessler gets out a very neat little four pager program each week and makes sure they get into the homes. All it needs is a little talk about the house; which is just as important as the shows.

This Hook-up Won

Joe Green, of the Lafayette theatre, St. Louis, arranged with a nearby florist to give him a floral lobby for Easter in return for a slide and a lobby card. The florist supplied about $95 worth of blooms.

But he got his money back, for the lobby brought him such a rush of business that he shut up his shop before four o'clock Saturday afternoon because he had nothing left in stock and no chance to get more. Now he's looking for another chance to work in with the Lafayette.

Minuet Was This America Prologue

Mrs. Howard S. Record, of the Palace Theatre, Cambridge, Ill., used a novel prologue to precede America during its showing at her 1,200 town. She took a boy and girl each from the rooms of the second, fifth, seventh and eighth grades in the public school, taught them a minuet, devised colonial costumes; powdered wigs and all, and used them to introduce the picture.

Practically every school child in town, and most of their parents came to see the picture, and Mrs. Record says she can commend the idea to other small town theatres.

This naturally gets all of the children, and if you get them they will sell the idea to their elders. She adds that the picture more than made good.

Doubled Up

For "The Thief of Bagdad" Charles E. Sasseen, of the Criterion theatre, Enid, Okla., cut a 24-sheet so that he got the large head of Fairbanks and the lettered portion for a banner.

These were set on either side of the stage the previous week and spotlighted before each show. Then they were taken out to the front of the house as the basis of the lobby decoration during the run.

HOW THE BIJOU THEATRE, TRENTON, N. J., PUT OVER THE GREAT CIRCUS MYSTERY

The cages contained compo-board cutouts of the animals and looked more realistic than cutouts pasted against the backing. The bars were some inches in front of the cutout. There was a "lecturer" and several clowns for the ballyhoo and the first chapter of the serial went over—big. It cost $19.

Good Type Ads Are Cliff Lewis Pride

Answering our appeal for good all-type ads, Cliff Lewis, of the Strand Theatre, Syracuse, N. Y., sends in about half a pound of very nice examples. And Cliff's work really is all type, for with the exception of the signature cut these are all set from the machine or the case, with the exception of the title lines, which Cliff chops out of the press book mats. And Cliff knows a lot about the display value of white space, which helps him to get them over. We are going to take a little extra space to show six examples of his work, believing that they will be more interesting as a series than if presented individually. The first two are the same general form, but one carries much more type than the other. We like better the display for The Goose Hangs High, in which the supporting features are merely lined across the two sixty lines double. This is about 4¼ inches deep, a pleasant proportioning. We think that two or three lines telling that the cropped. This belongs to some ornamentation, and could have been cut out with a chisel after the cast was made. Possibly the compositor was afraid to cut in too close, but it is more likely that he did not notice the line until it was too late to make the change. It does not matter much, for the title is very clearly displayed. You will note that the subfeatures are displayed in upper and lower instead of all capitals. Trust Cliff for that. The Sackcloth and Scarlet space is half an inch deeper, but the same width. This is due to the fact that he uses both star and titles; that latter in a cut and the former in straight display. Like the other space, he holds in from the border, knowing that to set straight to the inner panel rule would be to defeat his display. Here he mentions the comedy and orchestra, but panels an announcement of an organ novelty for which he desires to gain a little extra distinction. Merely played, this would be an acceptable musical number, but advertised, it becomes a production and is received with far more respect. We like this display better than the other because it conveys the suggestion of more show. Straight liners somehow suggest that there is nothing much to talk about. There is a take-it-or-leave-it suggestion that does not make for the best selling. It gives larger display but display alone is not all. This Goose advertisement is the only one of a larger batch in which the unadorned titles are used. It is shown here for the sake of contrast. The Friday advertisement for Dix in Too Many Kisses is a scant two threes, but it is put over without trouble in that space and with three lines of selling talk in addition to the announcement of the closing run. We do not care so much for that heavy cutoff rule between the two sections. A full rule, if used, should be much lighter than the outside bor-

better, but with the coming attraction paneled in three point, a rule is scarcely necessary. But the big point is that Cliff gets a lot of display for his 80 lines. He gets as much as many advertisers get in three times the space. The following day he stretches to nearly four inches double for the opening, and adds the supporters, giving a two line plugger for the news weekly, knowing that there are many persons who regard the news events as of equal importance with the feature. The average manager loses a lot of money through regarding the news reel as a filler. Ralph Ruffner was in town recently and the thing that seemed to appeal to him most strongly was an itemized program of the news reel in the lobby of the Colony Theatre, a B. S. Moss house. He lists his items and finds that often a man will buy the whole show on the strength of a single news reel feature. In so small a space Cliff cannot itemize the subjects, but he does sell the idea that the news reel is worth while. In this space he has one cut for the star and another for the title, with a type "in". It looks like a single cut. Here the inside rule work is dispensed with and the display comes from setting thirteen ems in a 25 em space. It gets more than ample display and in this small space is as good as though there were white top and bottom, too. One of the best of these spaces is that on The Swan. This is 3½ inches double, with a panel thirteen ems wide, with ears. These do not destroy the white space value and on the other hand get unusual value through this placement. The remainder of the copy is set almost across the space, for the white above is all that is needed. Part of this display comes from the short title, but more from the form used, and while the second example is a bit more elegant, this is as sightly and gives a chance for more talk. The last example is a return to the inner panel idea with the letters of the title

Quick Work by Papayanakos Prevents Theatre Being Closed

After running motion picture theatres in Northern New York for years and incidentally acquiring a handsome little pile, no wonder Alec Papayanakos, owner of the American Theatre in Canton, received the jolt of his life a few days ago when a State Trooper politely informed him that he was violating the law by running his theatre without a certificate of compliance that is necessary under the New York State Labor Law. To make matters worse, the State Trooper swore out a warrant for Mr. Papayanakos and the theatre was ordered closed on Saturday afternoon. But Mr. Papayanakos had not been in business for years without being able to do a bit of quick thinking.

Justice of the Peace Crary sought and obtained a delay until Monday, with the result that the house remained open on Saturday night. Mr. Papayanakos lost no time in taking the train out of Canton on Sunday and by Monday morning he had procured the necessary and all important certificate. He wired back that the certificate was in his possession and the theatre was allowed to remain open. It seems that Mr. Papayanakos had bought the theatre some three years or so ago and had been conducting it ever since under the impression that he was complying with the law. Several inspections were made during the time, but never had his attention been called to the necessity of having the necessary certificate of compliance.

Remembering her home town in its hour of need, Doris Kenyon, the well known star, sent a check for $100 to the fire sufferers in Ausable Forks. Contributions have been received from all sections of the country. Miss Kenyon's brother, who is a dentist and a former state assemblyman, lost his garage in the fire but managed to save his residence.

The big surprise of the week came when Jake Golden, former newspaperman, who has been making Harmanus-Bleecker Hall in Albany a most pronounced success with double features, was transferred to the Griswold in Troy and Joe Saperstein, who has been handling the Griswold, was shifted to the Hall. Whether the idea is to brace up the Griswold during the weeks to come in anticipation of a possible fight for patronage with the American, controlled by the Strand interests, and which is said to be slated to reopen this fall as a double feature house, can only be conjectured. No sooner did Mr. Golden take command of the Griswold than he started right in with a display of ideas to attract patronage. For instance there will be a series of five dance contests, the winner of the final to secure a professional engagement. Mr. Golden also secured the Milk Fund pictures, exclusively, for Troy,

Well, John Garry, manager of the Empire in Glens Falls, has "gone and done it," having been married last Saturday and is now away on his honeymoon. Alex Sayles, who handles the Clinton Square in Albany, is looking after the Empire while Mr. and Mrs. Garry are honeymooning.

H. E. Flack, an old timer who has been running the Star in Potsdam, has been forced out of business. Telegrams received along Film Row during the week told the story, Flack cancelling his bookings and stating that the theatre which he had leased had been sold without his knowledge to his competitor and that his exhibitor days were over on June 7.

Although William Smalley has most of his theatres in comparatively small places, he doesn't forget for a moment that patrons in such places are just as critical as those in the larger cities. When Smalley bought the Milk Fund pictures for his circuit, he decided that he would show them on Sunday at his Mohawk house. He kept a man in Albany from 10 o'clock in the morning until 5 o'clock that afternoon, awaiting the arrival of a special messenger bringing the pictures from New York City.

Who will appear in "The Unholy Three" and, later, "Time, the Comedian," for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

Wayne H. Hadcock, for many years proprietor of the Victoria Theatre in Watertown, has just sold a half interest in the house to John Ludlow, of the theatrical firm of Graham and Ludlow. The house will be redecorated throughout and when opened will be under the personal management of Mr. Ludlow, who in years past handled both the Bijou and the Wonderland in Watertown.

Ben Apple, owner of the King in Troy, will don his glad rags on June 14, for on that day Ben will be one of the principal figures at the wedding of Sadie Epstein, cashier of the King for some time past. David Epstein will succeed her at the theatre.

Louis Buettner, who has just been named as chairman of the Albany Zone and who hails from Cohoes, has disposed of his theatre in Mechanicsville and now has but the houses in Hudson Falls and Cohoes.

The theatre which has been running at Silver Bay, with L. Spellman at the head, closes June 15 but will reopen in the early fall.

The Rosewind Theatrical Enterprises, which in other words means Jimmy Rose and H. C. Windeknecht, now running four houses, will branch out a bit further, running a theatre at Queechy Lake on Tuesday and Thursday nights during the summer. Under the present arrangement, Rose is spending much of his time at the Columbia in Rensselaer, while Windeknecht devotes his evenings to the Bijou in Troy. Double features each Friday night are to prevail at the Bijou throughout the summer, and there will be no let up in the 4 o'clock shows each Saturday afternoon for the children.

It looks as though William Benton intends to make every minute count in erecting his new theatre in Mechanicsville. Last week he notified a company dealing in theatre equipment that he would need a couple of projection machines for Mechanicsville within the next two months.

Kansas City May Soon Have Another Big First Run House

Kansas City, Kans., a town of about 135,000 people, which has only one big downtown first run theatre, may soon have a second. Edward J. Grubel and Frank C. Grubel, owners of the Electric Theatre, the town's only big house, just purchased a site of 125 feet facing Minnesota avenue, between Seventh and Eighth streets, which will be reserved as a theatre site. Work of constructing a $60,000 two-story building will start at once, but the theatre phase of the plans have not yet been completed. The purchase price of the property was $100,000.

Following the leasing of the Globe Theatre, one of Kansas City's largest down town houses, last week by the Richlyn Amusement Company, the theatre has announced a change in policy, under the management of N. J. Flynn. A 2½ hour show will be divided up into 1½ hours devoted to a first run picture, twenty minutes of vaudeville and forty-five minutes of stock musical comedy.

A 24-foot frontage, comprising the north quarter of the site upon which the Newman Theatre, Kansas City's largest first run house, stands, was purchased this week by George M. Sittenfeld from the heirs of the McGonegal estate for $200,000. The ground is under lease to Frank L. Newman of the Newman Theatre, from whom an annual rental of $12,500 will be received.

Detroit

Robbers who were evidently unacquainted with the show business broke into the Oakman and the Strand theatres on the hottest night of the year and were disappointed with the smallest receipts of the season at each step. Police apprehended one.

Ben Cohen, general manager of Ben and Lou Cohen, Inc., has recovered sufficiently from an accident that threatened the use of his arm, to leave the hospital. Cohen was driving his motor boat to his summer home up Detroit river when a huge wave smashed the windshield and sprayed glass over him.

Captain Charles Nungesser, who appeared in person at the Broadway Strand last week in connection with the showing of "The Sky Raider," was the guest of Captain Eddie Rickenbacker, Detroit motor manufacturer and the American flying ace of the late war. "Rick" and Nungesser gave several flying exhibitions.

Among the out-of-town exhibitors in the Kansas City market last week were: Jack Moore, Olive Theatre, St. Joseph, Mo.; C. E. Montrey, Park, St. Joseph, Mo.; C. L. McVey, Dreamland, Herrington, Kas.; Ben Levy, Hippodrome, Joplin, Mo.; H. Ulamperl, Gem, Topeka, Kas.; Lee Miller, Best, Topeka, Kas.; Laurence Brenninger, Topeka, Kas.; Ed Frazier, Pittsburg, Kas.; Herb Welsh, Atchison, Kas.; M. W. Reincke, St. Joseph, Mo.; C. M. The Niagara Falls Power Company has purchased the International Theatre property in Niagara Falls, formerly owned by John F. McDonald. The plan calls for the remodeling of the building for the use of the Niagara Gorge Railroad Company and its associated Gray Bus line. The International is one of the oldest theatres in the Cataract City and has had picture and legitimate policies on and off for many years. Eddie Hayes, former Buffalo First National manager, at one time managed the house.

Representatives of the Parent-Teacher Association who reviewed "The Blue Bird," the feature of the Saturday morning special motion picture show for children the past week, declared it to be one of the best pictures ever shown to the young folk of Kodak Town. Last Saturday's show was the last until fall. Ever since their inauguration six weeks ago, the shows have drawn audiences which ranged from 2,00 to the capacity of the house. Shea's Hippodrome in Buffalo will inaugurate the same kind of performance this fall.

The efficiency of the Eastman Theatre, Rochester, cooling system was demonstrated in remarkable fashion during the recent hot wave. On two days when the official weather report showed a temperature of 90 outside, the thermometers in the theatre auditorium recorded only 72, a difference of 18 degrees.

Allan S. Moritz has changed the name of the Lumberg Theatre in Niagara Falls to the Ritz.

Sam Warner of Warner Brothers was in Buffalo last week end. He had a conference with C. W. Anthony, local branch manager and inspected the Buffalo exchange.

C. L. Bird of the Becker Theatre Supply Company is celebrating the arrival at his home of a nine pound boy. C. L. hated to see the boss put one over on him by getting a larger family than he could show.

Charles Kimberly of Buffalo has sold the Weinhart Theatre in Wayland, N. Y., to the Theodore Post Corporation.

Hits Fire Alarm

The fire alarm whistle in Haverhill makes such a terrific din that a woman leaving the Lafayette Theatre was so startled by its sound that she fell down a flight of stairs. And that's why Frank Miller, manager of the theatre, which is opposite the fire department headquarters, demads that the curfew "toot" of the whistle every night at 9:45 o'clock be stopped. Mr. Miller told the city council that during tense scenes in photodramas the siren would sound and raise people right out of their seats and consequently the enjoyment for the rest of the evening was gone.

Using his pencil and paper, Jake did a bit of adding, made out the deposit slip, went to the bank, only to be informed that he lacked $11 of the supposed $5,000. The next scene shows Jake digging into his jeans and making good the eleven. Last Sunday night was a big one at the Rosenthal home, with no less than 35 relatives "dropping in." The house fairly bulged and the overflow occupied the back veranda.

Exhibitors throughout this territory are beginning to take more and more to the idea of reporting their troubles to the Albany Zone, which maintains a secretary constantly in attendance as a go-between and which does away with many a trip to Albany. Several complaints over shipments were received last week and adjusted with the exchanges.

Mr. and Mrs. Buckley were in New York City during the past week.

Edward M. Fay, owner of Fay's Theatre in Providence, has pledged the enthusiastic support of every theatre owner in Rhode Island to the "Know Rhode Island!" campaign to publicize the state. In his announcement, he emphasized the fact that the theatre is a community center.

Cleveland

J. S. Royster, representing Will Hays office, arrived in the city, June 6, to make preparations for the campaign on the Greater Movie Season, for August. A meeting of all exhibitors and exchange men has been called for the Statler Hotel, Cleveland, the afternoon of Tuesday, June 16.

Jack Kuhn, prominent theatre man of Cleveland, manager of the Stullman Theatre and purchasing agent for Loew's Ohio Theatres, Inc., died suddenly in the stillman recently. He had been in ill health for over a year. Jack Kuhn came to Cleveland from the New York Loew offices eight years ago. He had a large circle of friends here.

Maurice Safier, Cleveland manager of the United Artists, has gone to Hot Springs, for a vacation and in order to regain his health.

M. P. Brown, manager and owner of the Lorain Theatre, Cleveland, has decided to enlarge the house during the summer months.

Truly Wowish!

Just imagine, if you can, Manager Matt Saunders and his assistant, Ted Holt, of S. Z. Poli's Palace Theatre in Bridgeport shoveling snow on Friday, June 5, one of the hottest days of that week's torrid wave. Of course, Matt and Ted didn't do that—in real life. But one of the Bridgeport newspapers had a cartoon, designed to show them digging out the snow from the stage entrance at the Palace.

Plans Being Prepared for Big Picture House in Greensburg, Pa.

Construction on Greensburg's, Pa., newest building enterprise, one of the largest in years is now under way as M. Manos has placed a large group of workmen tearing down the buildings on Pennsylvania avenue to make way for his handsome new theatre, which will be erected there at once.

Plans and specifications for the structure, which will pronounce it one of the finest in this section of the country, between Philadelphia and Cleveland, are now in the hands of contractors. It is expected that the construction proper of the new building will begin in about five weeks, it being estimated that it will take that time to raze the several old properties.

The building, which will be of brick construction, will be faced with terra cotta. The entrance to the theatre will be on East Otterman street, with a lobby of unusual length and beauty of design. A mezzanine, of contrasting beauty, being approached by a marble stairway are only a few of the handsome decorative features planned.

The basement floor will be devoted to the billiard room and bowling alleys. The present Strand Sweets and Strand Theatre will not be touched, as the new building will go over part of the present structure.

The new theatre will seat 2,000 persons. The Strand will be renovated and improvements made in it also, among them being a new organ, already ordered and in the process of construction at the factories.

The opening date of the new theatre has been set for September 1, 1926.

Rowland and Clark's Manor Theatre in the Squirrel Hill District, often referred to as "Pittsburgh's Perfect Playhouse," celebrated its Third Anniversary Week, the first week in June. Manager George J. Reister provided his patrons with an elaborate program every day, and in spite of the record heat wave in the eastern part of the country, in which Pittsburgh suffered intensely, business was above average.

Mrs. Henry W. Gauding, wife of the owner of the Lincoln Theatre, Mt. Washington, is recovering her health at the Passavant Hospital, after having undergone a serious operation.

Fielding K. O'Kelly, manager of the Metropolitan Theatre, Morgantown, W. Va., is the first exhibitor in the United States to sign a contract which entitled him to play all of the Pathe comedy releases for the season 1925-26.

Directors of the Strand Theatre Corporation of Winsted have elected Harry M. Gale, formerly manager of the Winsted Opera House, president of the company in place of Abraham Davidson, well known exhibitor of Norwich. Mills T. Carter was elected secretary and treasurer in place of P. J. Darcey, resigned. The foundations for the theatre, which is being erected here, have been completed. Th corporation is capitalized at $125,000.

Adelard Mouir, building contractor of Putnam, is seeking to recover $14,500 from the estate of his uncle, the late Nazaire Peloquin. The claimant charges that his uncle had promised to pay him whatever amount he could save him over another contractor's price on the building of the Victory Theatre block and the remodeling and improving of another building, which he owned in Putnam. Mr. Mouir claims he saved $10,000 on the work. He asks the additional $4,500 for advice and other detail work for his uncle, for which, it is claimed, the deceased promised to pay.

A summer stock company will be installed at the Palace Theatre in Norwich, a switch from a policy of vaudeville and films.

Success of Henry Duffy Brings Praise from Frisco Exhibitors

Henry Duffy, who conducts the Alcazar and President theatres, San Francisco, does not show moving pictures, but he has made such an unqualified success with these houses in the presentation of stock attractions that exhibitors are taking off their hats to him as being a leader in the theatrical field. He came to this city a little more than a year ago from Montreal with a little money and a big supply of enthusiasm and took over the Alcazar Theatre, which had fallen into a rut.

This soon became one of the most successful theatres of the city and the young manager-producer acquired a little more money and at the same time retained his enthusiasm. He bought the Plaza Theatre on McAllister street, acquiring title to property and all, remodeled the house, which had been idle most of the time for seven years, and opened with the same type of plays found successful at the Alcazar, comedy and melodrama. The President Theatre, as he calls the house is now doing a better business than the Alcazar. All of which, exhibitors point out, goes to prove that a successful business can be built up when you give the public what it wants at a price it can afford to pay.

KATHLEEN KEY
Who has an important role in "Ben Hur." She will appear in other big Metro-Goldwyn pictures

The Warfield Theatre has added another to its long list of world premieres, the latest being the first showing anywhere of "The Unholy Three," starring Lon Chaney. This is being shown here three months in advance of its regular release.

L. E. Doane, manager of the Cameo Theatre, San Francisco, has been offering the patrons of this house some interesting novelties of late. One of the most important of these was a film made in Chinatown.

Alternations are being made in the Francesca Theatre on Market street, San Francisco, where a large Leathurby-Smith organ is to be installed.

The Mystic Theatre at Petaluma, Cal., has been redecorated and new seating facilities installed by its owner, Dr. J. A. McNear.

Improvements are being made in the Opal Theatre, Hollister, Cal., conducted by Ed. Stark, the work including the reseating of the house.

Will F. Krahn, of the Beach-Krahn Amusement Co., Berkeley, Cal., is exhibiting a lot of pardonable pride these days, being a happy grandfather, a baby girl having been born to Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Krahn.

The Stanford Theatre of Ellis J. Arkush, at Palo Alto, Cal., is nearing completion and the opening date has been set for the second week in June.

Everett Howell, manager of the Monache Theatre, Porterville, Cal., was recently called before Judge W. B. Haines on a charge of having permitted the blocking of a rear exit.

The "bicycling" of film in the territory around Fort Bragg, Cal., a practice which had its beginning before railroads were built into the redwood district, has finally been broken up and all houses in that field are now buying individually from San Francisco film exchanges.

A new theatre will be erected at an early date at Concord, Cal., by H. Sturcke, Jr.

Cincinnati

The Allen Theatre, Cleveland, one of the chain of Loew's Ohio Theatres, and among the largest first-run houses in the city has closed for the summer, in accordance with the usual custom. Philip Spitalny, conductor of the Allen orchestra, arranged a jazz week musical program that echoed a rousing requiem for the theatre's demise for the season. The Loew office has also announced a summer reduction in admission prices for the Stillman Theatre, another first-run house, although there will be no change in the bookings or musical programs during the summer months.

Among the newest Cincinnati "houses" to open is the Forest Airdome, which is being conducted in connection with the Forest Theatre, Avondale, a fashionable suburb. A special musical program was given and souvenirs distributed on the opening day.

Simon Leobold, of Portsmouth, Ohio, has purchased the New and Popular Theatres, New Boston, Ohio, from J. S. Davis. Davis, however, will continue to operate the Westland Theatre, Portsmouth.

The Palace Theatre, Hamilton, recently played Dorothy Bush and her Cinema Girl Revue, together with a jazz orchestra, as an added attraction to the regular picture program. The Palace is also offering until August 15, ten 40 cent tickets for $2.50.

The foyer of the Capitol Theatre, Cincinnati, is fairly beaming under a flood of light reflected from a battery of new chandeliers which have just been installed. Each one contains approximately 2,600 separate pieces of glass, and is equipped with a white and blue combination of colors which is highly effective. Besides the Capitol, other Libson houses, which include the Walnut, Strand, Family and Lyric, have donned their summer attire of cool cretonne draperies and light-colored seat covers.

Announcement is made that the Jefferson Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio, which is the home of road attractions during the regular season, will not be opened as a movie house during the summer. Present plans provide for booking Keith-Albee unit vaudeville for next season.

Henley Starts New Play

Hobart Henley has begun work on Cosmo Hamilton's "An Exchange of Wives" at the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios. This thoroughly modern story has been adapted to the screen by Frederic and Fanny Hatton, and has Lew Cody, Eleanor Boardman and Renee Adoree in the featured roles.

George K. Arthur plays opposite Norma Shearer in Monta Bell's production, "Lady of the Night," for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

Canada

The Metropolitan Theatre at Regina, Sask., formerly the big Allen Theatre of that city has been re-opened by the present owner, George Broder, after it had been closed for a number of months while it was under lease to Paramount Western Corporation. Following the expiry of the lease, Mr. Broder threw open the house with success and it is now under the direct management of Major J. Graham, who has been in charge of the Grand Theatre, Regina, for some time.

John T. Fiddes, one of the real pioneer moving picture exhibitors of the West in Canada, has become manager of the Playhouse at Winnipeg, Manitoba, which offers a combination program of pictures and vaudeville. Mr. Fiddes made his start as a theatre singer in Winnipeg some fifteen years ago and since then has managed theatres in Montreal, Toronto and other cities.

The Metropolitan Theatre at Winnipeg, Manitoba, closed May 30 and will re-open Civic Holiday, August 3, still under the management of Walter F. Davis, formerly of Alabama. The Metropolitan, which was formerly one of the largest film houses operated by the Allens of Toronto, will be remodelled at a cost of $50,000 and when it is re-opened it will offer a combination policy of pictures and Pantages vaudeville. An important conference was held in Winnipeg, attended by Mr. Davis, who has directed the theatre for the past 10 months, and H. M. Thomas, Western Division manager for Famous Players before the change in the theatre was adopted.

Walter Deering, one of the early exhibitors of Winnipeg, Manitoba, has been appointed manager of the Starland Theatre in Winnipeg, and T. Walmsley, recently of Van couver, B. C., has taken Mr. Deering's place at the College Theatre.

D. H. Coplan, formerly of St. John, N. B., and Montreal, has been appointed manager of the Imperial Theatre, Ottawo, Ontario, by his father A. H. Coplan, who is the proprietor of both the Imperial and Princess theatres in the Canadian Capital. The Imperial Theatre was operated for many years by the late Harry Brouse of First National fame and A. H. Coplan has had it under his lease for the past six months.

William Green, manager of the Russell Theatre, Ottawa, Ontario, was located on June 4 at Montreal, Quebec, after he had been on the missing list for exactly a month. Mr. Green dropped out of sight without warning and the help of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police was solicited in the matter. It was found that he had been lying sick in Montreal.

Edward Sutherland, Paramount director, who signed a contract to remain with Famous Players-Lasky for five years.

Plan 2,200-Seat Theatre for Chicago; Babylonic in Design

Another theatre is planned for the southeast corner of Thirty-fifth and Halstead Streets, Chicago. It will seat 2,200. The design will be Babylonic and the entire seating capacity will be on the first floor. The ceiling of the new house will be of huge timbers with indirect lighting. The new theatre will have a large stage for presentations and will be equipped to take care of the largest productions.

George Burdick has been made assistant manager of the State Lake Theatre, leaving the Roosevelt Theatre last week to take the new position under Manager Mort Singer.

Lubliner and Trinz have opened the Orchestra Hall, Chicago, with movies for the summer season A. J. Kaufman from the main office is acting as manager during the first week.

Charley Pyle of the Park Theatre at Champaign will have charge of the new Plaza Theatre that is to be erected at Danville, Ill., by the Plaza Hotel management. He will continue to look after the Park Theatre as well as the new house.

Wheaton, Ill., has a fine new movie theatre, thanks to the enterprise of Adam Dernbach and John Deiss. The new house seats 998 persons and is all on one floor with a fine stage. The front is of Gothic design and the house is equipped with the latest projection machines. The old Grand Theatre will be closed and the building turned into stores.

The Hippodrome Theatre at Peoria, Ill., has been closed for the summer season and Edward Harris of the Columbia Theatre has taken over the direction of the Princess Theatre from the Theatre Operating Company at Peoria, Ill. He expects to make some changes in the house soon.

Pete and Fred Schaefer, well known Chicago exhibitors, have returned from their long sojourn abroad and they even included Palestine and Egypt in their travels. Several of their friends were well remembered with gifts which the travelers brought back from abroad with them.

Mrs. Tillie Shlaes has purchased the Gold Theatre Building at 3411 to 3415 West Roosevelt road from Henry Wolf for $141,000. The house has 800 seats and no change will be made in the management.

H. L. Gumbiner of the Gumbiner circuit, Chicago, accompanied by his wife and daughter, have sailed for an extended vacation in Europe. He will look over the movie situation in the various countries he visits and will be away until fall.

Ortenstein and Wells have sold the Willard Theatre on East 51st street, Chicago, to Abraham Cohen, who will make several improvements in the house. He also has the Midway Hippodrome Theatre on Cottage Grove avenue.

Architect J. E. O. Pridmore has finished the plans for the new movie theatre that is to go up at 4042 to 4046 Sheridan road, Chicago, and the house will be built both interior and exterior of Greek design. Ground will be broken soon and it is expected that the house will be ready for opening by April, 1926.

J. C. Borden has sold the Palace Theatre at Lawrenceville, Ill., to G. R. Rentler, who will make some improvements in the house. Mrs. C. B. Gould will also reopen the Phoenix Theatre at Lawrenceville as soon as improvements are completed.

John Milton has sold the President Theatre, Chicago, and will devote his time to the other houses in which he is interested.

Julius Lamm has added the Elite Theatre at Waukegan, Ill., to his chain of theatres and will make some improvements in the house.

Peter Stone has taken over the management of the Idle Hour Theatre at Dexter and will improve the programs of the house.

Goldstein Company Leases Union Theatre in Pittsfield from Cooney

Samuel and Nathan Goldstein, heads of the Goldstein Brothers Amusement Company of Springfield, have leased the Union Square Theatre in Pittsfield from John F. Cooney, owner of the property. The rental is said to be in excess of $10,000 yearly [illegible]. Goldstein will assume control of the Union Square on June 13 and will inaugurate a policy of exclusive motion pictures. They now control and operate in Pittsfield the Colonial Theatre, dramatic stock, and the Palace Theatre, vaudeville and motion pictures. Cooney, who has been an exhibitor for many years, finally has decided to retire from the theatrical business, abandoning plans that he had made to enlarge the Union Square. This theatre has been housing a vaudeville and film policy in opposition to the Goldstein Brothers' Palace Theatre.

The East Boston branch of the Boston postoffice is to be relocated on the site of the Gem Theatre at 52 Meridian street.

The Selwyn Theatre on Park Square, Boston, recently bought by E. M. Statler, the hotel magnate, probably will not be demolished for at least two years. Statler plans a hotel on the site of the theatre. New York and Boston theatrical interests are seeking to negotiate a two-year lease on the Selwyn with the intention of establishing it as a motion picture house.

George Friend, stage director of E. M. Loew's Capitol Theatre in Lynn, has installed a very pretty stage setting, especially appropriate to the summer. In addition to woods scenery, there are a number of pretty boxes filled with artifical flowers. Mrs. Ivy Hunt, manager, likewise has had the lobby decorated with palms and flowers, all tending to give the entrance a cooling effect.

Three large "changeable letter" signs have been installed on the marquee of Loew's Orpheum Theatre in Boston. They should prove highly pleasing to Managing Director M. Douglas Flattery when he sees them upon his return from his European trip.

Los Angeles

Another new theatre to be opened this week was the new San Bernardino House at San Bernardino owned by the West Coast Theatres, Inc. H. L. Hartman will be resident manager. Irvin Talbot has been selected by Manager Newman of the Metropolitan Theatre to be the orchestra leader. The West Coast Theatres, Inc., have announced that the California and Miller will be closed for an indefinite period commencing this week. The West Coast Theatres organization recently took over the California and the Miller theatres from Fred and Roy Miller who built the original houses, and according to the announcement of the West Coast the theatres will remain dark indefinitely.

Denver

The Bighorn Theatre of Greybull, Wyo., and the Rex Theatre of Basin, Wyo., have been sold to Thomas C. Marshall as trustee for an undisclosed principal. Rumors are that the real owner is a well known showman of the Basin district and the new management promises up-to-date theatres in every respect. Mrs. Gertrude McKay has been the former owner and operator of the Bighorn Theatre and Mrs. Isabelle Logan has for many years owned and managed the Rex Theatre of Basin, Wyo.

The new Mena Theatre at Alameda and Pearl streets, Denver is being rapidly constructed and promises to be a modern and up-to-date theatre in every respect. William Menagh the builder is an old showman in the Denver territory having owned and operated the Mystic and Gem theatres, Denver and the Park Theatre, Greeley, Colorado, and the Ault Theatre of Ault, Colorado.

St. Louis

Don Albert, musical director at Loew's State Theatre, St. Louis, Mo., is receiving congratulations on the arrival of a son on June 4. The babe and Mrs. Albert are stopping at St. Luke's Hospital.

Elmer Harris, assistant manager of the Rivoli Theatre, St. Louis, has resigned.

It is also reported that Clarence F. McCarthy, house manager of the Lyric Theatre, East St. Louis, has resigned. Charles Burns recently manager of the Waverly Theatre in Lansdowne, East St. Louis, will succeed him.

Ben Wilson has reopened the theatre at Lovejoy, Ill.

Kinloch Park, St. Louis County, has a new movie house. It is to be known as the Dunbar and will be operated by J. A. Miller.

The houses at Nashville, Ill., and Joppa, Ill., have closed for the Summer.

Nebraska

The Beacon Theatre, new theatre at Thirteenth and Ames Ave., Omaha, was opened formally May 22. It has seating capacity of 520, and is rated as the finest suburban house, save one, in Omaha. It belongs to Creal & Son.

Another new theatre costing in an excess of $1,000,000 will be built in Hollywood by the Hollywood Holding Company. This organization has secured a 99-year lease on the northwest corner of Vine Street and Sunset Boulevard. The property measures 255 feet by 260 feet. The seating capacity will be 1,000. The entrance to the house will extend from Sunset Boulevard.

The business men of Shannon City, Ia., have opened the Star Theatre at that place. A. R. Kramer, who operates the Princess Theatre at Mount Ayr., is manager.

The Lincoln Theatre, a new house built at Lincoln, Neb., by Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has recently had its formal opening. The Nebraska State Journal, daily paper at Lincoln, devoted a special section of twelve pages to the opening. It opened May 18 with "Madame Sans Gene." The house has a seating capacity of 1650.

C. J. Latta, manager of the Empress Theatre at Shenandoah, Ia., came out with some smashing points in a recent talk he made before the Men's Club of the Congregational Church in Shenandoah. He told them that he is just as eager to have clean shows as any other man, as he has a daughter of his own for whose proper raising he is responsible. He said he had paid for a lot of films he never used after he found out they were not up to the standard as he views it from a moral standpoint. He told the men plainly that unsuitable pictures are shown because they are the ones that pay, while the high class pictures with a moral very often do not have patronage enough to pay. He mentioned several pictures that the producers took three years to make, on which he lost money. He said he lost enough money on a single one of these high class pictures to take him and his family to California and back. He told the men the way for the public to get clean pictures is to patronize the clean ones when they are shown, and refuse to go to see those that are not morally clean.

STRAIGHT from the SHOULDER REPORTS

A DEPARTMENT FOR THE INFORMATION OF EXHIBITORS

EDITED BY A. VAN BUREN POWELL

Associated Exhibitors

BATTLING BUNYAN. Star, Wesley Barry. A dandy kid picture. Did not draw the adults. Might do for a Saturday night. We lost money on the night we played this. Tone, okay. Not a special. Good for youngsters. Better class town of 4,500. Admission 10-15. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (404 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

NEVER SAY DIE. (6 reels). Star, Douglas MacLean. Very entertaining in spots. We hear they want more money for MacLean in the future, and that Paramount is taking them on and will put him in the Lloyd class. How come? Considered fair here, but there is no mad rush to see his feature. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, fifty per cent. All classes town of 6,000. Admission 10-20-30. Frank H. Wotton, Park Theatre (600 seats), Lebanon, New Hampshire.

PRICE OF A PARTY. (5,315 feet). All star cast. Just a program picture, well received by the younger set. A good bet if you buy it right. No special tone. Not for Sunday or as special. Appeal sixty per cent. Draw all classes town 6,000. Admission 10-20-30. Frank H. Wotton, Park Theatre (600 seats), Lebanon, New Hampshire.

RUPERT OF HENTZAU. Star cast. Couldn't do a thing with this, although picture very good. My patrons just won't come out to see one of these foreign stories. Never again if I can help it. Tone and Sunday O. K. Not for special. Appeal fifty per cent. Draw all classes town 4,000. R. L. Nowell, Idlehour Theatre (210 seats), Monroe, Georgia.

YANKEE CONSUL. (6,148 feet). Star, Douglas MacLean. An impossible affair, but very good comedy. Too old to draw here. Tone, okay. Yes for Sunday, but no as special. Appeal fifty per cent. Draw college class town 2,145. Admission 10-25. R. X. Williams, Lyric Theatre (345) seats), Oxford, Mississippi.

F. B. O.

DARING YEARS. (6,782 feet). Star cast. Very good show with a moral. Some of the scenes were not pleasant but parts well acted and I would say book it. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair appeal. Small town class and farmers town of 600. Admission 10-20, 10-30, 20-40. H. W. Batchelder, Galt Theatre (175 seats), Galt, California.

FIGHTING SAP. (5,138 feet). Star, Fred Thomson. Not as good as others and many did not hesitate to say so. Had a good crowd as Thomson is popular. Silver King fine. These westerns are worth the money. Draw all classes town 4,000. R. L. Nowell, Idlehour Theatre (210 seats), Monroe, Georgia.

FRED THOMSON SUBJECTS. I have run a number of the Fred Thomson subjects and every one a splendid western picture, full of action. Will please in any theatre where westerns are liked. One of the best stars in Western pictures for the mining camps. If you are manager of a theatre in the mining district book the Fred Thomson series and give the miners what they want—action. F. B. O. have good prints on these subjects. Make them come across with new prints. Miners. Admission 15-25. C. M. Lane, Big Sandy Theatre (200 seats), Big Sandy, West Virginia.

LIFE'S GREATEST GAME. (7,010 feet). Star, Johnny Walker. The poorest drawing card we ever had. We charged extra admission which we shouldn't have done and lost a lot of coin. A fair program show. Tone, good. Not a special. Poor appeal. Better class town of 4,500. Admission 10-15. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (404 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

These dependable tips come from exhibitors who tell the truth about pictures to help you book your program intelligently. "It is my utmost desire to serve my fellow man," is their motto.

Use the tips; follow the advice of exhibitors who agree with your experience on pictures you both have run.

Send tips to help others. This is your department, run for you and maintained by your good-will.

LOVE'S BARGAIN. (6,000 feet). Stars, Clive Brook, Marjorie Daw. This is another one of F. B. O.'s "foreign made" pictures that is no good, especially for small towns. Personally I think that this is about one of the poorest ones ever released under the F. B. O. banner, and I know, because I have run them all. Not much tone; appeal none. No for Sunday or as special. Draw small town class town 300. Admission 10-25. Roy E. Cline, Osage Theatre (200 seats), Osage, Oklahoma.

MAILMAN. (7,150 feet). Star, Ralph Lewis. Very good picture for me. Most entertaining if your patrons like dramas but failed to draw for me but all who saw it pleased. Miners. Admission 15-25. C. M. Lane, Big Sandy Theatre (200 seats), Big Sandy, West Virginia.

NORTH OF NEVADA. (5,000 feet). Star, Fred Thomson. Very ordinary, but drew better than the big, expensive specials, so can't complain. Tone, okay. Appeal eighty-five per cent. No for Sunday or special. Draw usual class town 1,000. Admission 10-35. S. G. Harsh, Princess Theatre (249 seats), Mapleton, Iowa.

RANGE TERROR. (4,738 feet). Star, Bob Custer. Unless I miss my guess, Bob Custer is going to be one of the foremost western stars. He fights like he means it, rides like a matter of life or death and loves like a regular Wallace Reid. Wow! for him! Good tone. Yes for Sunday where westerns go. No as special. Appeal seventy per cent. Draw from masses city 230,000. Admission 10-20. R. M. Kennedy, Royal Theatre (350 seats), Birmingham, Alabama.

SPEED WILD. (4,700 feet). Star, Lefty Flynn. Lefty (who, by the way, is now called Maurice!) Flynn, in a different type of story which registers lots better than the majority of westerns that he has played in. If the comedy had been worked up more, this would have been a hummer; as it is, it is above the average. Yes as to tone and appeal, and for Sunday where type goes. No as special. Draw small town class, town 300. Admission 10-25. Roy E. Cline, Osage Theatre (200 seats), Osage, Oklahoma.

TEARING THROUGH. (4,714 feet). Star, R. Talmadge. Another fine Talmadge picture and plenty of action. Some clever acting. Good tone. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Appeal ninety per cent. Draw farmers town 185. Admission 15-30. Robert W. Hines, Hines Theatre (170 seats), Loyalton, South Dakota.

First National

ABRAHAM LINCOLN. (9,759 feet). Star cast. Great picture. I had people to this that never come to anything else since I opened here. I don't believe anyone North of the line cannot play this to advantage. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Good appeal. Small town class and farmers town of 600. Admission 10-20, 10-30, 20-40. H. W. Batchelder, Galt Theatre, (175 seats), Galt, California.

AGE OF DESIRE. (5,174 feet). Star cast. Just a progam picture lost money on it. Tone, okay. Special, no. Little appeal. Miners and farmes town of 2,000. Admission 10-25. Arch Catalano, Victory Theatre (300 seats), Rossiter, Pennsylvania.

ENTICEMENT. (6,234 feet). Star, Mary Astor. Fine, and very enticing. Had nice crowds for two days, and everyone pleased. Use the trailer and this picture should make money for you. Tone and for Sunday, O. K. Not suitable for special. Draw all classes, town 4,000. R. L. Nowell, Idlehour Theatre (210 seats), Monroe, Georgia.

ENTICEMENT. (6,234 feet). Star, Mary Astor. Here not a very good picture and did not please well. No story to speak of and lacked interest. Tone okay. Yes for Sunday but no as special. Appeal fifty per cent. Draw college class, town 2,145. Admissions 10-25. R. X. Williams, Lyric Theatre (345 seats), Oxford, Mississippi.

ETERNAL CITY. (7,800 feet). Star cast.

Don't Guess!

The acting of Barrymore, Love, LaMarr and Bennett is fine. The story and direction good. It should please them all. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Fair appeal. Miners and farmers town of 2,000. Admission 10-25. Arch Catalano, Victory Theatre (300 seats), Rossiter, Pennsylvania.

FLOWING GOLD. (8,005 feet). Star, Milton Sills. Very good picture that did not draw the usual Saturday crowd. Tone okay, appeal seventy-five per cent. Yes for Sunday but no for special. Draw usual class, small town 1,000. Admission 10-35. S. G. Harsh, Princess Theatre (249 seats), Mapleton, Iowa.

FOR SALE. (7,840 feet). Star, Claire Windsor. Not much to this. Didn't draw and don't particularly please. Tone okay; appeal, none here. Maybe for Sunday, no as special. Draw usual class, town 1,000. Admission 10-35. S. G. Harsh, Princess Theatre (249 seats), Mapleton, Iowa.

INEZ FROM HOLLYWOOD. (6,967 feet). Star cast. Read nothing but knocks on this picture in all picture magazines, but find the picture one of the best ever here. It's a real honest to goodness picture. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Jack Hoeffler, Orpheum Theatre, Quincy, Illinois.

LILIES OF THE FIELD. (8,500 feet). Star, Corinne Griffith. Truly a big picture, big cast, big in story, costuming, settings and direction. Long but can't say too long because it holds every foot of the way. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Audience appeal, one hundred per cent. All classes town of 2,517. Admission 10-25. A. L. Middleton, Grand Theatre (500 seats), DeQueen, Arkansas.

PENROD AND SAM. (6,275 feet). Star, Rockliffe Fellowes. Here is one of the best kid pictures I have ever played. The acting, photography, and direction are all very good and will please any audience. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good appeal. Family and transient class city of 65,000. Admission 10-15. R. K. Covington, Bijou Theatre (500 seats), Fresno, California.

PLAYING WITH SOULS. (5,831 feet). Star cast. Very dreary picture. No business. Stay off. Not a laugh in seven reels. Jack Hoeffler, Orpheum Theatre, Quincy, Illinois.

SEA HAWK. (12,045 feet). Star, Milton Sills. Very good feature. Wonderful sea scenes. Very interesting. Should please any audience. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Good appeal. Farmers and merchants town of 1,650. Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

SEA HAWK. (12,045 feet). Star, Milton Sills. A one hundred per cent. audience picture that ought to be played in every house in the land. Milton Sills, as usual, forgot that he was an actor and actually lived the part of "The Sea Hawk" and Wallace Beery as the conscienceless pirate, ran a close second for the picture's honors. This was a tremendous undertaking for First National and they should be commended for giving the screen such rare entertainment. Back it up, boys with big advertising and you'll satisfy 'em all. Tone, fair. Sunday, maybe. Special, yes. Appeal, one hundred per cent. General class town of 1,000. Admission 10-25, 15-35. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

Between Ourselves

A get-together place where we can talk things over

Short subjects!

Ever notice that many exhibitors say "it saved the show—had a weak feature"?

And, "That serial has built up my weak night."

Or, "Women now come to see the News reel which they never used to care about."

Those things show that the short subject is worth considering.

That means—IT'S WORTH REPORTING ON.

When you run in a tip on a feature you would be doing a lot of the boys who realize short subject importance a big favor by adding a tip on the short subject you run—whether serial, comedy, News or instructive.

For the summer, everybody wants all the pullers: probably you know about some short subjects in that class.

Send the tip if you do.

VAN

SO BIG. (8,562 feet). Star, Colleen Moore. Another hit for Colleen Moore, although it is an old fashioned picture which same does not appeal to the modern crowd, Colleen puts it over with the help of a very fine cast and a good director. Without Miss Moore's personality am inclined to think that the picture would be a little flat. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Appeal, eighty per cent. All classes town of 6,000. Admission 10-20-30. Frank H. Wotton, Park Theatre (600 seats), Lebanon, New Hampshire.

SUNDOWN. (9,000 feet.) Star cast. Too much "Covered Wagon." Cannot praise this picture, as there is not much of a story to it. Draw mixed class, town 800. Admission 15-25. Jerry Wertin, Winter Theatre (250 seats), Albany, Minnesota.

THOSE WHO DANCE. (7,500 feet). Star cast. A wonderful picture, with a wonderful cast. A wonderful story, wonderful well produced and one that entertains while it pleases but did not draw for me. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Appeal, one hundred per cent. All classes town of 2,517. Admission 10-25. A. L. Middleton, Grand Theatre (500 seats), DeQueen, Arkansas.

TORMENT. (6 reels). Star cast. Fair program picture. Tone okay, appeal thirty-five per cent. Yes for Sunday but no as special. Draw usual class, small town 1,000. Admission 10-35. S. G. Harsh, Princess Theatre (249 seats), Mapleton, Iowa.

WHEN A MAN'S A MAN. (6,910 feet). Star cast. A fine offering. Pleased the patrons. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Very good audience appeal. Farmers and merchants town of 1,650. Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

WHY MEN LEAVE HOME. (8 reels). Star cast. Fine picture, finely directed and very competent cast. Everybody satisfied. Box office very good. Satisfactory picture for a manager and also an audience. Tone, fair. Sunday, no. Special, no. Appeal, seventy-five per cent. All classes town of 6,000. Admission 10-20-30. Frank H. Wotton, Park Theatre (600 seats), Lebanon, New Hampshire.

Fox

ARIZONA ROMEO. (4,694 feet). Star, Buck Jones. All of the pictures that Jones has made during 1925 are absolutely O. K. This one is no exception; it is mighty good and will please. Here's hoping that Fox will see the advantage of keeping him in westerns. Good tone. Yes for Sunday; no as special. Audience appeal eighty per cent. Draw from the masses, city 230,000. Admission 10-20. R. M. Kennedy, Royal Theatre (350 seats), Birmingham, Alabama.

DANTE'S INFERNO. (5,680 feet). Star cast. A picture few will rave over, but a picture all towns should run. Tone okay, appeal average. Suitable for Sunday. 'Draw 10-25. T. W. Cannon, Majestic Theatre (315 seats), Greenfield, Tennessee.

END OF THE TRAIL. Star, William Farnum. If you have this booked pay for it and put it on the shelf. Not worth screening. Very old and it shows it. Might go over in transient trade house. No appeal. All classes in big city. Admission ten cents. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre (298 seats), Baltimore, Maryland.

GOLD HEELS. (6,000 feet). Star cast. "Checkers" was good, but this is better still; step on the advertising when you get it. Tone okay, average appeal. Draw usual class, small town 1,500. Admission 10-25. T. W. Cannon, Majestic Theatre (315 seats), Greenfield, Tennessee.

GOLD HEELS. (6,000 feet). Star cast. Just another and an average racing story that holds pretty well with its old time hokum for five reels then the race in the sixth. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, ninety per cent. All classes town of 2,517. Admission 10-25. A. L. Middleton, Grand Theatre (500 seats), DeQueen, Arkansas.

HEART BUSTER. (4,500 feet). Star, Tom Mix. Good program picture. Tom always pleases here. No for Sunday or special. Fair tone. Appeal eighty per cent. Draw farmers and laborers, town 343. Admission 15-30. J. M. Patterson, Little Gem Theatre (250 seats), Hunter, Arkansas.

HEARTS OF OAK. (5,326 feet). Star cast. A program offering with very little drawing power. Tone okay, but appeal poor. Draw usual class, small town 1,500. Admission 10-25. T. W. Cannon, Majestic Theatre (315 seats), Greenfield, Tennessee.

HEARTS OF OAK. (5,326 feet). Star cast. about the best of this years Fox specials plenty of sob stuff in this one. Transient trade houses lay off. Print new. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Fair appeal. All classes in big city. Admission ten cents. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre (298 seats), Baltimore, Maryland.

NICKLE PLATED WEST. (Fox). Fair knockabout comedy. Fox comedies have not been the knockouts this year they used to be. No tone. Sunday, yes. Appeal, sixty per cent. All classes town of 2,517. Admission 10-25. A. L. Middleton, Grand Theatre (500 seats), De Queen, Arkansas.

PAINTED LADY. (6,938 feet). Star, George O'Brien. Dorothy MacKaill also starred in this picture which was somewhat rough, but which pleased a majority. First appearance here of George O'Brien and he won his audience. That fellow is some man, and he made a hit with the men as well as with the women. Hope Fox keeps him in action pictures. Tone rough; fair appeal. No for Sunday or special. Draw general class, town about a thousand. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

TEETH. (6,190 feet). Star, Tom Mix. A good picture; Mix has very little to do, however. Duke, the dog, seems to have the leading role. Draw general class, city 35,000. Admission 25-35. C. D. Buss, Strand Theatre (700 seats), Easton, Pennsylvania.

TEETH. (6,190 feet). Star, Tom Mix. A genuine entertainment picture. When more producers and stars get this artistic Special idea out of their heads and give us entertainment at lower prices, we will get the crowds back into our theatres. Tone okay. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Appeal a hundred per cent. Draw all classes, town 2,517. Admission 10-25. A. L. Middleton, Grand Theatre (500 seats), De Queen, Arkansas.

TRAIL RIDER. (4,752 feet). Star, Buck Jones. A good western with lots of pep and romance. Pleased well. Tone okay. Good appeal. Draw usual class, small town 1,500. Admission 10-25. T. W. Cannon, Majestic Theatre (315 seats), Greenfield, Tennessee.

Metro-Goldwyn

ALL THE BROTHERS WERE VALIANT. (6,265 feet). Star cast. Old, but very good. Sea story with plenty of action. Print not in good shape. Too many poor patches. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair appeal. Family and transient class city of 65,000. Admission 10-15. R. K. Covington, Bijou Theatre (500 seats), Fresno, California.

ALONG CAME RUTH. (5,000 feet). Star, Viola Dana. Very light comedy drama, and not up to the usual standard of this company. Small town story, up to date flapper, reorganizes and puts it on the map. Improbable but entertaining. Will please fifty per cent. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. All classes town of 6,000. Admission 10-20-30. Frank H. Wotton, Park Theatre (600 seats), Lebanon, New Hampshire.

BROKEN BARRIERS. (6,717 feet). Star cast. In six reels. Very little padding if any, don't break your neck to get this one. Good for house changing every day. No more. Tone, bad. Sunday, no. Special, no. Appeal, seventy per cent. All classes town of 2,800. Admission 15-25. D. W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre (250 seats), Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

EXCUSE ME. (5,084 feet). Star, Conrad Nagel. The best little feature comedy yet. For a good class of patronage. Our Sunday crowd just raved over it. Just step on it. Title catchy to advertise which is a big thing in this game. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, one hundred per cent. General class town of 3,600. Admission 10-20. William A. Clark, Sr., Castle Theatre (400 seats), Havana, Illinois.

GREAT WHITE WAY. (10 reels). Star cast. Another old one I bought from this exchange on account of the good reports I had read from exhibitors but if they can put such stuff over on their people I will say they are lucky. Tone, none. Sunday, no. Special, no. No appeal. General class town of 1,200. Admission 10-25. Sam Brooks, Liberty Theatre, (400 seats), Hailey, Idaho.

HIS HOUR. (6,300 feet). Star, Aileen Pringle. Gave best satisfaction of any Glyn story. Tone fair. Appeal eighty per cent. No for Sunday. Draw conservative class, city 23,000. Admission 25. D. J. Adams, Auditorium Theatre (1,000 seats), Concord, New Hampshire.

IN THE PALACE OF THE KING. (9,000 feet). Star cast. One of the pictures that this town does not fall for. The High School ran it for their benefit and they did not get any. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Miners and farmers town of 2,000. Admission 10-25. Arch Catalano, Victory Theatre (300 seats), Rossiter, Pennsylvania.

LITTLE ROBINSON CRUSOE. (6,216 feet). Star, Jackie Coogan. I cannot see why exhibitors will praise such a picture. Coogan would be good in about two reels but our town doesn't like him in such long drawn-out pictures. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeals to kids. General class town of 1,200. Sam Brooks, Liberty Theatre (400 seats), Hailey, Idaho.

MONSTER. (6,435 feet). Star, Lon Chaney. Too gruesome for the average fan, and did not please at all here. Tone okay but no for Sunday or as special. Appeal fair. Draw oil field class, town 1,000. Admission 10-25. H. E. Schlichter, Liggett Theatre, Madison, Kansas.

OUR HOSPITALITY. (6,220 feet). Star, Buster Keaton. Old picture, but it made me some money and I ran it after opposition. Print fair. No tone. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Good appeal. All classes in big city. Admission ten cents. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre (298 seats), Baltimore, Maryland.

SCARAMOUCHE. (9,600 feet). Star cast. Very good but wish it was all in eight reels. These ten reel shows are too long. This however, is a wonderful picture. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Good appeal. Farmers, town of 412. Admission 10-25. Johl C. Leveck, Benoit Auditorium (100 seats), Benoit, Mississippi.

SCARAMOUCHE. (9,600 feet). Stars, Stone, Novarro, Terry. A good picture but too old to be shown now; reels in bad conditions and nearly everyone had seen it elsewhere. Okay in tone. Yes for Sunday and as special (refer to above statement though). Poor appeal. Draw college class, town 2,145. Admission 10-25. R. X. Williams, Lyric Theatre (345 seats), Oxford, Mississippi.

MAY McAVOY

"May, of the resplendent curls," plays opposite Ramon Novarro in "Ben Hur," which Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer has made into a super-production

SEVEN CHANCES. (5,113 feet). Star, Buster Keaton. A real comedy that more than pleased my patrons. Tone all right. Yes for Sunda and as special. Appeal great. Draw mixed class, town 1,500. Admission 10-25. John McGill, Community Theatre (500 seats), Port Orchard, Washington.

SINNERS IN SILK. (5,750 feet). Star, Conrad Nagel. A nice little up-to-date show but has no special drawing power. Advertising angle not so good as some others. We put a lot of effort behind the Metro-Goldwyn product as they have a consistent program, and so far none that we could class as lemons. Then they are a nice bunch to do business with out in Chicago. General class town of 3,600. Admission 10-20. William A. Clark, Castle Theatre (400 seats), Havana, Illinois.

THREE WISE FOOLS. (6,945 feet). Star, Eleanor Boardman. A good, interesting show which was liked by our patrons. Appeal ninety per cent. Draw mixed class, town 800. Admission 15-25. Jerry Wertin, Winter Theatre (250 seats), Albany, Minnesota.

WHITE SISTER. (10,400 feet). Star, Lillian Gish. This is one of the finest if not "the" best picture of the year. My patrons were just in raptures. I would like more like this one. The star excelled and the photography was truly remarkable. Very good tone. No for Sunday but yes as special. Appeal a hundred per cent. Draw better class, city of about 12,000. Admission 10-25, 15-35. Ed. Malhiot, Monarch Theatre, (550 seats), Medicine Hat, Alberta, Canada.

WINE OF YOUTH. (6,600 feet). All star cast. Good show. We did a satisfactory business for two days. Draw general class, city 35,000. Admission 25-35. C. D. Buss, Strand Theatre, (700 seats), Easton, Pennsylvania.

YOLANDA. (10,125 feet). Star, Marion Davies. A very fine high class entertainment but believe me, costume pictures are hard to put over. They just haven't the general appeal that makes you a profit. Yet this picture will not hurt any house but give you prestige. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Fair audience appeal. General class town of 3,600. Admission 10-20. William A. Clark, Sr., Castle Theatre (400 seats), Havana, Illinois.

Paramount

AIR MAIL. (6,976 feet). Star, Warner Baxter. A fine action picture that should please almost anywhere. A fine story of the Air Mail Service. Tone okay. Yes for Sunday or as special. Fine appeal. Draw oil field class, town 1,000. Admission 10-25. H. E. Schlichter, Liggett Theatre, Madison, Kansas.

ALASKAN. (6,758 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. Just a program picture. Why doesn't Paramount give Meighan a real picture once more instead of ordinary story and support. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair appeal. Farmers town of 412. Admission 10-25. Johl C. Leveck, Benoit Auditorium (100 seats), Benoit, Mississippi.

ARGENTINE LOVE. (5,970 feet). Star, Bebe Daniels. A waste of six reels of film for a small town like mine. Ran one night to no business. Tone, fair. Possibly suitable for Sunday. Special, no. No audience appeal. Family and student class town of 4,000. Admission 10-25. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre, Decorah, Iowa.

COMING THROUGH. (6,522 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. Good picture. Meighan used to be a good bet but his later pictures have killed him here. Tone okay. Appeal seventy-five per cent. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Draw usual class, town 1,000. Admission 10-35. S. G. Harsh, Princess Theatre (249 seats), Mapleton, Iowa.

COVERED WAGON. (9,407 feet). Star cast. Overrated; did not come up to expectations of crowds. Prices here 25-50 on this. Tone okay, good appeal. Suitable for Sunday. T. W. Cannon, Majestic Theatre (315 seats), Greenfield, Tennessee.

COVERED WAGON. (9,407 feet.) Star cast. No comment necessary as to popularity of the picture. All towns around us had run this picture, but despite this fact, we did a fair business. Several came to see it a second time. Any small town can afford to run this if they have not already done so, despite its age. Good tone, appeal okay. Yes for Sunday and as special. Draw rural class, town 200. Admission 10-25 usually (special admission on this not stated, Ed.) D. B. Rankin, Co-Operative Theatre (200 seats), Idana, Kansas.

EMPTY HANDS. (6,976 feet). Star, Jack Holt. Even if some of reports say that it don't please, I must say that it did please those who came to see it but not many. Miners and farmers town of 2,000. Admission 10-25. Arch Catalano, Victory Theatre (300 seats), Rossiter, Pennsylvania.

SUPPORTING THE THEORY OF EVOLUTION

Ralph Graves and a petite damsel do some acrobatics in the Sennett-Pathe comedy, "Good Morning, Nurse"

FEMALE. (6,176 feet). Star, Betty Compson. Very good picture that did a little better than average business. Town and rural class, town of 2,800. Admission 10-25. Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho.

FLAMING BARRIERS. (5,821 feet). Star cast. Good picture; above program stuff but not a feature. Worth seeing. Plenty of action and comedy. Good forest fire scene. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair audience appeal. Farmers and merchants, town of 1,650. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

FLAMING BARRIERS. (5,821 feet). Star, Jacqueline Logan. A fair program picture, but, oh, the print was rotten. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Audience appeal ninety per cent. Farm class, town of 200. Admission 15-30. Robert W. Hines, Hines Theatre (150 seats), Loyalton, South Dakota.

GRUMPY. (5,621 feet). Star, Theodore Roberts. You'll have to look a long time before you find a more pleasing comedy-drama than this. It's a splendid picture, clean and peppy. If we could get one as good every week our worries would be at an end. Book it and advertise it. Merchants and farmers town of 440. Admission 15-25. Kenneth W. Thompson, M. W. A. Theatre (150 seats), Hancock, Wisconsin.

HER LOVE STORY. (6,736 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. A romantic tale of a mythical kingdom of the Graustark type which presents Gloria in an entirely different role from her usual portrayals. Gloria is always very good and my private opinion, publicly expressed, is she leads them all of the screen. We raise our prices with her and in spite of our being a neck-in-the-woods, wild western Texas town, our people know real merit. If your crowd don't like Gloria Swanson, then you are in bad with artistic appreciation. Draw city and country class, town of 3,000. George W. Walther, Dixie Theatre, Kerrville, Texas.

MAN WHO FIGHTS ALONE. (6,337 feet). Star, William Farnum. Fair picture, but hardly the show for children or the small town show but well acted although Farnum not at his best. Tone, fair. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair appeal. Small town class and farmer; town of 600. Admission 10-20, 10-30, 20-40. H. W. Batchelder, Galt Theatre (175 seats), Galt, California.

MISS BLUEBEARD. (6,453 feet). Star, Bebe Daniels. A good picture but not a big special. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Just a little above program schedule. Appeal, good. Farmers and merchants town of 1,650. Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

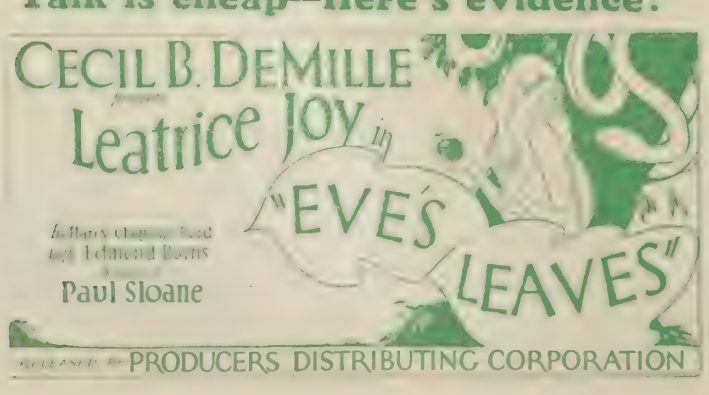
MORAL SINNER. (5,455 feet). Star, Dorothy Dalton. Poor program picture. Miss Dalton has been fast losing her popularity here and this picture finished her. It is a very ordinary crook story. Sunday, no. Special, no. Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall Theatre, Chester, Vermont.

NEW LIVES FOR OLD. (6,796 feet). Star, Betty Compson. A splendid picture, well worth playing and advertising. Don't consider it a special but it's not sold for one, so you can safely promise your people an extra good program picture. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Hardly suitable for special. Splendid audience appeal. College class, town of 4,000. Admission 10-25, 10-40. Royal Theatre (500 seats), Arkadelphia, Arkansas.

NORTH OF 36. (7,908 feet). Star cast. A special in every sense; better by far than "Wagon." No for Sunday. Appeal ninety-five per cent. Nelson and Ottem, Rex Theatre (150 seats), Osnabrock, North Dakota.

NORTH OF 36. (7,908 feet). Star cast. A real picture spoiled by profanity in titles and one scene. The nude girl in bathing. In the story this shot for the bank of stream. Tone, doubtful. Hardly suitable for Sunday. Special, yes. Varied appeal. Family and student class town of 4,000. Admission 10-25. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre, Decorah, Iowa.

OLD HOME WEEK. Star, Thomas Meighan. One of the best. Meighan in a role he knows how to fill. Everything about the picture pleasing from start to finish. A picture with a regular movie appeal that is worth running in a "picture palace" or a "movie dump." It pleases them all. Business not very good, but times are rotten about here. Good any day. Ben L. Morris, Temple Theatre, Bellaire, Ohio.



Larry Semon in his latest Educational-Larry Semon special comedy, "The Clodhopper"

PETER PAN. (9,593 feet). Star, Betty Bronson. A most beautiful picture, but too limited in appeal. Children, mothers and fathers liked it, others didn't. Sunday, yes. I. E. Ottem, Rex Theatre (140 seats), Osnabrock, North Dakota.

PETER PAN. Star, Betty Bronson. If this is the best picture Paramount made for the year, they ought to quit. It is a very good picture; something different—and entertaining. But I cannot see anything "special!" about it. Does not compare with "Thief of Bagdad." We are getting tired of paying Special prices for Program pictures. Good tone, fair appeal. Yes for Sunday, but no as special. Draw farmer class, town of 412. Admission 10-25. J. C. Leveck, Benoit Auditorium (100 seats), Benoit, Mississippi.

PETER PAN. Star, Betty Bronson. My patrons were about evenly divided on this one: half of them knocked it hard and half of them praised it to the skies. Anyhow, it is a good children's picture. But there were not enough children in my town to pay the high rental. (Rental was twice what it should have been). Lots of adults walked out on it. Tone best. Fair appeal, and suitable for Sunday and as special (in some cases). Draw all classes, small town 3,000. Admission 10-30. M. W. Larmour, National Theatre (430 seats), Graham, Texas.

Kathleen Myers, leading woman for Maurice Flynn in F. B. O.'s "High and Handsome"

RUGGLES OF RED GAP. Star cast. Here is a mighty good one. Torrence makes good in this one and as well as all others he plays in. Good comedy; Edward Horton and Lois Wilson unusual story; however, it suits a comedy clientele. Paramount, keep going. Tone okay. Appeal eighty-five per cent. No for Sunday or special here. C. S. Chapman, Belvedere Theatre (300 seats), Grove Hill, Alabama.

THUNDERING HERD. Star cast. More entertaining, more exciting, more pleasing to everyone here than either "The Covered Wagon" or "North of 36." Paramount blew me up the first day on it, and that hurt the attendance. The charge of the covered wagons is the best thing I have witnessed in a long time. Tone okay. Good appeal. Yes for special. Pull all classes, small town, 3,000. Admission 10-30. M. W. Larmour, National Theatre, Graham, Texas.

TONGUES OF FLAME. Star, Thomas Meighan. Played two days to very poor business. Meighan is slipping fast here. It is a fair program picture but not strong enough for two nights. A family picture; tone good, appeal fair. Draw better class, town 4,500. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (404 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

RUGGLES OF RED GAP. (7,500 feet). Star, Torrence. A good picture: it is something different from any other picture. Good tone. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Appeal eighty-five per cent. Draw farmers, town 185. Admission 15-30. Robert W. Hines, Hines Theatre (170 seats), Loyalton, South Dakota.

SAINTED DEVIL. (8,633 feet.) Star, Rudolph Valentino. It's right pitiful to see Rudolph in an attempt to come back. The old boy, in this, seems to know that he has fallen from grace and he overdoes his part in trying to make a good showing. Rotten attempt. No as to tone, for Sunday and as special. Appeal forty per cent. Draw from masses, city 230,000. Admission 10-20. R. M. Kennedy, Royal Theatre (350 seats), Birmingham, Alabama.

SALOME OF THE TENEMENTS. (7,017 feet). Star, Jetta Goudal. Not so bad as the reviews led me to expect. It is a character story—all Jewish; and where that type of story is liked it goes over. Acting, characters and settings all that could be desired. Business poor. Ben L. Morris, Temple Theatre, Bellaire, Ohio.

THUNDERING HERD. (7,187 feet). Star, Jack Holt. Absolutely the greatest pioneer picture ever made—bar none!—and all reports from patrons on this said it was better than "36" or "Wagon." Tone okay, fine appeal. Yes for Sunday and as special. Draw oil field class, town 1,000. Admission 10-25. H. E. Schlichter, Liggett Theatre, Madison, Kansas.

WAGES OF VIRTUE. (7,083 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. I believe Gloria is slipping a little here. This subject did not draw at all although it was not a bad picture. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. General class town of 1,200. Admission 10-25. Sam Brooks, Liberty Theatre (400 seats), Hailey, Idaho.

WEST OF THE WATER TOWER. (7 reels). Star, Glenn Hunter. Very good picture. Tone and appeal good. Sunday yes; and just above program schedule. Draw farmers, merchants, widely scattered population of 1,649. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

ZAZA. (7,076 feet). Star, Goria Swanson. This picture did not do so extra in our little town; too much jazz stuff. Appeal seventy-five per cent. Draw mixed class, town 800. Admission 15-25. Jerry Qwerin, Winter Theatre, Albany, Minnesota.

Pathe

WAY OF A MAN. (9,000 feet). Star cast. Awfully poor. Especially after running "North of 36" just a few days ahead. Only showed to one hundred people and most of them kicked. Tone, fair. Sunday, no. Special, no. No audience appeal. Family and student class town of 4,000. Admission 10-25. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre (600 seats), Decorah, Iowa.

WHY WORRY. (6 reels). Star, Harold Lloyd. A corker as all his pictures are. Had poor crowd but those there enjoyed it. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fine appeal. Farmers town of 412. Admission 10-25. Johl C. Leveck, Benoit Auditorium (100 seats), Benoit, Mississippi.

Producers' Dist. Corp.

CHARLEY'S AUNT. (7,245 feet). Star, Sidney Chaplin. Knockout. Pleases all kinds of people Standing room all shows. You cannot miss in this picture. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special for kids. Appeals to all. Jack Hoeffler, Orpheum Theatre, Quincy, Illinois.

HOUSE OF YOUTH. (6,650 feet). Star, Jacqueline Logan. The picture was good of its kind, but why make this kind of stuff no one but the sensational crowd wants to see it. The industry would be better off without them. They go to extremes in making them. Tone, no good. Sunday, no. Special, no. Appeal, none. All classes town of 2,800. Admission 15-25. D. W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre (250 seats), Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

Schulberg

BOOMERANG. Star, Bert Lytell. Nothing to this one; it will do as a program picture, but that's all. Draw oil field class, town 1,000. Admission 10-25. H. E. Schlichter, Liggett Theatre, Madison, Kansas.

DARING YOUTH. (5,975 feet). Star, Bebe Daniels. Just a good program picture. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair appeal. Farmers and merchants town of 1,650. Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

United Artists

THIEF OF BAGDAD. Star, Douglas Fairbanks. Very good but think this would go over better in cities. This is the only picture of any note I ever bought from the above exchange at a fair rental. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. No appeal. General class town of 1,200. Admission 10-25. Sam Brooks, Liberty Theatre (400 seats), Hailey, Idaho.

Universal

FAST WORKER. (6,500 feet). Star, Reginald Denny. The poorest we have had from this lad. They made him do too much posing, and not enough comedy action. Some scenes with a little dog were ridiculous, not necessary or in keeping, and not funny. Denny needs fast, slapstick comedy action to make good. Business poor. Ben L. Morris, Temple Theatre, Bellaire, Ohio.

FLYING HOOFS. Star, Jack Hoxie. Very good western but not quite enough action. Hoxie's popular and generally brings them in. All classes, town of 4,000. R. L. Nowell, Idlehour Theatre (210 seats), Monroe, Georgia.

HIT AND RUN. (5,508 feet). Star, Hoot Gibson. Good. Everyone who sees it will like it. I could make a little money with it if the time was better. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Good appeal. Miners and farmers, town of 2,000. Admission 10-25. Arch Catalano, Victory Theatre (300 seats), Rossiter, Pennsylvania.

K—THE UNKNOWN. (8,146 feet). Star cast. A real show. Pleased the majority and they told me it did. Personally thought the comedy a little overdone at the start. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Good appeal. Family and student class, town of 4,000. Admission 10-25. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre (600 seats), Decorah, Iowa.

K—THE UNKNOWN. (8,146 feet). Star, Percy Marmont. All right as program but far from being the big special Universal would have you think. Tone okay. Sunday, no. Special, no. Fair appeal. Family and transient class, city of 65,000. Admission 10-15. R. K. Covington, Bijou Theatre (500 seats), Fresno, California.

LET 'ER BUCK. Star, Hoot Gibson. Here it is in a nut shell. Mrs. Clark doesn't care for western pictures. Yet she says, "This is the best picture we ever had from Universal." Quite a compliment to "Let 'Er Buck," don't you think? It's a one hundred per cent western and our patrons said so. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, one hundred per cent. General class, town of 3,600. Admission 10-20. William A. Clark, Castle Theatre (400 seats), Havana, Illinois.

MEASURE OF A MAN. Star, William Desmond. Desmond is making friends here. Running him with Richard Barthelmess and seems to please and draw. Miners and farmers, town of 2,000. Admission 10-25. Arch Catalano, Victory Theatre (300 seats), Rossiter, Pennsylvania.

RED WARNING. (4,750 feet). Star, Jack Hoxie. Good program picture. Plenty of action. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair appeal. Farmers and merchants, town of 1,650. Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

ROARING ADVENTURE. Star, Jack Hoxie. I'm of the opinion that Hoxie's contract is about to expire with Universal, judging from the rotten pictures they're putting him in. Nothing to this story or any of the stories that Hoxie's making. Tone fair. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Audience appeal, fifty per cent. Masses, city of 230,000. Admission 10-20. R. M. Kennedy, Royal Theatre (350 seats), Birmingham, Alabama.

SADDLE HAWK. Star, Hoot Gibson. Not as good as some of his previous releases but will please eighty per cent of western fans. I can always have a good attendance on the Gibson pictures. They expect plenty of action of this star and usually get it. My attendance is mostly miners, and the boys crave action and any of the Hoot Gibson pictures will please. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Splendid attendance. Miners. Admission 15-25. C. M. Lane, Big Sandy Theatre (200 seats), Big Sandy, West Virginia.

Helene and Dolores Costello, daughters of Maurice Costello, in Warner Brothers' "Bobbed Hair"

SMOULDERING FIRES. Star, Pauline Frederick. A very good heart-interest romance. Has all the appeal that goes to make popular stories. Pauline has hardly ever had a better part and she handles it to perfection. A sensible man would have preferred her to the flapper, even if she was older. Old Tully Marshall was excellent. Good for any day. Ben L. Morris, Temple Theatre, Bellaire, Ohio.

TORNADO. (6,576 feet). Star, House Peters. A picture with a lot of action and has good drawing power. The whole show is well put on and you can tell them so. Above the average program. Tone okay. Sunday, okay. Special, no. Good appeal. General class, town of 3,600. Admission 10-20. William A. Clark, Sr., Castle Theatre (400 seats), Havana, Illinois.

Vitagraph

GREATER THAN MARRIAGE. Star, Lou Tellegen. Vitagraph special at a program price. A real good story; buy it and step on the advertising pedal; it will bring the shekels. Print new. All classes in big city. Admission ten cents. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre (298 seats), Baltimore, Maryland.

NINETY AND NINE. (6,800 feet). Star cast. Played a repeat on this and everyone seemed pleased. If you haven't played it, don't overlook it as it has everything. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fine appeal. Family and transient class, city of 65,000. Admission 10-15. R. K. Covington, Bijou Theatre (500 seats), Fresno, California.

PAMPERED YOUTH. (6,640 feet). Star cast. A very good program picture. It is up to the usual Vitagraph standard, clean entertainment, great picture for a small town. Print new. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre (298 seats), Baltimore, Maryland.

REDEEMING SIN. (6,227 feet). Star, Alla Nazimova. A finely acted picture of Paris underworld life. Nazimova is hard to beat. Not a Saturday night picture. Tone okay. Average appeal. Draw usual class, small town of 1,500. Admission 10-25. T. W. Cannon, Majestic Theatre (315 seats), Greenfield, Tennessee.

REDEEMING SIN. (6,227 feet). Star, Nazimova. This is not a bad picture but name has a poor draft. Vitagraph product of 1925 lacks drawing power. The class of their stories and too much heavy drama, I suppose, is the reason. Looks as if they have made a reasonable effort to make a good picture. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, fifty-fifty. General class, town of 3,600. Admission 10-20. William A. Clark, Castle Theatre (400 seats), Havana, Illinois.

Mary Philbin, the Universal star, in a characteristic pose

TWO SHALL BE BORN. (6 reels). Star, Eva Novak. Just a program picture that pleased. Print new. Better than some specials. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Undecided for special. Fair appeal. All classes in big city. Admission ten cents. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre (298 seats), Baltimore, Maryland.

Warner Bros.

CORNERED. (7,500 feet). Star, Marie Prevost. Very nice little program picture that pleased the very, very few that came out to see it. Attendance would probably have been better had there not been a free medicine show in town that caught the crowd. Marie Prevost's acting was fine as she pulled off a dual role to perfection. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good appeal. General class, town of 1,000. Admission 10-25, 15-35. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

DARK SWAN. (6,500 feet). Star cast. Not much and not a box-office picture. You will be surprised how little a popular story picture draws here. No good. Jack Hoeffler, Orpheum Theatre, Quincy, Illinois.

MY WIFE AND I. Star cast. Sex picture. Not good for children. The old style triangle story. Get too many of them. Do not draw. Sunday, no. No appeal. Jack Hoeffler, Orpheum Theatre, Quincy, Illinois.

NARROW STREET. Star, Dorothy Devore. Step on it and get them in. Followed up "Charley's Aunt" with this and it held up good three days. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Audience appeal, one hundred per cent. Family and student class, town of 4,000. Admission 10-25. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre, Decorah, Iowa.

THIS WOMAN. (7,000 feet). Star, Irene Rich. Nothing to this one; will do as a program picture, but that's all. Okay tone. Appeal, none. Will do for Sunday but not as special. Draw oil field class, town of 1,000. Admission 10-25. H. E. Schlichter, Liggett Theatre, Madison, Kansas.

Comedies

ASLEEP AT THE SWITCH. (Pathe). Star, Ben Turpin. Ben seems to have forgotten how to get laughs himself, so they use his name and let the two dogs have the honors, and they put it over. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal, one hundred per cent. All classes, town of 2,517. Admission 10-25. A. L. Middleton, Grand Theatre (500 seats), DeQueen, Arkansas.

BRIGHT LIGHTS. (Educational). Star, Bobby Vernon. A comedy that is worth special effort on your part to put it across. A dandy comedy by Bobby Vernon. Tone good. Good appeal. Better class, town of 4,500. Admission 10-15. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (404 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

DERBY DAY. (Pathe). "Our Gang." Just an ordinary comedy in which the second reel has more laughs than the first. Not up to the average "Our Gang." Tone good. Sunday, yes. Fair appeal. Mitchell Conery, Conoat Projection Service, Menands, New York.

FRENCH PASTRY. (Educational). Star, Bobby Vernon. Absolutely the worst that Bobby Vernon has ever made. The plot is laid in France during the World War; you know the rest, boys. This soldier stuff doesn't go in comedies; we heard too much about it in 1917 and 1918. Better luck next time, Bobby. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Very weak appeal. General class, town of 1,000. Admission 10-25, 15-35. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

GHOSTLY NIGHT. (F. B. O.). Star, James Aubrey. A comedy packed full of real fun in a haunted house. Slightly overdone but they look for impossible situations in this star's comedies. Print fair. Good appeal. All classes in big city. Admission ten cents. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre (298 seats), Baltimore, Maryland.

GOAT GETTERS. (Educational). Nice kid comedy that kept the audience in an uproar. Worth adding to any program. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Good appeal. General class, town of 1,000. Admission 10-25, 15-35. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

HOOKED. (Educational). Star, Lloyd Hamilton. A Hamilton comedy that was satisfactory. It proved to be a laugh maker. It had some humorous situations in it. Tone okay. Good appeal. Better class, town of 4,500. Admission 10-15. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (404 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

THE HUNT. (Fox). Star, Earle Fox. Far better than "The Fight." This is the second Van Bibber-Fox comedy we have played and this was certainly satisfactory, as there was not a dull moment in the entire two reels. The steeplechase was thrilling, and it is to be hoped that the rest of the Van Bibbers will be as good as this one. Okay tone, strong appeal. Yes for Sunday. General class, town about a thousand. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

INBAD THE SAILOR. (Fox). Not much to this. All classes, town of 2,800. Admission 15-25. D. W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre (250 seats), Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

MANDARIN MIXUP. (F. B. O.). Star, Stan Laurel. This one is a good tonic for a sick feature. A real good slapstick comedy. Print new. Great audience appeal. All classes in big city. Admission ten cents. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre (298 seats), Baltimore, Maryland.

MOTHER'S JOY. (Pathe). Laughs, none. Entertainment, none. Just thirty minutes of nothing. I want to give Hal Roach a good swift kick on this one. Why, oh, why, Hal? No tone. Not suitable for any day. No appeal. All classes, town of 2,517. Admission 10-25. A. L. Middleton, Grand Theatre (500 seats), DeQueen, Arkansas.

WESTWARD WHOA. (Fox). The almost human monkeys in a pleasing comedy taken from "The Covered Wagon" and should please any type of patronage. Print new. Sunday, yes. Good appeal. All classes in big city. Admission ten cents. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre (298 seats), Baltimore, Maryland.

RIDE 'EM, COWBOY. (Educational). A very good laugh picture; better than the average comic. All classes, town of 2,800. Admission 15-25. D. W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre (250 seats), Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

WIDE OPEN. (Educational). Lots of laughs in this one; most all Educationals are good laugh comics. All classes, town of 2,800. Admission 15-25. D. W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre (250 seats), Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

Short Subjects

AT THE BOTTOM OF THE SEA. (Educational). An interesting filler-in. The photography was very clear and appeared very snappy on the screen. Print in excellent condition. Tone okay. Fair appeal. Better class, town of 4,500. Admission 10-15. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (404 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

GO-GETTERS, 11th CHAPTER. (F. B. O.). Very weak episode of the "Go-Getters," which will close at this theatre this week. This series is not as good as "Fighting Blood" in estimation of patrons. Al Cooke and Kit Guard, two fine character actors, have played dumbbell parts throughout this series. Fans want them in semi-heroic roles, as the constant blunderings of these two in the "Go-Getters" gets monotonous. Tone fair. Sunday, yes. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

PATHE REVIEW No. 45. (Pathe). About one-third of this issue contained scenes of Buffalo, New York, done in Pathecolor. These scenes were beautiful and pleased the majority; they told me so. Sunday, yes. Good appeal. All classes in big city. Admission ten cents. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre (298 seats), Baltimore, Maryland.

WORLD OF PAPER. (General Electric). This General Electric two-reeler is interesting in its way, but it is not as good as some of their other pictures. G. E. has some dandy one and two reelers which they supply free of film rental. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Mitchell Conery, Conoat Projection Service, Menands, New York.

Independents

BATTLING BUDDY. (Artclass). Star, Buddy Roosevelt. Good picture and will please on Saturday in small town. Fair tone. No for Sunday or special. Appeal, seventy-five per cent. Draw farmers and laborers, town of 343. Admission 15-30. J. M. Patterson, Gem Theatre (250 seats), Hunter, Arkansas.

BATTLING BUDDY. (Artclass). Star, Buddy Roosevelt. After seeing the picture personally, I was surprised to hear several say they thought it a pretty fair western. A series of fistic encounters and a tramp with his mule are the high spots. No story. Good tone, fair appeal. Yes for Sunday where westerns go; no for special. Draw rural class, town of 200. Admission 10-25. D. B. Rankin, Co-operative Theatre (200 seats), Idana, Kansas.

BATTLING FOOL. (State Right). Star, William Fairbanks. Eva Novak also starred in this very excellent program picture that had action from start to finish, with a good logical story to back it up. Some good prize fighting in this film that made the fans sit up and cheer. Played on Saturday night to poor attendance due to outside causes. Tone fair. Maybe suitable for Sunday. Special, no. Good appeal. General class, town of 1,000. Admission 10-25, 15-35. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

BLACK LIGHTNING. (State Right). Would advise all exhibitors to lay off this picture as it will be a big knock to other dog pictures coming out this year. If you have it booked pay for it and leave it in the exchange. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. No appeal. General class, town of 1,200. Admission 10-25. Sam Brooks, Liberty Theatre (400 seats), Hailey, Idaho.

BRINGING HOME THE BACON. (Artclass). Star, Buffalo Bill, Jr. Good action picture; plenty of comedy. Will please in small town. Fair tone. No for Sunday or special. Appeal eighty per cent. Draw farmers and laborers, town of 343. Admission 15-30. J. M. Patterson, Little Gem Theatre (250 seats), Hunter, Arkansas.

EARLY BIRD. (C. C. Burr). Star, Johnny Hines. (7,000 feet). Knockout. Jammed them in three days. Sunday, yes. Special for kids. Appeals to all. Jack Hoeffler, Orpheum Theatre, Quincy, Illinois.

EARLY BIRD. (C. C. Burr). Star, Johnny Hines. Just as good as "Speed Spook" and certainly has the laughs. Went over fine. Tone okay. Yes as special and for Sunday. Fine appeal. Draw oil field class, town of 1,000. Admission 10-25. H. E. Schlichter, Liggett Theatre, Madison, Kansas.

FIGHTING STRAIN. (Steiner). Star, Neal Hart. This would have been a knockout during the war but story is too old. Not enough action for this star. Print new. Tone okay. Sunday, no. Special, no. Fair appeal. All classes in big city. Admission ten cents. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre (298 seats), Baltimore, Maryland.

FLOODGATES. (State Right). Star, John Lowell. Good melodrama. Wonderful water scenes and an action picture that should go over anywhere. Good tone. Sunday, yes; special, no. Appeal seventy-five per cent. Draw all classes, town of 6,000. Admission 10-20-30. Frank H. Wotton, Park Theatre (600 seats), Lebanon, New Hampshire.

GAMBLING WIVES. (State Right). Star cast. Not much picture. The kind I would not buy if I had seen it. Tone okay. Yes for Sunday but no as special. Appeal twenty per cent. Draw college class, town of 2,145. Admission 10-25. R. X. Williams, Lyric Theatre (345 seats), Oxford, Mississippi.

HITTING HARD. (State Right). Star, Benny Leonard. This one is much better than the first of this series. Has lots more comedy. Should please the male class but the ladies just don't like this sort of entertainment. Tone, none. Undecided for Sunday. Fair appeal. All classes in big city. Admission ten cents. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre (298 seats), Baltimore, Maryland.

LAST MAN. (State Right). Star, Bill Patton. Same old story told in the same old way, and not very good at that. In fact, this is below the ordinary type of western. Tone and appeal, none. No for Sunday. Draw small town class, town of 300. Admission 10-25. Roy E. Cline, Osage Theatre (200 seats), Osage, Oklahoma.

LAW RUSTLERS. (State Right). Star, William Fairbanks. Good picture of the western type; will please the Saturday crowd and also the kids. Plenty of action and good story. Tone fair. Sunday, no. Special, no. Appeal, seventy-five per cent. All classes, town of 6,000. Admission 10-20-30. Frank H. Wotton, Park Theatre (600 seats), Lebanon, New Hampshire.

MEDDLING WOMEN. Star, Lionel Barrymore. Consider it better than "I Am the Man." Ran it one day to very small business. Tone fair. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair appeal. Family and student class, town of 4,000. Admission 10-25. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre (600 seats), Decorah, Iowa.

TORRENT. (Phil Goldstone). Star cast. This proved to be a good Saturday show for us. It has some fast action and some good comedy. Tone okay. Not a special. Good appeal. Better class, town of 4,500. Admission 10-15. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (404 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

WHO CARES? (Columbia). Haines-Devore are stars. This is no world-beater, but had a few good comments on it; but does not draw very good for some reason as most of my patrons figured it was a society drama all the way through. Yes as to tone and for Sunday but no as special. Has some appeal. Draw small town class, town of 300. Admission 10-25. Roy E. Cline, Osage Theatre (200 seats), Osage, Oklahoma.

Scenes in "What Price Goofy?" in which Hal Roach presents Charley Chase for Path e distribution

"The Peak of Fate" Will Be First Frank B. Rogers Film

FRANK B. ROGERS, long prominent in the film industry, announces the formation of the Frank B. Rogers Motion Picture Corporation, with offices at 1482 Broadway, the Fitzgerald building. Mr. Rogers is president and general manager of the new company. Augustus M. Wise is vice-president and treasurer, and T. J. Tevlin, secretary. Mr. Tevlin will also be sales manager.

The new motion picture corporation will enter at once upon a novel plan of nation-wide distribution, details of which will be announced later. They will release five productions during the first year, each of which is to be an unusual subject treated in an unusual manner.

The first release is to be "The Peak of Fate," a thrilling love story replete with the daring adventures of mountain climbers which was filmed in the Tyrolese Alps and which has been developed and constructed by Eugene Walter, the American dramatist, author of the stage plays, "Paid in Full," and "The Easiest Way," and other stage successes.

A Broadway showing of "The Peak of Fate" has been arranged by Mr. Rogers, who will present the feature picture at the Central Theatre, Broadway and 47th Street, commencing Friday, June 12. An elaborate musical score which was especially composed abroad for "The Peak of Fate" will be played during the presentation by a large orchestra.

In "The Peak of Fate" the general policy of the new distributing organization will be seen. This picture is filled with thrilling feats by the two lovers who are mountain climbers. They and others are shown ascending one of the loftiest mountains of the Tyrolese Alps. Two of their rivals in the ascent of the mountain after thrilling feats in mountain climbing are killed by a fall when their rope breaks from its fastening. In all three mountain climbers are killed by falls during the development of the story.

The setting is the beautiful, inspiring scenes in the Alps amid the clouds, storms and snow. The principal roles are enacted by professional mountain climbers, since none others could have lived through the risks which were necessary in filming this film drama of the clouds and mountain peaks. There is a happy ending in the success and union of the two daring central figures.

This unusual picture sets and defines the policy of the Frank B. Rogers Motion Picture Corporation which will present other unusual and absorbing film dramas during the season and the seasons to come.

Mr. Rogers, president of the motion picture corporation which bears his name, will be remembered as an important factor in former years with Pathe, Fox, J. Stewart Blackton, Robinson-Cole, Vitagraph and other leading film organizations, both producing and distributing.

F. B. O. Studios Busy

Casting For Two Productions Under Way At West Coast Plant

With four productions in course of filming, each week brings new activity to the F. B. O. Studios. At least two of F. B. O.'s own productions are scheduled to begin this week, for which casting is now in progress under the supervision of B. P. Fineman.

The new productions are "Lady Robinhood" a Spanish story in which Evelyn Brent will be featured and "The Wild Bull's Lair" starring Fred Thomson and his horse, "Silver King."

Casting for Richard Talmadge's next production, "The Isle of Hope" will begin at an early date as well as arrangements for a new series of two reel "featurettes" starring Alberta Vaughn.

Pathe Comedies Continue Popularity on Broadway

AT least one and very often two or more Pathe comedies are current attractions each week at big Broadway picture theatres like the Capitol, Strand, Rivoli, Rialto and Colony.

During the week of June 1, a Harry Langdon and a Charley Chase comedy represented Pathe on Broadway.

Harry Langdon's two-reel comedy "The White Wing's Bride," was the comedy feature of the bill at the Rivoli. Referring to this film Norbert Lusk, in the "Morning Telegraph," said:

"Harry Langdon is presented in a comedy 'The White Wing's Bride,' which evoked the customary amount of laughs."

Last week, Langdon's comedy "Horace Greeley, Jr." was featured at the Colony. Principal Pictures Corporation produced these Langdon comedies mentioned, and Alf Goulding directed.

Charley Chase, the Hal Roach star, appeared in two reels of mirth at the Colony, which received favorable notice from the critics of the dailies.

The Colony is billing the Pathe comedies as "extra attractions" and featuring them prominently in all newspaper advertising.

N. Y. World Editorial Rooms Will Be Seen in "Headlines"

IN order to secure absolutely correct atmosphere for the newspaper office sequences of "Headlines," the new Associated Exhibitors' feature being directed by E. H. Griffith, permission was obtained to stage these scenes in the editorial rooms of the "New York World," located in the World Building on New York's famous newspaper street, Park Row.

As the editorial rooms are on the twelfth floor, the transportation of lights and cables entailed quite a task and particularly so since electric power had to be secured from the pressroom in the basement of the building.

Director Griffith and his players, including Alice Joyce, the star, worked at the World from 12 o'clock on a Sunday night until 10 o'clock Monday morning.

"Headlines" is an original newspaper romance written by Dorian Neve, and is being produced by St. Regis Pictures Corporation who sponsored "Bad Company," with Conway Tearle and Madge Kennedy, an Associated Exhibitors' current release.

Both the Cecil B. DeMille and the F. B. O. studios were used for the making of the forthcoming Associated Exhibitors' feature "Keep Smiling," starring Monty Banks, whose "Racing Luck" proved a great audience attraction.

Elaborate interiors were taken at the Cecil B. DeMille Studios in Culver City. One of the most attractive sets built in the studio represented an "exterior" graden wherein a large part of the plot of "Keep Smiling" transpires.

Upon completion of the interiors, Howard Estabrook, president of the Monty Banks Pictures Corporation, moved his company back to Hollywood because it formed a more accessible base for the company's operations in Los Angeles harbor and vicinity. Headquarters were established at the F. B. O. Studios at Melrose and Gower streets.

Supporting Monty Banks are Anne Cornwall, leading woman; Robert Edeson, Stanhope Wheatcroft, Martha Franklin, Syd Crossley, Glenn Cavender, Ruth Hally and Mrs. Tom Forman. Albert Austin and Gilbert W. Pratt co-directed this Associated Exhibitors picture.

Nita Naldi, who came from the Pacific Coast to play a prominent role in "The Miracle of Life," is now busy under the direction of S. E. V. Taylor at the Cosmopolitan Studios in New York where this feature is being produced for Associated Exhibitors' release.

In addition to Miss Naldi, the cast will feature Mae Busch and Percy Marmont, with many well known screen names added from time to time as production advances.

"The Miracle of Life" offers a story of mother-love and revolves around the home life of a wealthy young girl who narrowly escapes a domestic tragedy.

"Johnny" McGraw's Baseball Serial for Pathe Has New York Locale

Stunt scenes for the new Patheserial "Play Ball," which is based upon a story by John J. McGraw, were staged on the Harlem River, New York, last week. Allene Ray is the star and Walter Miller, leading man. Spencer Bennet is directing the chapter-play which will be in ten parts.

One of the stunts which won the applause of the crowd was performed by Walter Miller, who raced down an old pier, tripped over a beam and plunged head-first into the Harlem River. The fight scenes between Miller and several opponents also won acclaim from the onlookers.

"Play Ball!" is now in its eighth week of production, with a supporting cast which includes J. Barney Sherry, Wally Oettel, Harry Semels, Mary Milnor, and Franklyn Hanna. Frank Leon Smith adapted the McGraw story to the screen.

The first chapter of "Play Ball" will be released on July 19th.

Novelty Reel Here

First of "Guess Who" Series Received by Artclass Pictures Corporation

Louis Weiss, Managing Director of Weiss Brothers Artclass Pictures Corporation announces that he has received the first reel of the new "Guess Who" novelty series which he will distribute in the coming season.

These reels contain thirty shots of stars well known to the movie-going public. The audience shown this reel is invited to participate in a contest in which they will attempt to identify the players flashed on the screen and to mark their names and the order of their appearance on a card which will be given them at the time of their entrance into the theatre.

This novelty reel is produced by R. B. Staub, and with the special contest card is fully copyrighted by him. The first reel will be released on the open market about August 1st and will be followed by the next five in the series in regular order.

Richard Thorpe Directing

Richard Thorpe is directing the second Buffalo Bill Jr. feature which will be released under the title of "The Desert Demon." The scenario is by Betty Burbridge from the story by Alex McLaren. The cast includes Betty Morrissey, Frank Ellis, Harry Todd, Jack O'Brien, Frank Austin, Raye Hampton, Margaret Martin, and Charles Colby.

Scenes from the B. P. Schulberg production, "My Lady's Lips," which has a star cast, including Clara Bow, Frank Keenan and many equally well known players

Comedy Demand Almost Unparalleled, Says Fred C. Quimby, of Fox, Starting Tour

"IT'S a Comedy Year; pronounced and almost unparalleled," said Fred C. Quimby, Sales Manager for Short Subjects for the Fox Film Corporation.

And he voiced the statement with an air of conviction and finality, like a Rotarian president whose output is always optimism.

"Why the public is eager for amusing 'shorts' is a question that one is at a loss to answer," continued Mr. Quimby. It is a known fact that the public wish runs in cycles; the problem play, the Western, the costume picture and the historical romance. Now I note a most pronounced demand for the higher class two-reel comedies. Exhibitors eagerly ask for them and contracts are signed at good figures. Our Van Bibbers, Varieties, the O'Henry Stories, the 'Helen and Warren' series and the Fox News Reel have never been as popular, nor as eagerly demanded.

"So pronounced is this quick awakening that I am going to travel a number of miles to find the reason and fill the demand. I am going to start tomorrow on a pilgrimage that will embrace all of the leading cities from Coast to Coast and from the Great Lakes to the Gulf. About 70 days and many, many miles."

Asked to volunteer a reason for the sudden demand for comedy pictures, Mr. Quimby advanced one that was nationally psychological and one that was practical from the producer's angle.

"The people are enjoying unprecedented prosperity," he said. "Because John Jones finds business bad in Saginaw it doesn't follow that business is bad throughout Michigan. John may be a bad business man. Because Lafe Hoot is out of a job in Nashville it doesn't follow that there is much unemployment in Tennessee; Lafe never did hold a job more than a month. Conditions generally are very good and people with money in their pockets are always willing to spend some of it for amusement. That, I believe, accounts to a pronounced degree for the universal popularity of short subject comedies.

FRED C. QUIMBY
Sales manager for short subjects for the Fox Film Corporation

"Other reasons directly relate to the quality of the comedies we are now furnishing. Never in the history of the industry has any producer used such discretion or gone to such expense as has Mr. Fox this year. Recall that he bought the motion picture rights to Richard Harding Davis's greatest comedy productions, the Van Bibber stories. He also bought the even more famous O'Henry stories and the incomporable Helen and Warren stories, now syndicated in the country's leading papers.

"Stories by such famous authors were not bought for two-reel comedies before. Mr. Fox has dignified the short comedies by seeking works of famed authors, has engaged noted directors and is giving to their production the costly surroundings and artistic finish that was formerly devoted only to big features. We call it our Two Million Dollar program.

"Consider then the universal wish of the public to be wholesomely entertained and we have one powerful reason for the increasing demand. Add to that a pronounced step forward in selection and presentation and all of the reasons are in."

Mr. Quimby prophesies an unprecedented year for Fox Film Corporation for though his energies are devoted primarily to advancing the sale of short subjects he finds an unusual appreciation of the Corporation's program and early signing of contracts.

running slightly into the margin through the broken rule. This took a little notching to get around the curved title, but the work has been well done, and the space has all of the solidity of a hand lettered space with the added advantage of type legibility. It would be a good idea to take this page over and show your local office. It might help you to get better displays, which means more for your money or as much for less money. With good composition it seldom should be necessary to go above eight inches for the average attraction unless the newspaper gauges the free reading according to the advertising account. In that case, of course, you have to buy more space and get more reader, but you should be able to sell so well in eight inches that you would not need much reader.

Newspaper Serial a Help to Territory

gives the names of the local houses and some of the outlying territory showing the serial on the screen. Probably a part of the cost of this space was paid by Universal, but it was well worth its cost in the help it gave the exhibitors who had the serial booked. This differs from the usual serial publication in that the story is more directly hooked to the houses than with a first run single-showing feature, where the hook is apt to be with the first run house only, the lesser houses being left to get what they can when their turn comes.

Gets Good Flash on Quo Vadis Ad

Working mostly with a plan book cut, the Temple Theatre, Toledo, put over Quo Vadis for a circus flash because it did not shovel in the black type. A few big, black lines could have killed that space with about half an effort, but through holding the space open and giving the cut a chance the story was put over on the title. This is not saying that there was no talk. There is plenty enough about the play and the smaller features and the prices. It's all there, but it is not jammed up against the title. It does not have to be in a five elevens, and so the title shows up like a 24-sheet, the cut has a chance to shine, and the cut sells more tickets than would 500 lines in two inch letters. Quo Vadis is a sight picture, and it will sell better on cut, but the copy carries nine eight point lines about items you really

R. M. Kennedy, of the Capitol Theatre, Birmingham, Ala., uses comparatively small spaces for his Sunday displays, yet by holding them open he gets very good results, as witness this two fives on The Gaiety Girl.

Your Big Opportunity

GREATER MOVIE SEASON which will be observed during the month of August, offers an unusual opportnity to the producer to sell patrons on his ideas. Napoleon said that Opportunity knocks at your door but doesn't break it down. Too often we find ourselves demanding the result without expending the effort.

Well laid plans on the part of the various organizations and companies under the supervision of Mr. Will H. Hays will undoubtedly get the people in, but to keep them coming, to make their patronage voluntary, will depend upon the kind of show each house offers, particularly during August, when the various managers will be expected to present unusual programs. This not only requires foresight but is the real test of showmanship.

If the programs are arranged in a hackneyed manner; if the various prologues, presentations and musical offerings savor of indifference and an adherence to stereotyped forms, the patron is going to say the show may be good but there is nothing of unusual interest. The show is the thing. The quality of the program is paramount, and by the kind of goods you have to offer, the benefit of such a season to you will be ascertained.

This argument is based not on theory, but by personal contact with audiences throughout the country, where we have been able to study the effects of various stage presentations, hearing the comments, noting the reaction. The public knows. The motion picture public has been educated to expect much, and of good quality. If business is bad the public cannot be blamed.

Towards a Definite Artistic Goal

ART is life depicted with a spiritual color. It must not be too much like life nor too unlike. If it be too natural, it is not art for a certain artfulness is the necessity of art. At times the actor on the stage plays his part too truly and consequently his acting is not that; he must flirt with both actuality and imagination at the same time.

Art must grow out of life; it musn't so much mirror life as show it in certain colors. It cannot be a photograph; it must be actuality aglow.

The art of any nation must grow out of its own life, else there cannot be art. The one greatest hindrance to American art is the tendency to ape that of other nations. Too many Greek temples, too many Roman towers, too many Flemish pictures, etc., are exhibited in America to permit the growth of art from native themes.

Have we not enough of legend, romance and beauty? The Indians, the Colonists, the Pioneers, the Old South, the plains, the mountains, the lakes, the industries, and a hundred other American themes await the artist and the producer. American art must begin at home and until these rich and yet barely interpreted themes are properly developed and the aping of foreign themes wholly unknown in American history and life is needed, we shall not have an American art.

Let kings and lions, satyrs and windmills, to their native haunts. Enough glory and quaintness await the American artist in his native land.

The stage of the First Run theatre is an ideal place to sow the seeds of a standard American theatrical art, which may be reflected in design and motif whether in costume, scene, action or color.

Taking infinite pains with the subject in hand. Taking time to develop it. Not rushing into a production unprepared. Demanding the details given attention. These are stepping stones.

The Buyer's Guide

We will put you in touch with the firms. All communications relative to materials listed in this section should be addressed directly to Mr. Harriman or this department.

Concentrated Flood Light

A flood light which can be used as a balcony front light is on the market, each unit having a spill-light attachment, called a Louvre which confines the beams to the actual acting area of the stage and prevents the unnecessary illumination of the auditorium when the curtain is up.

Practical Dress Paint

A textile paint is six colors—red, yellow, blue, brown, purple and green, which is simple to apply to costumes and other fabrics. It does not harden the fabric when it is applied, but leaves it soft and pliant after painting as before. It is washable and cleanable. Several patterns are also given with the set which includes instructions and sufficient materials.

Wearing Proper Costumes

An excellent book has just been published which is a valuable handbook of information to the producer in correctly arranging the costumes of his various productions. It gives an outline of "period" costumes from the Egyptian and Assyrian down to the days of the American Civil War, with sufficient accuracy for its purpose. The plates are schematic but clear, each chapter includes a brief description of the materials and colors in use at the given epoch, supplemented by valuable research data for further information. Separate chapters are given relative to the historic development of the costume, in dyeing and decorating textiles, to stage lighting and its effect upon different materials and colors.

Attaching Rhinestones

The use of rhinestones is becoming more popular and is one of the methods of creating universal commendations for costumes of extreme beauty. A patented method of attaching rhinestones to any flexible material has been devised by a firm specializing in various rhinestone products. Instructions are given with an order as low as two dollars.

Special Toe and Ballet Slippers

A firm which specializes in shoes for the profession have a product which is enjoying a rapidly increasing popularity. A toe slipper which makes no noise while dancing, and ballet slippers which are perfectly adjusted.

A Moving Picture World Presentation

Detailed information relative to the production of the presentation suggested are printed herewith. Permission is given to any producer or exhibitor to use the Colby Harriman suggestions appearing in this section. Any other information desired to stage the presentation may be secured upon request.

The Greater Movie Season Novelties

(a) PROLOGUE TO GREATER MOVIE SEASON

(b) AN EPILOGUE

"Moving Picture World Presentations"

Devised by Colby Harriman

FOR the next four weeks, beginning with this issue we will submit matter which will be particularly suitable for use during Greater Movie Season which is scheduled to be observed during the month of August.

Novelty is, of course, imperative, and in the subjects submitted we will endeavor to be as variable as possible, keeping in mind the spirit of this especial season and affording the various producers several new ideas which have been gleaned from many sources.

The two subjects offered in this issue have no exact routine but possess such flexibility that practically any subject matter along the lines herein mentioned, may be applied.

(a) The Prologue

This subject is one which forms an excellent background for music, dancing and even personal appearances. The setting is simple and carries out the motif of the motion picture industry.

It consists chiefly of a platform with steps leading to it from the stage, flanked on either side with stairways which are decorated with two large pedestals surmounted by urns, with flowering set pieces to mask.

A silver toned drop with an arched opening is hung up stage. Upon the face are two masks backed by a circular motif suggesting a reel. The scroll work may be done to represent film, a border of the arch being done in the same motif.

A white or light blue drop is hung back of the stairway, and may be split to permit characters to enter through the opening. In the archway is hung long strands of tinsel.

Various characters dressed in costumes to represent certain motion picture stars who will appear at the theatre during the coming season, may enter through the light drop and come downstage doing the number assigned to them.

Two pages can be used to dress the action, and as these selected stars or characters make their appearance the two pages, carrying wands surmounted by the trademark of the particular producing companies appear as an accompaniment.

It would be possible to have a slide made and thrown upon the tinsel which would also be caught on the white drop, carrying the title similar to "Coming Attractions to this theatre cast their shadows before them," etc.

There is practically no limit to the possibilities for such a number. A ballet may be introduced dressed in costumes symbolizing the various production companies, costumes carrying spangled designs of the trademarks, etc. A contest may be arranged for the theatre to secure the best "double" of well known stars from among the local people, and the winners can be used to appear in the impersonations in this number.

The action each star may be assigned will depend entirely upon the type of character they will represent in the picture.

This department will be glad to submit a suggested program if the exhibitor will send a list of his best pictures to be played during the coming year.

(b) The Epilogue

This phase of the program has been sadly neglected, and there are so many instances where an epilogue can be used to advantage and round out a program in a manner which serves to maintain the atmosphere created by the preceding prologue and subsequent picture.

This scene may be duplicated or another used similar to the dominating scene in the picture. With the aid of a very simple lighting device the major part of the scene serving as a background can be projected upon the white drop which will blend with the screen, making the "take away" simple without any sudden change.

This setting simply consists of a platform upon which the two characters appear, and is masked with a rock piece and a thickness piece adjusted to it in the foreground.

A scrim can be hung down at the curtain line, and as the picture fades out on the last scene, the scrim lighted, the beams from the projection machine slowly iris out, the scrim taken away, the lights on stage gradually brought up.

The principal thing in offering an epilogue is to maintain continuity and if there is a considerable lapse of time between the end of the picture and the first part of the epilogue there are many patrons who will leave the theatre during this interval, causing a disturbance.

It is suggested that the theme song in the picture be started by the singer during the last moments of the picture and maintained during the change. This arrests the attention.

THE PROLOGUE. GROUND PLAN OF SET

The plot is not scaled but is proportioned to permit its adjustment to any stage. Up center is a bank of steps (1) running across stage to right and left center, where another step unit is attached, these smaller units set on an angle. Back of the center steps is a platform (2) which extends the width of the opening. The platform should be deep enough to permit a limited action, that is, four to six feet. Between the center and the platform, the drop with arched opening (3) should be hung. Light fabrics of metalline texture can be used to mask ends of drop. Back of the arched opening of the drop, batten should be suspended (4) from which strands of tinsel hang, long enough to bridge opening. The back drop (7) can be a white drop to resemble a screen with a center opening through which the various principals can appear, or it can be a gold spangles-on-net drop over a body of deep toned material. Two large marble toned pedestals (5) are down stage right and left at the lower end of the raked steps. These pedestals are surmounted with large urns from which foliage and vines are hung. Two flowered set pieces, which can be flats painted in design (8) mask the ends of the steps and carry off from the extreme sides of the pedestals. Platforms (6) are placed on either side of the stage to carry off from the side steps.

Fig. III Mask of Tragedy (Drama)

Line drawing of mask which is backed with "reel" motif and used as a medallion over archway.

Fig. IV. Mask of Comedy

Same treatment as previous figure.

Fig. V. Reel Motif

The base upon which the masks are placed, thereby forming the medallion used to adorn the space on the drop over the archway. The shaded portions in the diagram should be cut out.

Fig. VI. The Urn

If possible to secure a practical urn, this is recommended. If same is not procurable in a large size, have the artist paint a flat design of same as indicated in diagrams and nail on a small frame. Give proper attention to contour of the urn. A boxed pedestal is used to support the urn, but no particular design is necessary.

Scenic Treatment

The drop should be given a silver body. The medallions painted in black bases, the masks in gold. Have a dark toned line in scroll formation running from the two medallions painted to represent motion picture film. A border of similar design should be painted along the arch line. The steps can be toned a deep blue or given a checkered treatment. The pedestals and urns painted in deep buff tones. Green foliage with red flowers fixed in the urns. The set pieces painted in large rose designs, impressionistic if desired by the producer. Silver tinsel hung up in the archway. Use light fabrics to mask drop, with deep red legs and border down at the curtain line.

Lighting Treatment

This naturally depends on the action occurring in the set, but emphasize the glittering appearance of the scenic treatment, with canary and light blue to flood with varicolored treatment in mediums used on spots which are masked down to high light the tinsel hanging in the archway. The lighting treatment back of the archway should be cut to envelop the various characters as they appear, the back top toned a green blue, which can be gradually brought up with a canary and rose mixture. Highlight the green and flowered setpieces with green from the sides.

THE EPILOGUE. GROUND PLAN OF SET

The plot is not scaled but is proportioned to permit the adjustment to any stage. A rock piece (1) runs across stage from right to left, which has a thickness piece (2) superimposed upon it running on an angle from right up left. This can also be made a part of the rock piece. A high platform (3) is right center, and is reached by an incline (4) which descends from off stage right, giving the effect of the characters coming down from a higher mountain slope to the ledge and overlooking a valley. The drop with the landscape motif (5) is hung in two. If this scene is painted on the drop hang the drop well back. A very effective and simple treatment is to hang a sheet drop down in two. With a lighting device (6) which consists of a large hood similar to that of a flood light, a glass medium is inserted, upon which is painted the scenic design and this is projected on the drop, being visible from the house side. Place the lamp against the back wall (7).

Fig. I. Rock Piece

This rock piece which is the only portable piece of scenic equipment used aside from the drop and can be in two sections or made in one piece with convenient splits for handling. The back (a) which runs horizontally is given a thickness with another piece (b) painted or padded to give thickness placed on an angle and raked against the back.

Fig. II. Cross Section of Rock Piece

The back piece (a) can be a flat with profile adjusted on the edge to give the contour of the incline. The thickness piece (b) can be another flat, with padding (c), which can be fastened to the back piece.

SCENIC TREATMENT

The crest of the incline or back piece should be painted in grass greens, punctuated with various mountain herbage. The thickness piece painted on rock tones, with some green visible in crevices. Paint the entire rock piece to give a substantial mountain appearance. The back drop or the projected medium should be painted in colorful tones, suggesting that the "Remington Paintings" be consulted for suggestions.

LIGHTING TREATMENT

The foreground should be toned in green and green-blue, the edge of the back set piece tipped with amber. The two characters on the edge can be spotted from below and above with canary, a rose highlighting them from left and deep blue from right. The drop should be lighted to bring out th beauty of the scene, a purple haze being effected at the base. If the projected scene is used, this will all be worked out in the painting, no front lighting being necessary on the drop.

MARK STRAND THEATRE
New York City

Featured Picture: "I'll Show You The Town"
(Universal-Jewel)

Music

Excerpts from "Romeo and Juliet," the Gounod composition, are offered for the overture selection by the Mark Strand Symphony Orchestra, Carl Edouarde, conducting. The Waltz Song is sung by Emily Day, Coloratura Soprano. Miss Day, wearing a Juliet costume of rhinestone cap and gown of white silk with a rhinestone and spangled bodice, stands in front of a large mauve and reddish brown tapestry hung in small folds on the red plush. Red is shot in from the sides with canary and red flooding from the proscenium sides. The singer works in a white spot.

The Porcelain Clock

A very simple but highly effective setting. Black patent leather drop hung back in three. An enlarged set piece painted and cut out to represent the face of a porcelain clock is placed in front of the drop up center. The face of the clock is in white with a greyish blue tone for the body. The clock is of such dimension that the three figures grouped at the bottom of the clock are in proportion appearing as part of the clock. Mlle. Klemova dressed in a white dancing costume poses at the center of the pedestal; on either side M. Daks and Bourman dressed in white patent leather Colonial costumes which have been painted in gold designs stand right and left of the clock. A blue flood is used with blue and orange amber highlighting the back drop. Bridge spots and side spots are in light blues and white. A canary spot is used on the dancers during the numbers, and blue to tone. The action opens with Edward Albano, baritone, dressed in a silver and blue trimmed Colonial costume singing Schubert's "Serenade." He exits whereupon Mlle. Klemova executes dance interpretations of Grieg's "Papillon." She exits and the two made characters, M. Daks and Bourman come down stage and render the first movement introductory to the finale. Mlle. Klemova enters and with the two men dance Chopin's "Valse."

Nick Lucas

Joseph Plunkett presents for the first time in New York City this exclusive Brunswick artist who is known as "The Crooning Troubadour." A very effective setting has been arranged for this artist consisting of a very conventional garden design of Versailles motif at eventide. Blue sky drop hung well back. The ends of two high box hedges probably twelve feet in height come on from right and left of center, leaving an opening which is masked at the bottom by a marble designed balustrade with a flowered set piece visible over the rail, beyond which a rippler toned light amber plays beneath a yellow moon. Each hedgerow is crowned at the top with a small box tree. A garden bench is left of the center. Up center is a green bronze fountain. Light blue and green highlight the set. Dark plush is used to mask the hedge rows and carry off. Mr. Plunkett has taken particular cognizance of the value of shadows, and the setting is very realistically lighted. The artist works in a light blue spot from the booth.

EASTMAN THEATRE
Rochester

Featured Picture: "Forty Winks"
(Paramount)

The Overture feature is "Orpheus in the Underworld," by Offenbach. Elsie Walter and Sayde Levin render atwo number Piano Duo, (a) "Espana" and (b) Jazz Study (Hill). The organ recital by Harold Osborn Smith features a selection from the "Peer Gynt" Suite by Grieg. The Eastman Theatre Company present the first act of "The Pirates of Penszance," by Gilbert and Sullivan. The production is produced by Vladimir Rosing, Scenery and Costumes by Norman Edwards and musical direction under Guy Fraser Harrison.

CAPITOL THEATRE
Chicago

Featured Picture: "The Mad Dancer"

Francis A. Mangan offers a very pretentious program this week. The musical part of the program consists of a special number arranged by Albert E. Short, musical director, for the overture feature and termed a "Polite Syncopation."

Eight acts are offered in the divertissement spot. These features are Yvette, violinist, supported by her band of syncopators; the Abbott Synco-Steppers consisting of nine dancers; Frosini, who presents Jazzoligy on the Piano-Accordian; Hayden, Dunbar and Hayden, offering their interpretation of syncopation in England; Miss Belle Story, New York Hippodrome Prima Donna; David Reese, tenor, singing "Pack Up Your Sins and Go to the Devil," with a finale number, "Syncopation in Hades." The featured number on the program is entitled "Mexicana," a specially arranged stage number headed by Fowler and Tamara and including acompany of singers, dancers and musicians, with the South American Troubadours. The following program is offered:

(a) "Danza Del Sombrero" (Jarabe Tapatio) —The Troubadours
Dance by Miss Rose Kirsner
(b) "En Cuba" .....David Reese, Tenor
(c) "Valso"—Cielito Lindo (Beautiful Heaven)—Fowler and Tamara
(d) "Danza Espanola" ...The Abbott Dancers
(e) "Serafina" .....The Troubadours
(f) "Barle del Manton" (Dance of the Shawl) Miss Tamara, Mr. Fowler and Ballet Corps.

RIVOLI THEATRE
New York City

Featured Picture: "Are Parents People?"
(Paramount)

Music

"Light Cavalry" (Von Suppe) played by the Rivoli Orchestra, Hugo Riesenfeld and Willy Stahl conducting. The finale of the overture is given color with the introduction of five trumpeters dressed in French uniforms similar to a fatigue outfit, red jackets, black trousers and high red caps. Two striped gendarme sentry boxes are right and left against black plush. Riesenfeld's Classical Jazz is presented as the second number, and Harold Ramsbottom at the console plays "Somewhere a Voice is Calling" by Harold F. Fate. This theatre also announces six o'clock organ recitals each day with Frank Stewart Adams as soloist.

(a) "Silhouette Dance."

A very beautiful little number given a simple but highly effective setting and generally well done. A large gnarled tree with trunk extreme right extends over to left, its large branches forming a border. The tree is in dull silhouette against a green and blue sky, the outline of a Pan bust on a high pedestal is beside the trunk of the tree up right. Five dancers in nymph-like garb execute a rhythmic dance which is colored with the introduction of a singer who renders a selection from the orchestra pit.

(b) Ann Douglas.

Miss Douglas presents a very effective Scarf Dance which is one of the simplest and most unusual things the Rivoli has recently offered. Clad in white one-piece tights with large enveloping scarfs Miss Douglas renders a "Scarf Dance" in serpentine motion. A black plush was used as the backing and red, blue, canary, green and magenta were shot in from the sides which were caught on the scarfs as the dancer moved about the stage. During one movement the artist appeared enveloped in flaming red, then green and canary were mingled, etc. The audience were particularly appreciative.

(c) Joe Thomas' Sax-O-Tette.

This clever quintette make a second week appearance. The first part of their act is rendered in front of the close-ins which is flooded with light blues, and canary on soloists. A thin small box tree is placed on extreme right and left in front of curtains. For the finale the curtains are drawn revealing a drop painted in impressionistic style, which may be called nothing more than jazz scenery. The motif is to represent a cabaret and in the melee of color one can discern figures of musicians, tables, here and there legs of dancers, electric signs, etc. Light fabrics are used to mask and carry off on either side of the drop with red crepe paper ribbons and strands of tinsel hung in the folds. Three long boxed shaped lanterns tied with tinsel are hung from first border.

The five musicians clad in the black carnival costumes work in a light blue flood. Blue, green and ambers tone from the sides. Four members of the Rivoli Ensemble dressed in yellow ballet costumes come in for a finale.

COLONY THEATRE
New York City

Featured Picture: "The White Monkey"
(Sawyer-Lubin)

Music

The Colony Melody Masters with E. Charles Eggett, present selections from "The Student Prince," introducing a novelty jazz arrangement of "Mamie" as the overture feature.

Erlay and Hallock

These two American coloraturists dressed in attractive gowns, one of pink and the other of light blue, appear in front of a circular window with bars back of which a pine tree branch in black is silhouetted over the upper part of the window against a sky drop tinted rose and blue. The window and drapings in front which carry off are in black. Light green and white from the sides with pink from the booth is used to tone the set, and highlight the singers.

Grant and Wing

These two dancers of various musical comedy successes accompanied by Wheeler Wadsworth Orchestra, present a program of conventional style, introduce a shadow dance and a Charleston which is highlighted with symphonic novelties by the Orchestra. A black fabric drop with small figured design in Oriental pattern which is done in gilt, is hung in two. A wide yellow border runs across the lower part of the drop about six feet from the floor. The orchestra is seated extreme right, dancers making their appearance through center which is drawn, revealing a pedestal draped with batik scarf. Red from sides, canary foots highlighted with green and pink is the color scheme.

STRATFORD THEATRE
Chicago

Featured Picture: "The Little French Girl"
(Paramount)

The program offered at this theatre for the current week includes the following musical features: "The Stratford Versatile Orchestra," with Edourad Perrigo, conducting, play a two number feature, (a) "Naughty Marietta," by Herbert, (b) Classical Jazz with the theme of "O'Katherina." Leo Terry at the console of the organ renders "Moonlight and Roses," assisted by Lola Scofield, soprano. Two divertissements are offered. First, "You're Just a Flower From an Old Bouquet," featuring Mabelle Sherman, soprano, and three girls as Flower Dancers. Second, "Revue De Variety," (a) Macy and Scott in Harmonistic Humor, (b) The Return of Jimmie Dunn, (c) Anna May Wong, who presents three selections, Anna May Wong Numbe, Chinese Lullaby and Tay Mohamed (Indian Love Lyric).

CAPITOL THEATRE
New York City

Featured Picture: "Wildfire"
(Vitagraph)

Music

Selections from Rigoletto (Verdi) assisted by Male Ensemble of thirty and four principals, Caroline Andrews, Mary Allen, Douglas Stanbury and Guiseppe Reschiglian, is the overture feature played by the Capitol Grand Orchestra. David Mendoza conducting, with Graham Harris as associate. The same box setting and oratoria arrangement similar to last week is used. The Ensemble and principals appear in the major part of the selection.

Roxy's Gang at the Races

Mr. Rothafel is presenting his famous group of popular entertainers in a series of diversified settings. This week's presentation, while simple in its construction and scenic treatment, forms an excellent background as an atmosphere creator for the featured picture. The scene represents the section of the interior of a clubhouse at the "Downs," where the spirit of the Kentucky Derby is emulated. The setting consists of a back drop hung in three painted to represent a wall of the clubhouse; three large windows are painted on it with two fan shaped trellises on either side of the center window. A three-step platform runs across the stage in front of the drop upon which are wicker chairs and small tables. In the foreground a white rail fence with a six-foot opening in center is placed at the bottom of the steps and carries off right and left. Two large flowered set pieces resembling small lilac bushes are back of the fence on either side of the opening. A sapling tree is down at the tormentors with foliage and vines running in a direct line from the tree to the house. A large awning is hung above over the platform in two down to one. The awning is treated with broad black and orange stripes. The scenic treatment is buff toned on the drop which is highlighted with amber and canary from the sides and to flood. Canary back of the windows is toned with amber giving an old ivory color. Green highlights the trees, with canary, white and light amber for working spots and flood. The various characters are dressed in outing togs of the season. One number introducing the ballet is very effective where Miss Niles and the six members of the ballet enter dressed in jockey costumes with colorful blouses, during which they portray a horse race. Miss McKee, the Whistler, appears in a boy's outfit of red jersey, grey cap and trousers. The following program consists the action which ends with the customary racetrack ensemble routine:

(a) Opening Chorus: "Tally-ho,"
Entire Ensemble
(b) "She was Bred in Old Kentucky"
Misses Rice and Harcum,
Messrs Lang and Abbott
(c) Jockey Ballet
Miss Niles and Capitol Ballet Corps

RIALTO THEATRE
New York City

Featured Picture: "Eve's Secret" (Paramount)

"William Tell," by Rossini, is the selection played by the Rialto Orchestra for the overture. Frank Tours is the guest conductor. This number is followed by Riesenfeld's Classical Jazz; Michael Rosenker plays a violin solo, "Valse-Bluette," by Drigo-Auer. He works from the pit in an amber spot. Alexander D. Richardson at the organ plays "Poet and Peasant," by Suppe.

Dolores Farris, Danseuse

Miss Farris, dressed in a very abbreviated costume consisting of neckpiece of red ostrich feather strands and a shirt of the same material, with anklets made of the red plumes, does an excellent little dance number to "Doo Wacka Doo." The setting is a composite one, with black plush hung back, a figured design panel in center, with two legs in similar design hung right and left and caught at the bottom. The design is a colorful mosaic treatment with a Russian motif. Blue borders and red and blue foots, with a blue flood and a pink spot for the artist.

John Wenger's new stage setting for the Rivoli Theatre, now under construction, promises to be this prominent artist's best work. The entire stage is being remodeled and enlarged and the plans indicate a new aspect for the auditorium. Wenger is noted for the originality of his creations and his various settings in the Rivoli, Capitol and Strand theatres have been models of artistic ingenuity. Several genuine innovations will be used in the new Rivoli designs and the entire proscenium is to be transformed. The present stage decorations at the Rivoli were made by Joseph Urban eight years ago.

Frank Tours, conductor, who has just completed the season with Irving Berlin's "Music Box Review" has been engaged by Hugo Riesenfeld as guest conductor at the Rialto Theatre. Mr. Tours is well known in music and theatrical circles, having composed and directed the ballet music for all of "The Music Box Reviews." He was formerly conductor of Ziegfeld's "Follies" and directed the production of "Robinhood" during the revival of that opera at the New Amsterdam Theatre. He graduated from the Royal College of Music in London and has to his credit many well known compositions including the popular ballad "Mother O' Mine."

Columbia Has 18 Pictures for Release Next Season

MAKING pictures which the public want has been the course faithfully followed by Columbia Pictures Corporation whose growth during the past five years has been consistent and steady so that today the enterprising executives behind the Columbia banner, Joe Brandt and Jack and Harry Kohn are up with the fore ranks of the independent producers.

For the season of 1925-26 they have a series of 18 pictures, six to be known as Columbias, six as Waldorfs, and an equal number as Perfections. Last year they released sixteen, all of which were consistent box office winners, so much so that on the strength of the 1924-25 showing they had virtually no problem in selling the country 100 per cent, and every foreign territory even before the season opened.

Production manager Harry Cohn's latest report is to the effect that the first Columbia release, "The Danger Signal," featuring Jane Novak with Dorothy Revier, Robert Gordon, Gaston Glass, Pat Harmon, Lincoln Stedman and Gertrude Short has been given the biggest production in the history of Columbia Pictures, under Erle C. Kenton's direction.

Elaine Hammerstein who starred in "The Midnight Express," and many Columbias of the past season, has been signed to play in a number of the 1925-26 product.

Pauline Garon of the blonde tresses and delicious smile; William Fairbanks, the dashing, fighting, loving hero of the Perfection series; and lovely Edith Roberts are featured in six box office attractions: "Fighting Youth," "The Speed Demon," "A Fight to a Finish," "The Great Sensation," "The New Champion," and "The Handsome Brute."

After "The Danger Signal," the five other Columbia releases in order of their release are: "SOS Perils of the Sea," "Ladies of Leisure," "The Unwritten Law," "The Lure of Broadway," and "Midnight Flames."

The six Waldorf releases, the first of which "The Thrill Hunter" features Dorothy Revier with Cullen Landis, Barbara Lutty, Charles Clary, Cesare Oramore and Virginia Marshall, will be followed by "Sealed Lips," "The Fate of a Flirt," "The Price of Success," "The Penalty of Jazz," and "An Enemy of Men."

New Brent Picture Started

Lifting Evelyn Brent momentarily out of the roles of crook-melodrama which she has been so successful in interpreting upon the screen, the next Brent production under the direction of Ralph Ince will give the actress the role of a sort of Spanish Joan of Arc, and will be laid in a locale at the foot of the Pyrenees.

"Lady Robinhood" is the title of the new picture, which is now being cast at the F. B. O. studios. The production will be started within a few days.

De Mille Signs New Beauty

"The girl on the magazine cover" has been transplanted to the screen, by Cecil De Mille in his quest for new faces and talent.

Josephine Norman, five feet four inches of vivid brunette beauty, whose likeness has graced the front cover of many a magazine has been signed as a member of the De Mille Cinema Stock Company, and is now in California.

Sennett and Roach 2-Reelers on Pathe's June 14th Program

COMEDIES from the studios of Hal Roach and Mack Sennett provide the two-reel comedy portion of the Pathe program for the week of June 14, while a Grantland Rice "Sportlight" reveals Gilda Gray, Jack Dempsey, and other stars of the stage and screen in scenes showing how they keep in physical training.

"Super-Hooper-Dyne Lizzies" is the title of the Mack Sennett two-reel comedy which was directed by Del Lord from a story by Jefferson Moffitt and Frank Copra. The quartette of Sennett funsters who are seen in this automobile comedy are Billy Bevan, Andy Clyde, Lillian Knight, and J. J. Richardson.

"The Royal Four-Flush" is the newest Hal Roach two-reeler with the famous "Spat" Family. Frank Butler, Laura Roessing and Sydney D'Albrook, providing their usual excruciatingly funny actions, this time in the foreign land of Rhubarbia where they disturb the peace of his mirthful majesty the king. Jay A. Howe directed.

"In Double Peril" is the intriguing title of the sixth chapter of "Sunken Silver," the current Patheserial starring Allene Ray. In the two reels of mystery and thrills the star is supported by Walter Miller as leading man, Albert Roccardi, Wally Oetel, Frank Wunderlee, and Frank Lackteen. George B. Seitz directed this screen adaptation of one of Albert Payson Terhune's most popular stories, "Black Caesar's Clan."

"Twinkle-Winkle," the Grantland Rice "Sportlight" release, shows how the stars of the stage and screen keep physically fit. Among the celebrities presented are Gilda Gray, Harold Lloyd, Jobyna Ralston, Charles Ray, Jack Dempsey, Douglas Fairbanks, Estelle Taylor and "Our Gang." John L. Hawkinson produced this entertaining reel.

Pathe Review No. 24 brings the noted Albertina Rasch dancers to the screen. The Pathecolor section shows "The City of Legends"—the old fortress town of Fourgeres, France; while "The Secrets of Nature" series brings "Beaks and Bills," a collection of pelicans, flamingoes and cormorants.

"The End of the World" arrives in the latest Paul Terry creation of the "Aesop's Film Fables" series. Other releases on the June 14th program distributed by Pathe are "Topics of the Day" No. 24, and Pathe News Nos. 50 and 51 with the last-minute views of world happenings.

F. B. O.'s "If Marriage Fails—?" Inspires Enthusiastic Reviews

THE enthusiastic reception tendered "Drusilla With A Million" and "Parisian Nights" at the Capitol Theatre, New York, prompted B. S. Moss to book "If Marriage Fails?" the third F. B. O. Gold Bond production on the company's fall and winter program, for his Colony Theatre. "If Marriage Fails?" opened at the Colony Theatre on Sunday, May 31, simultaneously with the opening of "Parisian Nights at the Capitol. This is the first time since the inception of Film Booking Offices that two F. B. O. productions have played two Broadway houses in one week.

The reviewers on the New York newspapers found "If Marriage Fails?" a highly artistic and interesting production, and prophsied that it would prove the usual F. B. O. box office success.

Below are brief excerpts from the notices:

Norbert Lusk in the "Morning Telegraph" says: "C. Gardner Sullivan can always be depended on to give us a story. 'If Marriage Fails?' holds attention from beginning to end and there is considerable suspense. It develops smoothly and rapidly, punctuated by bits of business, numerous elaborate settings, many changes of costume and some very good acting and shrewd titling."

Dorothy Herzog in the "Daily Mirror" says: "'If Marriage Fails?' is presented in an adroit, and unusually delicate fashion."

The New York "American" says: "'If Marriage Fails?' is a real afternoon's entertainment. John Ince's directoin is admirable."

Mordaunt Hall in the New York "Times" says: "'If Marriage Fails?" at the Colony this week, contains surprise after surprise, with the result that one is thoroughly interested in this narrative. The way in which the director achieves contrasts in scenic effects is decidedly skillful."

"Adventures of Maisie" New F. B. O. Series Starring Vaughn

THE success of "Fighting Blood," "The Telephone Girl," "The Go-Getter" and "The Pacemakers" has impelled Film Booking Offices to remain actively in the short subject field, and a new series, "The Adventures of Maisie," from the pen of Nell Martin, well known short story writer, will shortly be launched by F. B. O. on its lot in Hollywood, with petite and dainty Alberta Vaughn starred.

It is probable that Larry Kent, who has been recently signed to a starring contract by F. B. O., will play opposite Miss Vaughn, while Albert Cooke and Kit Guard will support Miss Vaughn and Mr. Kent.

"The Adventures of Maisie" appeared as a series of stories in Top Notch Magazine, and center around Maisie St. Clair, the beautiful and supposedly dumb stenographer in the office of George Dorsey, a struggling young lawyer.

Maisie is desperately in love with George, but does not let him know it, while George is always firing Maisie on some pretext or other. But Maisie doesn't stay fired.

Her activities lead her into many adventures. She is often in danger but she always thinks: "It's for George's sake," and the thought gives her courage to fight and win.

Production on "The Adventures of Maisie" will start just as soon as a director is selected.

F. B. O. Changes Titles

The titles of two F. B. O. feature productions, and one "Pacemaker" have been changed.

"The Mysterious Stranger," a Richard Talmadge story, was originally known as "Twenty Years After," and with comedy variations, is based on Dr. Samuel Johnson's story, "The History of Rasselas, Prince of Abyssinia."

"Lady Robinhood" is Evelyn Brent's newest photodrama for F. B. O. The production is an original by Clifford Howard and Burke Jenkins, and was formerly known as "Tizona—The Firebrand." Ralph Ince is slated to direct.

Casting Begins on "Lady Robinhood"

B. P. Fineman, general manager of the F. B. O. Studios is casting "Lady Robinhood," in which Evelyn Brent will next be starred by Film Booking Offices. The star will portray a sort of female "Mark of Zorro" character in the development of which the comedy highlights will be stressed. Robert Ellis will play opposite the star.

Katherine Bennett Signed

Katherine Bennett, sister of Enid Bennett, has been signed to play opposite Fred Thomson, the F. B. O. Western star, in his next production "The Wild Bull's Lair." Work began this week at the F. B. O. Studios with Del Andrews directing. The story is by Marion Jackson.

"Miss Me Again"

"Miss Me Again" has been selected as the title for the twelfth and last of "The Pacemakers" series, based on the H. C. Witwer stories, co-starring Alberta Vaughn and George O'Hara, and directed by Wesley Ruggles. "Miss Me Again" was formerly called "The Last Lap."

"If Marriage Fails," a C. Gardner Sullivan F. B. O. Gold Bond production, co-starring Jacqueline Logan and Clive Brook

Warner Bros. Announce Fine Comedies for Next Season

WARNER BROS. have arranged an uncommonly attractive schedule of high class comedies for the coming year, their announcement shows.

The offerings cover a wide range of subjects and some of the best known and most popular names in the comedy world are in the list of players.

Special interest attaches to the arrangements to star "Syd" Chaplin in three supercomedies, in the first of which, "The Man on the Box," he will be supported by Alice Calhoun, whose contract with Vitagraph, in many of whose successes she had been featured, has been taken over by the Warners.

Fred Newmeyer, who has directed Harold Lloyd in his biggest and funniest triumphs, is directing, and "Syd" Chaplin has the advantage also of the services of "Chuck" Reisner, for years Charles Chaplin's inimitable gag man.

Matt Moore and Dorothy Devore also will be featured in three comedies, the first of them "Three Weeks in Paris," from the whimsical story by Gregory Rogers. Possibly the biggest hit so far scored by the Moore-Devore combination was "The Narrow Street," but much is promised also by "How Baxter Butted In," which they have just finished.

In "Three Weeks in Paris," Mr. Moore and Miss Devore will be directed for the first time by Roy Del Ruth, whom Warner Bros. tied up to a long term contract following his notable success with the Warner production, "Eve's Lover." Darryl Francis Zanuck wrote the scenario. Among those in the cast beside Mr. Moore and Miss Devore are Willard Louis, Gayne Whitman, John Patrick, Helen Lynch and Frank Bond.

The story has to do with a bashful young American who is torn away from an unkissed bride to face the perils of Paris alone, or rather in the company of a fellow who had made the rounds of that city before. All sorts of things happen and there is no limit to the possibilities of fun in the picture.

Also on the new schedule are twelve two-reelers starring Larry Semon, and produced by Vitagraph. This collection of winners includes: "The Grocery Clerk," "The Fly Cop," "School Days," "Solid Concrete," "The Stage Hand," "The Suitor," "Bears and Bad Men," "Friends and Frenzies," "Humbugs and Husbands," "Scamps and Scandals," "Traps and Tangles," and "Pluck and Plotters." These are reissues, each of which made a great hit on its original presentation.

Mae Busch and "Buttons" (the dog—of course); the former plays in Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's "The Unholy Three"

"Triumph for Lubitsch," Says Critic, of "Kiss Me Again"

"KISS ME AGAIN," Ernst Lubitsch's latest Warner Bros. production, is winning newspaper approval and attracting crowded houses wherever it is appearing. Lubitsch himself comes in for much praise from reviewers, who consider this production in part a great personal triumph for him. Thus W. Ward Marsh, the distinguished critic of the Cleveland "Plain Dealer," says in the course of an appreciation in that paper.

"You will find, if you will go to the Stillman this week—and if you are an adult and appreciate sound humor, I hope you'll go—that Ernst Lubitsch has 'done it' again. He has discussed the solemn [illegible] of matrimony in what Americans popularly believe to be the French methods. In other words he has treated it frivolously, harmlessly and most amusingly. 'Kiss Me Again' is the picture, and it's splendid humor and entertainment. Lubitsch did it the first time with 'The Marriage Circle.' His new one treats the subject a little more broadly and a little more humorously.

"I'd certainly try to see 'Kiss Me Again' if I were you. It's fine sport, and I say it's adult entertainment not because it's unfit for children. It is fit. The treatment of the play is new. And in these days of film making the treatment is everything."

Rudolph Valentino and Nita Naldi in "Cobra," a Ritz-Carlton picture for Paramount

"Bobbed Hair" Completed

Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth Harlan (Marie Prevost) in New Warner Picture

After experiencing everything from real train wrecks to imaginery abductions and battles with rum runners, Marie Prevost and Kenneth Harlan have finished their latest picture, "Bobbed Hair," for Warner Bros. This is the first one they have had the opportunity to work in together since their marriage. Now, however, they are to go their separate ways—of course, for pictures only.

Marie has been cast for "Wanted By The Police," a story by Lewis Milestone and Darryl Zanuck and is to be directed by the former. Mr. Milestone is a former assistant director for the Warners, and has co-directed several pictures on the outside, but is now to have his chance to make a picture on the home lot. He was responsible for the script on "Bobbed Hair."

The cast to date on "Wanted By The Police" includes Marie Prevost, Clive Brook, Claude Gillingwater, John Patrick and "Heinie" Conklin—others will be announced later.

Praise for Star and Cast of New Warner Bros. Drama

WARNER BROS.' "My Wife and I," having its Pacific Coast premiere at the Forum, Los Angeles, got off to a fine start. Extracts from the Los Angeles papers follow:

Record—"As a piece of film work it is one of the best shown here for some time, for it has a perfect roundness and a lack of unnecessary detail. Casting, direction, acting and title work are all exceptionally good. Irene Rich is especially lovely and lovable. Huntly Gordon is his usual self and John Harron does an excellent piece of work."

Herald—"Millard Webb has handled this story with such splendid understanding that it is a picture that cannot fail to please. Miss Rich plays with her usual ease and is at all times pleasing to the eye. Huntly Gordon gives her splendid support. His expressive face and understanding of his part put him on a par with Miss Rich for an all-round good performance. Constance Bennett enacts her part in a very convincing manner."

Examiner—"The picture is well worth seeing. The cast is particularly good. Millard Webb directed, with a deft appreciation of Miss Rich's best qualities."

Times—"Miss Rich is appealing and extremely sympathetic. Huntly Gordon plays in his usual adequate fashion, while Johnny Harron is most convincing."

Following the opening of the run at the Circle, Cleveland, the Cleveland News said: "If there is an expert at the art of playing neglected wives, Miss Rich is it. Her restrained actions play on the heart-strings."

Warner Bros. Will Produce "Climbers" and "Third Degree"

TO the long list of celebrated stage plays which are to have places on their 1925-26 production schedule, Warner Bros. added this week Clyde Fitch's "The Climbers" and Charles Klein's "The Third Degree."

"The Climbers" made its debut at the Bijou Theatre, New York, January 15, 1901, and a long Broadway run was followed by a series of triumphant road trips. Amelia Bingham was the star, with Robert Edeson and Madge Carr Cook among the best known players in a splendid supporting cast.

Helen Ware starred and Wallace Eddinger played the leading man's role in "The Third Degree," which, as a stage production had its world premiere at the Hudson Theatre, New York, February 1, 1909, and scored an instant hit. Its success, too, was continued in repeated tours of the country.

Both "The Climbers" and "The Third Degree" are modern and thoroughly American, the former having to do with the ambitions of social "climbers" and the latter being an expose of police methods alleged to have been in vogue in New York City at the time the play was written.

Clyde Fitch and Charles Klein stood high in the list of American playwrights. They are now dead. Mr. Klein, it will be recalled, was one of the victims of the Lusitania tragedy in May, 1915. Among his many great plays were "The Music Master" and "The Lion and the Mouse."

Silverman Appointed

Special Representative of Warner Bros. To Locate in Chicago

Sam E. Morris, general manager of distribution for Warner Bros., is back at the helm after a busy two weeks on the west coast attending the Warners sales convention, and one of the first announcements made on his return was the appointment of Edwin Silverman as special representative of Warner Bros., with headquarters in Chicago.

In his new capacity Mr. Silverman will have supervision of the Chicago, Milwaukee, Indianapolis, Omaha and Des Moines territories.

Mr. Silverman has long been connected with the motion picture industry, and until recently had charge of the Chicago office of Lubliner and Trinz, who formerly handled the Warner product in that district.

"Warner Bros. Week"

Malden, Mass., Showman Books "Kiss Me Again," and "Baree, Son of Kazan"

The Malden, Mass., Strand made virtually a Warner Bros. Week of the seven days from June 1. It might, indeed, have been in celebration of the Warner purchase of Vitagraph, for one of the attractions bore the Vitagraph label.

The first half of the week was devoted to the Ernst Lubitsch production, "Kiss Me Again," with Monte Blue and Marie Prevost.

During the latter half of the week the special feature was "Baree, Son of Kazan," the picturization of James Oliver Curwood's novel, starring Anita Stewart.

Crowded houses were the rule at every showing of each picture.

Universal's Traveling Studio Finishes First Leg of Trip

LOS ANGELES bade farewell with elaborate ceremonies to the huge "studio on Wheels" which departed from Los Angeles to New York to film "See America First," a picture which will have among its scenes practically every city of importance in the United States. The official farewell was staged before the Chamber of Commerce Building recently with officers of the chamber conducting the ceremonies.

A pennant, bearing the signature of Los Angeles leaders in civic and political life was presented to C. E. Holah, who is to direct the trip of the big motor studio, and Norman Sprowl, business manager of Universal City, represented General Manager Raymond L. Schrock. Reginald Denny, star of "California Straight Ahead," in which the huge motor car was used, Harry Pollard, director, Gertrude Olmstead, Mary Philbin, Lola Todd, Olive Hasbrouck, and other stars were in attendance.

Following the official farewell at the Chamber of Commerce, the motor studio proceeded through the streets, escorted by studio celebrities and the police, and stopped at Universal City, where the studio staged its farewell. Following this it proceeded by the inland route to San Francisco, where the first portion of the picture is now being taken. Salt Lake City, Omaha, Chicago, Boston, New York, New Orleans, and many smaller cities are in the itinerary to follow.

The "Studio on Wheels," is a big Pullman-shaped trailer, containing every convenience of a modern bungalow, from bathroom to radio, sleeping four men. A laboratory for handling film is included. It is drawn by a huge roadster containing a truck motor, and equipped with gas, electric and heat plants and every possible convenience for modern travel.

A director, two cameramen, and two drivers, together with manager and technicians, will make the trip.

The "See America First" unit made its first night's stop in Bakersfield, Cal., and the next day motored on to Merced, Cal. There a tie-up was made with M. J. Cohen, manager of the Merced Theatre, a Universal customer, who acted as host to the crew, and whose theatre greatly benefitted by the presence of the trailer.

The next stop was made at San Jose, Cal., as the guests of N. D. Niedus, manager of the Liberty Theatre, in front of which the trailer was parked for the night. Next day the unit made Palo Alto and helped Manager Bliss of the Stanford Theatre to exploit his current picture with the Stanford University students. The unit then proceeded on to Burlingame.

On the next morning, the unit was met by a large motorcycle escort from San Francisco, and a caravan of pretty girls in automobiles.

During the ten day period preceding the arrival of the Universal caravan in San Francisco, the San Francisco Bulletin had been running a beauty contest to select the prettiest girl in the Golden Gate City. This girl was slated to play the leading role in the See America First pictures taken in and around San Francisco by the Universal voyagers.

The winner and many of the other contestants were in the delegation which met the unit on the outskirts of the city. Thence the caravan proceeded to the City Hall where Mayor Rolph and other city officials welcomed them.

The caravan, followed by the bevy of pretty girls in touring cars then was paraded before the Granada Theatre and thence to the New Civic Center of that city, where it remained on display for the thousands of San Franciscans who wished to inspect it. That night, the unit took up its position in front of the Grenada. Sam Denbow and Jack Partington of the Granada Theatre were so delighted with the exploitation which accrued to the theatre by this move, Holah reports, that they sought and gained permission for the unit to remain in front of the Granada, in busy Market Street for two more days.

The next prolonged stop of the train will be in Salt Lake City.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer played an important part in the recent Shriner's Pageant held in California. This float together with a number of others represented the company in the Shriner celebration. Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer took first prize for its display. On the float reading from left to right are Fred Niblo, Gertrude Olmstead, Renee Adoree, Louis B. Mayer, Claire Windsor, Irving Thalberg and Harry Rapf, all Shriners of the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios.

"Helen and Warren"

Their "Married Life" Series, by Mabel Urner, Comes to the Screen

Preliminary work has been started on the first series of eight stories of "The Married Life of Helen and Warren," one of the best known and most widely read series of articles in newspapers throughout America for the past fifteen years. Director J. G. Blystone has been placed in charge of the production of this series to be released by Fox Film Corporation.

The pictures will be made in two reels each and the first one is scheduled for early fall release. This will be the first time that these popular stories from the newspaper magazine pages have been made for the screen, although Mabel Herbert Urner, the author, has been writing them for more than fifteen years.

They have been, perhaps, the most popular of all stories ever written about modern married life and the domestic problems confronting the young couple in these stories are familiar to every young couple.

Neapolitan Beauty Signed

Fresh from the operatic successes in Palermo, Sicily, and three years before the camera in Italian film studios, Rosa Rudami has been signed by Cecil De Mille as the latest member of his rapidly growing cinema stock company.

Miss Rudami, although born in New York City, went to Italy when a child and was educated in Rome and Brazil. Since her return from Europe and South America, she has been the leading lady of the Italian theatre in New York playing such roles as "Zaza," "Madame X" and "A Daughter of Destiny."

Banner Engages Hattons

Frederick and Fannie Hatton have been engaged by Banner Productions to title the series of pictures for the entire 1925-26 schedule.

The first production titled by the Hattons is "The Love Gamble" which arrives in New York next week. They are at work at the present time on "Wreckage," the second Banner picture, an Izola Forrester story published under the name of "Salvage."

"Watt" Rothacker Gets Eulogy for His Work on Big Film

Watterson R. Rothacker, widely and affectionately known as "Watt" in spite of his position as President of Rothacker Film Mfg. Co., received an unexpected eulogy in a letter from Neil G. Caward, formerly of the trade paper fraternity. In part, Mr. Caward wrote:

"Dear 'Watty,' It ill behooves one of my humble station to even attempt to toss any more bouquets in the direction of 'The Lost World,' since those already received would fill a good sized conservatory, but it is such a truly exceptional production in every way, that I've just gotta blow off steam or blow up. Consider this letter therefore not as a tribute to your production, but as a safety valve for my pent up enthusiasm.

"Having read the trade press reviews of the earlier showings as well as the original story, I was in a sense prepared for what the Roosevelt screen revealed, but I didn't half begin to guess the marvels of camera work you were about to uncork. I was expecting we'd be given some good, but reasonably distant views of the prehistoric monsters prowling about a property landscape, with the usual stop and start camera work to account for their movement. But my gosh when the close-ups began and we could see the darn things breathe—well a hardened old movie fan who is rarely astonished found himself almost speechless.

"Honest, Watty, I can't begin to tell you how many jumps in advance this production places you over the ordinary producers of drawing room drahma! It's positively revolutionary."

Burr Signs Players

Two more important players were signed last week by C. C. Burr to assist Johnny Hines in his forthcoming First National production, "The Live Wire," which goes into production in New York City this week. These include the famed J. Barney Sherry and Bradley Barker, both of whom have given excellent support to the comedy star in his previous pictures.

Summer Speed-Up Urged by Carl Laemmle, of Universal

CARL LAEMMLE, president of the Universal Pictures Corporation, has sent word to all Universal Exchanges to double their activity and efforts during the summer months. This move is prompted by his opinion that most exhibitors need better service and more attention in the summer time than at any other time of the year. Any let down on the part of the exchanges during the months of June, July and August invariably results in poorer service to exhibitors, states the Universal chief.

This is Laemmle's third season of accelerated summer activity. Both in 1923 and 1924 all Universal exchange managers and salesmen were put on their mettle to keep Universal service up to 100 per cent. "If the beaches, amusement parks and other outdoor activities tend to draw patronage away from our exhibitor customers during the summer, it is all the more reason why we should make the best possible pictures available to them and do our utmost to help them win back their public," says Laemmle.

This summer policy has been very popular in the past. Many exhibitors have kept their theatres open in the summer only by reason of concessions obtained from Universal. Also, of course, the co-operative policy has been of advantage to Universal, not only in an increased volume of summer business but in the cementing of good-will and the creation of new accounts for the firm.

As a means of stirring the Universal exchanges to increased interest and activity, Laemmle has created a Sales Trophy to be held for one year by the exchange which does the best work each summer. The trophy is an immense silver ormament, standing four feet high, and valued at $10,000.

It was designed by Black, Starr and Frost, jewelers in New York City. The firm specializes in elaborate designs for trophies, cups and memorials. The Carl Laemmle Trophy stands on a Carrera marble base and is encrusted with silver filagree work. From the base arises the Universal whirling globe with rings, a large silver reproduction of Universal's well-known trade mark. Surmounting the globe is a winged statue representing victory. Other figures are mounted around the globe.

Each year, the name of the winning exchange will be engraved on a silver panel near the base. The exchange which wins it each year will place it in a conspicuous place in the exchange quarters, to be held until the end of the following summer.

In addition to the first White List, which are available in Universal Exchanges for summer showing, including such success as "Smouldering Fires," "Oh Doctor," "Fifth Avenue Models," "Up the Ladder," "Dangerous Innocence," "Siege," "I'll Show You the Town," the long list of Universal's western features are expected to save more than one exhibitor's show this summer.

Universal's Complete Service Plan also is expected to form a large part of the activities of each exchange, present sales indications promise.

Finally, the Universal Exchanges are receiving instructions to bend their activities towards a country-wide and hearty observance of Greater Movie Season, the movement which is bound to increase the receipts of all theatres during the month of August. Universal salesmen have been commanded to boost Greater Movie Season everywhere and all the time, this summer—on trains, in hotels, to theatre managers and to the public.

Six Months' Business Shows a Gain for First National

FIRST NATIONAL'S predictions of a great increase in its business for the present year, due to the superior merit and increased box-office power of its new releases, has been more than justified by the results obtained for the first twenty-six weeks of the year 1925. The receipts for these twenty-six weeks will surpass by several hundred thousands of dollars the receipts for the first twenty-six weeks of the year 1924.

The above statement is on the authority of E. A. Eschmann, of First National. Although four of the first twenty-six weeks' business remains to be played, Mr. Eschmann's figures are accurate.

His figures for the estimate of the first half year's business in 1925 were arrived at in the following manner: All billed business up to the end of May was totaled, and to that was added the income from the bookings for the month of June reported by the various branches—business signed up to be played during June.

"An increase of several hundred thousands of dollars in a half year over the same period of the previous year is a significant fact," said Mr. Eschmann in making the announcement. "There are too many pictures made and the competition for business is too keen for such a big increase to be accidental. It is the result of the increasing merit of First National pictures, of the satisfaction of exhibitors with the box-office results of the past releases, of the entertainment value to the public of First National pictures, of a sane and equitable sales policy and a far greater consideration of the splendid work of the boys in the field.

"This fine showing, accomplished with our special and Leader group of pictures for the first half of the year, is something of a prophecy as to what First National specials and the Winner group of releases will accomplish for the company and the exhibitors playing the new product during the twenty-six weeks beginning July 1. From the story material obtained, the continuity writers, directors and players signed up, we know that the forthcoming product will be superior to our past releases, and the sales policy adopted and communicated to our branch managers and salesmen will obtain for them a more widespread distribution than during the six months now coming to its close."

Lasky Signs Gilda Gray; New Paramount Film Star

GILDA GRAY, a picturesque figure in the American theatre, has signed a contract to star in Paramount pictures, it was announced recently by Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. Miss Gray, with her husband, Gil Boag, as manager will start her career in pictures in a story written by Robert E. Sherwood and Bertram Block. The picture will be directed by Paul Bern.

"In Gilda Gray we feel we have signed one of the greatest box-office attractions the theatre has developed in recent years," said Mr. Lasky. "Her popularity is phenomenal, as was proved recently when she drew $49,000 in one week at the Metropolitan Theatre in Los Angeles. This record has been repeated in other places where she has appeared in the last two years, and the reason for it is Miss Gray's amazing personality. None of this personality will be lost on the screen. We have tested her thoroughly and the same magnetism which has attracted thousands of people all over the country will be manifest in her pictures."

The story of Gilda Gray is a striking American success story. Born in Poland, Miss Gray came to this country at the age of seven as a refugee in the steerage. She began her career as a dancer in a Milwaukee cabaret. Later she went to Chicago, and then came to New York in 1919. Here she nearly starved until, dancing in a demobilization camp, she attracted the attention of Sophie Tucker. Through Miss Tucker's intervention Miss Gray appeared at a Sunday night concert at the Winter Garden and made such a hit the Shuberts engaged her for the "Gaities of 1919." This was one of the plays stopped by the actors' strike, and it was during her enforced idleness that Gil Boag signed her to a contract to dance in his restaurants. Later she danced in the "Follies" and it was as the star of that attraction that she introduced the "shimmy" to the American dancing public.

Picked for Selected List

By including "The Crackerjack" in its selected list of photoplays, the National Board of Review gave a 100 per cent representation to the latest Johnny Hines series which included "The Speed Spook," "The Early Bird," and "The Crackerjack." Particularly gratifying also is the fact that these three C. C. Burr productions also received perfect ratings from each of the trade papers, which along with Photoplay's classification of "The Early Bird" and "The Crackerjack" among its best bets, gives a record to the last independent Hines series that is not only unusual, but an excellent augury of the calibre of productions that First National Pictures may expect from its new comedy star.

Editors to Write Serial Play

Carl Laemmle has added five thousand trained writers to his scenario staff and has won the gratitude of every movie press agent all in one step.

Through an offer which was accepted by the National Editorial Association at their convention in Richmond, Va., June 1, 2 and 3, Laemmle has taken decided steps to open up the heretofore "tight" papers of the small towns. Mr. Laemmle revealed the plan by which ten members of the association of country editors will collaborate on a story to be produced in films at Universal City, Cal.

The story to be written is a serial or chapter play, in ten episodes. The details and working out of the story are left entirely to the imagination and ingenuity of the writers.

Six months or more will be given the editors to prepare the stories, and the picture will be produced at Universal City next year. When the 1926 convention is held in Universal City, the editors will be given an opportunity to see the work of the ten scribes being recorded on celluloid and appear in the film themselves.

Producers Distributing Starts National Newspaper Campaign

ONE of the most comprehensive newspaper advertising campaigns ever undertaken by a motion picture distributing company, in the merchandising of its releases was inaugurated this week by Producers Distributing Corporation, in a national flash in thirty-nine of the biggest newspapers in the United States.

This national campaign is designed to create a public demand well in advance of release dates. Also by special arrangement with the business promotion departments of the various newspapers, proofs of the announcement, as printed in their respective publications will be circulated to all theatre owners and selected lists of individuals in each city, by the newspapers carrying the advertisement.

The first advertisement in this campaign is a full page announcement carrying a message on the importance of individuality and independence in the production of motion pictures, the record of achievements of the producers affiliated with Producers Distributing Corporation, and a pledge that every effort will be expended to furnish entertainment of the highest quality in the coming releases.

The advertisement also advances the names of the prominent playwrights, authors and scenarists whose works will be filmed, and lists the big stars and popular players that will appear in the first thirty-two pictures to be released during the coming year.

Included in the thirty-two pictures announced are, the two personally directed Cecil B. De Mille productions adapted by Jeanie Macpherson, "The Road to Yesterday," featuring Joseph Schildkraut, Jetta Goudal and Vera Reynolds, and "The Volga Boatman," by Konrad Bercovici. The ten De Mille supervised pictures, "Three Faces East" with Agnes Ayres and Robert Ames, "Hell's Highroad," "Made for Love," "Eve's Leaves," and "The Wedding Song," all starring Leatrice Joy. "The Coming of Amos," "The American," "The Untamed Gentleman" and "Red Dice" the Rod La Rocque starring vehicles, and "Silence" featuring Lewis Stone. Eight Hunt Stromberg titles include "The Last Frontier," "Shipwrecked," "The Open Switch," Priscilla Dean in "The People vs. Nancy Preston" and "The Flame of the Yukon." Harry Carey in "The Man from Red Gulch," "Roaring River" and "The Valley of Fear." Al. Christie is represented by "Seven Days" and "Madame Lucy" featuring Julian Eltingle and Ann Pennington. "Fifth Avenue" with Lewis Stone and "Clothes Make the Pirate" with Leon Errol are two Sam Rork features.

Four George Melford productions include "Without Mercy" featuring Vera Reynolds, "The Million Dollar Handicap" with Lillian Rich, "Steel Preferred" and "Her Two Men." "Simon the Jester" and "The New Magdalen" are two Frances Marion productions. A. H. Sebastian is represented by the Edward Belasco production "The Prince of Pilsen" and Renaud Hoffman lists "The Unknown Soldier."

Christie's "Stop Flirting" Wins Los Angeles' Commendation

THE West Coast premiere of Al. Christie's newest feature "Stop Flirting" which took place last week at The Forum, Los Angeles, was marked by a rousing reception from the public and unprecedented praise from the newspaper critics.

Patterson Greene's criticism in the Los Angeles Examiner is illustrative of the general tone of the newspaper opinion, and in addition it sums up the big points of the production in a manner that will be of interest to every exhibitor, Mr. Greene says:

"Not in many years has the screen shown such a comedy as 'Stop Flirting,' now at the Forum. Not, in fact, in about fifteen years. Some of the younger movie fans have probably never seen such a film. It's a knock-down, drag-out stuff of the pre-Chaplin era.

"And the funniest thing about it is—it's funny. Early in the picture your better judgment takes the air, your self-respect passes into a coma, and you join in the chorus of guffaws that waxes stronger with every reel.

"It may not be edifying—but neither is a ride on the Jack Rabbit at Ocean Park. They both have entertainment value of their kind, and it's about the same kind. 'Stop Flirting' is drawing capacity audiences, and pleasing them mightily.

"It may fairly be called a comedy hit—everybody gets hit with something, and some get hit with everything. And it cannot be callep a flop, even though they all take turns flopping on their dorsal vertebrae and going on backwards to complete the spinal circuit.

"Wanda Hawley heads the feminine can of crockery smashers, and John Murray is the chief male performer of rear somersaults. Others in the fray are Jack Duffy, Hallam Cooley, Ethel Shannon, Vera Steadman, Jimmie Adams and Jimmie Harrison.

"There really is a technique in acting of this sort—it requires nerve, speed, and a sense of timing. The actors all know their stuff, and don't try to be subtle. Scott Sidney, recognizing that he had slapstick to direct, stuck to the style and made a thorough job of it. The film was produced by Christie.

"I'll Tell the World" Completed

William Wellman, the latest directorial acquisition of the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer forces, has completed the selection of the cast for "I'll Tell the World," his first production at the Culver City Studios.

George K. Arthur has been assigned the leading role and the cast includes Gertrude Olmstead, Charles Murray, Antonio D'Algy, Effie Ellsler, Joseph McCray, Floyd Sheffield, Jack Holbrook, Harvey Perry and Red Thompson.

Cecil B. De Mille Ready For "Road To Yesterday"

EVERYTHING humanly possible is now being done to assure in advance, the complete success of the initial De Mille-directed offering "The Road to Yesterday." Exceptional talent has been secured for every type of work which goes into the making of a production of the tremendous proportions of this picture. Cecil B. De Mille will give the production his personal attention and will work from a script prepared by Jeanie Macpherson and Beulah Marie Dix.

The strength of the production will be carried out in the cast. Joseph Schildkraut, who took New York by storm as the lead in "The Firebrand," will be the featured actor, playing opposite Jetta Goudal, colorful French actress. Vera Reynolds, who has taken big strides toward stardom in recent pictures, has also been cast for a featured part, while the rest of the cast will be completed from the wealth of talent in De Mille's cinema stock company.

The photography is to be handled by Arthur Miller, a camera man high in repute in the screen world because of his excellent work in filming George Fitzmaurice productions. Frank Urson and Paul Iribe will assist De Mille in the directing.

"The Road to Yesterday" includes a spectacular transition from modern to medieval times, with the same characters portrayed in strange surroundings. The play from which the screen story was adapted was written by Miss Dix and E. G. Sutherland, and enjoyed unusual success on the stage twenty years ago.

Quick Work by Fox News

Less than five hours after the finish of the annual automobile races at Indianapolis on Saturday, June 1, views of the race taken by Fox News cameramen were shown in two out of three theatres in the Loop district in Chicago. The Fox News negative was rushed to Chicago by airplane and developed in that city for the Midwest territory. The showing on Broadway was flashed on the screen at eight o'clock Sunday evening just thirty hours after the completion of the race.

Mary Pickford in "Scraps"; "Little Annie Rooney" Ready

MARY PICKFORD'S new screen feature, "Little Annie Rooney," in which this star returns to the ragamuffin, hoydenish roles which so endeared her to the public and won her the title "The World's Sweetheart," has been finished and is now being edited and titled and made ready for general release in September through United Artists Corporation.

Miss Pickford expresses herself as so pleased with the picture that she has re-engaged practically the entire staff for her next production, "Scraps," which will be started at once.

William Beaudine, who directed "Little Annie Rooney," also will direct "Scraps."

"I have never found a director who better understood the type of picture I want to make than Mr. Beaudine," says Miss Pickford. "He understands child life and children and has a splendid sense of dramatic values."

Tom McNamara, famous for his kid comic strips, also will be with Miss Pickford on "Scraps." He acted as "gag man" for "Little Annie Rooney" and also wrote the titles.

Charles Rosher, who has been with Miss Pickford for several years, and did the camera work on "Little Annie Rooney," will photograph "Scraps."

"Scraps" will tell the story of a baby farm in a swamp country and is a vehicle that will be ideal for "The World's Sweetheart." It was adapted for the screen from an original by Katherine Hennessey. Winfred Dunn did the story and the scenario.

E. DeB. Newman is general manager for Miss Pickford and George H. Thomas is in charge of publicity and exploitation at the studio.

Henry Ginsberg Announces Banner and Royal Sales

THE Henry Ginsberg Distributing Corporation announces the closing of further territory for the exclusive output of Banner Productions and Royal Pictures.

The Liberty Film Distributing Corporation of Philadelphia as previously stated has the Eastern Pennsylvania and Southern New Jersey rights and with contracts closed with the Columbia Film Service, Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia are taken care of. The deal was consummated after a series of conferences between James Alexander representing the Columbia interests and Henry Ginsberg.

The Celebrated Players Film Corporation of Indianapolis under the management of S. Golden have contracted for Indiana while Harry Hynes manager of the St. Louis Film Exchange in association with Skouras Brothers has closed for the Banner and Royal product for Eastern Missouri and Southern Illinois.

Jeffrey Bernard, continental representative for Henry Ginsberg is on his way to New York and with his arrival will be given the details of a deal which takes care of the European situation.

With the closing of the territory noted, Henry Ginsberg stated that he had practically sold the entire country with the exception of one or two spots which will be closed in a day or so.

Clara Bow Named for Lead

An announcement is made by B. P. Schulberg to the effect that the leading feminine role in Percy Marks' novel of college life, "The Plastic Age," would go to Clara Bow. Marcel De Sano will direct and opposite Miss Bow in the masculine lead will be Donald Keith. Production on the story will begin early in July as soon as De Sano completes his screen version of "The Girl Who Wouldn't Work."

"Marrying Money" for Truart

"Marrying Money," one of the six Truart Blue Ribbon series, will be released for the Fall program. A cast of well-known screen players will enact the principal characters. The story deals with the problems of marrying for money as compared to the marriages for love only.

Tremendous Crowds Welcome Tom Mix Back to Hollywood

THE reception accorded Tom Mix and Tony throughout the Middle-West was even greater if possible than the ovation he received in the Eastern cities following his return from Europe. After leaving Washington and Philadelphia the Mix party stopped at seven of the largest Mid-West cities on the way to Hollywood.

One of the biggest receptions was in Cincinnati, Ohio, where the Redland ballpark was thrown open for twenty thousand children invited to see the game and to see Tom Mix and Tony perform in right field under the auspices of the Cincinnati Times-Star. The National Sunshine Club presented Tony with a gold plaque to be attached to his bridle and this presentation was made at the park by four ballplayers who formerly lived in California.

The Kentucky Breeders' Association presented Mix with a colt named "Kentucky Pride." This presentation which was scheduled to take place in the ballroom of the Sinton Hotel at a luncheon to newspapermen and exhibitors was made by a girl from the Junior League. Following a reception at the City Hall Mr. Mix entertained the crippled children at the Zoo at a party arranged by the Rotary Club. Although it was necessary to set back the entire schedule from Cincinnati because of a wreck which held up the Mix train near Harrisburgh, Pa., the same big ovation was received from every city.

In addition to calling on the Governor of Indiana and Mayor Shank of Indianapolis, while in that city, Mix visited the James Whitcomb Riley Hospital for Children, and also attended a reception given by the Board of Motion Picture Endorsers. Tom Mix rode Tony around the Circle Monument and later put on a small rodeo at the ballfield at Broad Ripple Park. In Indianapolis the newsboys presented Mr. Mix with a goat as his mascot until he reached Hollywood.

Fifteen thousand children and as many adults gathered in front of the Art Institute in Forest Park, St. Louis, to see Tom Mix ride Tony. Before riding in the park Mr. Mix attended the St. Louis-Cleveland ball game. Tony was placed on display for one hour in the Boys' Department of one of the leading department stores. One feature of the St. Louis visit was the fact that nearly forty prints of Tom Mix's pictures had been booked for that day by the local Fox Film Exchange.

In both Omaha and Kansas City the cowboys on duty at the stockyards escorted Tom Mix from the railroad station to his hotel. Mr. Mix gave one of his sombreros to the mayor in each city visited and in every town he spoke over the radio. From Omaha the Mix party went to Denver and Salt Lake City and then right on to Hollywood.

Tom Mix was welcomed home to Hollywood from his European tour on June third, by a tremendous crowd which is declared to be the greatest reception ever accorded to a homecoming star in the entire history of the motion picture industry. The tremendous greeting given to Mr. Mix in his home city was a fitting close to the successful European and domestic tour of the William Fox star and which proved conclusively that Tom Mix is the most popular motion picture star of today.

Cowboys and cowgirls on horseback, Indian chiefs in war bonnets and full holiday regalia, a large delegation of Shriners, Mexican plainsmen, a cowboy band, an American Legion band, stage coaches with four horse teams and a long line of automobiles filled with other players and motion picture executives and city officials greeted Tom Mix on his arrival in Hollywood.

Despite a downpour of rain, Mr. Mix rode Tony through thronged streets to the City Hall from the railroad station, a distance of more than a mile. Here he presented Mayor George Cryer with one of his famous ten-gallon hats. This was the first time that Mayor Cryer has ever officially welcomed a motion picture star in behalf of the city.

From the City Hall the parade then passed on to the William Fox West Coast Studio where another reception was held and the popular star greeted by detachments of Boy Scouts, several uniformed companies of local military schools and hundreds of school boys and girls. The entire studio suspended work for one hour until the players, directors, electricians and mechanics could welcome the return of Mr. Mix and Tony. Throughout the line of march there were welcoming legends and the entire studio was draped in flags and bunting for the greatest day in its history since the opening ceremony.

This was the week of the Shriners Convention and seventy-five thousand Nobles were enough interested to stand in the rain until the Mix parade had passed. The police department issued a special permit to allow the Mix party to parade through the downtown business section and also provided a motorcycle escort and uniformed patrolmen to handle the traffic.

Planes Lay Smoke Screen Around the Los Angeles

FOR the first time in history a smoke screen was laid by aeroplanes around a navy dirigible when at Washington, on Wednesday, June 3, a Martin bomber dropped a silvery curtain over the "Los Angeles" as the gigantic balloon sailed majestically over the capitol.

The demonstration was arranged by the Bureau of Aeronautics, U. S. Navy and the Marine Corps, at the suggestion of International Newsreel, and the thrilling motion pictures of the epochal event are being shown at leading theatres exclusively by International Newsreel in issue No. 48.

For the past two months, representatives of International Newsreel have been negotiating with the Navy Department to make such a picture, not only in order to secure the unexampled pictures themselves, but also to demonstrate that aeroplanes can protect a great army balloon from attack by laying a smoke screen around it.

International Newsreel agreed to pay all of the expenses of the enterprise, but a suitable time had to be arranged.

The auspicious day came last week when the "Los Angeles" went to Annapolis for the commencement exercises. It was arranged that she should return to Lakewood from Annapolis by way of Washington and that the smoke screen should be dropped over as she flew over the capitol.

Fourteen representatives of International Newsreel, including a dozen cameramen, went to Washington. Some of them were in aeroplanes, from which to photo the demonstration, while others were scattered about the city photographing from every vantage point, including the Washington Monument. Two men climbed to the top of the high shaft (for the elevator was not running) carrying their cameras with them.

The actual smoke screen was laid by a Martin bomber, operated by Lieut. Stanley E. Ridderhoff. In another Martin bomber, piloted by Lieut. Frank G. Cowle, was U. K. Whipple, International Newsreel cameraman, who followed in the wake of the dirigible. In another bomber was Norman Alley, International Newsreel cameraman, piloted by Lieut. H. D. Palmer.

At the moment the "Los Angeles" left Annapolis, the Anacostia Naval Air Station at Bolling Field was notified by telephone. The aeroplanes were primed and ready and at the first signal of the sighting of the "Los Angeles" as she rode lazily up the Anacostia River, they took to the air. When the "Los Angeles reached the War College, she was completely surrounded by the other aircraft and, at a signal from the ground, Lieut. Ridderhoff started to lay the smoke screen. The other planes, with cameramen photographing it from every angle, followed the gigantic dirigible across the city, over the Capitol, and remained with her until she slowly headed toward her hangar at Lakewood. She was commanded by Capt. George W. Steele.

The visit of the "Los Angeles" to Washington and the laying of the smoke screen was a complete surprise to everyone in the Capitol; all of the preparations having been made and carefully guarded by International Newsreel. Navy officers said that the demonstration would prove of incalculable value, while motion picture experts declared the picture to be among the most beautiful and thrilling ever made.

Thomson Launches New Picture

"The Wild Bull's Lair" from the pen of Marion Jackson, will be Fred Thomson's first new vehicle for F. B. O. under the terms of his new contract with the distributing organization which makes him one of the highest paid stars in filmdom. Work began this week under the direction of Del Andrews.

"Proud Flesh" Registers Hit At Loew's State, Los Angeles

"PROUD FLESH," the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer production, directed by King Vidor, from the Laurence Rising novel, adapted to the screen by Harry Behn and Agnes Christine Johnstone, has registered a tremendous hit with the critics and public of Los Angeles, where this popular film played recently at Loew's State Theatre. Eleanor Boardman, Pat O'Malley and Harrison Ford are the featured players.

"Thanks to a keen sense of humor expressed by King Vidor and his cast," wires Orlando Northcutt, in the Los Angeles Evening Express, "'Proud Flesh' is a scintillant comedy as fresh as a breath of spring air. The thing is so well co-ordinated as to direction, title writing and acting that it has a delightful lilt to it. No one who had anything to do with the picture took himself or the story seriously. As a consequence there is a brightness to the film that is rarely seen.

"Eleanor Boardman as Fernanda is beautiful and spirited. Pat O'Malley, curiously enough, plays Pat O'Malley and he makes it one of the most likable roles he has ever played. The outstanding playing of the picture is that of Harrison Ford as Don Jaime Diego. Ford plays the role with finesse and injects much subtle charm by the suavity with which he clothes his movements. Trixie Friganza and William J. Kelly are splendid as the aunt and uncle of Fernanda. Trixie films like a million. 'Proud Flesh' is highly amusing."

"King Vidor," reports the Los Angeles Examiner, "has directed the story for all there was in it. Harrison Ford as the Spanish don, does the best work of his career. He is most effective as the suave, nonchalant balcony climber of Barcelona, and puts a neat little devilish twist into the finals of the picture which evoked plenty of mirth at the performances yesterday. Pat O'Malley as the plumber, is great. He is the typical young American to the core. He stands up for his rights and demands an honest love in exchange for his heart's devotion, with a courage which would justify a better cause. He is good at it too, and whether his attire is that of the smart young business man, or the working plumber, he commands more than the usual ohs and ahs of admiration from his house. Eleanor Boardman makes the most of her role and Miss Friganza plays Mrs. McGee with plenty of good clothes and good comedy."

"Eleanor Boardman, Harrison Ford and Pat O'Malley do the honors in the acting," says the Los Angeles Daily Times, "and King Vidor's direction keeps things moving. The cleverest portrayal in many respects is that of Ford as the Spaniard. I do not believe I have ever seen him do anything more finished. At the same time Miss Boardman's work as the heroine is splendid. She exhibits more decided comedy talent than ever. O'Malley performed very valiant service as the hero."

"It's one of the most entertaining pictures in town," says Kenneth Taylor in the Los Angeles Record. "Take 'Proud Flesh' for that tired feeling; for that dejected spirit; for what ails you. There is unusual freshness in its treatment, sparkle in its titles and novelty in its plot."

Buys Two Screen Stories

First National has purchased the screen rights to the new and as yet unpublished novel by Gertrude Atherton, "The Crystal Cup," which will later be published in book form by Doubleday, Page & Co. First National has recently contracted for the screen rights to a story by William H. Crawford, "Jail Birds, Incorporated," for one of its young featured players. Mr. Crawford has written the scenarios for several successful motion pictures.

How to Use This Chart

First—Booking! Get accurate footage and look up date review appeared in Moving Picture World. Then you can decide if the picture will suit your audience.

Second—Play date! When you set your play date, consult this Chart to set the picture on a date that will not conflict with preceding and following pictures; avoid a sequence of similar type of story; space out your specials.

Third—Laying Out Program! This chart shows star and kind of story as well as accurate length; you can lay out a balanced program easily, avoid over—and under-length program.

Fourth—Exploitation! Through this chart find the review in Moving Picture World; this will give a good synopsis, the all-important cast and a fine line on exploitation possibilities as well as the things you'll want to soft-pedal.

Always! Turn to this Chart when you want accurate information in simple form and easy to get at a glance. AND—

$1 for Your Time

Many exhibitors tell us that Moving Picture World Guide to Releases is the most accurate available to them. We know it is the most complete in that it is the only chart containing names of stars, type of picture, and all necessary information to the exhibitor.

We want it to be absolutely accurate—Moving Picture World recognizes the importance of accurate footage information, etc.

If you notice an error in FEATURE footage, or any other major error, we will pay you $1 for the effort on your part of writing us a letter telling us the correct facts.

In many territories local censorship cuts alter the footage to a minor extent. Don't write to tell us of these unimportant variations. But in any case where you feel that our figures will work a real hardship on the exhibitor following them—shoot us the word and we will shoot the dollar for your trouble.

Moving Picture World is willing to back up its complete confidence in the accuracy of its chart with its money.

We can't do more. No one else does as much. We thank you.

PROJECTION

EDITED BY F. H. RICHARDSON

From California

Hal H. Campbell, Projectionist Majestic Theatre, Redlands, California, sends the following:

Dear Mr. Richardson:— I have been an interested reader of the department for a long time and am truly ashamed of myself for not having shown my appreciation at an earlier date. The department has helped me a great deal and I am grateful to you and to it.

I have been very much interested in your articles regarding film damage and am sending you some choice samples of sloppy workmanship. The one I have marked with the cross destroyed 13½ feet film. I had to cut out that much before it could be run. Not only were there sprocket tooth marks on the film, but many of them were punched clear through. It seems to me that any "OPERATOR" who would let a film ride the sprocket teeth for thirteen feet would make a good candidate for a street sweeper in a town where they don't have horses.

The enclosed "Trey O' Diamonds" was cut from a Vitagraph late release. You may judge for yourself the condition of the print.

Advertising Films

Mr. Richardson, you have romped on the exchanges until you've gotten us pretty good service. Thanks! Now why not take a little punch at some of these companies who put out so many advertising films and do not even know the meaning of the word "inspection." I just finished with a one reel subject from one company in which I had to make thirty-seven patches before using.

The film came to me in seven pieces. The rest of the job was cutting out damaged places and stiff and sloppy splices. On the first run—it pulled four splices in two above the aperture—and I just love white screens—not! It was "safety" film, and evidently the other fellow tried to use "regular" cement. We have run a number of these advertising films and I have yet to see one that could be used without first giving it a thorough overhauling.

The little piece of film with the round holes sure take the marbles. Perfect job of notching too.

Dollar a Foot

There is a laboratory in San Francisco that charges a dollar a foot for advertising film using this brand of splices. They must have them patented. They are all just alike. Cut out thirteen in fifty feet. Some day I'm going to copy some splicing instructions out of the Bluebook and send them to that outfit, along with the address of a firm which sells splicing machines.

I think it's time I rang off now, but I'm going to get into the Bluebook school some of these days—if I may. I've learned a lot by reading what the other fellow has to say, but I'd like to get into the game myself. Huh? Sure I have! I've got a red one and a blue one, too, and there's no dust on 'em either. I'm a Richardson man (what there is of me) and I'm proud of it. Some day I hope to be in the "PROJECTIONIST" class.

Wish you the best of luck.

Bluebook School

[Note: Messrs. Thoreau and Clark, Vancouver, have suggested what seems a really valuable addition to the "school." they have submitted three "practical" questions—meaning questions having to do with everyday problems encountered in the projection room. They will constitute the first three questions of this set. I would suggest that projectionists, being careful to avoid trivial things, or questions designed to "catch" some one, propound such questions of this nature as many as may seem to them to be pertinent. Let's go!]

Question No. 306—If you are using a Transverter, or other series type machine of, say, 75-75 ampere capacity and have no other source of current supply in the projection room, how would you go about showing slides, such as song slides, to avoid breakage?

Question No. 307—How would you arrange to use a spot light off a Transverter, or other series type motor generator?

Question No. 308—If you have a 75 ampere high intensity lamp and are using a full diameter lens, the feature is dense or medium, but the comedy and news reel mostly thin, how would you manage to overcome glare and a flattening of the photography without reducing the projection lens diameter?

Question No. 309 (Re-asked for reasons set forth in the answer to question No. 273)—What is the difference between A. C. and D. C.?

Question No. 310—How would you calculate the capacity of any round copper wire?

Welcome to School

Allright, brother, we'll be glad to have you in the "School," for your own sake as well as for the good of the school. I don't care how much a man may know, he cannot but be benefited if he joins the "School" and takes the trouble to really send in as complete answers to the questions as possible. Get that last—SEND IN AS COMPLETE ANSWERS AS POSSIBLE. Merely copying the answers out of the Bluebook will help, yes, but the man who gets the large benefit is the one who takes on the burden of really digging into the matter dealt with, and examining it from all angles. When that boy sends in his answer he has already learned something he did not know before, or at least it is a hundred-to-one-shot he has, and when the other answers arrive he will find where he is wrong, or where his understanding was at fault and, believe me, HE WON'T FORGET.

"Trey O' Diamonds"

The "Trey O' Diamonds" referred to is a piece of apparently nearly new film in which some hopeless IDIOT has cut diamond shape change-over signal holes about 3/8 of an inch long by a quarter of an inch wide right smack in the middle of every other frame. Such a man richly deserves to be horsewhipped. It is just plain wanton destruction of property and deliberate damage to the next man's show. I can speak plainly to such as he for the hide of such an animal is too thick to puncture with words, and brains—well, he apparently has none.

The sample with round holes is almost equally as bad. The holes are in every other frame, and are nearly a quarter of an inch in diameter. The sample marked with an X (cross) had a splice stiff as a board, fully three eights of an inch wide, with the sprocket holes mismatched badly. It was pretty badly buckled too. Outside of these few minor faults it was a real good splice, except that the sprocket hole in the splice, on one side, had its side ripped away, and it was not even "notched."

As to the manufacturers of advertising films, I don't think anything can be done with or about them. As I understand the matter, they furnish the films free of charge—possibly I am in error but don't think so—and probably they figure the ones who use them ought to keep them in repair. They don't know that film repairing and inspection is not a part of the duty of the projectionist—that he gets no pay for that sort of work—and that they read projection departments is extremely doubtful.

As to this department having remedied film conditions, you give us too much credit. It is true that both it and my handbooks have persistently and consistently hammered on that particular thing for many years, and that has surely had its effect. Just how much effect I don't know, but this I will say: I believe that only for the work of this department, Canadian and United States projectionists would long ago have been saddled with practically all film inspection and repair. That was the direction things were headed toward when I took the matter up about twelve years ago, and so far as I know this department is absolutely the only agency which has done anything particularly effective in the matter in all the intervening years.

Exchanges

As to the exchanges and their recent activities which have already resulted in a partial remedying of conditions which were in some cases pretty awful, I believe the fight this department has led and kept alive for so many years certainly was, indirectly perhaps, what brought it about.

As to publicity admitting that you are a "Richardson Man," why, while I appreciate your faith, and feel honored that you think so highly of me still if I were ever to say anything kind about you in future, some ivory domed jackass will instantly raise himself on his hind legs and BRAY: "Yah! Lookut! That's th' feller wot said he wus a Richersun man! Lookut. I know'd ut! Yuh scratch my back an' I'll scratch yers! Lookut!

Well, brother Campbell, what that brand of chump says doesn't worry me in the least, and I hope it doesn't you either. Take my advice. Get into the Bluebook School and STAY IN.

As to you not having written YOUR department sooner, you, perhaps, like many others, have not given consideration to the fact that Moving Picture World was the first paper to give motion picture projection any sort of recognition whatsoever; also it is the only paper which has, through practically all its life maintained a projection department in its pages, with a free hand to do anything necessary and reasonable to improve projection, which means improve the knowledge and skill of the men engaged therein and to insist upon the improvement of their working conditions to the end that the high class men needed for such intricate work be attracted to the profession of projection, or those already in it be forced to improve themselves.

Suppose ALL men had, "like yourself, kept silent. Do you for one moment think I could have carried the work forward nearly so effectively? Certainly I could not have done it. So in future just remember that this is not "MY" department half so much as it is "YOURS." It seeks earnestly to help the profession of motion picture projection and the men engaged therein, but to do that effectively it needs YOUR help. Without it we shall go on, but will not be able to do nearly so much for projection and the projectionist.

Proposed Law

Walter Johnson, Champaign, Ills., who some weeks ago asked the help of this department in the matter of the enactment of a law compelling the installation of toilet facilities for projection rooms, sends various letters the local has from others who saw the publication and expressing willingness to help; also letters from various officials.

The State Federation of Labor, through its Secretary, Victor A. Olander, expresses the belief that it would be impractical to get a bill through the present legislature, which is already well along in its session, but that probably the matter could be handled through the present health regulations. He has brought the matter to the attention of George B. Arnold, Director of Labor; also the Department of Public Health with view of ascertaining whether or not anything can be done under present existing laws.

George B. Arnold in a reply says:

Am in receipt of your communication in regard to the Moving Picture Houses in Champaign not having proper toilet facilities for the moving picture operators.

It is not necessary to introduce any bill in the legislature covering this complaint. Our health, safety and comfort law provides for our jurisdiction over matters of this kind. (But has NOT given it up to this time.—Ed). I will have our Deputy Factory Inspector located in the Champaign district clean up this complaint. If you will submit to me at my Chicago office the name of the President or Secretary of the Champaign Local Union, I will advise our Deputy Factor Inspector to report to him direct and they can then work together.

Which is all very well as far as it goes, BUT without a law bearing directly upon the subject it means a separate, individual fight in every town where there is a local, and who is going to protect the men in towns where there are none? Certainly up to this time the Department Mr. Arnold is connected with has NOT, though on the face of it it apparently was the DUTY of that department to do it.

Labor Secretary

The Secretary of the Illinois Federation of Labor, in requesting the local Secretary to send Mr. Arnold the data desired says:

* * * I am in receipt of a letter from the State Department of Health suggesting a bill for an act to establish a code of basic plumbing principle (House Bill No. 310) introduced in this session, if enacted might be the solution.

Attached to the other communications was the following:

An act to require the installation of certain sanitary facilities in the operating rooms of theatres and moving picture houses, and providing penalties for its violation.

The people of the State of Illinois do enact as follows: Section 1—In the operating room of every theatre and moving picture house hereinafter erected, the permit for the erection of which house is issued upon or after the effective date of this act, and of every theatre and moving picture show place hereinafter installed in any existing building not then used for such purpose, the permit for which is issued upon or after the effective date of this act, there shall be provided running water and toilet facilities for the use of the operator.

In every municipality, or other place having a sewer system adjacent to the building, such toilet facilities in said operating room shall consist of a flush tank toilet and a water basin with running water. In any municipality or other place having no sewer system, a dry closet, or other contrivance acceptable to the local health officer shall be located in the said operating room in place of and instead of flush tank toilet.

The proposed act then concludes by defining the terms "Theatre" and "Moving Picture Houses" and "Moving Picture Show Place," and providing that the penalty be a fine of twenty five dollars, for each violation, each day the violation continues to constitute a separate violation.

My Suggestion

My own suggestion for change, or for a substitute, follows, omitting the usual opening clause and the penalty and definition clauses:

The people of the State of Illinois do enact as follows:

Section 1—The projection room of every theatre and of every motion picture house hereafter erected, the permit for the erection of which is issued upon or after the effective date of this act, and of every theatre and motion picture show place hereinafter installed in any existing building not then used for such purpose, the permit for which shall be issued upon or after the effective date of this act, shall have installed therein, or in a room or closet immediately adjacent thereto and opening directly in the said projection room, toilet facilities and a basin with running water for the use of the motion picture projectionist, subject only to the provisions contained in clause 2 of this act.

Clause 2

Clause 2—In every municipality or other places where pressure water and a sewer system is adjacent to the building, such toilet facilities in said projection room shall consist of an approved flush tank toilet and a wash basin with running water, the installation as a whole to be approved by the local health authorities.

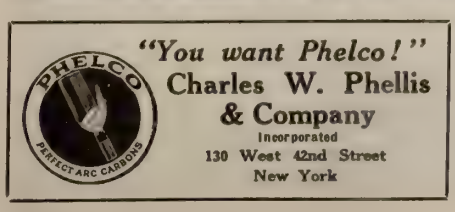
In any municipality or other place where either pressure water or a sewer system or both, is unavailable, then a chemical toilet approved by the local health authority shall be installed, either in the said projection room or in a room or closet immediately adjacent thereto and opening directly into it, said installation to be approved by the local health authorities.

Section 3

Section 3—In any locality where there is no sewer system available, but where pressure water is installed in the building containing any theatre or motion picture house, a chemical toilet may be installed as set forth in section 2 of this act, but a wash basin with running water shall be provided as set forth in section 1 of this article.

If there is any objection to up-to-date terms, advise the objectors that they have been approved and officially adopted by the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, and by many states and Canadian provinces, which have made their laws in conformity therewith. However, let it be understood that I am no lawyer, hence the draft is suggestive only.

The trouble with all this is that it makes no provision for present day theatres, hence is unsatisfactory, unless that matter can be handled effectively under present health regulations. If any exhibitor objects to so obviously a NECESSITY as projection room toilet—well, this department is "agin'" him in that, and that's that!



Golly, What a Mixup!

I have a letter from the Nicholas Power Company calling attention to an error on page 373 of May 16 issue, where I referred an inquiry concerning a Power's 6-A projector to W. Greene, of the Precision Machine Company, 317 West 34th street, New York City.

All I can say is that just when I started to write that my gizzard short-circuited with my left shoulder blade, which had the effect of reversing my think works, blowing the fuse on the Power line and making connection with Greene through the relay switch operating the buzunkus circuit just under the roof of my dome. Aside from that its all-right, and I hereby cheerfully accept the apology of both the Power Company and the Precision Machine Company.

Bluebook School—Answers 276-280

(Note—Thoreau and Clark, Vancouver, B. C., sent correct answers to the last set of questions, but they were accidentally mislaid.)

(Note No. 2—Be SURE to always put your name on each sheet of your answer, and your name and address on the FIRST PAGE.)

Question No. 276—Is low frequency or high frequency current best for projection?

G. W. Bennewitz, Sioux Falls, So. Dakota (Gee! Look who's here!); Arthur Gray, Boston, Mass.; A. L. Fell, Collingswood, New Jersey; C. H. Hanover, Burlington, Iowa; Messrs. M. H. Thoreau and Locksley Clark, Vancouver, B. C.; F. H. Moore, Taunton, Mass.; T. R. Guimond, Mobile, Alabama; W. C. Budge, Garden City, Long Island; W. R. Gwynn, Longmont, Colorado; Glenn G. Wallace, Muskegon, Michigan; G. L. Doe, Chicago, Illinois; Chas. C. Colby, Santa Fe, New Mexico, and W. C. Whitt, Red Bluff, California, all gave correct replies to this one.

Gray says:

The rapid reversal of polarity at the electrodes of an A. C. arc and the characteristic fluctuations of voltage prevents the crater, or craters of the arc being maintained at an even and constant temperature. As the voltage builds up, so does the crater temperature increase, and vice versa. This action effects a corresponding influence on the screen illumination, and upon the frequency of the current depends the extent to which this variation in screen illumination becomes objectionable. If the frequency be lower, the duration of the cycles or alternations are lengthened. Consequently the "highs" and "lows" of the arc temperature are emphasized, and if the frequency be low enough (such as 25-cycle current) a visible and regular fluctuation in screen illumination will occur. Furthermore, when low cycle current is used the arc stream will waver badly, the carbons will splutter and perform poorly, and screen results will be generally poor.

Which reply shows a comprehensive understanding of the subject, if you ask this editor.

Bennewitz says:

Where low frequency current (25-cycle) is used for projection there is a perceptible flicker, due to the fact that a greater period of time is required to complete a cycle than with current of higher frequency (60-cycle), making it possible to detect the phase of zero pressure by the dimming of the light.

With 60-cycle current there are 2.4 alternations in the same period of time that it requires to complete one alternation with 25-cycle current. Therefore, high frequency current is better suited for projection, as the alternations are faster, and the phase of zero pressure of shorter duration, making it impossible to detect the phase of zero pressure and presenting to the eye what in effect is a continuous light value.

Which also seems to me to be a most excellent reply.

Fell also sets the matter forth well, as follows:

Low frequency current is objectionable for lighting purposes of any sort, due to the fact that light produced by very low frequency (say 25-cycle) current will have a perceptible flicker, for the reason that the E. M. F. sinks to zero two times during each cycle, with consequent dimming of the light brilliancy. As the current frequency becomes more rapid, however, the eye is unable to perceive the changes in brilliancy, which to it appear to be a steady value, or constant brilliancy value.

It therefore follows that high frequency current is best for projection; also it reduces the likelihood of synchronism between the alternations and the blades of the rotating shutter.

That last is not quite correct, unless by high frequency Brother Fell means higher than sixty cycle. Sixty-cycle current can and very frequently does get into synchronism with the shutter blades, and produces a waving effect in the light. A lower cycle synchronism would produce a flicker instead, I think.

I feel that I must close this question with the very excellent answer by Brother Gwynn, though there are other splendid answers that I would like to publish. Gwynn says:

Commercial frequencies are 25-cycle, 60-cycle and 133-cycle. Higher frequencies than 133-cycle are not used for power distribution commercially and have no consideration in motion picture projection problems. Twenty-five-cycle current is too slow a frequency for projection use; 60-cycle frequency is commonly used; 133-cycle frequency would have some advantage in projection usage, although the advantage would not be as great as the increase in frequency would indicate.

The disadvantage of 25-cycle current in projection use is that the voltage falls to zero only 50 times a second, resulting in a perceptible flicker which produces eye-strain. In 60-cycle current the voltage drops to zero 120 times a second. The rise and fall of the voltage in a current of the latter frequency is so rapid that the eye is unable to detect it. Aside from the above mentioned disadvantage of employing 25-cycle current for projection use, there is another one in connection with the revolving shutter.

In the use of alternating current of any frequency, the revolving shutter may fall into phase with the alternations, cutting the light beam when one side of the cycle is at its maximum, resulting in a heavy reduction of the screen light, or it may, at certain speeds, periodically synchronize in the above manner, producing a periodic flicker that will remain until the speed of the shutter changes. This accounts for the use of a two-wing shutter when the alternating current is used, but this question doesn't call for a discourse on that subject, which would involve a lengthy answer in itself, and show that 133-cycle current has no great advantage over 60-cycle frequency.

Question No. 277—Is there a "Positive" and a "Negative" when A. C. is used in an arc? Is there a positive crater?

Doe answers this one very well, as follows:

In an alternating current arc there is a small cup-shaped depression, called a "crater," on both upper and lower electrodes. These are both "positive craters." They form because each electrode is positive half the time and negative half the time, hence while a crater forms on each, because each is positive half the time, still these craters are relatively small because the crater forming power of the current is divided between the two, instead of being constantly concentrated on one, as the case where D. C. is used at the arc.

Gray's reply is as follows:

Considered from a small enough period of time, yes. The same holds true with the craters. Polarity is simply a designation of direction of current flow. Polarity has no practical value in this matter, because of its rapid reversal, and its existence is a matter of technical knowledge and interest only. There is no constant positive crater as in the case of an A. C. arc, but there are small craters on both top and bottom carbons that have somewhat the same shape as the crater on the upper positive carbon of the D. C. arc though smaller and less efficient in light emitting value.

Guimond says:

Yes, there is alternately a positive and a negative, because without positive and negative there could and would be no arc.

Yes, there is a positive crater, because [illegible] would be no real projection light—light fit for projection—and a crater is only formed on the positive electrode of an electric arc. Each crater is small, because half the crater forming force is directed to forming a crater on each carbon half the time, and half the time each of the "positive craters" is "negative."

Question No. 278—Why is the crater on the upper carbon of an A. C. arc smaller than the crater on the upper carbon of a D. C. arc, where equal amperage is used on each arc?

Bennewitz, Thoreau and Clark, Fell, Moore, Budge, Gwynn, Hurlbutt, Wallace, Hanover, Doe, Whitt, Colby and Guimond all gave satisfactory answers, but the reply of Brother Gwynn is in a class by itself. Whether his argument that it is a division of heat which is entirely responsible for it or not I don't know, but at least it certainly has much to do with the results. I have rather side-stepped the point by saying it was "the division of the force," but I am inclined to think Brother Gwynn has perhaps come very close to putting the thing exactly as it really is. It seems to me the tremendous heat would and does cause a much higher rate of volatization in the positive, and why may not that account for the depression dug out in the point of the positive carbon—the crater—entirely?

Gwynn says:

In the use of D. C. at an arc, the positive carbon becomes the hotter because it offers greater resistance to the passage of the current than the negative carbon of the same arc. Measurements of resistance in a direct current arc have shown that in an arc using 60 volts the positive crater caused a voltage drop of 35 volts, while the negative carbon caused a voltage drop of only 10 volts. This measurement of voltage shows that the positive carbon offered 58 per cent of the total resistance, while the negative carbon offered only 17 per cent of the total resistance. It was found that the arc stream was responsible for a 15-volt drop.

The above explanation is made to show that in an arc in which each of the carbons was alternately positive and negative, as is the case in the use of alternating current, the "crater" of the "top" carbon would be positive only HALF the time and consequently would not heat as rapidly as in the case of direct current when it would offer the greater resistance ALL of the time. In the case of A. C., the top carbon is dividing its heat with the lower carbon, which is on an equal footing with it, as far as resistance is concerned, consequently the crater of the upper carbon would be approximately only half the size, as in the case where an equal amount of D. C. was used.

Colby says:

If you have available a certain amount of power, say, one hundred foot pounds, and you use it at maximum capacity to drill a hole in granite, you will get a deeper hole in the same time using all the power on one drill than you would if you used two drills and tried to drill two holes of equal diameter with the first one, using half the power on each.

Maybe that is not a very good illustration, but anyhow it is really what occurs in the D. C. and A. C. arc insofar as concerns the craters. If you use fifty amperes in a D. C. arc, whatever force there is which causes a crater to form is all directed to the forming of a crater on one, the positive carbon. On the other hand, in the A. C. arc each carbon is positive half the time and negative half the time, and thus the crater forming power or force is divided between the two, and a smaller crater diameter results.

In theory perhaps the area of the two craters ought to equal the area of the one crater formed by equal amperage on one carbon with D. C., but in practice there is always loss through a division of force. In the example of the drill, there would be the internal friction of the additional machine. In the arc I suppose it is the lowered average period of power.

Not so bad! I believe it might be valuable if our readers would discuss the answers to the questions. I usually print several, in order that you may see what reaction various men have to the questions, and to the end that you get the answer in various words and forms. Discussion, however, would doubtless help bring out more complete understanding and knowledge.

Question No. 279—Explain the effect of 2-phase and 3-phase current as compared with single phase.

Whitt says:

Two-phase and 3-phase acts with relation to power production, and with relation to single phase, exactly the same as does a multiple cylinder engine to a single engine. The single engine gets "on center," where it has no power at all. The multiple cylinder engine is so connected that this cannot happen, because when one cylinder is "on center" the other or others are not, but instead are at the point where they apply their maximum power to the driving shaft.

Exactly the same thing occurs with 2-phase and 3-phase current. At no time does the "pull" or power applied reach zero. Instead of an alternation, in so far as concerns the line or circuit, there are three (3-phase) alternating currents, so phased that, as a whole, the power impulse is only slightly pulsating.

Gray says:

The effect of multiple phase current on a projection arc, as compared with the effect of single phase, is to reduce the duration in time (Error, I think, Gray. Think it over.—Ed.) between peaks and lows of maximum and zero voltage, frequency being equal in both cases, of course. This tends to maintain a more nearly even and constant temperature at the arc. It also acts to maintain a more steady arc stream, and in general, provides a more satisfactory current for an A. C. projection than does single phase.

Bennewitz sends some real classy, carefully made drawings and this:

Two-phase is a term which characterizes the combination of two circuits, each energized by alternating E. M. F.'s which differ in phase by 90 degrees (Fig. 1). Two single-phase alternating current generators could be made to produce a two-phase E. M. F. if their rotating parts were firmly keyed to the same shaft so that the 90-degree phase relation would be preserved. However, it is more economical to arrange both of the phase windings on one frame.

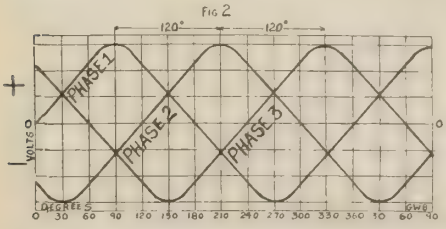
As shown in Fig. 1, when one phase is at zero pressure the other phase is at maximum pressure, giving a steady pull to the motor armature.



Three-phase is a term characterizing the combination of three circuits energized by alternating E. M. F.'s which differ in phase by 120 degrees (Fig. 2). It is perfectly feasible to develop a three-phase E. M. F. with three single-phase alternating current generators, the shafts of which are rigidly coupled together so that the 120-degree phase relation between the E. M. F.'s developed by each of the three machines would be preserved. However, as in the case of two-phase, it is more economical of material to combine the three sets of armature coils for the development of these three E. M. F.'s into one machine.

As shown in Fig. 2, at every 120 degrees one of the phases reaches its maximum positive pressure, giving an even more steady pull on the motor armature than two-phase current.

Question No. 280—Does current flow from positive to negative?

Thoreau and Clark say:

Yes, current flows from positive to negative. The positive wire may be compared to the water supply pipe, and the negative to the drain pipe.

Fell says:

D. C. acts or flows in one direction. It is commonly considered as flowing or acting from positive to negative. The electric impulse or current flow is, in theory, outward from the positive pole of the generator, over the positive side of the circuit, through the lamps, motors, etc., to the negative side of the circuit, and over that back to the negative pole of the generator.

Moore says essentially the same thing as Fell. Wallace agrees with the positive to negative idea. So does Hanover, Hurlbutt, Colby and Doe.

Whitt says:

Whether current "flows" from positive to negative is not at all certain. We do not know that there is an actual "flow," but there most certainly is action, and that action is from positive to negative.

Bennewitz, the contrary South Dakotian, stands up on his two hind legs and calmly tells us we're all full of very unripe prunes. He says:

Current does not flow from positive to negative, as is usually assumed, but from positive to negative.

Evidently Brother Bennewitz either wants a scrap, or he has taken the negative side of the ofttimes heated argument among scientists as to this question. Well, I'll not fight with you, because (Phist) I dunno myself which way th' durned stuff goes, BUT I nevertheless stand with the majority in the matter of belief. I only asked the question to see what you'd all say.

Bluebook $25.00

W. C. Davis, Paramount Theatre, Josephine, Texas, says:

You doubtless hear all sorts of names applied to the department, and all kinds of comments on the Bluebook. Don't lose your temper and say wrong things. Remember what the Good Book says about casting your pearls before swine; also remember that smart alecks don't appreciate good advice.

I would not take twenty-five dollars ($25) and do without my Bluebook, and it is worth that sum to any man who projects motion pictures or manages a theatre. I have received from it hundreds of dollars worth of benefit, and when I hear any one speak ill of it I am reminded of the bibical swine and the pearls.

I only wish I could put my thoughts on paper better, so I could tell every projectionist and theatre manager what I think of the Bluebook. If I had my way they would all be, if necessary, forced to buy one, and to study it too.

In my opinion the Moving Picture World is the greatest paper printed. It stands for ADVANCEMENT. It is for those who appreciate the results of hard labor and toil of those who work for real advancement.

Mr. Davis has been a reader of this department, and an occasionally correspondent for a long while—several years at least. He has a small show in Josephine, Texas, and I have long ago found that the small town man has the highest appreciation of the work of this department and of my books, because it is, after all, about all he has to really depend upon for disinterested advice when things go wrong and for the interchange of ideas between practical men on practical matters.

The city man has not such keen interest, because he has constant opportunities for discussion, argument and contact with other projectionists—though most city men read the department more or less regularly, as I have cause to know when I make some "bull", little or big. Men I never hear from at any other time then burn up the nib of a pen writing to tell me all about it.

I am appreciative of the kind words of brother Davis. We of the Moving Picture World all work very hard to give our readers real value, and it just sort of puts heart in us when some one stands forth and says: "More power to you, boys, you're doing well!" Of course we really know we're doing well (Business of chest swelling out), but, dang it all, we sort of lose confidence as to that if some one beside ourselves don't say so once in a while.

From Texas

From Texas comes the following:

Am sending you a package of my carbon stubs. Please tell me how I can get a bright, steady light. Ought I to set the lower carbon vertical and angle the upper out to meet it? Am using A. C. Special. Have used them in all kinds of trims. Should they be parallel with the lamp bars? Have Motoigraph, taking current through a 25 to 55 ampere rheostat. That is for one projector. The other has a 25 to 40 ampere rheostat.

I think this good brother has a small theatre, but just the same I would get at least a transformer (Inductor) or bust a hamstring. Using A C through a rheostat is exceedingly and unnecessary costly, either for the power company or for you—for you if you used metered current, for the company if it is a flat rate. Also the results are not so good, usually, as when current is taken through a transformer.

The really best thing is to get either a Mazda or a reflector type arc lamp. I cannot say which I would advise without knowing all about your theatre—its projection distance, etc.; also what your possible patronage is. It is possible you are in a small village, with patronage strictly limited, in which event it is problematical as to whether improved results would or could bring sufficient added patronage to justify a considerable expenditure for new apparatus. If the possible additional patronage is there, then I would say the installation of improved equipment would pay.

See Page 404

With what you now have you will, in my opinion, get the best results by using the set shown on page 404 of the Bluebook, being very careful to keep your upper carbon advanced to just the right distance to get the best possible crater angle. Your stubs look very good indeed. You seem to be working intelligently insofar as has to do with your light source. I have just come up to the summer home and there is no lens chart here. An oversight on my part. I will immediately call Brother Griffith up and give him the data and ask him to advise you as to just what lens system and distances will be best.

I repeat, however, that in all human probability you would be gainer by using either Mazda or one of the new reflector type arc lamps. Tell me your projection distance, seating capacity, number of shows a week, average number of idle seats and possibility of increased patronage—business you might get but don't and I'll tell you what I think about it.

Definite and Real

Exhibitors who keep a careful eye on the box office find that photographic quality on the screen has an influence with patrons that is definite and real.

That's why it's worth while to make sure the picture is printed on the film that carries quality from studio to screen—Eastman Film.

Eastman Film is identified by the words "Eastman" and "Kodak" in black letters in the film margin.

Hal Roach presents

"REX-The Wild Horse" in "BLACK CYCLONE"

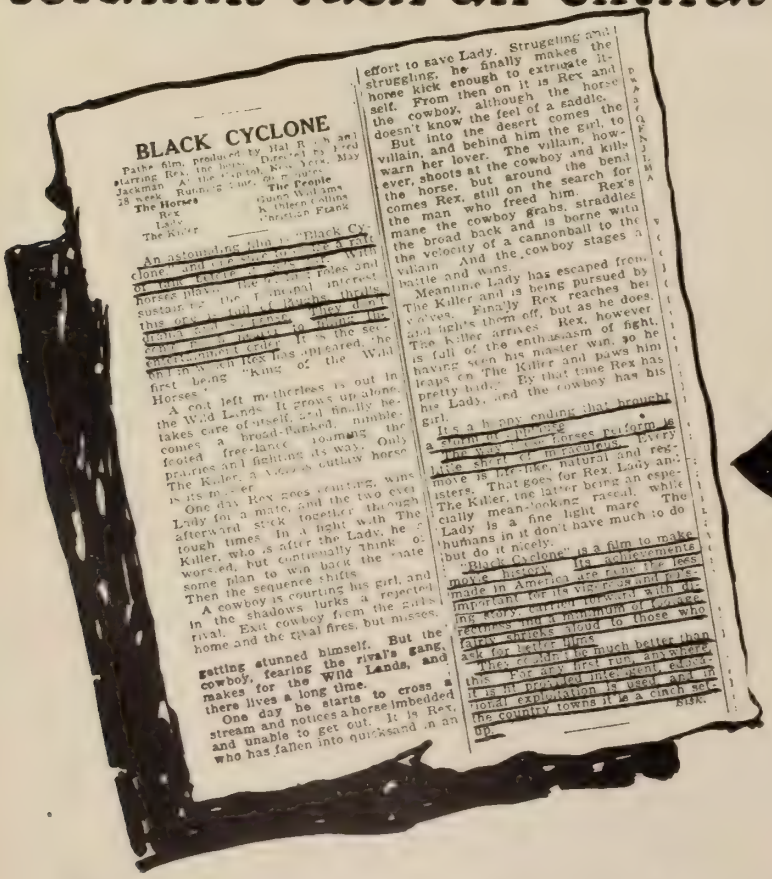
Variety, as usual, calls the turn and when did you ever read in its columns such an enthusiastic review?



BLACK CYCLONE

Pathe film, produced by Hal Roach and starring Rex, the horse. Directed by Fred Jackman. At the Capitol, New York, May 28 week. Running time, 60 minutes.

The Horses
Rex — The People
Lady — Gladys Williams
The Killer — Noah Beery

An astounding film is "Black Cyclone" and one that is sure to be a box office success. With a story that is full of thrills and horses playing the principal interest to sustain the picture, this offering is full of thrills that should please all kinds of audiences. It is the sort of picture that is bound to please the entire family and should prove a big drawing card for any house. Rex has replaced Strongheart as the first being "King of the Wild Horses."

A colt left motherless is out in the Wild Lands. It grows up alone, takes care of itself, and finally becomes a broad-backed, nimble-footed free-lance roaming the prairies and fighting its way. Only The Killer, a vicious outlaw horse is its master.

One day Rex goes roaming, wins Lady for a mate, and the two ever afterward stick together through tough times. In a fight with The Killer, who is after the Lady, he is worsted, but continually think of some plan to win back the mate. Then the sequence shifts.

A cowboy is courting his girl, and in the shadows lurks a rejected rival. Exit cowboy from the girl's home and the rival fires, but misses.

Getting stunned himself. But the cowboy, fearing the rival's gang, makes for the Wild Lands, and there lives a long time.

One day he starts to cross a stream and notices a horse imbedded and unable to get out. It is Rex, who has fallen into quicksand in an effort to save Lady. Struggling and struggling, he finally makes the horse kick enough to extricate itself. From then on it is Rex and the cowboy, although the horse doesn't know the feel of a saddle.

But into the desert comes the villain, and behind him the girl, to warn her lover. The villain, however, shoots at the cowboy and kills the horse, but around the bend comes Rex, still on the search for the man who freed him. Rex's mane the cowboy grabs, straddles the broad back and is borne with the velocity of a cannonball to the villain. And the cowboy stages a battle and wins.

Meantime Lady has escaped from The Killer and is being pursued by wolves. Finally Rex reaches her and fights them off, but as he does, The Killer arrives. Rex, however, is full of the enthusiasm of fight, having seen his master win, so he leaps on The Killer and paws him pretty badly. By that time Rex has his Lady, and the cowboy has his girl.

It's a happy ending that brought a storm of applause.

The way these horses perform is a joy to behold. Every little shift is masculine, natural and realistic. That goes for Rex, Lady and The Killer, the latter being an especially mean-looking rascal, while Lady is a fine light mare. The humans in it don't have much to do but do it nicely.

"Black Cyclone" is a film to make movie history. Its achievements made in America are to be the less important for its vigorous and pulsating story, carried to a maximum of thrills, features and a minimum of footage, farce, shrieks aloud to those who ask for better films.

For any first run, anywhere. This is the much better than this. For any first run, anywhere. It is fit provided intelligent, educational exploitation is used, and in the country towns it is a cinch set up.

10 More Facts

1. The 10 facts which we listed previously prove that a record that has never been touched is Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's for the passing year, 1924-1925. Because of its ability to turn out a great money-making picture week after week—Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer has become in one year The Talk of the Industry.

2. Now for the coming season 1925-1926 Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer with its already famous Quality 52 has established again its superiority in the field by assuring exhibitors a line-up that is being talked about wherever showmen meet.

3. Never before in the history of the industry were more big star names offered to exhibitors than in Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's Quality 52. Among the big names: LILLIAN GISH, LON CHANEY, MARION DAVIES, JOHN GILBERT, BUSTER KEATON, RAMON NOVARRO, MAE MURRAY, NORMA SHEARER, JACKIE COOGAN, ELEANOR BOARDMAN, AILEEN PRINGLE, PAULINE STARKE, CONWAY TEARLE, CLAIRE WINDSOR, CONRAD NAGEL, MAE BUSCH, LEW CODY, CARMEL MYERS, ZASU PITTS, RENEE ADOREE and many others.

4. Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer directors have more box-office successes to their credit than any other group of directors ever gathered together heretofore. The directors of The Quality 52 are the following: REX INGRAM, FRED NIBLO, VICTOR SEASTROM, MARSHALL NEILAN, ERICH VON STROHEIM, TOD BROWNING, HOBART HENLEY, FRANK BORZAGE, KING VIDOR, RUPERT HUGHES, MONTA BELL, ROBERT Z. LEONARD, W. CHRISTY CABANNE, JACK CONWAY, ALF GOULDING, JOSEF VON STERNBERG, EDMUND GOULDING, BENJAMIN CHRISTIANSON, WILLIAM WELLMAN, AL RABOCH and more.

5. Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer has one of the most important companies of permanent players in the world at its Culver City Studios. It does not stop with its presentation of Today's Big Names. Keen showmen who know the audience appeal of personality and talent are grooming the box-office stars of Tomorrow. Watch for these players among others: SALLY O'NEILL, KATHLEEN KEY, GEORGE K. ARTHUR, PAULETTE DUVAL and more.

6. These celebrated novels are a few of the books among The Quality 52: Blasco Ibanez' "MARE NOSTRUM," "THE TEMPTRESS," "THE TORRENT," Rex Beach's "THE BARRIER," and "THE AUCTION BLOCK;" Sabatini's "BARDELYS THE MAGNIFICENT;" Peter B. Kyne's "NEVER THE TWAIN SHALL MEET;" Selma Lagerlof's world-prize novel "THE TOWER OF LIES;" Rupert Hughes' "MONEY TALKS!" and "HOW DARE YOU!" Elinor Glyn's "THE REASON WHY;" and many others.

7. The greatest of stage plays are among The Quality 52. A few of them: "THE MERRY WIDOW," theatrical history's money-marvel; "SALLY, IRENE AND MARY," Edward Dowling's outstanding hit; "BUDDIES," George Hobart's two-year Broadway success; "THE CIRCLE," 2 years in New York. By Somerset Maugham. "LIGHTS OF NEW YORK," from Lawrence Eyre's famous "Merry Wives of Gotham." Laurence Stallings, author of "What Price Glory" contributes "THE BIG PARADE." Samuel Shipman, famous Broadway playwright is included with "A SLAVE OF FASHION;" "SUN UP," by Lula Vollmer; "AN EXCHANGE OF WIVES," by Cosmo Hamilton. And a lot more!

8. Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer means showmanship. Erté, world-dictator of Fashions has been brought from Paris to America. His breath-taking gowns will soon be the sensation of all audiences. Plus Technicolor Sequences in many of The Quality 52. These are just samples of Big Ideas that make for additional box-office qualities in Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer attractions.

9. THE TRANSCONTINENTAL TRACKLESS TRAIN now en route from Coast to Coast advertising Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's Quality 52 and proving the greatest single exploitation stunt in the history of motion pictures is just one of the intensive promotion ideas planned by showman brains in the 1925-26 Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer campaign for box-office supremacy. Add the unparalleled publicity and advertising of Cosmopolitan Productions.

10. The achievements of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's studio organization, headed by Louis B. Mayer and his associates Irving Thalberg and Harry Rapf, are a matter of current record. This triumvirate of showmen genius has proved again in The Quality 52 its knowledge of what exhibitors want to get the crowds. These are matters of business record and are corroborated by the fact that more than ever Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer is The Talk of the Industry.

Not to Mention "Ben Hur"

The Talk of The Industry

SAXOPHONES whining—drums tom-toming—painted faces and white shoulders—sleek sugar daddies—warm, perfumed air—noise, noise, lights, lights—

That's "Night Life of New York," the Jazz Epic of the Gay White Way.

Allan Dwan knows his Broadway and he has poured the whole life and soul of the Big Street into this fast-stepping melodramatic comedy-romance of night clubs, gun fights, taxi races, flirting Follies girls, dancing damsels, heart throbs and LOVE.

Rod La Rocque as the son of a small-town millionaire (Ernest Torrence) who breezes in to paint Broadway rosy red. Dorothy Gish as the pert telephone operator at the Ritz with her jazz-hound brother (George Hackathorne). Helen Lee Worthing as the Follies gold-digger. And an army of chorus ladies, jazz bands, yeggmen, cops, big ginger men from Jamaica and commuters.

An eye-full, a tune for the heartstrings—an ENTERTAINMENT! All kinds of audiences will love it.

Book it. Watch for it—and the other big Allan Dwan Special in The Greater Forty—"The American Venus."

Looking 'Em Over—No. 2

REACHING a hand in the hat and pulling out a slip at random we encounter the name of Goldwyn. Another name might have been more welcome this week, because Goldwyn is another organization whose production prospects we like this year—and the exhibitor reader is apt to decide that as far as the writer is concerned there are no weak sisters.

But there are other days coming—and other slips in the hat.

To be official, I suppose we should say Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, but for purposes of simplicity let's call it Goldwyn.

Why do we like Goldwyn this year? Well, first of all, without looking at the next year's line-up, because of the past year's performance. Goldwyn discovered how to make pictures last year, how to make them consistently, and how to make them at an efficient cost figure. ("Ben Hur" always excepted when that word efficient is used. But remember, "Ben Hur" is a heritage of the present administration and not an originally conceived sin.)

When we talk of past performance we are not expressing opinions. We never do. We only echo what we have heard from the man who pays the bills. And the exhibitor has not been backward in telling us his high opinion of the Goldwyn record last year. In spite of such things as "Greed".

Then record the fact that recent months have seen the weeding out of much of the temperament on the Goldwyn lot. Which casts a bright light on the coming season.

* * * *

THERE is no use talking, that combination of Mayer, and Thalberg, and Rapf, is one to inspire confidence. Mayer for the contracts and the dollars and the broad views, Thalberg for efficiency in production mechanics, and Rapf for a remarkable "show" sense. It's a great trio.

In fact, it is on the strength of those names that I base my regard for Goldwyn. When it comes to directors' and players' names there is also strength, but there is likewise possibility for difference of opinion.

Of the known quantities, we have Rex Ingram, Tod Browning, Victor Seastrom and Rupert Hughes. Of the promising lights, yet still debatable, we have King Vidor, Robert Leonard, Maurice Tourneur, and so on.

Of the players' names, in my opinion Norma Shearer tops the list because she is not "slipping", she is a newcomer climbing—climbing fast. I'd put my money on "comers" this year. Conway Tearle, Marion Davies, Ramon Novarro are other known quantities. Lon Chaney can be counted on. Eleanor Boardman may not be "there" yet—but she has the wise prophets busy. Then you can check your own reckoning on Jackie Coogan, John Gilbert, Aileen Pringle, Lew Cody, and Anita Stewart. Betwixt and between. On the other hand, Lillian Gish, back to common sense picture work, may be one of the outstanding surprises of the year.

Among the vehicles—"The Barrier" is self-sold. "The Merry Widow," "Bardelys the Magnificent," and "Mare Nostrum" will undoubtedly be big. "Paris" smacks of exploitation. "Sally, Irene and Mary," "The Unholy Three," "The Auction Block," "Flesh and the Devil," "Brown of Harvard," and such, only have to be made on a scale with the titles. Add any and all Rupert Hughes stories and you complete a pretty picture.

With a reservation: For the sake of the pocketbooks of thousands of exhibitors and to relieve them from the temptation to profanity, I hope Goldwyn changes the title on "Mare Nostrum". Enuf said.

* * * *

THEN, after a survey that is a bit more sketchy than complete, we come back to where we started from: Mayer, Thalberg, and Rapf.

There are companies in the business making pictures that are in essense "showmanship pictures" but pictures that do not always measure up in technical quality or that indefinable term "class". There are others making pictures of high technical rating, but somehow lacking in "box office" essentials.

These three men, Mayer, Thalberg, and Rapf, are by experience and performance, showing that it is possible to bridge the two necessities and sacrifice neither.

That means a lot. If you don't fully appreciate it ask Howard Dietz, Goldwyn Advertising and Publicity Manager, what it means to have pictures that you can "sink your teeth into" and feel "that something" that makes for exploitation.

Let New Jersey Alone

THERE seems to be a standing temptation on the part of the Theater Owners Chamber of Commerce of New York City to overshadow the New Jersey state organization in matters concerning exhibitors in the northern part of the state. Yielding to the temptation, it would seem, could only be followed by a similar trend on the part of Philadelphia towards the southern division of the state.

Perhaps the temptation is natural. Northern New Jersey's exhibitors deal with the New York exchanges, many of their arbitration problems start from the same source. But yielding to the temptation is not wise.

New Jersey's theater owners have their own major problems. In matters of legislation, power rates, union disputes, local problems, they have come, within recent years, to think of, for, and by New Jersey. They must continue to do so.

New Jersey's state organization is flourishing; it is powerful. It is getting results, succeeding on a platform of service to its members.

Let New Jersey alone. If there are campaigns to be handled, such as the Greater Movie Season drive, let New Jersey handle its own. New York's exhibitors have problems of their own. And plenty of them.

* * * *

The Last Laugh

IT seems to me that it was F. B. O. that didn't bother to label all its pictures "specials" when Sydney Cohen set out to list the available product for the coming season.

Then, in response to a query, Joe Schnitzer said something like this: "We will have proportionately as many specials as anybody else. But we will make the pictures prove their own value as specials, and not try to do it with printer's ink."

Joe wasn't talking through his hat. Witness the fact that "Smooth as Satin," an F. B. O. picture, has just been dated for the Capitol. Following "Drusilla With a Million" and "Parisian Nights" from the same organization. And on the heels of "If Marriage Fails--?" which played at the B. S. Moss Colony.

Four pictures that crash their own way into Broadway within four weeks or so mean more to independents than all the pledge cards ever printed.

The next time they make up a list of "specials" and "others," folks in the industry will read Joe Schnitzer's listings with more than a touch of confidence.

Dog Day Surprises

THE first surprise of the dog days with their opportunity to glance into the coming season's prospects, comes with the practically unanimous enthusiastic greeting "I'll Show You the Town," Universal's latest Reginald Denny special.

This boy Denny has arrived. And also found his metier. I doubt if Universal officials themselves really expected the warm reception accorded "I'll Show You the Town." Because it is of the type that you have to put up to the folks out front—you can't weigh projection room judgments on comedy drama.

The second surprise, it seems to us, is going to come when "Beggar on Horseback" reaches the "common peepul" away from the rarified air of Broadway. Here is one we heard touted in advance for weeks. And the touting was justified, in our personal opinion. It is a delightful bit of artistry. But wait till it reaches the ham and egg belt. They may know what it's all about, then again, they may not. If there is anything harder on an exhibitor's sleep than to have the cash paying customers emerge with a mystified "what's it all about?" air, then we'd like to know it.

A poor picture is a poor picture. It can be forgiven. But patrons hate to feel that you are shooting over their heads. They resent it.

The "surprise" part comes in the selection of such a vehicle for mass consumption.

Count These Days Lost—

THIS SUMMER you can count these days lost and non existent—

On which Famous Players doesn't acquire another theatre circuit—either in five hundred population towns of Florda or metropolitan centers of the East or West.

On which some new change in First National personnel doesn't reach the "Rumor" pad.

On which the I. M. P. P. D. A. doesn't hold a meeting.

On which the laboratory financiers don't set another producer up in business.

Make It a Complete Job

THE Nicholas Power Company has struck upon a good angle in urging exhibitors to make it a real "Greater Movie Season" by seizing the opportunity to completely overhaul all projection equipment.

The unsatisfactory part of it is that small town exhibitors will probably grasp the advice and go to work—completing a job that will put pictures on the screen as they should be put. While many first runs, in real need of the advice, will pass it by with a shrug.

This thought being prompted by the fact that in recent weeks we have suffered from projection on Broadway that we wouldn't condone at a one-night amateur show.—R. E. W.

Coming and Going

Julian Johnson, title editor of Paramount productions filmed at the Long Island studio, and Mrs. Johnson sailed on the Leviathan for a tour of England, France and Germany, to return after six weeks.

Louis Laemmle, who sailed for Europe on June 11, expects to meet overseas his brother, Carl Laemmle, president of Universal, who is scheduled to leave New York on June 20.

Jeffrey Bernerd, European representative of the Henry Ginsberg Distributing Corporation, arrived this week from London on the Berengaria to confer with Ginsberg, who leaves for the Coast the last part of the current week.

After spending several weeks in New York, Pola Negri has returned to Hollywood.

Carroll S. Trowbridge, general representative of Christie Film Company, is visiting the studios in Los Angeles before returning to visit all of the film exchanges which are releasing the new Al. Christie features. Mr. Trowbridge has been accompanying John C. Flinn, general manager of Producers Distributing Corporation in the sales conventions being held from coast to coast.

Larry Moen of the Motion Picture News sailed this week for a trip through Europe.

Col. H. A. Cole of the Texas M. P. T. O. returned this week to his home.

Felix Feist is back in the home office of Metro-Goldwyn after an extensive tour.

J. Gordon Edwards is scheduled to sail for Europe on July 18.

New Jersey Exhibitors Help Senator Win in Hot Primary

"Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New Jersey are happy over your success at the primaries. Congratulate you and assure you of our continued support."

The above telegram was sent by State Chairman Seider to Senator Thomas A. Mathis of Ocean County, N. J., following the success for re-nomination of that official in the Jersey primaries on June 16. Senator Mathis won a victory by 2500 votes over Mrs. Lila Thompson, formerly assemblywoman.

The New Jersey theatre owners are said to have greatly aided Mathis in his fight in the primaries which is reported to have been one of the bitterest ever experienced in Ocean County. For weeks prior to the voting they exploited Mathis in the county's theatres with a personal film of 440 feet.

While in the assembly Mrs. Thompson is said to have presided over the social welfare committee which refused to report out of session the May M. Carty bill legalizing liberal Sunday.

Mathis on the other hand is credited with having been a great aid to the theatre owners during his past term in office. The New Jersey showmen took no sides on the gubernatorial issue.—T. W.

BUILDING IN LE ROY, N. Y.

Le Roy, N. Y., is soon to have a new $100,000 moving picture theatre, according to an announcement by Ralph E. Blouvet, who owns the Family in the same town and the Strand in Brockport. Blouvet has completed negotiations whereby he becomes associated with the Western New York Theatrical Enterprises, Inc., which is soon to open the new Lafayette Theatre in Batavia.

LEO BRECHER
Universal's new theatre head.

Brecher Now Directing Universal's Theatres

This week an important statement, part of which follows, was issued at the home office of the Universal Pictures Corporation:

"Leo Brecher, managing director of one of New York City's most important theatre chains, and regarded nation-wide as one of the most enterprising and successful exhibitors in the country, has been engaged by Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Pictures Corporation, as managing director of Universal's chain of theatres. This important development in Universal's theatre situation has just been announced by E. H. Goldstein, treasurer of Universal. Brecher took office Monday.

"By special understanding with Universal, Brecher will continue to direct the destinies of his New York circuit, but this work, it is explained, will be separate and apart from his duties as Universal theatre manager and it does not mean there will be any connection between the Brecher chain and the Universal chain.

Schine Circuit Is Now Augmented by 2 Houses

Involving the Gateway Theatre in Little Falls, N. Y., and the Liberty in the adjoining village of Herkimer, a deal was consummated during the past week by which these two theatres will hereafter be included in the Schine chain, which numbers 64 up to the present time. The houses will pass over to the Schine control on July 1, and the deal is said to involve close to $400,000.

It has been a well known fact that the two houses were offered during the past month or so to W. W. Farley, of Albany, and it is also said that the Universal Film Company has been in the field dickering for the same. The theatres are owned by a company of which Ralph Earl, of Herkimer, is at the head. The Liberty has been handled by C. H. Moyer, who frequently visited Albany, while the Gateway has been a success under the management of Robert Wagner, a veteran showman.

F. P.-L. Issues More Common Stock at $90 Per Share

Official announcement was made this week by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation of its plan for the issuance of additional common stock. This new stock is being offered to shareholders at $90 a share on a basis of one new share of common stock for each two shares held. Payment may be made in full or in two equal instalments.

The stock subscribed will be issued as of October 1, 1925, and will be entitled to share in all dividends on the common stock of the corporation declared to holders of record after that date. Interest at the rate of 8 per cent per annum from July 24, 1925, to October 1, 1925, will be allowed to subscribers on all sums paid on or before July 24, 1925.

In accordance with this plan there will be mailed to each common stockholder of record on July 8, 1925, one or more subscription warrants specifying the number of shares of common stock to which the stockholder is entitled to subscribe. Subscription warrants will be issued only for full shares, but where a stockholder holds an odd number of shares, a fractional warrant will be issued. Fractional warrants aggregating one or more full shares may be exchanged for a subscription warrant. As the corporation will not sell or purchase fractional warrants, stockholders desiring to complete a full share or dispose of fractional warrants must do so in the open market.

Heat Nicked Albany Zone for $50,000

The recent hot spell cost the 400 or more motion picture theatres in the Albany Zone a loss estimated at close to $50,000. These figures were fixed by Louis Buettner, of Cohoes, chairman of the Albany, N. Y., Zone, an exhibitor for many years and one thoroughly conversant with conditions in the territory and exhibitors generally.

In Schenectady, the theatres are reported to have shown a drop of close to $2,000 for the week. In one theatre in that city on a particularly hot night there were exactly 67 persons. In a theatre in a nearby city which ordinarily plays in midsummer to a business of about $140 a day, the receipts dropped to just $26.50. In reaching the estimated loss due to the heat in the Albany Zone, Buettner takes into consideration that many of the 400 theatres are small ones where the loss would of course be proportionately smaller, and that other houses are running only two or three nights a week. No sooner did the hot wave pass, however, than business rebounded, showing that in theatres where good pictures were being played, that the public, regardless of daylight saving or the summer months, were still seeking enjoyment.

Directorate Empowers Finance Committee to Pick General Director at $25,000

Maximum Salary for M.P.T.O.A. Post Settled —Preuss, Backed by Steffes, Ready to Step Into Harness—Next Meeting in Chicago

By Tom Waller

UNDER a ruling by the national directorate, its committee on finance is fully authorized to appoint the high powered executive who would be known as the General Director of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America. The maximum salary allotted for this individual is said to be exactly $25,000 per year. Of the many men of a calibre said to fit them for this post and to whom the subject may have been broached, only one, the World is informed, has expressed his readiness to enter the harness immediately. As told in last week's World he is Ex-Governor Preuss of Minnesota.

Preuss, it is reported, is being especially pushed by W. A. Steffes sitting on the finance committee with Sydney S. Cohen, M. E. Comerford, Harry Davis and Glenn Cross. As far as could be gleaned this week the ex-official of the mid-west has not yet met with the approval of the entire committee. Senator Walker is said to be the choice of some of the Eastern members but, like many other names that have been mentioned since this post was first created, it is not believed that the Democratic leader of the New York Senate would sacrifice his government political aspirations to give so much time to the industry.

The filling of this capacity is thus at present in an unsettled state. Reports of last week were renewed during the past few days that the post may be abandoned, with propaganda through the mails supplanting it. These surmises, however, were not as persistent in the more reliable and fully informed quarters as they were immediately following the Board of Directors' first conclave in the Hotel Roosevelt. It probably will be a matter of several weeks more before anything definite, one way or the other, is reached in this respect.

The national directorate has decided to meet in executive session at least four times a year, each time in a different city in the country. There is a possibility that urgent business and adjustments under the new regime may necessitate these private gatherings being augmented to six. It is learned that the next meeting will probably be held in Chicago, late in August or early in the fall.

Another matter which became known this week is that the consensus of opinion of the directors at their first meeting was that the chairmen of the various committees should be the purveyors of their own publicity. Hitherto the major portion of M. P. T. O. A. statements have emanated through the national chairman. The reason for this reported attitude, it is said, is attributed to the intimate knowledge such executives would naturally have in connection with the detailed workings of their units.

The Playdate Bureau is rapidly being whipped into shape. As explained in this publication last week it is to be comprised of three committese. The directorate appointed the first unit and late today, June 18, it is learned the Independent Motion Picture Producers and Distributors Association, at their meeting in Manhattan, will name their own delegation of five. These two committees will then pick the third from public service organizations. By next week the bureau should be ready to actually function.

In connection with the Playdate Bureau, for which is scheduled an independent budget of $200,000, W. E. Shallenberger, prominently affiliated with the I. M. P. P. D. A., issued the following statement:

"I am intensely gratified to note the reaction to the movement gotten under way with specific reference to the Play Date Bureau which is now in process of formation. The exhibitor has awakened to the menace which confronts him and is rendering the complete co-operation so necessary to the success of the movement. I have seen definite substantiation of this fact in the reports which come to me from different Independent exchanges throughout the country. Exhibitors are booking many more Independent productions than ever before. And, what is of equal importance is that they are setting in their dates not only on the new stuff, but on product hitherto undated. It would seem therefore, that the Independent branch of the motion picture industry faces an era of unprecedented prosperity for the support of the theatre owners will undobtedly reflect itself in more and better product from the Independent producer. And, just as one hand washes the other, so will this bring about an increased volume of business.

"While it is true that the theatre owners, producers and distributors, will reap the rewards of this movement, it is equally true that the public will share therein. The success of the Independents means many things, but primarily it means open competition—producer against producer, each striving to give of his best in legitimate competition.

"Mr. Sidney S. Cohen who has been an active worker in behalf of the Play Date Bureau, tells me that with plans all formulated and with a definite constructive policy as its foundation, the Play Date Bureau will be in full swing within a very short time. When this comes to pass I believe it will mark a definite rebirth for motion pictures."

A discussion this week in New York develops some interesting points on arbitration. Joseph Seider, chairman of the arbitration and uniform contract committee just appointed by the national directorate, takes exception to one published version on the arbitrary system. The chairman's letter to the publisher of this article follows in part:

"I am not quite in accord with your contention that the exhibitor defendant has the right of challenge, especially the right of challenge of all of the exhibitor members of the Arbitration Board, such as is apparently your opinion.

"I have examined with some degree of care, the uniform contract, together with the rules and regulations relating to arbitration, under which the Board of Arbitration was constituted, and fail to find therein any provision whatsoever, regarding any right of challenge at all.

"Of course, an arbitrator may be disqualified for interest or illness, or by his own refusal to serve, but nowhere else in the contract or in the rules and regulations is there contained any other provision relative to substitution of arbitrators. I would certainly be in favor of an amendment to the present contract and rules and regulations, so as to provide that the exhibitor may in fact appoint the exhibitor members and have the right to challenge a limited number of members of the Arbitration Board, under provisions similar to those employed in challenging of juries, this to apply not only to members of the exhibtors' own side, but to the members representing the distributive side, and visa versa.

"I must again disagree with your state-

Tribute to Richey by Michigan

The board of directors of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Michigan met last week to act on the resignation submitted by Henderson M. Richey, who resigned to accept the business management of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America. A remarkable tribute was paid to Richey's work by the action of the directors in agreeing to accept the resignation only in the form of a leave of absence, which could be extended from time to time.

No successor to Richey has yet been appointed, but the board of directors is considering several names. It will meet within the next ten days to name a new manager. Mr. Richey's resignation becomes effective July 1.

ment that the exhibitor may select persons other than exhibitors as members of the Board of Arbitration, and may use bankers, lawyers, etc., as it appears from the first paragraph of the rules and regulations, that the Board of Arbitration shall consist of three members of the Film Board of Trade, and three proprietors or managers of theatres in the zone where the Film Board of Trade is located, with a certain exception which is not relevant here.

"It would thus seem, under the present form of contract, that both parties are bound to the selection of persons in the industry.

"The Committees on Arbitration are, as you know, at the present time, diligently endeavoring to introduce new suggestions and changes into the present uniform contract and amend the rules and regulations setting up the Board of Arbitration, and it is hoped that within a short time, some substantial result will be effected."

The above letter refers especially to that part of the article which says:

"But even though an exhibitor-defendant may consider the board unsuitable to try his case, he has a remedy—in his right of challenge; he can challenge any one of the members on the exhibitors' side, or even all the members, and substitute persons that enjoy his confidence. Such persons need not be exhibitors; they may be bankers, lawyers, professors of universities, or persons of any other business or profession, and even laborers (so long as they are endowed with common sense). A similar right is vested in the exchangeman defendant; he may challenge any arbitration board member of the producer-distributor group. An exhibitor cannot challenge an exchangeman-arbitrator. Similarly an exchangeman has no right to challenge an exhibitor-arbitrator."

Rembusch Writes Woodhull

National President R. F. Woodhull is in receipt of a letter from Frank J. Rembusch, according to that prominent theatre owner of Indianapolis. This letter, a copy of which reached Moving Picture World, is ten pages long. It is typewritten, single spaced. It holds itself forth as being a history of the film industry, exhibitor battles, exhibitor victories, exhibitor heroes and exhibitor villains. It is phrased much like the stanzas of a song. The essence of Mr. Rembusch's advise to the national chairman is: "Fight for the right—with bullets that hurt." The letter, Rembusch advises the World, was written upon the solicitation of Woodhull for the writer's opinion "as to how the National Organization could be of service."

Fox Insurance Big

What is said to be the second largest amount of life insurance is now possessed by William Fox, president of Fox Film Corporation.

Through a policy for $3,500,000 recently taken out, Mr. Fox has increased his insurance to $6,500,000, exceeded only, it is understood, by policies held by Rodman Wanamaker.

Can't Oust Dillon from State Chair, Declare Albany Heads

By C. L. Grant

WITH some exhibitors declaring that they had never received anything for the money which they had contributed to the New York State M. P. T. O., when the headquarters was located in New York city, and with others going a bit further and declaring that the policy of the New York City Zone was to rule or ruin, the present rupture in the ranks of motion picture exhibitors in New York state, disclosed through the recent convention of the Albany and Buffalo Zones in Syracuse, at which William Dillon, of Ithaca, was elected as president of the state organization, but without the New York City Zone participating in the slightest way, formed the chief topic of conversation at a gathering of prominent exhibitors of the Albany Zone in this city Tuesday afternoon, June 16.

Officers of the Albany Zone declare that Dillon must be acknowledged as the president of the state association, in view of the fact that the charter of the New York State M. P. T. O. is now at state headquarters in Albany, and furthermore, that the New York City Zone is outvoted by the other two.

Albany Zone exhibitors, however, would hazard no prediction on Tuesday as to the ultimate outcome of the rather confusing situation. Both up state zones are lusty youngsters, with money in the bank, and showing every evidence of not only being able to walk alone, but to maintain a firm stride, without the assistance of the metropolitan area. Just what will occur next winter, when legislation affecting the motion picture industry may be introduced in the New York State Legislature, and which should be fought by exhibitors as a unit, can not be foreseen.

With the announcement that the New York Zone has to all intents and purposes divorced itself from the other two zones, there has cropped out considerable of the dissatisfaction that has existed for the past several months but which has been carefully concealed from the general public.

The New York State M. P. T. O. is out of debt, however, largely through a $2,000 contribution from the Buffalo Zone, and one of $1,000 from the Albany Zone. The repairs and equipment of the state office in Albany entailed an expense of about $1,200, while there was an expense left over from the New York office at the time it was transferred to Albany, that amounted to about $1,300.

"We are now operating two successful zones, one in Albany and one in Buffalo," said a prominent exhibitor, "for just about one-quarter of the expense that was attached to the maintaining of the New York office in the Times Building. The average cost of maintaining this New York office during the past two years ran from $9,800 to as high as $14,700, and appeared to depend almost entirely upon the amount of money received in the state treasury.

"Since we have eliminated the New York office, the Albany and Buffalo zones have functioned at a greater advantage to the local exhibitor and given more service than ever came from the New York city office, a fact which I think proves that individual zones are more economical and at the same time more advantageous to the exhibitor.

"The Albany Zone was organized the fore part of January. Out of the 400 theatres in the zone, more than 100 have paid their dues, with the result that today we have about $1,500 in the treasury. Our expenses for the first six months this year have been in the neighborhood of $700."

"Was the New York City Zone invited to attend the Syracuse convention?" was asked.

"The New York City Zone was asked on many occasions to participate in gatherings and other matter, but absolutely ignored our letters and telegrams. When the New York City Zone paid no attention to our requests, in connection with financial matters, it was plainly evident as to the attitude which the Zone intended to take. From New York City we realized that we could get nothing although when the Albany Zone was formed last January, and officers were present from New York City, it was thought that the exhibitors of that zone would be as vitally interested as we were in legislative matters."

Walter Hays, of Buffalo, president of the New York State M. P. T. O. for the past year, and who was succeeded by Dillon at the Syracuse gathering, was in Albany on Tuesday, but did not attend the meeting of the Albany Zone exhibitors at the Mark Strand building. Hays spent the entire day in Troy, where he now has two theatres operating with another scheduled to open, according to report, within the next few weeks.

Prominent exhibitors attending today's meeting in Albany, men such as Meyer Schine, one of the heads of the largest chain of motion picture theatres operating in the state; William Smalley, of Cooperstown, who heads a chain of fifteen or more houses; Louis Buettner, of Cohoes, a veteran exhibitor and now chairman of the Albany Zone, did not appear to be much worried over the attitude which the New York city section has seen fit to take.

Buettner declared that the Albany and Buffalo Zones constituted the New York State M. P. T. O., possessing as they do, the charter of the state organization, and likewise holding the balance of voting strength. Some of the exhibitors were a bit sarcastic, declaring that for years they had poured their money into the state treasury and had yet to learn of anything of much importance that had been accomplished, while the headquarters was located in the metropolis.

It has long been known that some exhibitors in Albany, absolutely refused to pay their dues to the state organization, based upon their seating capacity, declaring that they received nothing in return and would prefer not to belong to a body from which they receive no benefit. They declare that the headquarters in New York city cost altogether too much, and although the metropolitan exhibitors saw fit to take the initiative and give Albany and Buffalo the cold shoulder, upstate, or as much as was represented at the meeting in Albany Tuesday, smilingly contended that New York city's action was the best thing that could possibly have happened.

Ten Cities Organize Exhibitor Units for Greater Movie Season

Huge Support Realized with Hays' Field Men Operating But a Single Week—M. P. P. D. A. Predicts Great Success for Movement

CHICAGO, Philadelphia, Detroit, Kansas City, Atlanta, Milwaukee, Indianapolis, Denver, Salt Lake City and New Haven have organized their exhibitor-committees, and enthusiastically adopting the Greater Movie Season plan sponsored by the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc. Will H. Hays, President, have set in motion statewide campaigns of a size never before attempted on individual territories. The fact that the field organization of Greater Movie Season had been operating through the country only a week when these ten cities swung into line, showing the way for others to follow, is indicative of the national exhibitor approval that the movement is winning.

A meeting of prominent Chicago theatre owners, managers, and exchange executives, endorsed the appointment of Ralph Kettering as general manager of their campaign. Kettering who is well-known as a writer on motion picture subjects and as an executive of the Jones, Linick and Schaefer Theatres, will have as his aides on the publicity committee Lou Kramer, Universal, chairman; Al Sobler, Balaban and Katz; Harry Earl, of Lubliner and Trinz; Russell Moon, Paramount; Dan Roche, Producers Distributing Corporation; Charley Raymond, Balaban and Katz; and Jay M. Shreck of the Exhibitors Herald.

More than one hundred and fifty exhibitors in Philadelphia appointed Frank Buhler, managing director of the Stanley Company, as general chairman, with David Barrist heading the finance committee; Abe L. Einstein, publicity; H. D. Westcott, speakers; Edgar Moss, film exchanges; Edgar Wolf, decorations. A special executive committee has as additional members Ben Amsterdam, George P. Aarons, Abe Sablosky and Bart McHugh. The Philadelphian structure was made still more concise by the creation of zone committeemen who will supervise operations in their respective theatre zones. The following were appointed:

H. J. Schad, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Eastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey and Delaware, one of the speakers, voiced his interest in the campaign and pledged his support to its success.

The operation of the campaign throughout Michigan will be in the hands of the general manager of the Theatre Owners of Michigan, Inc., who already has placed interesting plans before the Hays office and has been one of the most enthusiastic supporters of the season from its inception. For the city of Detroit, David Palfreyman, Secretary of the Film Board of Trade, will be general manager, Fred T. Grenell, of the Brenell Advertising Agency in charge of publicity and John E. Niebes of the Dawn Theatre, treasurer.

At the first meeting a budget of $10,000.00 for this city was passed upon, this money to be spent for newspaper advertising, billboards, novelties, parade expenses, etc., which from all indications will give Detroit a campaign of far reaching possibilities, and one of the most effective in the entire country, due solely to the efforts of Mr. H. M. Richey for the state organization. Weekly meetings are planned to report on the advance made by the different committees and to offer suggestions and ideas that come up from time to time.

In Kansas City Jay Means, vice-president of the M. P. T. O., will control the Greater Movie Season as general manager, assisted by C. E. Cook, who is also secretary of the M. P. T. O. Financing will be attended to by Dave Harding of the Capitol Enterprise Theatres, with Jack Roth, of the Isis Theatre assistant general manager, of the budget committee, other members of which are Bruce Fowler, Manager of the new Newman Theatre, and R. R. Biechele president of the M. P. T. O. of Kansas and Missouri. Theatres and exchanges are well represented on the publicity committee here, the personnel being, Samuel Carver, Liberty Theatre, general manager; Bob Dary, Universal, assistant manager; R. Cunningham, Paramount and M. Jacobs, Royal Theatre, committeemen. William Flynn of the Globe Theatre will organize the parades while Arthur Cole of Paramount brings the idea before civic and commercial bodies. Biechele is organizing all the Kansas-Missouri exhibitors for state-wide drives.

A telegram from Atlanta says: "At enthusiastic meeting with one hundred per cent. exhibitor representation the details of plans and finances were agreed upon and the following elected to the organization. Willard C. Patterson of the Metropolitan Theatre, chairman; Tom Games of Loew's Grand, Tom Coleman of the Cameo, James Jackson of the Tudor, directors; Associated with them will be Howard Kingsmore of the Howard Theatre as chairman of the board of directors and Alpha Fowler of the Palace, secretary.

That everyone in Milwaukee is behind the movement is the report from field-representatives in that territory. A budget was fixed and sub-committees selected at a mass meeting of exhibitors, on June 12th, to support Tom Saxe as general manager of the campaign. Newspaper and general publicity work has already commenced, backed by the efforts of Stan Brown of the Saxe Enterprises; Anne McMurdy, Universal; Eddie Weisfeldt, Wisconsin Theatre; Eddie Corcoran, Famous Players; James Williamson, Orpheum Circuit, and Emil Francke of the Silliman Enterprises.

At a banquet on June 19th, members of the industry and press will celebrate the opening of the campaign in Indianapolis where Ace Berry and H. C. Dressendorfer will supervise the various committees. Incidentally the Indianapolis News heads the initial list of newspapers that will participate in the National Contest with trips for two around the world, to Los Angeles and to Miami as the three principal prizes. From first to last the News will make the contest a front page feature, joining other papers that have been quick to see the value of co-operating strongly with exhibitors at a time when public interest focuses, almost exclusively on the screen.

Excellent co-operation is reported from Denver where leading theatres have gone on record in endorsement of the season. Harry Long of the American Theatre heads the list of executives there. Harry E. Huffman, president of the Colorado M. P. T. O., expressed such favor of the plan that an ex-

August?

Ten per cent, about 80 houses, of the theatres in Greater New York are now closed and will remain dark during the rest of June, July and August, Moving Picture World learns from an unquestionable source. Freakish weather is blamed for this wet blanket. Some of these theatres are apart of the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce. That organization itself is now submitting questionnaires to its members, controlling about 600 theatres, to determine whether they would deem it advisable to shut up all of their properties for July and August.

August is the month set by the Hays organization for Greater Movie Season. In view of the local situation and the sentiment for a postponement until a later time expressed at the Palace mass meeting this week, the date promises to afford New York much debate at the session of its special committee in Hotel Astor on June 22.—T. W.

N. Y. Rally Questions Wisdom of August for Movie Season

By Tom Waller

AN audience of about fifty, comprised of exhibitors, exchangemen, members of the trade press and publicity representatives, gathered on June 16 in the spacious Palace Theatre, Broadway, to listen to Jerome Beatty outline the plans for the Greater Movie Season being sponsored nationally during August by the Hays organization.

Judging by the applause at one instance, the consensus of opinion of the handful of exhibitors present, representing the Greater New York and Northern New Jersey territories, was that August 2 will not prove to be a particularly renumerative time to commence the drive, at least in this eastern section. Several speakers in the audience stood firmly for a postponement of the movement until the middle of August or early in September. Their contention for this delay was that some of the best patrons of many theatres will be out of town at watering resorts; also that the product obtainable at that time of the year would not be of such a quality as later on.

A committee including Hugo Reisenfeld, Lee Ochs, B. S. Moss, Nicholas Schenck, and others representing circuits and zones, will meet in the near future when its members will take into consideration the points of contention presented at the Palace mass meeting. If the committee finds it necessary, it will call another mass meeting when an official vote on the subjects under discussion may be taken, it was also announced.

The New York meeting on June 16 opened with Beatty reviewing the plans formulated by the Hays organization. On a table before him were all kinds of noise makers and trinkets, each designed to exploit Greater Movie Season. After his speech, the data of which appeared in last week's Moving Picture World, Beatty motioned to a stage hand. A curtain to the rear of him was raised, disclosing a huge screen upon which were attached samples of all the ballyhoo material, posters and banners to be used during the drive.

When Beatty sought suggestions from his audience Leon Rosenblatt of the New Jersey theatre owners arose. "We might as well be honest with ourselves," he commented. "This Greater Movie Season in August is going to be more harmful than good. It is going to hurt us because we get a lot of junk in August. I think we should wait until later when the producers will begin to release their big pictures. Not only that, but later on many of our patrons will be back home from their vacations." This short remark by Rosenblatt was the only part of the affair applauded.

It was immediately followed up by a statement from a member of the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce. This man re-echoed Rosenblatt's sentiments, saying about the big advance advertising and exploitation: "There's no use of getting the people in by promising them ice cream and then giving them nothing."

In reply to these comments and others in a similar vein, Beatty said that the object of holding the Greater Movie Season in August is to make a live month out of one that at present seems to be dead. He admitted that the point brought out about the quality of pictures in August was an important one; that big advertising for a poor thing would be worse than no advertising at all. But he qualified his answer by stating that Hays had the assurance of the producing end of the industry that August this year would witness the releasing of some mighty fine pictures.

Beatty urged the New York theatre men to stage a parade of stars and floats "five miles long" down Fifth Avenue. He inferred that such a parade would not only help to prominently place the movies on the New York map but would further more pronounced recognition of the industry nationally.

Charles O'Reilly, who occupied a place on the stage, said that this would be another matter for the committee to consider. In order to be fully beneficial, he observed, such a parade should "start up in the northern part of the Bronx, come down Fifth Avenue and wind up in some place in Brooklyn."

T. O. C. C. WANTS POSTPONEMENT

The Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce at its meeting this week went on record, it is reported, as disapproving the commencement of Greater Movie Season on August 2, the date set by the Hays organization as sponsor of the movement. The Greater New York exhibitor association is quoted as favoring the project being postponed until at least August 21.

The meeting of the Chamber occurred a few hours after a mass meeting in the Palace Theatre presided over by Jerome Beatty, spokesman at the gathering for Hays, when New York exhibitor opposition to the earlier date was openly manifested. Many of the points of contention made at the Palace were again presented at the T. O. C. C. headquarters in the afternoon.

At this week's session of the Chamber it was also reported that United Artists had indicated they would withdraw a rider with which they were credited contemplating to add in their film contracts.

This rider was brought to the attention of the New York organization at one of its recent meetings. In substance it was said to prohibit theatres from advertising a picture until the first runs had played it. The matter at that time was reported to have been referred to Nathan Burkan, counsel for the T. O. C. C. Pending the outcome of this reference the chamber is credited with having instructed its members not to book any United pictures, the contract for which included this alleged clause. From developments of the latest meeting it would seem that the situation has been finally and satisfactorily ironed out.

State Rights Sales

Louis Weiss, managing director of Weiss Brothers' Artclass Pictures Corporation, announces that he has sold the new series of Buffalo Bill, Jr.'s, which are eight five-reel thunderbolt thrillers, and the Buddy Roosevelt five-reel rough riding romances to the Specialty Film Company of Dallas, Texas. This deal covers the territory which includes Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas.

Seider Denies

A statement from the Hays organization that the Northern New Jersey theatre owners have adopted the Greater Movie Season project is denied by Joseph M. Seider, president of the M. P. T. O. of N. J. Seider states that his organization will not officially consider this movement until the Asbury Park convention on June 29, at which time definite action will be taken.

Ten Cities Organize

hibitors meeting elected a board of directors that is one of the most representative throughout the country. F. H. Ricketson, Rialto Theatre; Harry E. Huffman, Blue Bird Theatre; Gordon B. Ashworth, Federal Theatre; Homer E. Ellison, Jr., Queen Theatre; R. J. Garland, manager Metro-Goldwyn Exchange; Charles R. Gilmour, manager Vitagraph-Warner Bros.; J. H. Ashby, manager First National. The board decided to secure a high-grade campaign expert to assist Mr. Long, believing that the drive deserves the entire services of such an exploiteer.

Late reports from Salt Lake City are that Carl Porter, Victory Theatre, will head the drive there, while in New Haven, Conn., James Powers of the Poli Bijou Theatre has undertaken similar service.

Based on plans put into effect in Los Angeles, Minneapolis, San Francisco and other cities where seasons of this kind have been put over successfully hitherto, the national system elaborated by the Hays office has in all instances been accepted in toto as the most thorough method of turning every channel of patronage and publicity to the motion picture theatres during August.

R. P. Matthews Elected Vice-President of Morton Organ Co.

J. A. G. Schiller, chief active executive of the Robert Morton Organ Company, announces the election of R. P. Matthews of New York as vice-president of the company.

Mr. Matthews is recognized as one of the most progressive and successful men in the organ world today. He has made a special study of theatre organ business particularly.

Mr. Matthews will continue to handle the national advertising, as well as the active management of the Eastern, Middle-Western and Southern divisions.

Mr. Schiller also announces the completion of plans for the quarter of a million dollar addition to the factory at Van Nuys, Cal., as well as the removal to larger quarters of the New York office about July 1. The new office will be located at 1560 Broadway, and Mr. Matthews will have his headquarters there.

FAMOUS DECLARES DIVIDEND

At a meeting held on June 9 the board of directors of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation declared the regular quarterly dividend of $2.00 per share on the preferred stock, payable August 1, 1925, to stockholders of record at the close of business on July 15, 1925. The books will not close.

Division Managers O. K. Contracts Under Producers Dist. Corp's Plan

System Devised by John C. Flinn Facilitates Speedier Adjustment of Bookings; Project to Operate Immediately

A NEW system of handling contracts that marks a radical departure from present methods, has been devised by John C. Flinn, vice president and general manager of Producers Distributing Corporation, and will be put into operation immediately.

The new system which is being worked out by W. J. Morgan, sales manager of the company will facilitate the official acceptance or rejection of all booking contracts, establish a more equitable trading basis and by speeding up all matters of adjustment, serve exhibitors in a prompt, efficient, business-like manner.

The system of handling booking contracts, now in vogue in all distributing organizations, calls for the submission of all contracts to the home office in New York for official acceptance or rejection. This necessitates delay ranging from two days to three weeks before the contract is officially endorsed and in cases where the price or condition of the contract do not meet with the approval of the home office, it may be a matter of four weeks or long before a satisfactory agreement is reached.

Under present conditions, an exhibitor on the west coast is not sure of actually getting a picture until at least two weeks after he has decided to book it. Even though he has signed a contract, he cannot go ahead and advertise it or make any arrangement for its showing until the contract has travelled all the way to New York and back again with the official endorsement. And in cases where a change in the contract is called for, it means at least two weeks more of delay while the contract again travels over six thousand miles to New York and returns.

The period of uncertainty in other sections of the United States is a matter of proportionate mileage and mailservice.

The new system as devised by Mr. Flinn eliminates these long delays, and makes the acceptance or rejection of a contract a matter of one of two days, regardless of where the exhibitor is located.

This logical and obviously beneficial change is accomplished by placing the matter of accepting or rejecting contracts in the hands of the company's division managers, who will hereafter have the fullest authority on all deals between exhibitors and Producers Distributing Corporation. And to still further reduce delays and render correspondingly greater service to the exhibitors, the Producers Distributing Corporation will redivision the country; instead of having four divisions as at present, there will be eight divisions, each with a division manager who is thoroughly conversant with actual and current conditions in every spot in his territory, and therefore in position to pass on the equitability of every contract submitted to him for approval.

In speaking of this decided step forward in managerial efficiency, Mr. Morgan said:

"Keeping exhibitors waiting weeks, before being sure of getting the pictures contracted for, is utterly ridiculous and one of the most inefficient systems I have ever heard of in any industry. And why it has been supposed that the merits of a contract can be passed upon with better judgment in New York, than by the division managers who are right on the ground, is beyond comprehension.

"Our division managers are engaged because of their executive ability and intimate knowledge of exhibiting conditions, and, being constantly in the field, where they are in touch with every change in condition, we feel that they are thoroughly qualified to pass on the merits of contracts with greater promptness and fairer judgment than can be exercised at a distance.

"In giving our division managers authority to officially endorse exhibitor contracts, we are passing this important responsibility to them in order to serve the exhibitor better than he has ever been served before. The exhibitor and the division manager are in constant contact; they each know intimately the other's problems; they each have confidence in the other and I believe that this spirit of confidence will promote a spirit of fairness far greater than any yet enjoyed, when all dealings can be carried on directly between the exhibitor and the man in the field whom he knows and respects.

"In delegating this responsibility, we do not intend to lose sight of conditions. We will keep as closely informed in the home office as heretofore and the district managers, while having full authority in their respective territories, will be held responsible to the company's executives for all their actions and decisions."

Present Gold Cup to Louis Mayer

Louis F. Osterholt, representing the Shriners, who have been holding a big conference in Los Angeles, has presented Louis B. Mayer, production executive for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, with a handsome gold cup for having entered the most magnificent display in the spectacular parade staged by the Shriners in celebration of their conference. Two electrically lighted floats and three "Ben Hur" chariots were entered by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, and proved to be the outstanding feature of the parade. This display was accordingly awarded first prize.

The Culver City studios recently held open house for the Shriners for an entire day, stars and directors playing host to the visiting Shriners, of whom there are now in Los Angeles some two hundred thousand for the convention.

NO SIGN OF SETTLEMENT

Scant hope for a settlement between the musicians and the Ithaca Theatre Company of the controversy that has existed for over a year is held out by Joseph Weber of New York City, president of the American Federation of Musicians, who was in Ithaca, N. Y., the other day to confer with officers of the local union. Mr. Weber declared the federation is willing to co-operate, but insisted on a living wage for its members and that the Ithaca local would not be permitted to make a settlement unless the living wage was forthcoming. The theatre musicians in Ithaca are asking $36 a week, one of the lowest wage scales in the country, Mr. Weber said. "Out of 850 locals throughout the country, Ithaca is the only city in which an unsettled controversy has prevailed for any length of time," he declared, adding that "settlements generally were made over the conference table to the satisfaction of parties involved."

EMPLOYES EVIDENCE COOLNESS AT FRISCO EXCHANGE FIRE

The results of a little-known activity of the Motion Picture Producers & Distributors of America, the Will H. Hays organization, were apparent here on Thursday, June 11, when a serious fire broke out in one of the film vaults of the Famous Players Exchange at 201 Golden Gate avenue, San Francisco.

The blaze was severe but the automatic sprinklers, vault doors and other mechanical contrivances worked perfectly; the employes, thanks to the precautions taught by the Hays organization, did their duty splendidly, and the fire was confined to one vault, with no casualties or serious injuries and a loss only of stored film.

STRAND, DORCHESTER, ROBBED

Knocking off the combination dial of the safe in the office at Gordon's Strand Theatre in Dorchester, Mass., thieves obtained $91 in small bills and change. They overlooked, probably in their haste to make their escape, a strong box containing $830, receipts of two days. They entered the theatre by breaking off a bolt on a rear fire exit door and jimmied open the door of the office.

INTRODUCED TO A. M. P. A.

Vivian Moses, director of publicity and advertising for Fox, introduced two new members of his staff to the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers at the regular Thursday luncheon held at the Cafe Boulevard on June 11. They were Gerald K. Rudolph, publicity manager, and Donn McElwaine, manager of accessories, both recently appointed to those positions. It was a quiet A. M. P. A. meeting, Doris Kenyon, Mary Astor, Ben Lyon and Hobart Bosworth, First National stars, who had promised to attend if work did not interfere being busy on scenes of their new pictures at the time. After the first of July the A. M. P. A. will held its weekly luncheons at the White Horse Tavern instead of at the Cafe Boulevard.

Theatre Building Boom on in Wisconsin; Old House Expands

THEATRE building is booming again in Milwaukee and other parts of Wisconsin.

New projects just announced include a $300,000 structure for Milwaukee's West side, a $100,000 theatre for West Allis and a new show house in Beaver Dam.

In addition, extensive remodeling is being undertaken in several houses, including Saxe's Princess in Milwaukee. Likewise work is being started in earnest on half a dozen new buildings throughout the state, plans for which had been previously announced.

The $300,000 house has been announced by the Colonial Amusement Co. to replace the present Colonial theatre.

The new Colonial, according to Ernest Langemack, secretary and treasurer of the company, will have a seating capacity of 1850, again of 1,000 over the old theatre.

The plan is to use the present structure as a nucleus and, with additional property on Vliet and Fifteenth streets, make it one of the finest outskirt houses in the city Work is expected to commence this summer.

The $100,000 structure has been announced by Eugene Phalen to replace the present Allis theatre at Sixty-fourth and Greenfield avenues, West Allis. The new building, which will be ready about Sept. 1, will have a seating capacity of 1,000.

At Beaver Dam, the Odean will be replaced by a more modern buiiding, the work of tearing down the present theatre having already started. Work will be completed about Sept. 15.

At the Princess, Saxe's oldest Milwaukee house, all of the old seats are being removed and replaced, a canopy is being erected and other extensive alterations are being made. The theatre will be closed for several weeks to permit the work to go on uninterrupted.

Work on the Mal Investment Company's new $500,000 house at Twenty-seventh and Wells streets, Milwaukee, was begun last week when steam shovels began operations. Old buildings on the site had been wrecked several months ago, but there had been a delay in beginning operations on the new house. It is expected that an announcement will be made shortly which will reveal what parties have leased the theatre from the investment company.

Loew's Coney Island Theatre Opens with Distinctive Show

MARCUS LOEW sustained his reputation for individualized theatre openings when, on the evening of Wednesday, June 17th, he threw open the doors of his new Coney Island theatre, on Surf Avenue, Coney Island, to an audience which showed eager appreciation of the distinctive premiere performance.

An unusually large number packed the theatre, which seats 2,600, standing room was jammed at the opening and vociferous applause greeted the various features introduced for that evening only; the entire Shelbourne Hotel Revue, orchestra and all, specialty performers from the Everglades and Texas Guinan's Club, the entire jazz orchestra of Feltman's Gardens, as well as Johnny Hines and other celebrities of screen, newspaper and radio fame, kept the house pepped up and applauding.

Loew's Coney Island has a stage available for presentations or even legitimate productions. The interior of the theatre is finished in gold and cerise, the general architecture being in renaissance style.

A feature is the ceiling dome: it is 66 feet in diameter having an electric fixture hung from the center, 24 feet high and 12 feet in diameter, weighing two tons.

Mr. Loew intends to provide straight pictures in this new theatre, except during the week of June 22nd, when the Siamese Twins, Violet and Daisy Hilton, will be a feature. Continuous performances, 11 a. m. to midnight daily, will therefore be put in force, with large orchestra, an organ said to be second largest in America, and other customary additions to the picture program.

Representatives of trade press, newspapers and fan magzines were Mr. Loew's guests at dinner at the Hotel Shelbourne before the opening, being conveyed from Loew's New York Theatre in automobiles to the beach; after the very auspicious opening was over these guests returned to the hotel where dancing was in order.

An Our Gang Comedy and other short subjects were shown in addition to the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer special, "The Sporting Venus" at the premiere.

Another for Coast

C. L. Langley, president of the West Coast Langley Thatres, announced this week a million dollar theatre for Wilshire Boulevard and Alvarado Street, Los Angeles. It will seat 2,200 and will be equipped for road shows, vaudeville and pictures. This makes six theatres now under construction by the West Coast Langley Theatres. Sixteen are now in operation in Los Angeles, Pasadena, South Pasadena, Huntingon Park, Glendale, Altadena and Taft, Calif.

Albany Exchanges May Abandon Parcel Post for Express System

All film shipments out of Albany, N. Y., except to such places as are without express offices, may be made entirely by express, according to present plans. While the parcel post service is cheaper, it has been found that serious delays have occurred in shipments both to and from northern New York as well as elsewhere throughout the state. The first move towards switching from the shipment of film by parcel post to express, was taken last Friday when a meeting of the bookers of all exchanges in Albany, was held at the Albany Film Board of Trade headquarters in the Mark Strand Building.

The meeting lasted for nearly two hours, three representatives of the American Express Company being present to answer the numerous questions that were put to them by the bookers. At the conclusion of the meeting the statement was made that the express company was to give its utmost co-operation in the shipment of film, and that there would not be a single city or village in the territory covered by shipments out of the Albany film exchanges that could not be reached within a day. The claim is made that film shipments by parcel post, while cheaper, require from two to three days in many instances. At the present time about one-quarter of the films shipped out of this city to the 400 or more theatres, served by Albany exchanges, is sent by parcel post.

Another meeting will be held within two or three weeks, at which time the bookers will have ready for the express company a complete list of all places served by the exchanges in Albany, the express company later advising the bookers as to the trains and hours when shipments of film should be made to these places in order that it could travel with the greatest speed.

Albany Zone Ratifies Directors Picked at Syracuse

George Dwore, a well known exhibitor in Schenectady, N. Y., was elected as secretary of the Albany Zone, at a gathering of exhibitors at the headquarters in Albany Tuesday afternoon. Dwore succeeds Benjamin Apple, Troy, who resigned several weeks ago, but whose duties have been carried on temporarily by Louis Buettner, of Cohoes, who was recently named as chairman of the Zone, by William Dillon, president of the New York State M. P. T. O. Dwore was nominated by Abe Stone, a former resident of Schenectady, but who is now running the Arbor and the Delaware theatres in Albany.

The board of directors of the Albany Zone, which was named by Chairman Buettner at the Syracuse convention, was ratified at Tuesday's meeting, with the understanding, however, that should these persons constituting the board find they could not give their time to the duties, that they would be replaced by others who could. The meeting lasted for about three hours. In opening the meeting, Chairman Buettner called attention to the fact that exhibitors should take their time in buying, concluding by saying that the exhibitors have already had proof toth e effect that independent companies were marking good pictures, but that they should keep their product at moderate prices.

The music tax situation came up for considerable discussion, with practically everyone present taking part. One of the main features of the meeting was the presence of E. J. Farrell, who outlined the plan for the Greater Movie Season and asked the endorsement of those present. After considerable discussion, and upon a motion made by Meyer Schine, of Gloversville, the idea of Greater Movie Season was sanctioned with the understanding that each of the larger cities in the Albany Zone should select an exhibitor from their city who would come to Albany and discuss the whole proposition with someone yet to be selected to serve as chairman of the Greater Movie Season.

Boston Theatre Escapes State Taxation; Unique Exemption on Personal Plea

CAN a Massachusetts theatre, claiming that it is being conducted for artistic purposes, escape taxation by being classed as the "personal property of literary, benevolent, charitable and scientific institutions," which are tax exempt?

The question, which has aroused operators of theatres throughout the Bay State as well as other taxpayers, has been raised by the repertory stock company of Boston, headed by Henry Jewett. The claim was made for the theatre that it should not be obliged to pay any state tax and as a result Attorney General Jay R. Benton of Massachusetts has ruled that the institution, the New Repertory Company, which soon will open a newly-constructed theatre on Huntington avenue, is exempt from taxation by the state. This is the first time in the history of the state that a theatre has been adjudged of being tax free by an attorney general.

The prospectus of the Jewett enterprise sets forth that the purpose of the new theatre is to enlighten and educate the public concerning the value of the repertory theatre as a vital factor toward the higher development of the dramatic art and to establish in the city of Boston a permanent playhouse where the best plays may be presented—and to encourage actors and playwrights in the best traditions of the dramatic profession.

The attorney general declared that there is "no intimation of any wilful delinquency as to the bringing in of required lists of theatre property." The law of exemption provides that income or profit of an exempted institution must be used for literary, educational, benevolent, charitable or scientific purposes.

But the new project will not escape taxation entirely. A tax must be paid to the city of Boston, according to an opinion given to Mayor James Curley by the city law department. The new repertory theatre is on land assessed at $164,000 and which is taxed at present by the city at approximately $4,000.

Directors of Bennett Enterprises Elect E. L. Bennett as President

SEVERAL interesting events marked the recent special meeting held by the directors of Whitman Bennett Enterprises. Chief among them is the fact that E. L. Bennett, a brother of the producer-director, was elected to the presidency to replace H. Clay Miner, who, because of his manifold activities and the super-abundance of work necessitated by his other interests, was compelled to relinquish this important office. Mr. Miner, however, still remains a director of the company and will be, as heretofore, active in its affairs.

E. L. Bennett brings to his post a wide experience in commercial lines coupled with intensive training in the business field. He is treasurer of C. D. Parker Company of Boston, one of the Hub's most important financial organizations, and secretary of the Cambridge Trust Company. He is also president of the Metropolitan Ice Company.

Whitman Bennett remains vice-president and general manager. The active management will, of course, be vested in him and he has made pretentious plans for his organization's future activities. Mr. Bennett announces that the acquisition of the Glendale Studios by his company marks the dawn of an era of unprecedented activity.

Another important step is indicated by the election of Dr. W. E. Shallenberger to the office of vice-president. Dr. Shallenberger is the president of Arrow Pictures Corporation. In his new capacity he will take an active part in the affairs of Whitman Bennett Enterprises.

Other elections were that of Myron Lesser, attorney for the organization, to the post of secretary, and A. B. Hathaway of Boston as treasurer. Mr. Hathaway is president of the Cambridge Trust Company.

HIPPODROME, CAL., BURNS; BEACH-KRAHN BUILDING

The Hippodrome Theatre at Taft, Cal., was badly damaged by fire on the morning of June 1, the loss being estimated at $20,000.

The Beach-Krahn Amusement Company, which conducts the Strand and Lorin theatres in Berkeley and the Chimes Theatre in Oakland, has arranged to erect a moving picture house costing approximately $150,000 on College avenue, just across the line in Oakland. The site has a frontage of 150 feet on College avenue, with a depth of 400 feet.

TICKET TAX AHEAD OF ESTIMATE

For the last eight months of the fiscal year ending April 30 the provincial amusement tax on theatre tickets in the Province of Manitoba ran slightly ahead of the government estimates. Amusement taxes paid by the theatres in Manitoba during the period amounted to $182,000. The government estimate for the eight months was $182,000.

Ziegfeld Signs to Produce a Series of Paramount Pictures

ONE of the most important motion picture transactions in several months was made known by Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, when he announced that Florenz Ziegfeld had signed a five-year contract to produce a series of Paramount pictures that would bring to the screen the type of productions that have made Ziegfeld famous for lavish entertainment.

The pictures, which will be made in the Paramount studios, will be produced under the personal supervision of Mr. Ziegfeld. The first production will be known as Florenz Ziegfeld's "Glorifying the American Girl" and will be directed by Allan Dwan.

Many of the artists who have been identified with the Ziegfeld productions and most of the famous Ziegfeld beauties will appear in "Glorifying the American Girl" and other Ziegfeld-Paramount pictures. The story for "Glorifying the American Girl" is being written under Mr. Ziegfeld's direction and it is expected that actual production on the picture will start August 31.

"The acquisition of Mr. Ziegfeld," said Mr. Lasky, "is a distinct triumph for the motion picture and tells better than anything else the tremendous strides which have been made toward technical perfection in films. His phenomenal success as a producer of the world's most beautiful stage spectacles naturally attracted the interest of motion picture producers long ago, but he always resisted their efforts to win him to pictures because he was not convinced that the color and beauty of stage effects could be transferred to the screen. Recent developments in picture production, however, make it possible to put on the screen all of the glitter, the beauty and enchanting stage effects that the public has come to expect in productions such as the "Follies," "Sally," "Louis the 14," "Kid Boots," "Annie Dear," and similar smart revues.

"Mr. Ziegfield's first picture for Paramount 'Glorifying the American Girl,' will be one of the most important events in the history of screen entertainment, because it will take into the smallest villages and towns of the entire world everything that Broadway sees in Ziegfeld entertainments. The immense cost of these stage productions, coupled with the tremendous expense of transporting such large enterprises, has kept these famous productions, for the most part, confined to New York and some of the larger cities. Mr. Ziegfeld's association with Paramount, however, will change all that, and now the whole world will have an opportunity to see the things which Mr. Ziegfeld has been producing on Broadway for years."

Mr. Ziegfield was equally enthusiastic over his entry into motion pictures. "I have been so busy all these years with the multitude of details incident to the production of the 'Follies,' 'Sally,' 'Kid Boots,' 'Louis the 14,' and all of my other enterprises," he said, "that possibly I failed to realize the immense strides made by the motion picture. Frankly, I was amazed at the resources which the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation commands for the artistic production of the sort of things I like to do best. In 'Glorifying the American Girl' I have been given the best director in the business, the best scenario writers have been placed at my disposal and a vast technical organization will take care of the details of the production. Moreover, I was impressed with the great improvement that has been made in color photography, and in my productions for Paramount I plan to utilize this extensively."

FOX FAR EAST MANAGER HERE

Delbert Goodman, manager of the Fox Far East Corporation, with headquarters in Tokio, Japan, is a visitor at the home office of Fox Film Corporation. Goodman is in New York to get acquainted with the Fox product for the coming season and to go over the affairs of the Orient office with officials of the company. His stay will be of short duration and he is planning to return to the land of cherry blossoms as soon as the business on hand is concluded. Meanwhile, he is stopping at the Empire Hotel.

Incorporations

Five of the seven motion picture companies that incorporated in New York State during the past week represented an aggregate capitalization of $390,000. While the number of companies forming and receiving charters is perhaps somewhat under the weekly average in the state, this may have been due partly to the excessive hot weather, for it was noticeable that the daily average of all companies incorporating during the period slumped to a considerable extent. The following gives the names of the companies that incorporated last week, the directors, and the amount of capitalization when specified: Spiro-Ad Corporation, $20,000, with E. W. Duke, R. R. McGee, J. B. Cornell, New York City; Riverhead Playhouse, Inc., $100,000, Riverhead, O. H. Luce, B. L. Pike, R. E. Riley, Riverhead; Willis Plays and Photoplays, Inc., $10,000, Richard Willis, H. J. Lyall, New York; Elizabeth Willis, Cambridge, Mass.; Kingston Theatre Corporation, $250,000, Kingston, H. Lazarus, D. M. Lazarus, Kingston; R. A. Lazarus, Albany; Cumly Productions, Inc., $10,000, Joel Kirschner, N. B. Gurock, A. Tolk, New York; Playhouse Pictures Corporation, with Joe Engel, R. A. and Morris Kohn, New York; Dudleyne, Inc., with C. H. Berg, E. J. Clarke, J. R. Elliott, New York City

SCHULBERG IN LARGER QUARTERS

Mexican Receipts

Total receipts of the 48 motion picture theatres of the Federal District of Mexico during the last six months of 1924, says a recent statement of the Department of Commerce, amounted to 2,419,585.40 pesos ($1,209,792.70), according to a report of the Mexican National Bureau of Statistics. Of this amount ten per cent, or 241,958.54 pesos, was paid to municipal and federal authorities as taxes.

Receipts of the largest single theatre in Mexico City during the six-month period were 172,403.40 pesos ($86,201.70). Five other theatres reported receipts for the period of more than 100,000 pesos ($50,000).

Independents Pick Elliott, Who Announces "Open Door" Policy

THE Independent Motion Picture Theatre Producers and Distributors Association, through the chairman of their Executive Committee, Dr. W. E. Shallenberger, announced this week that Frederick H. Elliott is to take over the active management and organization of the independent association. Elliott formerly was executive secretary of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry.

Dr. Shallenberger, in making the announcement, said, "Our campaign to preserve the freedom of the screen and to oppose the efforts at monopoly which have been steadily gaining headway will be more vigorously pressed now that our organization has completed a solid line-up of independent companies. We have now in our ranks 93% of the independent producers and distributors of the industry and since the open declaration of independence at Milwaukee, our cause has steadily gained ground. We are glad to be able to announce that Frederick H. Elliott will begin this week to take over the active management of the affairs of our association.

"Mr. Elliott is a business man and not a politician. His record is one of straightforward dealing with the public in all of his activities and he feels, as we do, that in our campaign we have nothing to hide from the newspapers or the American people.

"There is a definite and desperate effort now being made by three of the largest companies in the field to trustify and control the motion picture screen, to make, to distribute and exhibit all motion pictures under their control. Were this movement to be unopposed it would eventually destroy the institution of the motion picture because with factory methods and canned product, the public would soon tire of the motion picture screen as its chief source of entertainment and amusement.

"Our organization seeks to destroy nobody. We do not desire the downfall of any man or any group, but we do insist that the movement toward monopoly shall stop now once and for all time."

Elliott, after the executive committee meeting, was asked for a statement regarding the plans of the organization and he said in part:

"Heavy investments of capital and the ambitions of individuals have resulted in an effort to trustify the business to the prejudice of independent producers, distributors and theatre owners. Ours is the plain problem of preventing the accomplishment of this monopoly.

"We propose to carry on our activities openly, taking the American people into our confidence because we believe they are interested in the progress and activities of their own best patronized amusement. We want to deal with facts, presenting them fairly and without prejudice to anyone. We have a definite objective and we now have the funds to pay the expense incidental to our campaign. We do not desire any tremendous campaign fund nor will we utilize one. We are merely going directly to the industry and to the American public with our problems, being satisfied that the American spirit of fair play is our most valuable asset."

J. C. Flinn Betters Product Through Co-operation of Units

JOHN C. FLINN, vice president and general manager of Producers Distributing Corporation, returned to New York this week after concluding a series of sales conventions that took him to San Francisco and later to Los Angeles, where he conferred with the company's contributing producers on important matters of production.

At a luncheon at the Ambassador Hotel in Los Angeles, attended by Cecil B. De Mille, Al. Christie, Hunt Stromberg, Frances Marion, Renaud Hoffman and A. H. Sebastian, Mr. Flinn proposed a plan of co-ordination in the making of the coming pictures that will greatly facilitate production and materially increase quality.

Under this plan which was immediately adopted, all pictures released by Producers Distributing Corporation during the coming year will have the benefits of co-operation of three studios, the De Mille, Hollywood and Christie studios, and every advantage of centralized production while being independently produced and maintaining their separate individuality.

The players, technical staffs, and equipment of all three studios will be at the disposal of any and all of the producers contributing the coming releases of Producers Distributing Corporation. This arrangement brings into cooperative combination a big stock company organized by Cecil De Mille, trained riders and cowboys affiliated with Hunt Stromberg's activities, the well known dramatic artists of the Hollywood studio and the galaxy of comedians of the Christie studio, in addition to the technical experts who have distinguished themselves in the creation of sets ranging all the way from frontier shacks to Babylonian walls and temples. And in the matter of costuming, designers of dress ranging from gingham frocks to queenly trousseaux will contribute their skill to the Producers Distributing Corporation releases.

Speaking of the series of sales conventions which he conducted on his way to Los Angeles, Mr. Flinn said:

"I found enthusiasm that was 'real' along every mile of the way from New York to San Francisco.

"Enthusiasm at sales conventions is, as a rule, a sort of routine," said Mr. Flinn, "and the only way to distinguish the 'real' from the artificial is to note its tone and color. What is said and done is not nearly so important as how it is said and the way it is done. And after conferring with our field force I have come back convinced that I encountered 'real' enthusiasm when our product for the coming year was disclosed to the men who will be responsible for its sale.

"In Los Angeles I found more 'real' enthusiasm among the producers and that enthusiasm is taking concrete form right now in the field force that hey have ceased to even rent productions. I found competition among our contributing producers that is as keen as it is friendly. Each is trying to outdo the others in quality of product and no brighter outlook than this can be presented to the exhibitors.

"I am intensely enthusiastic over this happy situation. We have a field force that has absolute confidence in the ability of our producers and the producers have such confidence in the field force that they ahve ceased to even think about the sale of their pictures and are devoting their every thought to production details.

"That sums up the situation as I found it. And that is the secret of the confidence with which Producers Distributing Corporation views the outlook for the coming year."

Harry Berman Dies

Harry Berman, general manager of Film Booking Offices exchanges, died today, June 18, at his home 215 West 90th street, Manhattan.

A statement from the F. B. O. office said that Mr. Berman several weeks ago had been granted a vacation of three months. The statement also revealed that Mr. Berman's health started to fail a year ago following a serious operation.

Mr. Berman, who was born in Poland 51 years ago, coming to America when a boy, had been in the film industy for the past eight years. Before associating himself with F. B. O. in 1922 he had been a general sales manager for Universal and also had worked under the Paramount banner.

The funeral will take place from his home on Friday, June 19. Interment will be made in Cypress Hills cemetery. Mr. Berman is survived by his wife and two sons.

McCORMICK HEADS PATHE EXPLOITATION

S. Barret McCormick has been appointed exploitation manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., succeeding Arthur Brilant, who recently resigned to engage in theatrical production work. Mr. McCormick has been associated with the exploitation staff during the past ten months.

Hays Sees Conn. Governor in Effort to Kill Tax Bill

NEVER have the exhibitors in Connecticut been so aroused over a law affecting them as by a bill just adopted by the General Assembly. This imposes a tax upon film distributors as well as giving power of censorship to the State Tax Commissioner. The bill, up to press time, lacked the signature of Governor Trumbull to make it a statute.

At a hearing in the state capitol at Hartford on Thursday afternoon, June 11, granted by Gov. Trumbull at the request of Will Hays, speakers for and against the bill were heard.

The first announcement from the theatre side of the matter came when Will Hays, president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., requested the Governor to veto the bill. Hays personally talked with Governor Trumbull over the telephone from New York City, requesting that a hearing be granted before the governor either signed or vetoed the measure. Hays, it is understood, told the governor that in his opinion the tax of $10 for 1,000 feet of film and 50 cents for each additional 100 feet of each separate subject would be confiscatory and force the theatres in the small towns out of business.

Upon learning of Hays' talk with the governor, Representative Harry Durant of Guilford, chief sponsor of the film measure, said he had been aware that Hays was interesting himself in the movement to defeat the bill by obtaining a veto of it by the governor. Durant declared that he considered himself well informed about motion pictures, having been connected with Famous Players-Lasky Company for eight years. He said the motion picture industry is about the only one which is not required to pay for the privilege of doing business in Connecticut. He likewise denied that the tax, which he said would amount to approximately 20 cents an exhibition, would injure small town theatres.

At the hearing Thursday afternoon, June 11, Attorney Benedict M. Holden, representing more than 100 small theatre owners, told Governor Trumbull that "spite influences" and the "meddlesomeness of self-appointed custodians of the public morals" largely were responsible for the passage of the film bill. He gave as his opinion that the bill is unconstitutional; that it could not be enforced because of interstate commerce complications which would result and that its tax clause would be ruinous to the picture theatre industry.

Representative Durant defended the bill, declaring that its opponents were "putting up a censorship smoke screen" to avoid paying the tax. He characterized the hearing as a trial of himself, State Tax Commissioner Blodgett, the members of the Assembly and "everything and everyone but the bill itself."

A sensational feature of the hearing was the declaration of Tax Commissioner Blodgett, appointed under the bill to collect the tax and administer censorship of objectionable portions of photoplays, that "I don't believe pictures should be censored because they move any more than books should be censored because they do not move." He pointed out that in the early stages of the formulation of the bill it purely was a censorship measure. Commissioner Blodgett said he was interested in anything that possibly would increase the revenues of the state without causing hardship, and with this in view had drafted a bill, imposing a tax of $6 on each 1,000 feet of film and without any provision for censorship.

Attorney Holden asserted that films are an interstate commodity from the time they leave Los Angeles until they are scrapped and as such could not be taxed under a state law.

Joseph Walsh, of Hartford, president of the Theatre Owners' Association of Connecticut, said the bill puts an unfair burden upon the small theatre owner. He estimated the tax would cause payments of approximately $2,500 yearly to be made by each of the 250 theatres in the state.

As a result of the Postoffice Department at Washington taking note of the proposed state tax on films, Attorney Holden announced that he had been advised that First Assistant Postmaster-General Bartlett had telegraphed to Governor Trumbull that he had been informed the proposed new law would require postal employes delivering films to exhibitors in Connecticut to collect the amount of the tax. This likewise brought to the hearing Harry K. Taylor, postmaster of Hartford, who said there was a question as to whether the bill would prevent postmen from delivering the films when the tax was unpaid.

General Counsel Marks and Traffic Manager Lee of the American Express Company asserted that in their opinion many complications might arise in the delivery of films. Lee said if the bill became a law he might find it necessary to instruct drivers not to handle motion picture films in Connecticut.

Holden also asserted that "he would be ready with an injunction against the constitutionality of the bill if it becomes a law." He added that he would be employed by the theatre owners until the next session of the Assembly and he offered his services in "drafting a bill which would lay an equitable tax and be free of spite influences and slipshod provisions."

HONOR WOODHULL AND SEIDER

National President R. F. Woodhull of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, and New Jersey State President Joseph M. Seider, were guests of honor at the luncheon and meeting of the Business Men's Association of Bogota, N. J., held at the Community House, Thursday, June 11th.

C. E. Cook Tells of Latest Survey of Missouri-Kansas

AS a result of the tour of the territory by C. E. Cook, business manager of the M. P. T. O. Kansas-Missouri, various phases of outlying trade conditions have been brought to light, which will result in some definite action by the organization. Forty towns were visited by Cook, who covered 1,300 miles and brought back $963 in membership fees. But his trip was not confined to soliciting new members only.

"In Joplin, Mo., I found an audience of more than 2,000 persons witnessing a free picture show running in an amusement park in opposition to five motion picture theatres," Cook said. "The film was being furnished by more than one national distributor. A resolution calling for the refusal to arbitrate cases of such exchanges before the joint arbitration board was passed at the last M. P. T. O. K.-M. convention. You can rest assured there will be some action taken. This thing of robbing the men whom distributors depend upon for their existence is not right. I don't know whether or not the home offices of the companies, whose names I will withhold, know of this practice, but they are going to be informed right away.

"I found that the greatest opposition to the small town theatre owner in the summer is tent shows and skating rinks. The low license fees of the latter undoubtedly constitutes unfair competition. If exhibitors only knew it they could bring pressure to bear upon their city councils regarding such matters. In one town a city alderman told me he was opposed to even granting a license to a carnival which was billed there. It wouldn't take long for an exhibitor in good standing in his town to convince his city council that his theatre was much more of a stabilized business than a passing tent show and entitled to an even break, any way. We must wake up on this subject.

"Across the Kansas boundary line from Coffeyville, Kans., in Oklahoma I found a small town being built around the new Tackett Theatre, which was constructed on a bleak prairie to avoid Sunday closing laws. The theatre, running only on Sundays, stands as conclusive proof that the people of that community want Sunday shows, yet are governed by a straight-laced minority. It draws from a radius of thirty miles, has a 10-piece orchestra and rapidly is becoming the center of an impromptu community.

"As a rule, business conditions are looking much better in Western Missouri and Kansas. Crops are good and a general feeling of better conditions exists."

AUSTRALIA FILMING ITS INDUSTRIES

Moving pictures of Victorian manufacturing industries have been given in fifteen Victorian towns, under the auspices of the Made-in-Australia Council of the Victorian Chamber of Manufactures, states E. G. Babbitt, American Trade Commissioner in Melbourne, in a report to the Department of Commerce. The promoters declare that this film propaganda will awaken a consciousness in the minds of the people that goods are being made in Australia, which, it is claimed, compare in many instances with any that can be imported. Among the industries which have been filmed are the iron and steel industry and the furniture industry.

WARNERS DECLARE DIVIDEND

The Warner Brothers Pictures, Inc., for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1925, reports net profit of $1,101,950 after all expenses and charges. This was equal to $5.55 a share earned on the 200,000 shares of Class A stock outstanding, or 3.67 times the annual dividend requirements. After allowing for Class A dividends, the balance was equal to $2.25 a share on the 350,000 shares of common stock.

Program De Luxe for Jersey Exhibitors in Asbury Park

PRESIDENT JOSEPH M. SEIDER and the other moving spirits back of the Sixth Annual Convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New Jersey have set out to show the other forty seven States "How to Do It". Three days, June 29 and 30, and July 1, will be given over to the conclave, to be held in Asbury Park, N. J., with headquarters in the New Monterey Hotel.

Among the invited guests are President and Mrs. Calvin Coolidge; United States Senators Edge and Edwards; Governor Silzer of New Jersey; Mayor Hettrick of Asbury Park; Mayor Hague of Jersey City and Mayor Raymond of Newark and New York State Senator James J. Walker.

The banquet will be held Wednesday evening, July 1. Robert E. Welsh will be the toastmaster. The list of speakers includes Governor Silzer, Mayor Hettrick, Ray Lewis, Sydney S. Cohen, R. F. Woodhull, the newly elected President of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, and Joseph M. Seider, President of the New Jersey State Organization.

A number of motion picture stars now working in Eastern studios will be marshalled for the fun under the personal supervision of Martin J. Starr, who has promised to have a striking aggregation on hand.

Entries for the water sports have been received from Big U, Tiffany Productions, and from the other film companies as well as from the independent producers, trade papers and fan publications. One of the most interesting features of the gathering will be the presence of camera experts representing the International, Fox, Pathe and Kinograms news reel producers, who will take pictures of various participants in the various athletic and sporting events as well as scenes on the Boardwalk in Asbury Park and in and about the big hotel.

The complete program is as follows:

Monday, June 29

HIGH OHIO COURT AFFIRMS

It looks as if "The Birth of a Nation" was permanently doomed in so far as exhibitions in Ohio are concerned, the Ohio Supreme Court having sustained Vernon M. Reigel, State Director of Education, in his stand barring the picture from being shown in the State.

Blue Law Martyr's 7th Arrest Arouses Wisconsin Exhibitors

ARRESTED seven times within the last few months, but still defying reformers who have set out to keep the town blue on Sunday, Mrs. Mae Zimmerman, veteran exhibitor of Cumberland, Wis., is putting up a battle against the blue laws that is attracting the attention of theatre owners throughout the state.

According to word received in Milwaukee, a fine of $10 and costs was assessed after the first arrest and Mrs. Zimmerman appealed her case to the state supreme court. Pending a ruling from the high court, Mrs. Zimmerman and her supporters have sent appeals also to Gov. John J. Blaine and to the attorney general's office, asking that the blue law either be enforced impartially throughout the state, or that the legislation be repealed or modified.

In the meantime, Henry Staab, executive secretary of the M. P. T. O. of Wisconsin, who also is a state senator, has made two attempts to have the legislature kill off the blue laws, but on each occasion his attempts to introduce a repeal bill were unsuccessful.

Gov. Blaine, in a wire to the district attorney, has warned, however, that the law must be enforced impartially throughout the county.

"If it is the policy of the district attorney's office to enforce the Sunday closing law to the full letter of the law, it must be done throughout the county without partiality and without granting immunity to anyone violating it," the governor's message read.

According to information reaching Milwaukee, petitions circulated in behalf of Mrs. Zimmerman have shown an overwhelming sentiment in Cumberland in favor of Sunday shows. This prompted an advertisement in the press, under the signature of the leading reformers, warning that under the law those who patronize Sunday shows are equally guilty.

Vitagraph Rejoins M. P. P. D. A.

HARRY M. WARNER of Vitagraph, Inc. late this week issued the following statement:

"Vitagraph, Inc. takes pleasure in announcing its election to membership in the Motion Picture Producers & Distributors of America, Inc.

"The election today resumes the close affiliation Vitagraph has had with the Association headed by Mr. Hays, Vitagraph having been an original member and ardent supporter of the Association's work. We very much regret Vitagraph's short withdrawal from the Association, and when Warner Brothers secured control of Vitagraph, one of our first acts was to make application for membership. This we are happy to say was favorably acted upon at today's meeting of the Association.

"The publicity attendant upon Vitagraph's withdrawal was most unnecessary and unfortunate, and resulted in no good to Vitagraph. We trust Vitagraph's announcement of election to membership in the Hays organization, which is a truly constructive move for Vitagraph, will receive at least equal prominence. We would therefore be glad if those who have heard of Vitagraph's withdrawal should now learn that Vitagraph is again a member of the Association that has done so much for the common good of all engaged in the motion picture industry."

VALUE OF A SCRAP BOOK

A SCRAP book should be one of the most important items in the possession of the producer. Such a valuable aid to production work may be appraised to the extent that it is only by constant reference and study that any man can be successful in his given line. There are unfortunately fewer textbooks available, fewer technical treatises published for the producer's study than in most any other profession. Many books are written on every phase of art and music, the dance, art in life, etc., but few of them have a definite instruction value which enables the producer to keep pace with the developments of the stage generale.

Most of the instruction which a producer receives, aside from his own circle of criticism, is from the various magazines, particularly those relating to the theatre, and it would seem almost impossible to keep huge piles of magazines and then attempt searching through them for the item of particular interest at some moment when they are desired for reference purpose.

Every producer without exception should have a scrap book. At the beginning of his work as a producer he should commence to accumulate, to paste into scrap books the pictures and articles which are of most interest to him, and which will be beneficial to him in future days for reference. His scrap book should reflect a composite of scenic ideas, color treatments, costume plates, new devices which he may use in the form originally suggested or he may create a production which is a composite or combination of the various ideas which are similar.

The scrap book, however, is singularly an individual matter. It is easily imbued with the spirit of its maker. Rodin, in speaking of artists said, "Show me a student's scrap book, and I will tell you whether or not he will ever be a great artist." This may be far-fetched and may not have a direct application to producing in the theatre, but the fact remains that a tremendous benefit can be derived from intelligently assembled scrap books, and it is urged that any producer whose life is practically dedicated to the advancement of art in the theatre should not neglect this wonderful medium for preserving fleeting impressions.

BETTER MUSIC DEMANDED

THE motion picture stage is an artistic barometer. It is very sensitive to the fickle temperaments of the public, and the rapidity with which it has met the various demands brand it as an artistic force which the theatrical world in general must reckon with.

For instance, during the general theatrical season which is now closing, it was found that in the melee of productions which were dominated by a processional of ladies of the evening extending from the harems of the East to the elms of New England, a revival of—Romance. This sudden change, or we may say revulsion, from the too insistent drama of things has been accomplished with the aid of music.

It is music which has enabled Romance to recover a foothold in the legitimate theatre, but the motion picture house has enjoyed the reputation of consistently reflecting this new popular mood in programs well balanced with the popular forms of music, and the better compositions.

The moving picture houses, especially the first run theatres, make a specialty of music, music as a rule which is better artistically than the pictures. We all know that a great part of the public that went to see the pictures has been captured by the music unawares, and insidiously merged into the picture, which in the beginning attended the theatre for the music at least as much as for the pictures.

As to jazz, a very learned musician said that what jazz has done is to compel to a new realization the ordinary untrained person who used with the older sort of orchestrations to get out of the total only tune or melody. Even for the "likes of him or her" there was no missing the fact that when the jazz band was playing the musicians were doing things to tickle and torture the tunes. This proceeding got effects which, while they weren't tune, were nevertheless music. The tom tom of the banjo and the wailings of the saxophone were not to be ignored either by the ear that listened or the foot that undertook to dance and keep time. It was effective and compulsory, a primary course in what musicians call "counter-point."

What happened next was that people who had acquired a taste for the thing in the crude form of commercial jazz, began to recognize the same thing and like it when they found it in better forms of music. In short, they were ready to get out of music played by an orchestra something more than the tune.

The sign-posts point toward a greater appreciation of real music and it will behoove the musical directors to arrange programs within the understanding of the audiences, to give them such compositions as may be found in the medium between the jazz and the highly technical compositions, taking particular pains to dodge the temptation of repetition. The country is becoming adjusted in its economic condition following the unrest of the war, and that particularly is reflected in the likes and dislikes of the people in their tastes for music.

What has happened and what may be going to happen, for it is confidently predicted that next season will see a flood of romantic musical comedy productions, all of which have a direct bearing on the presentation schedule, does not mean that we are going to lose what we have gained from realism. Realism is still with us and will stay. One of the best things about it runs parallel to the thing that jazz has done for good music. Realism has placed a new value upon the old Romance, else we should not be able in this time, after a great war has upset everything, to welcome a return to the temperaments of the Victorian age.

Big First Run Presentations

CAPITOL THEATRE
New York City

Featured Picture: "Siege"
(Universal-Jewel)

Music

The Overture played by Capitol Grand Orchestra with David Mendoza conducting, is "Mignon" (Thomas).

Capitol Ballet Corps

Mlle. Gambarelli appears with Doris Niles and a corps of fourteen in one of the most pretentious dance offerings we have been recently privileged to see at this theatre. The presentation arranged by Mr. Rothafel is based on Schumann's "Papillons" with an orchestration by Herman Hand.

The scene is laid in a garden at Carnival time, where Pierrot, carried away with the spirit of the merriment and music, indulges his soaring fancies. In his imagination he has chosen the fairest of the masqueraders as his beloved, and takes her with him to the land of his dreams. When the dawn begins to flame in the sky; the merrymakers take their departure one by one. Among the last to go is his dream sweetheart, and the broken-hearted Pierrot is left alone once more.

The setting is an old garden exterior. A net transparency is hung in folds down in two and is topped with a cut green foliage border which is hung over the scrim in heavy folds. Back of the scrim is a cut drop which is one of the most colorful scenic treatments recently offered. A large gnarled tree with flowering top is center, the branches extending over toward right beneath which is an arched gate set amid foliage. Left of the tree trunk is a cluster of saplings, the trunks being visible with a foliage in the foreground. Grape vines are entwined about the gateway right center. Back of the drop is a blue cyc drop toned blue and green, upon which a water rippler plays. The scrim is tinted blue and magenta from the sides. The cut drop is highlighted in colors to bring out the purples, canary and pink of the pigments. Characters appear in 1850 costumes. The members of the ballet in white costumes with wings of dull gold, Gambarelli in costume of white tulle, skirt of which is trimmed with three pale green bands edged with silver, the attached wings being of dull gold patterned and outlined with silver. The green spots with canary from the sides were used on the characters in the foreground. For the final movement of the dance red is slowly brought up on the back drop giving the effect of morning flush from the sky with purplish blue at the base.

Roxy's Gang at the Seashore

This setting is one of the simplest that Mr. Rothafel has offered in many weeks, but is one of his most effective treatments. His suggestion of a seashore is excellent, and practically the only things he uses are a few properties with a back drop giving the effect of sky and water. However it is the impression of the seashore. At the base of the drop water ripplers play from right and left which fade into an indistinguishable horizon which is a hazy purplish blue merging into a faint pink at the top. At extreme left is a large beach parasol in orange and red stripes, various lounging chairs are scattered in hemispherical position cross stage, with a pup tent in orange with a green top extreme right. A telescope mounted on a standard is up left of center. Various characters appear in afternoon costumes, the ballet in white sailor uniforms. The program was popularly received with the following artists: Gladys Rice, Lottice Howell, Marjorie Harcum, Hazel Simonson, Lila Saling, Frank Moulan, Lieutenant Gitz Rice, Sigurd Nilssen, Arthur Lang, Joseph Wetzel, James Parker Coombs and Jack Abbott.

MARK STRAND THEATRE
New York City

Featured Picture: "The Teaser"
(Universal-Jewel)

Music

Excerpts from "Pagliacci"—Leoncavallo, is given an excellent rendition by the Mark Strand Symphony Orchestra with Carl Edouarde, conducting. Kitty McLaughlin, Soprano, sings "The Bird Song," dressed in the characteristic costume of the opera.

(a) Playing Cards

Joseph Plunkett is offering two extreme novelties, simple designs, and very well done. This novelty introduces three dancers, Mlle. Klemova, M. Daks and Bourman. The setting consists of three wide frames placed center, right, and left center against brown plush. Within the frames are mounted plaques which represent the backs of playing cards. At the rise these three set pieces resemble gaint cards and are flooded with white and light blue from the sides. Suddenly they revolve revealing the Jack, King and Queen of Hearts dressed in similar costumes who come from the cards which are painted on the reverse side of the plaques and do an excellent dance number emulating the various movements of card playing. For finale the characters revolve with the cards to their original position.

(b) Demi-Tasse

A dining table with a white cloth falling to the floor is set center. The members of the Mark Strand Male Quartette, dressed in black coats with white trousers are seated right and left of the circular table. In the center of the table is a large jardiniere vase with wide blue stripes running vertically interspersed with thin gold stripes on a white base. A large cluster of pink roses with accompanying greens is in the vase. The black plush is used as a backing. White is thrown from the sides on the Quartette who sing "A Good Cigar Is a Smoke"—Herbert. The table is set with the final course of a dinner, consisting of a demi-tasse service. At the conclusion of the number the vase slowly turns around and presently the head of Pauline Miller, soprano is seen with the flowers of the vase forming a background. No other part of the singer is visible. She sings "A Woman's Smile" (Friml), and turns back at the conclusion of the song, as the Quartette pick up the refrain of their original number for the finale. White spot is used on Miss Miller.

Nick Lucas

Mr. Plunkett must be commended for holding this popular artist for a second week appearance, as his songs are immensely popular with the audiences. A setting which distinctly contrasts to the one of last week is offered, representing a corner of a tenement area way in which Mr. Lucas appears, dressed in a cap and open blouse, rough trousers. The set which occupies one-third of the area up stage is set on angles, with about a six foot flat running from right of center up right, with two six foot flats adjoining and running up left and off. The flats are painted to represent the walls of a building, brick with a jagged plastered base. Three stories are visible with two sets of fire escapes upon which are hung various garments, foreground on stage is dressed with boxes, refuse cans, etc. Orange, amber and blue headlight the set from the sides, back of the black plush which is used to mask the set. The artist works in a canary spot. For the finale Mr. Lucas sits on a home made stool, and is highlighted from the sides with amber from the right and blue from the left. The background takes on deeper blue tones, lights coming up in the windows in the second story of the house. Toward the finale of his number blues are taken off and the amber on the singer is dimmed at finale.

RIVOLI THEATRE
New York City

Featured Picture: "The Manicure Girl"
(Paramount)

Music

"Sixth Hungarian Rhapsody" by Liszt, played by the Rivoli Orchestra, Willy Stahl conducting. Harold Ramsbottom presents an intricate arrangement of "Rose-Marie" by Friml at the organ.

Russian Divertissements

It is rather difficult to properly describe the various settings used as the different backgrounds since they are of such a fantastic nature that in order to be appreciated they must be seen. They represent some of the finest work done by Mr. Wenger in stage settings, and it would be an injustice to this capable artist to attempt to analyze without the aid of flashlights, these creations. Mr. Wenger who thoroughly understands the temperament of the Russian peoples in their various moods has transferred a light, airy carnival spirit in his settings. This mood is one of the most difficult to portray as we do not associate a carnival spirit with Russia, more dominant compelling notes being those which we commonly attribute to them. The color combinations are most unusual and rarely have we seen a setting in a motion picture theatre which embodied such artistry, particularly in the impressionistic or fantastic vein.

(a) Paul Tisen's Gypsy Ensemble

Six musicians dressed in red blouses, green sash, black trousers, boots, the leader appearing in a light green blouse and figured sash are presented in a set consisting of a black plush highlighted with blue border, a long cylindrical fixture with varicolored strips of crepe paper hanging down over it, the ends caught at the bottom. A canary lamp is within the fixture. Canary and amber from the sides highlight the artist.

(b) Russian Cathedral Quartette

The four singers dressed in light colored silk blouses tied with black cord, wearing black trousers appear in front of a Russian landscape drop.

(c) Ensemble

The setting which introduces two artists and the Ensemble consists of a cut drop with a carnival motif with black plush as the background. Two sapling trees are up right and left against the drop. Four members of the Rivoli Ballet dressed in colorful Russian costumes appear in a number which is followed by the introduction of Mlle. Nina Sergeyeva, dressed as a peasant girl, who executes an excellent number. This is followed by the introduction of Nicholas Kovac in Russian costume, who does one of the finest Russian folk dances which we have been privileged to see in motion picture theatres. The orchestra and Quartette are used to dress the set. Light blue from overhead with amber and canary from the sides, amber and canary spots to work with orange amber to tone constitutes the lighting treatment.

La Torricella

This artist gives an excellent dance impression of "The Swan"—Saint-Saens, with a musical setting by E. Turk, cellist. A scrim hung down in one flooded purple and highlighted with blue in cloud formations with a black plush hung back, constitute the setting. The dancer dressed in white is highlighted from the sides with steel blue. The artist appears as a cameo. This is a very effective setting and treatment for this number.

Through A Garden Window

Miss Beth McCoy, Soprano, gives a rendition of "June Brought the Roses" by Oppenshaw. The setting consists of French windows at center. The opening above the windows being masked with a drawn shirred shade in light buff, the light fabrics are used to carry off right and left from the window. Back of the window a balustrade with a flower row attached, beyond which is a sky drop. Red foots, blue borders with magenta and blue from the sides. A large vase with vari-colored tulips is right of the window. A low bench covered with a batik drape is in front of the window, and a vase with bamboo feathers is left. The artist appears in a red gown.

Dan and Henning

Miss June Day and Leo Henning, dancers, present two numbers accompanied by La Chapani Marimba Orchestra. Setting consists of a black cyc front of which is set four fabric columns on one foot bases which are placed two right and left of center. A Russian motif is the design. The bases are draped with striped scarfs. A large gold border is on the lower part of the black drop and up center of the drop two wide gold strips fall down over the face of it, over which is hung a light silk rug. The Marimba stands are covered with drapes of Spanish shawls. The six musicians which include four marimba players, one bass viol and one banjoist and violinist are dressed in colorful Spanish costumes. Red floods and borders with magenta and blue thrown in highlighting the background with amber and canary in the foreground. Canary and light blue spots are used on the dancers.

A GREATER MOVIE SEASON SPECIAL
No. 2
"DANCE OF THE SEASONS"
An Interpretive Scene in Four Scenes
A MOVING PICTURE WORLD PRESENTATION
DEVISED BY COLBY HARRIMAN

THERE is a general movement to give the various dance features something more than an appearance. The trend is towards ideas which embody some definite theme or story which may be expressed or interpreted by rhythm of the dance, and in dance pantomime. One of the principal objections relative to the weekly appearance of dance features in a presentation program is that there is a marked degree of similarity which breeds monotony, and a number of producers have eliminated the regular ballet and dance artist from their organizations as it seemed that the only thing which was different in the weekly programs was the scenery.

We know that if we give a definite idea a base upon which to operate, that idea can be easily interpreted, and this is particularly true of dance pantomime. In order for this vital artistic force to attain a degree of popularity and enjoy the constant interest of the patrons, we must give it something specific to do, something that the audience can understand. Of course, we know that the variations of the dance the knowledge of which is shared by the artist in the constantly changing forms he presents, yet there is such a thin line defining them that the average patron says, "It may be different but it looks the same to me."

The presentation we are suggesting this week is the second in Greater Movie Season program and is one which we believe offers the possibilities for a capable ballet master to present his corps in a varied dance, interpretive of the motifs and elements dominating the different seasons of the year. First of all, especial emphasis must be laid on the fact that each "season" must be marked with a dance which is distinct in its action and interpretation from the preceding and following dances. Nature offers so many moods which the dancer can express that these variations, while they are not complicated, need not be confused.

The settings are particularly simple. In each scene the set tree, a ground row and a blue cyc constitute the principal pieces.

We are omitting our regular routine in this number of giving details of the sets, as the mounting is so simple that it can be described without the aid of detailed specifications.

Arched Drop in One

This drop should be hung down at the curtain line with a cut hemispherical opening. It is suggested that this drop be paint-

1. Spring

2. Summer

Flood the arched drop at the base with green, extending towards the top with a pink. Tone the cyc with blue with a cloud effect upon it. Use amber pins, preferably one ring from the sides with light amber the base with green and purple. Highlight the top of the set piece with magenta and the trunks with amber from the left and green from the right. Place a tinsel cord as shown in sketch, to cast a shadow of the trunks of the tree on the foreground of the stage.

The dancers appear in a costume as illustrated in Fig. 2. The bodice of green crepe part trimmed in yellow. The first three tiers of the dress consist of an orange the lower tier in green matching that of the bodice. American beauty roses in short stemmed cluster as a corsage. Large fabric flowers with gray, lav ender and light blue petals a yellow center tipped with purple are used to trim the lower tier of the dress. The lighting on the dancers should be canary and rose in same arrangement as previous scene.

3. Autumn

Flood the arched masking drop with a [illegible] effect in "spotty" arrangement with tints, tones, greens and orchids in between. Highlight with the light on the cut drop. The blue cyc should be toned a deep blue, with amber brought in at the base at several points. The set may consist of foliage-covered trees (many) looking out the central entrance to the scene a back amber toning the trees. Light amber should highlight the ground row. It is suggested that a fan [illegible] be used for falling leaves that [illegible] in continuous action over the stage, the set down right and left, blowing the leaves about.

The dancers appear in [illegible] costumes as illustrated in Fig. 3, costumes with [illegible] basque. A very good effect can be followed if they are placed to [illegible] while they are occupied by the dancers, blowing the garments during the various movements of the dancers. The foreground should be flooded from the sides with orange amber and blue.

4. Winter

Flood the arched opening with blue also play a snow effect upon this surface. The cyc should be toned a deep purple blue at the base, with a green and dark blue top. A large moon box with steel blue medium should be used up left. Highlight the tops of the trees with blue green and blue green on the ground row. The dancers appear in this number in costumes as indicated in Fig 4. The materials should be shimmering, such as white oilcloth. White wigs that are powdered with silver metallics should be worn. The body of the dress should give an icy appearance with metallics, or if the oilcloth is not available the dress should be constructed of [illegible] Snow box should be used for the finale. The dancers operate in an area flooded with green, blue and steel blue from the sides.

The work of installing John Wenger's new stage and proscenium at the Rivoli is nearing completion and will be finished for next week's performances. The entire stage has been remodeled and settings built for a variety of novelty effects. This is the first Wenger stage creation for the Rivoli in several years.

Presentation

Eastman Theatre Company in "The Pirates of Penzance" Act II.

The first act shows how Frederick, as a boy, was apprenticed through mistake of his nurse to a pirate instead of to a pilot. In the act he attains his majority and prepares to leave the pirate band. They are notoriously tenderhearted buccaneers, who being orphans themselves, never harm orphans. As the first act closed they had just released the daughters of Major General Stanley in order not to leave him an orphan. In the second act, Frederick bids his sweetheart, Mabel, farewell, to lead an expedition for extermination of the pirates. The Pirate King and Ruth, his nurse, show him that in the apprentice papers he is bound until his 21st birthday and, as his birthday is February 29th, he has had but five. His sense of duty impels him to return to the pirates and he tells them the General's fictitious orphan story. They attempt to carry off the General, are overpowered by the police, confess they are English noblemen and abandon their piratical career.

"Stop Flirting"

Christie's Latest Through Producers Distributing Corporation is an Amusing Light Comedy

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

A London musical comedy success furnishes the outline for "Stop Flirting" the newest feature comedy which Al and Charles Christie are offering through Producers Distributing Corporation.

As the story has reached the screen it is a farce comedy built around the idea of a young wife flirting with all her male acquaintances to get even with her husband who she believes has been flirting with a number of girls. To teach her a lesson, hubby is persuaded to pretend to take an aero trip. By accident he really does and has an exciting time. His death is reported, and returning home he has to hide and has a time getting food. Finally there is a riot of excitement, for hearing that an eccentric maniac is loose hubby, his friend and a Count all disguise as the maniac. The scheme finally brings about a reconciliation.

There is plenty of action and Director Scott Sydney has kept things moving at a good pace. The opening scenes are bright and snappy, but as is frequently the case with an adaptation of a musical show, the plot is slight and in building it up it looses some of its pep. The different situations are amusing, but in several instances they are held too long and the ideas rather overworked and various theatric devices are employed to keep up the action which while amusing will be recognized as familiar. The fact that the wife is on to the scheme and helps to work it up is a good touch that adds to the merriments.

John T. Murray and Wanda Hawley have the leading roles with Hallam Cooley, Jimmie Adams and Jack Duffy scarcely less prominent and all give satisfactory performances. Director Scott Sidney has made the most of the material at his command, in fact he has overworked his situations at times to make up for the slight plot that is hardly sufficient for the footage. There are however a number of laughs and with the fast action "Stop Flirting" will probably prove amusing light entertainment for the majority of audiences.

Cast

Vivian Reynolds.....Wanda Hawley
Geoffrey.....Hallam Cooley
Suzanne.....Vera Steadman
Marjorie.....Ethel Shannon
Count.....Jimmie Adams
Butler.....Jack Duffy
Teddy.....Jimmie Harrison

Based on musical comedy by Fred Jackson
Directed by Scott Sidney
Length, 5,161 feet.

Story

The Reynolds, very much in love with each other, are on their honeymoon. Perry strolls on the beach and Vivian sees a girl in his arms. He explains that she slipped and Vivian is satisfied. The next time, when a girl falls on his lap she is not so easily appeased and when apparently kissing a girl, he says he was getting a cinder out of her eye, Vivian decides to cure him by flirting and invites all the men she knows. Perry's friend, Geoffrey, comes to the rescue and schemes to have Perry pretend that he is going with another chap on a flight to Hawaii. Perry fails to get out of the machine and Geoffrey follows in a speed boat and Perry has to drop out of the machine at sea. Returning home he hides in a boat house. Vivian gets on to the scheme and keeps flirting. A policeman reports that a maniac who imagines himself the Hunchback of Notre Dame is at large. Perry, Geoffrey and a Count all disguise and the house is in an uproar. Vivian finally captures one who proves to be Perry and all ends happily.

"The Man Without a Conscience"

Warner Brothers Offer Willard Louis and Irene Rich in Story of Ruthless Search for Wealth

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

As indicated by the title, Warner Brothers' "The Man Without a Conscience" has for its leading character a type totally different from the usual screen hero. It is the story of a ruthless and unprincipled man who in his search for wealth did not scruple to ruin or use for his own advantage everyone with whom he came in contact.

Willard Louis has the personality for this role and gives a thoroughly satisfactory performance. Irene Rich, who is featured with him, portrays a high-bred sensitive woman who marries him to save her family from bankruptcy, and learning what a blackguard he is, turns against him. As usual, Miss Rich gives an excellent performance, but she has not any great opportunities here.

Obviously with a story of this kind sympathy for the leading character is lacking. This is in a measure offset by the force of the story in the earlier reels, showing his rise to wealth. These scenes have been interestingly and consistently developed. The latter reels, however, seem forced and artificial and there are several inconsistencies. It would hardly seem probable, for instance, that the hero's business would have suspended without his knowing it, and the scene where a woman invaded a man's apartment and enters into a prolonged argument (which conveniently is heard by the heroine over the phone), ending in a hand-to-hand encounter, seems very much overdrawn.

There are situations developed, especially one where the husband discovers his wife's interest in a former sweetheart, that are worked up and then not carried through to a conclusion. And, in seeking to bring about a happy ending, the story is given a twist that is only not convincing but weakens the drama and force of the earlier reels. After it has been definitely established that the wife does not love him, and the hero is sent to jail for his crimes, he is shown after his release coming back repentant with his wife patiently waiting for him. This is, of course, possible, but is not the logical outcome of the earlier reels.

There is a capable supporting cast and because of the forceful story and good acting it will, despite its weaknesses, probably prove average entertainment for a great many patrons.

Length, 7,182 feet.

Story

Ruthlessly determined to win success at all costs, Amos Mason comes to New York with his fiance, Ann. By unscrupulous dealings and use of Ann's savings he meets with considerable success and casts Ann aside. She gets a position as maid in the Graves household and Amos, now calling himself Richard, courts Shirley Graves, who really loves White, who is penniless. Mason causes the dismissal of Ann and through the influence of Mrs. Graves Shirley is persuaded to marry him. Mason starts a big real estate scheme and by the time his baby is born the plan is working well. He gets Warren, an architect, to build him a mansion and it develops that Warren's wife is Ann. Shirley learns the truth from Ann about their affair and turns to White, but becomes disgusted when she believes he is having another affair. Trouble develops with the water system in the new city and soon the whole scheme falls flat and the police are after Mason for swindling. He turns to Ann and begs her to take care of his boy and then gives himself up to the police. In prison he repents and Shirley's attitude toward him softens and when he is freed they become reconciled.

"The White Outlaw"

Horse and Dog Share Honors With Jack Hoxie in His Latest Blue Streak Western for Universal

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Universal starts off "The White Outlaw," its newest Blue Streak Western, by having the star, Jack Hoxie, appear in front of a curtain and introduce his white horse "Scout" and his dog "Bunk" as the real stars of the story.

"The White Outlaw" is thus definitely characterized as another addition to the list of productions in which animals have prominent roles. "Bunk" has not much to do except to add to the interest, but "Scout" really is one of the leading characters and in fact is unwittingly one of the "villains," for he is proved guilty of the cattle country's greatest crime, rustling.

"Scout" is shown to be a very well trained horse that can open doors, untie knots and nose down the poles that enclose a corral, and around these tricks is built the story in which his master is accused of cattle rustling and proves his innocence by establishing the horse as the real culprit.

The story has been given a good human interest angle by showing Hoxie as the victim of unkind fate and a villainous rival, and Scout is pictured as having broken loose and returned to his wild state where he uses his tricks to free the other horses belonging to the ranchers. There are a number of good shots showing this animal galloping over the plains and an effective scene where he goes for his old master to rescue a colt that has fallen into a hole and is being harassed by a bear.

Hoxie and his supporting cast all give good performances, and while the story stretches the credulity it provides pleasing entertainment and should prove a satisfactory program picture, for in addition to its appeal of the horse and dog it contains situations and lines of action that western fans like.

Cast

Jack Lupton.....Jack Hoxie
Mary Gale.....Marceline Day
Malcolm Gale.....William Welsh
James Hill.....Duke Lee
Negro Cook.....Floyd Shackelford
Sheriff .....Charles Brinley

Story by Isadore Bernstein.
Directed by Cliff Smith.
Length, 4,830 feet.

Story

Jack, a successful rancher, owns Scout, a highly intelligent horse that can do tricks and untie knots. A cowboy abuses him and he runs away into the open country. Jack meets with reverses and with his dog Bunk rents a small shack, but Hill, a foreman, ousts him in jealousy as both are in love with Mary Gale. Horses disappear and Hill accuses Jack of being a rustler. Jack says that his horse Scout is the one that opens the barns and corrals and the negro cook backs them up. Jack is given a chance to capture Scout and does so and informs the ranchers where the other horses are. Hill determines to turn rustler and drive the herd over the border. The cook rides for the sheriff and Mary goes to warn Jack but is caught in the horse stampede and saved by Jack. Hill and his gang are captured and Jack, vindicated, wins Mary's hand.

"Faint Perfume"

Seena Owen Heads Cast in B. P. Schulberg Production Based on Romantic Novel by Zona Gale

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

A novel of the same title by Zona Gale furnishes the basis for "Faint Perfume" the newest Gasnier production which is being distributed by B. P. Schulberg, with a cast that includes Seena Owen, William Powell and Mary Alden.

This reviewer is not familiar with the novel but the title conveys the impression of a sentimental romance and while this angle is brought out to a certain extent and the title justified by the fact that the heroine is shown as retaining for years a small sprig from the wedding bouquet and keeping secret her romantic adoration of the husband, this point has been subordinated to the conflict between the husband and the selfish wife over the custody of their little boy. Possibly the story was given this direction because of the prominence of Seena Owen who plays the wife as Alyce Mills who portrays the romantic heroine is considerably less known.

The fact that there is no real concentration of interest along a definite line weakens the hold of the story, as the spectator is at a loss as to just what the director is trying to develop. Much footage is given in the early reels to an endeavor to establish the selfish bickering characteristics of the relatives with whom the heroine lives and to contrast her character and unhappiness in this environment, but there are a number of scenes where she appears at ease and on thoroughly good terms with the family. Too little footage has been given to the development of the romance which is almost entirely taken care of in one sub-title.

The action has been given a melodramatic twist with the insertion of three different thrill situations in which the little boy comes near meeting death; they are of the kind that tend to make the spectator gasp, but so far as the plot is concerned the repetition and the fact that in each instance they cause the mother to turn against the boy and twice to give him up, causes them to lose effectiveness. The continuity of the story lacks smoothness and some of the comedy effects, particularly the grandfather's costume are much overdrawn.

Seena Owen gives a good performance as the selfish unnatural mother and Alyce Mills is attractive as the heroine but does not succeed in establishing a very warm sympathy. William Powell hardly seems to be the type for the hero and while Mary Alden is good as the wife's mother she has been given few opportunities.

Those who expect to have their emotions stirred by a sentimental, heart-throbbing romance we fear are doomed to disappointment and coupled with the lack of definiteness in the story or strong sympathy for any of the characters, this picture will probably be classed as a mediocre program attraction.

Based on novel by Zona Gale
Adapted by John Goodrich
Directed by Gasnier
Length, 6,228 feet.

Story

Prolonged illness left Leda Perrin, a sensitive cultured girl dependent upon her relatives, the bickering, fighting, narrow-minded Crumb family. Six years before, Richmiel, the eldest girl, had married Barnaby Power and Leda had during this time retained a sprig of the wedding bouquet and nursed a secret love for Barnaby. Richmiel returned home with her little son following a divorce from Barnaby, who followed in an effort to get the boy. He finally succeeded and during his stay fell in love with Leda. They arranged to meet in New York. Richmiel, suspicious, followed and declined to give up the boy to another woman. Leda decided to sacrifice her own happniess, but Richmiel took the boy. Barnaby followed her and found her with a lover and demanded the child, saying he would not give him up to another man. The boy, Oliver, always getting into scrapes, is brought back from his latest escapade which almost resulted in his death in an elevator shaft and Richmiel agreed to give him up. Barnaby takes the boy to Leda and they prepare to go away on their honeymoon.

"Steele of the Royal Mounted"

David Smith Makes a Fine Vitagraph Production of James Oliver Curwood's Exciting Story

Reviewed by Epes W. Sargent

When it comes to making a better class of western picture which does not depend upon long hard rides and trick snooting, we know of no director who can achieve more certain results than David Smith, and with a story by James Oliver Curwood to work with he has done exceptionally well.

In the opening scene the story falters a little because the "mystery" of Isobel Becker is too heavily stressed. Those unfamiliar with the story are all set for some deep mystery when the director switches and then slips into the real story. Some of these mystery leaders could be suppressed with excellent results. But once the story swings into action (and that is very quickly) he offers a nicely timed story of adventure and romance, straightly told in a direct sequence and both well directed and well played.

Bert Lytell is not wholly in the picture as Steele, but he handles himself well and gets the sympathy, Stuart Holmes, as the villainous gambler and heart-wrecker is at his best and Charlotte Merriam is appealing as the heroine, though a bit overanxious. Mabel Julienne Scott is capital in a fragmentary role and a half breed is so well played that he should get program credit. Most of the action is played outdoors in convincing locations and the charm of the scenes adds to the value of the story. The picture possesses a very wide appeal.

Cast

Philip Steele.....Bert Lytell

Length, 5,700 feet.

Story

With the idea of arousing the jealousy of Philip Steele, whose interest she has aroused, Isobel Becker, visiting a California resort, persuades her father to permit himself to be introduced as her husband. The scheme does not work for Steele, bitterly disappointed, seeks forgetfulness in the Canadian wilds and is attracted to the service of the Mounted police. Isobel follows him with her father, who is interested in the fur business in northern Canada. Steele wins promotion and is sent on the trail of Bucky Nome, who has broken jail and escaped in the uniform of a mounted policeman. Bucky and his companions wreck a treasure train and capture Isobel, but she is rescued by Steele, who resigns from the force to resume his place in the social world.

EXHIBITORS' NEWS AND VIEWS

EDITED BY SUMNER SMITH

Farley Adds to Theatre Holdings; Buys Out Shirley and Rafferty

Entering into the motion picture theatre field only five years ago, W. W. Farley, of Albany, N. Y., former State Excise Commissioner, through the acquisition the past week of William Shirley's interest as well as that of William Rafferty in Farash Theatres, Inc., of Schenectady, comes to the front as one of the largest and most important individual theatre owners in central New York. Today Mr. Farley, as president of the Terrace Amusement Company, of Yonkers, owns the Strand, Hamilton and Warburton Theatres in that city, with a total seating capacity of 3,600, while his holdings in Schenectady include the State, seating 1,900; the Albany and the Strand, each seating about 1,100, and the Barcli of about the same size, and which has been closed for several months but which will be reopened by Mr. Farley in the early fall.

In addition to these theatres Mr. Farley also owns, through a recent deal, the Community and the Smalley Theatres in Catskill, the Community having a seating capacity of about 1,200 and the Smalley house about 900.

It is said that in buying out the Shirley and Rafferty interests in the Schenectady company, Mr. Farley paid a price close to $300,000. Mr. Shirley, it is understood, will remain in Schenectady for the time being, but will not be associated with any entertainment enterprise. Mr. Shirley came to Schenectady seven years ago from New York City and managed what was then the Palace Theatre, owned at the time by Max Spiegel, and which was later purchased by Mr. Shirley and Mr. Rafferty, whose home is in Syracuse, and after being remodeled, was renamed the Strand.

With Mr. Farley's introduction to Schenectady motion picture circles, following the financial difficulties of Mr. Spiegel, at the State Theatre, a company known as Farash Theatres, Inc., was formed with Mr. Farley as the president and treasurer; Mr. Rafferty, as secretary, owning 25 per cent. of the stock, and Mr. Shirley as general manager, with a like amount. The company combined the State, Strand and Albany Theatres and later secured the Barcli which was closed with the idea of diverting more business to the other three houses, which are located within a few blocks of each other.

Within the next eighteen months, Proctor's lease of the house now being occupied in the Wedgeway building will expire, and this will give Mr. Farley another theatre of 1,400 seats, Proctor's meanwhile being engaged in the construction of a half million dollar theatre a short distance away.

James Roach, of Schenectady, will manage the Farley holdings in Schenectady, temporarily at least. Later on it is expected that there will be a general manager named who will do the booking and who will have charge of the circuit.

W. W. FARLEY

Louis Buettner, of Cohoes, chairman of the Albany Zone, and one of the veteran exhibitors in this part of the state, is somewhat of a philosopher. In other words, Mr. Buettner believes that it is better to close one's theatre during a portion of the summer, fixing it up a bit and at the same time cutting down on the overhead, and then open with a smash in the early fall, when patrons, deprived of pictures for five or six weeks, take to them like a hungry trout nabs a fly. There are a whole lot of exhibitors, of course, who do not agree with Mr. Buettner's theory. Talk with him and he can produce pad and pencil and likewise figures that are convincing. Mr. Buettner will close his house in Cohoes the last of this month for six weeks, during which he will make certain alterations and repairs, paving the way to what he terms a bigger and better season.

It looks as though Whitehall would have a new theatre in the near future. Frank L. Gregory is behind the project, and plans to erect the house on the site of the old Hall Theatre which burned a number of years ago. The new theatre will have a seating capacity of about 2,000 and work will probably get under way about September 1.

Having added more seats and improved the front of the house, William D. Tweedy, who recently took over the Star in Mechanicville, is now sitting back and waiting for cooler weather and more business. Mr. Tweedy as a daily change, charges a 25-cent admission and is giving a bang-up good show, even though up until a few weeks ago, the closest he had ever come to being an exhibitor was when he mailed a coal bill to the local motion picture theatre.

Jake Golden has an idea. In fact, Mr. Golden has many ideas, but the latest calls for ushers at the Griswold in Troy distributing ice water to the patrons at frequent intervals. Perhaps this is done in some of the larger cities, but it's a new one to this section. Mr. Golden continues to reside in Albany, motoring over to Troy each morning.

How "Smoke Screen" from St. Louis Cigars Hid All Davis' Troubles

Theodore P. Davis, formerly an exhibitor of the St. Louis territory, recently purchased the Liberty Theatre, Parsons, Kan. He was unacquainted with the fact that prior to obtaining service in the Kansas City territory the sale of his former theatre and purchase of the Parsons would have to be investigated by a theatre board which proves all sales and purchases in the territory. He was "up against it." Then along came "Doc" Cook, business manager of the M. P. T. O. Kansas-Missouri, who was on a tour. After a couple of cigars had been smoked up "Doc" had explained away all Mr. Davis' troubles and Mr. Cook departed with a check from Mr. Davis for a membership in the M. P. T. O. K-M.

Bruce Fowler of Chicago, former manager of the McVickers Theatre, has arrived in Kansas City to manage the Newman and Royal theatres for Paramount, the houses being recently purchased from Frank L. Newman. Mr. Fowler will be in full charge of the theatres after this week, it is understood. Mr. Newman said Tuesday he was uncertain as to what date he would leave for Los Angeles, where he will manage three theatres there for Paramount.

Edmund Goulding, signed by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer to direct a series of pictures for the coming year, has started with "Sun Up."

The Garden Theatre, downtown house of Kansas City, which has been closed, will open Sunday, the policy being a first run feature, a comedy and stock musical comedy with 50 cents top on Sunday and 40 cents on week. This is the second Kansas City theatre within the last two weeks to adopt the motion picture-musical comedy combination for the summer, the other house having been the Globe. J. C. Randolph will manage the theatre.

F. C. Grubel and E. J. Grubel, owners of the Electric Theatre, first run house of Kansas City, Kan., now are the largest holders of Minnesota avenue frontage property—the principle street of Kansas City, Kan., in town. The holdings of the two brothers, who last week purchased a site to be reserved for a theatre, now aggregates 305 feet and is valued at more than $750,000.

The Marple and Best theatres of Wichita, Kan., have been taken over by C. E. Sutton, according to advices reaching Kansas City.

C. E. Graf, owner of the Photoplay Theatre, Havensville, Kan., was under the impression that he deserved a vacation, so last week he set forth to "see the country" for a month, confining his trip to the West Coast.

Los Angeles

The tremendous success of Sid Grauman with his Hollywood Egyptian theatre has started an epidemic in theatre construction in Hollywood. L. L. Bard will build a new house on North Vine Street to cost $175,000 and seat 1,800. When completed it will have four stores and twelve offices.

A new theatre to seat 3,000 persons will be built on Wilcox Boulevard by Joe Toplitzky. It will cover a site measuring 223 by 196 feet.

A new theatre building to cost in excess of $1,000,000 will be built on Sunset boulevard at Vine street by the Hollywood Holding Company. The owners of the property are Fred Keeler and W. F. Markham. John M. Cooper is the architect. The theatre will front on Sunset boulevard. The actual cost of the building will be $550,000.

The Liberty Theatre at Redlands will be entirely remodeled this summer, according to the statement of "Chet" Ball, its manager.

A large and complete cooling plant will be installed and the old projection room will be taken away to make room for the finest and most complete equipment that can be found.

The West Coast chain is building a new house to cost more than $100,000, at Vermont Avenue and Eighty-seventh Street. When completed it will seat approximately 1,400 persons.

Bill Benton keeps right on plugging in Mechanicville with the new house he is erecting, the foundation of which has been completed. The house will have about 1,200 seats and if Mr. Benton has his way, will be open before the holidays. Another house, which will be built for the Schine brothers in Mechanicville, will also get under way soon, plans now being in the hands of the contractors. This house will be fully as large as the Benton theatre, which is going pretty well for a place of about 8,000 population.

Papayanakos brothers, who recently took over the Star Theatre in Potsdam, have closed the house although it may be reopened next fall. Admission prices at the Rialto, owned and run by the Papayanakos, will remain unchanged, despite rumors to the contrary.

If ever an exhibitor enjoyed life, it is "Art" Richardson who is now running the Strand in Schroon Lake. Mr. Richardson spent the winter in Florida, coming northward with the swallows, and is now spending his summer at one of the beauty spots of the Adirondacks.

Several theatres are opening this month for the summer season. At Haines Falls, the Wawanda, as well as St. Mary's Hall, are now running. The movie theatre in Saranac Lake, run at the Inn, is also booking, while Camp Tioga at Lordville, opens July 14, with pictures. Jake Tremper has opened his Airdome at Rhinebeck. At Altoona, a new lighting system is being installed and the theatre there may be closed for a few days.

Harry Lazarus, former owner of the Pine Hills Theatre in Albany, and now the big gun among the exhibitors in Kingston, filed papers last week incorporating a company known as the Kingston Theatre Corporation, and which will erect a new house in that city at once. It looks as though the majority of stock as well as the direction of the company would remain strictly a Lazarus affair, for associated with Harry are D. M. and R. A. Lazarus.

Exhibitors in Utica, having just recovered from the hot wave, are now obliged to contend with daylight saving, for under the recent decision in that city, new time became effective last Monday. If it isn't one thing it's another, as Nate Robbins remarked the other day.

Meyer Freedman, of Schenectady, was in New York a part of last week, returning to the Electric City where he is quietly proceeding with a proposition that may result in another new theatre being erected within the next few months.

Ramon Novarro is "The Dope" in "A Lover's Oath," Astor Distributing Corporation's first picture, made by Ferdinand Pinney Earle.

Nebraska

The Royal Theatre at Sioux City, Ia., was visited by a second fire recently. It will take some weeks to repair the damage, it is said. The house is owned and operated by Morrie Smith.

E. H. Roepe bought the Pavilion Theatre at Beemer from M. Billing.

Joseph Smith has sold his Majestic Theatre at Fort Dodge, Ia., to A. H. Blank.

The Rainbow Theatre at Wilsonville, Neb., has been sold by E. D. Cuckler to O. L. Nickerson.

R. C. Metzger has bought the Princess Theatre at Sanborn, Ia., from W. P. Green.

A. S. Kief has sold the Lyric Theatre at Holbrook, Neb., to J. S. Carpenter.

G. A. Brink has sold the Kay Theatre at Marcus, Ia., to Albert and Kennith Livingston.

A. L. Stone, who operates the Star Theatre at Harvard, Neb., has opened a new theatre in that city, called the Pavilion Theatre.

The Majestic Theatre at Des Moines, Ia., has been closed for repairs and redecorating.

Detroit

Wisper & Guttenberg, proprietors of the Gratiot Theatre, have closed the house for six weeks in order to completely remodel it. Approximately $20,000 will be spent in the work and the owners claim it will be one of the finest neighborhood theatres in the city when it opens Sept. 1.

Special bulletins have been sent to exhibitors and exchange men by the Detroit Film Board of Trade advising them of details of the Michigan law relative to the signing of contracts. So many complications have resulted in recent months purely through ignorance of the law that these steps, it is hoped, will be instrumental in remedying the trouble.

The Butterfield offices here announce that the new theatre being constructed by the firm in Owosso, will be ready Jan. 1. It will seat 1,500 and will be devoted to pictures and vaudeville.

Summer prices are in effect at all the down town first-run theatres. These are 35 cents for matinees and 50 cents for evenings.

Edward C. Beatty, general manager of the Butterfield circuit, is spending a two weeks' vacation in New York and Atlantic City.

Manas Acquires Theatre Property; Will Take Over Other Houses

A deal has been closed at New Cumberland, W. Va., with S. Rabinovitz and his sons, Myers and Saul, of Weirton, and Thos. G. Hale, of New Cumberland, for the Manas theatre and post office building in this town. The Manas Amusement Company have been leasing the theatre for some time and now they are the owners of the building, which includes the postoffice, besides other business storerooms and offices. The Manas Amusement Company also operates theatres in Weirton, Holliday's Cove and Wellsburg. They also announce that they will shortly acquire at least two more theatres in nearby towns. Steve Manas is president of the company and William Anas is treasurer.

Exhibitors of West Virginia have been notified that on and after July 1, the Arbitration Board of the Film Board of Trade, will meet at Charleston, W. Va., for matters regarding exhibitors of that state.

George Forman has assumed operation of the Alpine theatre of Terra Alta, W. Virginia, for an indefinite time. With the exception of a few months spent in Florida the past winter, George has been connected with the Alpine theatre since its opening on December 8, 1923.

CREIGHTON HALE

This fine young actor will be remembered for his work in King Vidor's production, "Wine of Youth." He is cast in an important role in "Time, the Comedian," in which Mae Busch, Lew Cody, Gertrude Olmsted and Roy Stewart have leading roles. It is a Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer picture, directed by Robert Z. Leonard.

The Gould Amusement Company, of the Northside, Pittsburgh, is planning to build a new picture theatre in the West End.

Johnny Harris, Jr., of the Harris Amusement Company, is back in town, after a week's stay at Washington, D. C., where he attended his class reunion. Johnny graduated from the School of Law at Georgetown University.

A. Notopoulos, of the Olympic theatre, Altoona, is ready to break ground for a fine new house in Johnstown, and promises us full details within the near future.

Fred J. Herrington, secretary of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Western Pennsylvania, is taking five weeks to go out in the territory and say "hello" to every exhibitor in the territory.

The Victoria theatre at Altoona, was sold at auction the past week, and was purchased by George Karides and his partner, Mr. Lee, who were the only bidders.

The Hippodrome theatre on the Northside, Pittsburgh, has just installed an air-cooling system, known as the Arctic Nu-Air, the first outfit of its kind to be installed in Western Pennsylvania.

James Retter, formerly a film salesman, and for the past year operating the Capitol Theatre, California, is beginning to get the rewards of his hard labor for the past several months. "Jimmie" has had a tough battle, as the coal mines in his vicinity have been idle practically all of the time. But he kept up the high class of shows, constantly improved his house in various ways, and now has a steady stream of patronage that he can depend upon. He has just commenced the publication of a classy program, which contains much material similar to that found in fan magazines, and the townspeople enjoy it immensely, judging by the way they grab it up, every time a new issue makes its appearance.

Sign Long-Term Contract

Louis Lighton and Hope Loring, who handled the script of Mary Pickford's "Little Annie Rooney," have been signed by Harry Rapf, associate production executive at the Culver City studios, under a long term arrangement to write adaptations for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. Their first script will be a continuity of "Sally, Irene and Mary," the musical comedy stage success by Edward Dowling.

Rousseau and Rousseau to Build Another Big San Francisco House

Rousseau & Rousseau, owners of the Egyptian and Aztec Theatres, opened a short time ago on upper Market Street, San Francisco, are building another house of the same type adjoining the Granada Theatre, and are considering plans for still another in a neighborhood district. The theatre under construction will be larger than either of the two now in operation, with a seating capacity of 600, but will be operated under the same plan as the present theatres, with Max Graf in charge. It will be of distinctive architecture and will be known either as the Grecian or as the Pompeiian Theatre. First run pictures are shown in the Aztec and Egyptian Theatres, with the same picture shown in both houses at the same time, and this policy will be followed in the new house. Later the Aztec Theatre may be changed into a second run house. Curran D. Swint, formerly with the Casino and Wilkes theatres, is handling the publicity work for the new circuit.

J. Lufts, of Davis, Cal., was a recent visitor on San Francisco's film row and announced plans for reopening the Strand Theatre in that city at an early date.

The new theatre of Max Blumenfeld at San Mateo, Cal., will be ready for use about the middle of July.

Harry Seipel, manager of the Theatre Visalia, Visalia, Cal., who has been seriously ill for some time, is again about attending to his regular duties.

William Citron, manager of the Louis R. Greenfield interests at San Francisco, will leave shortly on a trip to New York, accompanied by Mrs. Citron and the head mechanic who has been perfecting an invention in which Mr. Greenfield is interested, in addition to his theatre holdings.

Joel C. Cohen, president of the consolidated Amusement Co., with large theatre interests on the Hawaiian Islands, and headquarters at San Francisco, plans to leave in July with Mrs. Cohen on a trip to Europe and will be away about six months, the vacation planned being the first in twenty-five years. A tour will be made through England, France and Germany and visits will be made on several film men formerly located at San Francisco and now holding important positions in Europe, including Ollie Traggardh, in charge of the branch of the Famous Players-Lasky Co. in Great Britain. The return may be made by way of the Suez Canal, completing a trip around the world.

George Oppenheimer, for several years interested in San Francisco moving picture theatres, plans to leave for Europe June 17.

Work is to be commenced at once on the construction of an airdome at Tulare, Cal., for the Tulare Theatre, of which Robert A. Hazel is manager. The airdome will be used during the summer months and about September 1 work will be started on a $140,000 theatre on the same site.

Antonio Moreno has the lead in "Mare Nostrum," which Rex Ingram is producing in Spain for Metro-Goldwyn release.

Cast of "Tower of Lies" Completed

Irving Thalberg, associate executive of the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios, announced the completion of the cast of "The Tower of Lies," a film adaptation by Agnes Christine Johnston of Selma Lagerlof's famous Swedish novel, "The Emperor of Portugallia," now in production at the Culver City studios under Victor Seastrom's direction.

Lon Chaney and Norma Shearer play the featured roles and are supported by a cast which includes: Claire McDowell, Ian Keith, William Haines, David Torrence, Anne Schaeffer, Leo White and Bodil Rosing.

Robert Frazer has the lead in the F. B. O. picture, "The Keeper of the Bees."

St. Louis

Harry Greenman, manager of the Loew's State Theatre, Eighth street and Washington avenue, St. Louis, Mo., staged a big parade on Saturday, June 13, to mark the grand opening of the monster cooling system just installed in the big downtown first-run palace.

Headed by a police escort, the procession, consisting of brilliant floats, decorated cars and trucks, formed at 11:45 a. m. on Locust boulevard at the Plaza. It went downtown via Locust and returned out Washington avenue to Vandeventer avenue, where it was disbanded.

Hovering above the parade was O. E. Scott, an aviator, dropping free tickets to the theatre. The Retailers' Association of St. Louis and the St. Louis Display Men's Association supported the parade.

The cooling system is among the finest and largest in the world. Its pumps have a capacity of 125,000 cubic feet of fresh air, cooled to a comfortable degree, without draft, into and out of the auditorium every minute. The machinery will decrease the temperature of the house from 95 degrees to 65 degrees in three seconds, it is claimed, and in addition will remove all impurities before the air is forced into the auditorium.

Skouras "A" continues the strong spot on the St. Louis Stock Exchange and during the past week reached a new high record of $39.50 per share. At the close of the week's sessions it was offered at $40.

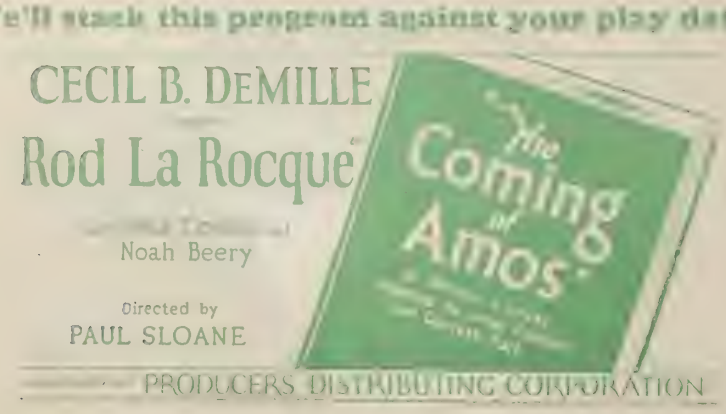
The work of clearing the site for the new Ambassador Theatre and office building at Seventh and Locust streets is proceeding rapidly. The contracts have already been let for the big building and all financial arrangements have been concluded. It is now only a question of how soon it will be ready.

Charles Harned has reopened the theatre at Bethany, Ill.

Oscar Turner has closed his Grand Theatre at Harrisburg, Ill., for the summer.

Both of the houses at Eldorado, Ill., have closed for the remainder of the season.

Jim Drake has taken over the airdome at Sarah street and West Pine boulevard. He also plans to reopen his airdome in Maplewood, Mo.



Buffalo

Mike Shea pulled Old Glory to the topmost beam of the steel structure of his new $2,000,000 Buffalo theatre this week, thus celebrating the completion of the framework of the mammoth structure that is to house one of the finest motion picture palaces in the world and which is expected to be ready for the public early in 1926. Mr. Shea, who is president of the Shea Amusement Company, which operates Shea's Hippodrome, North Park and Court Street theatres in Buffalo, is enthusiastic over his newest theatre, into which he has put years of thought and planning, years which have included trips to the leading theatres of the country and conferences with leaders in theatre operation, so that when this house is opened to the public it will represent the last word in palatial picture theatre construction. The house will have a seating capacity of 4,000.

Arthur L. Skinner, manager of the Victoria Theatre, one of Buffalo's big community theatres, has built a summer home at Point Abino, near Crystal Beach, on the Canadian shore, whence he hies himself every night so that he is all set about 4 a. m. each morning to seek the elusive perch in the waters of Lake Erie. It's a hard life these exhibitors lead, eh, what?

Eugene A. Pfeil, manager of the Circle Theatre, a west side neighborhood house in Buffalo, announces the closing of the house for the summer months.

Shea's Court Street Theatre has closed until early in August. In the interim the house will be thoroughly renovated and redecorated.

Charley Hayman of the Strand, Niagara Falls, has placed a border of icycles around the edge of the marquise roof. They are cut out of linoleum and realistically painted in imitation of dripping ice. The effect is a most cooling one and helps in getting folks inside even on the warmest nights. The new lighting system being used to illuminate the falls is attracting many visitors to the Cataract City these days.

Charley Hayman has changed the policy of the Cataract Theatre, Niagara Falls from vaudeville and pictures to a straight picture program with changes of program on Sundays and Thursdays. Admissions have been lowered to ten cents at matinees and 10 and 20 at night. Double feature bills are also being shown.

Sally O'Neill is "Mike" in the Marshall Neilan - Metro - Goldwyn - Mayer production. Sally jumped to stardom in her first picture.

Seattle

Robert Marsden of the Coos Bay Amusement Company is building a new Egyptian theatre in Marshfield, Oregon. It will be a splendid big house, seating 1,300, and is already under construction. Completed, the investment will be close to $150,000. B. F. Shearer, Inc., of Seattle has complete contracts for projection, lighting, furnishing, seating, decorating and equipping the house. Period furniture is being built for the foyer and lounges.

Ground was broken this week for the new house in the University district. It is expected to be ready for a fall opening.

Duncan G. Incerarity, manager of the New Everett Theatre, Everett, Wash., since its opening, has resigned the management of the house. He has been succeeded by Mr. Charles, former manager of the Columbia, Portland.

J. H. Storey, well known showman in this territory, long connected with the Jensen & Von Herberg organization, has resigned as manager of the new Columbia Theatre, Longview, Wash., and is now managing the Capitol, Seattle. George B. Purvis is managing the Columbia.

Mrs. Hannah Danz, mother of John, Joseph and Simon Danz, all owners of motion picture theatres in Seattle, died last week at the family residence in Seattle at the age of 63 years.

Jacob Pauly of the Kirkland Theatre, Kirkland, Wash., is reseating his house with 200 upholstered chairs and has replaced his projectors with two of later model.

The Lowell Theatre, recently opened in Eugene, Oreg., has been renamed the MacDonald, in tribute to its builder, A. H. MacDonald, who passed away just before the opening.

Ray Felkner is manager of the new Astoria Theatre, Astoria, Oregon, opened last month. He comes from Portland.

L. D. Kenworthy, who one time owned the Green Lake Theatre in Seattle and the Vaudette in Tacoma, has returned to Seattle after a five years' absence in Southern California, during which he was out of the motion picture business. Mr. Kenworthy felt a new "urge coming on" to get back into pictures and has returned to Seattle where he expects to hang out his shingle again as an exhibitor.

Frank Edwards has completely transformed the front of his Winter Garden Theatre, which under the hands of a crew of painters has become a handsome marble house with dark green marble pillars and light green marble walls. The transformation is excellent.

Alyce Mills, the B. P. Schulberg star, who will play one of the leading roles in "The Keeper of the Bees," the Gene Stratton-Porter novel now running serially in McCall's Magazine, which James Leo Meehan, Mrs. Porter's son-in-law, is transferring to the screen for F. B. O.

Cincinnati

Two of the theatres controlled by Gus Sun, at Springfield, Ohio, have closed for the summer, the Fairbanks being the only one of the Sun chain to remain open during the heated term. The Fairbanks plays road attractions during the regular season, but has gone into pictures until September. The Regent, which is one of the houses to close, will be extensively remodeled before the house again opens in the fall.

L. B. Wilson, who operates the Liberty Theatre, Covington, Ky., just across the Ohio River from Cincinnati, boasts of being the youngest member of the recently-elected board of directors of the M. P. T. O. A. His appearance at the Milwaukee convention marked his initial visit to any of the conventions held by the organization.

The Empress Theatre, Chillicothe, Ohio, has a new lobby, forty additional seats, and a new air cooling system, all of which was installed without closing the theatre, nor hampering the attendance.

M. A. Shea, of New York City, has purchased the Castro and Palace theatres from Mueller and Johnston, Ashtabula, Ohio. H. W. Johnston will manage the Palace, and Louis Mueller will look after the Castro for the new owner.

R. S. Wegner, Franklin, Ohio, has opened his new Miami Theatre at that place.

Many Theatres in the Chicago District Are Being Renovated

Andrew Karzas, who operates the Woodlawn and the Trianon in Chicago's south side, announces that he will build a huge ball room in the Wilson avenue district on the north side, and as he has another large moving picture theatre going up on Lincoln avenue on the northwest side he will have two large amusement projects under way this fall on the north shore.

The work on the Diversey Theatre at Clark and Diversey boulevard and the Uptown Theatre of the Balaban and Katz chain is rapidly going ahead and both houses will be ready for early fall opening.

The Douglass Theatre at Cottage Grove and 31st will be remodeled and about $30,000 spent on the house to make it up to date and will open next month with moving picture programs.

The Butterfield circuit has taken over the lease of the Powers Theatre at Grand Rapids, Mich., from Harry G. Sommers and they will have the house from August 1 for a period of five years.

Harry P. Munns reports that he closed a deal with S. J. Gregory for four theatres and real estate that have a value in excess of a half million dollars. The purchase was made for Albert Goldman, who paid $150,000 of the purchase price in cash to bind the deal. Mr. Goldman has since sold the properties to William Kleihege, who is quite an operator of theatres in the steel district south of the city.

The Hamlin Theatre at 3822 West Madison street, one of the best known picture houses on the far west side, has been sold by Arthur Hopkinson to Harry Lutz, who formerly was engaged in the theatre business on the south side. Mr. Hopkinson will retire from the business at the present time and it is planned to make some improvements in the house.

The Barrett Central Theatre Company has been organized here by Carl Barrett as president, Ernest Sturm vice-president and Joseph P. Gaul secretary-treasurer. The new company will operate the Central Theatre on East Van Buren street.

Chet Coyer has taken over the management of the Star Theatre at Harris and will make some improvements in the house.

Hal Kelly has bought the interest of his partner, C. N. Haight, in the Corning Theatre and will give the house his personal management in the future.

Logan MacCullom has bought the Strand Theatre at Edgewood from Rulon & Son and will fix the house up for exclusive picture programs.

Manager J. T. Eaves of the Rivoli Theatre at Elston and Keystone avenue says the sale of the theatre building last week by Harold Hill to the Schwartz Brothers will not affect the lease the Rivoli Theatre Corporation has on the house. They will continue to operate the theatre in conjunction with the Buckingham Theatre on North Clark street.

The many friends of George B. Bowman, for many years connected with the Empire Theatre at Quincy, Ill., will be sorry to hear of his sudden death from cerebral hemorrhage at a baseball game in that city. At the time of his death he was 72 years of age and is survived by his wife.

Chris Anderson has bought the interest of Albert Schneider in the Strand Theatre at Laverne and is now the sole owner of the house. He will make some improvements during the summer months.

The boys along the Row are giving Clarence Wagner, manager of the Bugg Theatre on the northwest side, the glad hand over his recent marriage to the assistant manager of the house, and now cigars are in order along the Row for putting it over so quietly.

Ralph Kettering of the Jones, Linick and Schaefer circuit is back on the job after four weeks' vacationing at Atlantic City and other eastern resorts.

Canada

Walter F. Davis, the brilliant manager of the Metropolitan Theatre, Winnipeg, Manitoba, is slated for an important post at Toronto with the Famous Players Canadian Corporation, according to announcement at Toronto. Mr. Davis is a native of Alabama but has been in charge of the Winnipeg "Met" for a year.

Manager Jack Arthur of the Hippodrome, Toronto, the leading theatre of the Famous Players chain, has decided on a special reduced range of prices for the summer season, while the big theatre has been made very inviting through the use of chintz and cretonne in place of heavy velvet drapes, etc. Afternoon price is 25 cents, while night prices range up to 75 cents. Mr. Arthur makes a special point of the fact that the feature picture starts each evening at 9:45 p. m., "enabling people to have dinner, enjoy daylight saving and still see a Hippodrome presentation."

Manager Pete Egan of the Strand Theatre, Calgary, Alberta, made a special play for the patronage of horsemen and sport lovers for "The Thundering Herd" by using space on the sport pages of the Calgary Herald during the local race week. The display consisted of a general invitation to attend the theatre after the horse races.

Announcement is made that N. L. Nathanson of Toronto, managing director of Famous Players Canadian Corporation, will spend three months in Great Britain and the Continent, combining business and pleasure. No reference has been made at Toronto regarding any conference with Lord Beaverbrook, who is financially interested in the chain of 90 Famous Players theatres in Canada.

Massachusetts

Walter Merkle, manager of Abraham Goodside's Capitol Theatre, in Springfield, has entered the Capitol as a broadcasting unit. Every Monday night from 7 to 8 p. m. the Capitol orchestra will broadcast its selections through WBZ. Now Mr. Goodside can sit in the office of his Strand Theatre in Portland, Me., and listen in to find out whether his orchestra is on the job or not, but as it is a wonderfully fine outfit he doesn't have to do anything of the sort.

Miss Frieda Scovell, a niece of Nathan Gordon, head of the Gordon Olympia theatres of New England, and connected with the Franklin Film Company of Boston, is to be a June bride at a ceremony to be performed late in this month, she will be married to Ben Jacobson, a prominent business man of Worcester. They will go on a wedding trip to the northwest.

Miss Dorothy H. Wagner, cashier at the Capitol Theatre in Springfield, became the bride of George A. Rollins of Bridgewater, in a ceremony performed in Springfield on Saturday, June 6.

Connecticut

The New Lenox Theatre in Hartford was opened Tuesday night, June 9, thereby providing the state's capital city with another attractive neighborhood film house. Jack Sanson, manager of the Lyric Theatre, also is in charge of the New Lenox. "The Talker" was the opening feature. An orchestra is a feature and is under the direction of F. A. Wilbur.

EDITED BY A. VAN BUREN POWELL

Associated Exhibitors

COMMON LAW. (8 reels). Star cast. Good picture with wonderful cast. Other attractions made it impossible to make anything but was satisfied as I gave the few who saw it something good. General class, town of 4,000. R. L. Nowell, Idlehour Theatre, Monroe, Georgia.

COMMON LAW. Star cast. Here is one of the best that I have run this year and last year also. With a wonderful cast and real acting. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Good appeal. Working class, city of 13,000. Admission 10-15. G. M. Bertling, Favorite Theatre (160 seats), Piqua, Ohio.

F. B. O.

BLOW YOUR OWN HORN. (6,315 feet). Star cast. Not as good as I expected but I bought it cheap and came out pretty well. Seemed to please most of them. All classes, town of 4,000. R. L. Nowell, Idlehour Theatre, Monroe, Georgia.

CHEAP KISSES. (6,538 feet). Star cast. Very good picture and enjoyed by all. Only objection to F. B. O. is their advertising, which is practically worthless. You can buy this right and make money. Tone okay. Special, no. All classes, town of 4,000. R. L. Nowell, Idlehour Theatre, Monroe, Georgia.

LIFE'S GREATEST GAME. (7,010 feet). Star, Johnny Walker. A wonderful picture. Went over big two days' run. Tone, good. Farming class, town of 800. Admission 15-25. A. B. McCullough, Community Theatre (250 seats), Neosho Falls, Kansas.

First National

ABRAHAM LINCOLN. (9,759 feet). Star cast. A fine picture, one that should be shown in every theatre. A picture that will never be forgotten. We did not make any money but anyway glad that we ran it. Tone good. Farming class, town of 800. Admission 15-25. A. B. McCullough, Community Theatre (250 seats), Neosho Falls, Kansas.

CHICKIE. (7,000 feet). Star cast. Played this too new to benefit by first-run reports; was surprised at its drawing power and while rather spicy, I had little or no complaints. Looks like a good box office shot in general. Mixed class, town of 4,000. Joe Hewitt, Strand Theatre, Robinson, Illinois.

Fox

CURLYTOP. (5,828 feet). Star, Shirley Mason. No good. About worst I have seen Mason in. She is a good star if they would give her a good story. Town of 3,400. Admission 10-25. A. E. Jarboe, Royal Theatre (500 seats), Cameron, Missouri.

DRAG HARLAN. Star, William Farnum. A real western that will send 'em out talking. It's the only good one in the whole series of Farnum re-issues, so be sure to play it along with the first ones. Sunday, no. Special, no. Appeal, seventy-five per cent. All classes city of 230,000. Admission 10-20. R. M. Kennedy, Royal Theatre (350 seats), Birmingham, Alabama.

LONE CHANCE. (4,231 feet). Star, John Gilbert. Good love drama that will please the majority. Tone, good. Sunday, no. Special, no. Appeal, seventy per cent. Farmers and laborers town of 343. Admission 15-30. J. M. Patterson, Little Gem Theatre (250 seats), Hunter, Arkansas.

Between Ourselves

A get-together place where we can talk things over

The dependable tips which have appeared in this department since the beginning of 1925 are listed by title and date of issue, in this week's Index to Reports.

These reports represent the unselfish effort of many generous-spirited exhibitors. Without their constant willingness to help others, there would be no Index—nothing to put in it!

In the names of many exhibitors who guide their picture choice by these reports, who depend on them because they have learned that the tips are sincere and honest, Straight From the Shoulder tenders to its good scout contributors a vote of hearty appreciation. VAN

Metro-Goldwyn

BANDOLERO. (7,000 feet). Star, Renee Adoree. My patrons hung around after the show to tell me this was one of the best pictures I had ever shown. Friend wife is a hard critic, but she also voted it class A. John McGill, Community Theatre (500 seats), Port Orchard, Washington.

BREAD. (6,726 feet). Star, Mae Busch. A fairly good picture. Nothing extra. Will please majority, but don't boost it. Tone, good. Sunday yes. Special, no. Appeal, seventy-five per cent. All classes town of 2,800. Admission 15-25. D. W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre (250 seats), Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

RAG MAN. (5,908 feet). Star, Jackie Coogan. One of Jackie's best. Tone, okay. Sunday, okay. Appeals to all. Town of 3,400. Admission 10-25. A. E. Jarboe, Royal Theatre (500 seats), Cameron, Missouri.

Paramount

HER LOVE STORY. (6,736 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. Another one of those stories of European nobility which the public does not want. Swanson carried it over, but it was not worth the price. Tone, none. Sunday, no. Special, yes. Appeal, sixty per cent. All classes town of 6,000. Admission 10-20-30. Frank H. Wotton, Park Theatre (600 seats), Lebanon, New Hampshire.

MADAME SANS GENE. (9,904 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. This is not the type picture for small towns, it deals way back in the 1700 days, and while you have a few who will appreciate this type of a play, yet the ones that you must depend on for every day, will not fall for it, it may go over in the big houses but the small town shows had better watch their step on this one. Had several to walk out and no compliments at all. Gloria has slipped with us. She will not draw any longer. The last three that we have showed did not please. A. Mitchell, Dixie Theatre, Russellville, Kentucky.

OPEN ALL NIGHT. (6,867 feet). Star cast. Worst I have ever played. Town of 3,400. Admission 10-25. A. E. Jarboe, Royal Theatre (500 seats), Cameron, Missouri.

Producers' Dist. Corp.

BEYOND THE BORDER. Star, Harry Carey. Good out door story. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Good program picture. Good appeal. Farmers and merchants town of 1,649. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

LIGHTNING RIDER. (6 reels). Star, Harry Carey. Comments on this one very good. Carey getting popular here. Buy this series and you will make money. General class town of 4,000. R. L. Nowell, Idlehour Theatre, Monroe, Georgia.

Universal

SPORTING YOUTH. (6,712 feet). Star, Reginald Denny. When I bought this picture I had in mind the fact that I had never seen other than favorable reports on this picture in "Straight From The Shoulder" Department. The picture warrants unqualified praise. It pleased one hundred per cent. Has everything desired to entertain. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Appeal, one hundred per cent. D. B. Rankin, Co-operative Theatre, Idana, Kansas.

Now is the time!

A Report on Griffith's Newest Production

Through the kindness of one of our dependable scouts, we are privileged to hand you a tip that will silence, somewhat, the cry that our tips are not up-to-date enough. Needn't say any more—just read it!

"Dear Van—

Just finished pre-view showing of D. W. Griffith's newest production of 'SALLY OF THE SAWDUST'; despite the terrific heat, we played to capacity, which alone is a great tribute to Mr. Griffith and his splendid production.

"The featured roles are played by Carol Dempster and W. C. Fields, the Ziegfeld Follies' comic.

"In other reports I have claimed Miss Dempster was a comer; in 'Sally of the Sawdust' I claim she has ARRIVED. Her portrayal of Sally will go down in screen history as one of the finest pieces of acting ever done upon the screen. In W. C. Fields, Mr. Griffith has brought to the screen a new star, who, in the role of MacGargle is a 'wow.' The juvenile lead is played by Alfred Lunt; other fine character bits were played by Glenn Anders, Effie Shannon and Erville Alderson.

"In this production, Mr. Griffith has placed some of the most delightful scenes ever shown upon the screen. The scenes get hold of the audience, and it cries and laughs just as Griffith has willed. When the girl is reunited with her grandmother one reaches for a handkerchief with the same rapidity that one did in the old days of 'East Lynne.' When Fields as MacGargle begins his idiociries, roars of laughter greet his antics, and when he walks off lonesomely at the end, you feel that a cheerful friend has gone out of your life.

"I predict 'SALLY OF THE SAWDUST' will be one of the coming season's outstanding hits."—Al Hamilton, Rialto Theatre, So. Norwalk, Connecticut.

Warner Bros.

DARK SWAN. (6,500 feet). Star, Marie Prevost. My patrons enjoyed this. Tone, all right. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good appeal. Mixed class town of 1,500. Admission 10-25. John McGill, Community Theatre (500 seats), Port Orchard, Washington.

NARROW STREET. Star cast. Good. Lots of good clean comedy. Town of 3,400. Admission 10-25. A. E. Jarboe, Royal Theatre (500 seats), Cameron, Missouri.

Vitagraph

BETWEEN FRIENDS. (6,900 feet). Star cast. Another subject I wish I had not played. Lost money and friends for my house when they put out a lemon. Why don't they junk it? Tone, none. Not suitable for Sunday. Special, no. No appeal. General class, town of 1,200. Admission 10-25. Sam Brooks, Liberty Theatre (400 seats), Hailey, Idaho.

CLEAN HEART. Star, Percy Marmont. Didn't draw well and I don't consider it much of a picture. Nothing to hold interest; very draggy and the story is exceedingly weak. Tone okay. Sunday, no. Special, no. Poor appeal. Family and transient class, city of 65,000. Admission 10-15. R. K. Covington, Bijou Theatre (500 seats), Fresno, California.

Straight From the Shoulder Index

Reports Published January to June 20

This Index gives the titles, arranged alphabetically under company headings, of pictures on which exhibitors have reported during the term specified. The dates following the titles refer to the issues in which these reports appeared. Independent productions are listed alphabetically, but not by companies. Owing to the impossibility of securing complete footage data the footage which was formerly given in these Indexes has been omitted. Published at the end of each three months, the Index is cumulative for every six-month period—viz., the next Index will be complete from January to June, inclusive.

Priscilla Dean Returns After Five Months' Tour of Big Cities

AFTER a five months' tour of the principal cities of the East and Middle West during which she appeared in person in connection with the showing of "A Cafe in Cairo" and "The Crimson Runner," Priscilla Dean has returned to the Hollywood Studios to resume her starring contract with Hunt Stromberg.

The star was given an enthusiastic reception at the depot by a host of motion picture celebrities, including Hunt Stromberg and Harry Carey, the latter having with him a band of 52 Araphoe Indians in full tribal regalia and his cowboys, all of whom were appearing in "The Bad Lands," Carey's current Stromberg feature for Producers Distributing Corporation.

Priscilla Dean's personal appearance tour was one of the most successful ever staged, and inasmuch as the star did a dramatic interlude from her picture instead of the usual "how-glad-I-am-to-be-here" talk, she proved that screen stars may be capable stage stars as well. Although her original itinerary consisted of but five weeks, the success of her appearance caused it to be expanded to five months. During the course of the tour the star made 182 personal appearances, addressed 16 women's clubs, dined with six governors and met 14 mayors.

Miss Dean will start immediately upon "The People Versus Nancy Preston," a New York crook story by John A. Morosco, author of 'The City of Silent Men." This will be the first of five features she will make under the Stromberg banner this year for Producers Distributing Corporation.

Goldbeck Writes for Pola Negri

The engagement of Willis Goldbeck, one of the industry's foremost scenario writers, to write the scenarios for the coming Pola Negri pictures, was announced yesterday by Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

"Mr. Goldbeck, who has just returned from a conference with Sir James M. Barrie on the scenario for 'A Kiss for Cinderella,' will write the scripts for all of Miss Negri's future pictures," said Mr. Lasky. "In assigning him to this work we are following out our policy of giving Miss Negri the strongest possible literary material for her pictures. Mr. Goldbeck is one of the most brilliant scenario writers in the business. He wrote the scripts for 'Scaramouche,' 'Peter Pan,' 'Forbidden Paradise,' 'Mare Nostrum' and other great successes. He is now conferring with Joseph Hergesheimer on the script of 'Flower of the Night,' the story which Mr. Hergesheimer wrote especially for Miss Negri. In a few days he will leave for the Coast with Paul Bern, who is to direct the production in which Mr. Goldbeck will have a supervisory interest."

Melford Signed for Series

Many rumors pertaining to the activities of Director George Melford during the coming year were quieted by an announcement from William Sistrom, production manager of Metropolitan Pictures, Inc., to the effect that Melford has signed a contract for a series of four pictures to be produced by Metropolitan and released through Producers Distributing Corporation.

"Play Ball" New Serial

Special Screening of Pathe Chapter Play for John J. McGraw and New York Sport Writers

A private screening of the first three chapters of "Play Ball," the new Patheserial, was given on last Saturday evening, June 6, at the Pathe home office, at which John J. McGraw, manager of the New York Giants and author of the story, and Mrs. McGraw, were the guests of honor. Sport writers from the New York dailies and some of Mr. McGraw's fellow-members from the Lamb's Club were also on hand for the occasion of the Giants' manager's debut as a screen author.

Mr. McGraw was enthusiastic over the screen version of his story as revealed in the three initial chapters and expressed himself as extremely satisfied with the production.

The private screening was the first of a series of similar showings to be held in different key-centers of the East and Middle West. Prints for these showings went forward to Chicago in the custody of Tom North on Sunday, June 7, when Mr. North joined Mr. McGraw and Frankie Frisch on their trip to rejoin the Giants.

It is Mr. North's plan to conduct special showings in the different cities to be visited by the Giants during the next two weeks. "Play Ball" has been definitely scheduled for release on July 19.

"Two Can Play" in Production

"Two Can Play," an adaptation of a Saturday Evening Post story, written by Gerald Mygatt, has been placed in production on the West coast and is listed for the second group of Associated Exhibitors' features for the next season. Clara Bow and Allan Forrest have been engaged for the two leading roles.

"Smooth As Satin" Is Booked by Capitol Theatre for Week June 21

THE enthusiastic reception tendered "Drusilla With a Million" and "Parisian Nights," two F. B. O. Gold Bond productions at the Capitol Theatre, New York, prompted S. L. Rothafel ("Roxy") to book another F. B. O. production. "Smooth As Satin," an underworld melodrama starring Evelyn Brent, based on the famous play "The Chatterbox" by Bayard Veiller, author of the well known stage successes, "The Thirteenth Chair," and "Within the Law," will go into the Capitol on Sunday, June 21, for a week's run.

The booking of "Smooth As Satin" by the Capitol Theatre sets a record for the independents. This is the first time in several years that three independent productions, coming from the same distributing company, play the Capitol Theatre in one month.

Adapted from the stage play "The Chatterbox," by Bayard Veiller, "Smooth As Satin" concerns itself with a girl who has always been a thief, but who goes straight after her marriage to another notorious safe cracker, and her husband, newly rescued from a long prison term, tread the straight and narrow with her. Then both of them are the victims of other crooks after they have determined to lead an honest life. Evelyn Brent, who is fast making herself internationally famous in crook roles, has the star part in the production, directed by Ralph Ince and transferred to screen him from Fred Kennedy Myton. Miss Brent is supported by a notable group of thespians including Bruce Gordon, Fred Kelsey, Fred Esmelton, Mabel Van Buren and John Gough. Ralph Iice, who directed several of the Brent productions, has made the most of the excellent material and Miss Brent's dramatic talents.

Release Dates Set on First 3 Schulbergs for New Season

J. G. BACHMANN, general manager of distribution for B. P. Schulberg Productions, has determined the release dates for the first three releases on the company's schedule of eighteen pictures for 1925-1926. Schulberg Productions will begin its new season of activities with the release on August 1 of "Parisian Love," a Gasnier production now in the making on the west coast. This story of the Parisian underworld is from the novel by F. Oakley Crawford and features an all-star cast.

Following this will come the second release on August 20 which will consist of Gertie D. Wentworth-James sensational book, "The Girl Who Wouldn't Work," one of the most discussed novels published in England during the last decade. Marcel D. Sano, a young Roumanian announced by Schulberg as an important director find, already has this production well in hand.

On September fifth the first showings of Fanny Heaslip Lea's novel, "With This Ring," directed by Fred C. Windemere, will be held. The story is mounting to high sales as a Dodd, Meade publication, having achieved great popularity as a serial last winter in the Saturday Evening Post.

Adolphe Menjou to Star in "The King"

Adolph Menjou, who returned from Europe Saturday, left last night for Hollywood, where he will begin work immediately in the Paramount picture, "The King."

"In 'The King,' said Jesse L. Lasky, "we have a story which gives Mr. Menjou the greatest role of his career and we are looking forward to the production being one of the most successful of the Greater Forty.

"'The King,' is an adaptation of Leo Ditrichstein's famous play of the same name. When it reaches the screen the picture will be called 'The King on Main Street,' a title which is more descriptive of the story as it has been written for the screen.

"I should like to take this opportunity to clear up a number of conflicting rumors which have recently appeared in the newspapers regarding Mr. Menjou's relations with this company. Mr. Menjou is under contract to the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation; he is perfectly happy in this contract and will continue to work for us as he has in the past. We have purchased several important stories for him and he has expressed complete satisfaction with what we are doing for him."

Betty Bronson Work in Latest Picture Praised by N. Y. Critics

BETTY BRONSON following "Peter Pan" with "Are Parents People?" occupied most of the reviewers attention when the latter production opened at the Rivoli Theatre, New York, on Sunday. This was to be expected, because there was great curiosity on the part of the film critics to see if Betty Bronson could forget her elfin gestures which she perfected for the Barrie story, and assume a vivacious school girl role as required in the story, "Are Parent People?". According to the reviewers Betty has established herself as a great young actress with this current picture.

"Betty Bronson is going to be the world's favorite motion picture actress if she doesn't stop being so adorable on the screen," said Edward D. Pearson," reviewing for the Bulletin. "This young person who sprung into popularity with 'Peter Pan' keeps on winning more and more admirers with every picture." Further on this reviewer comments that "'Are Parents People?' is an ideal summer film."

The Post critic said, "'Are Parents People?' at the Rivoli this week, is more than usually entertaining light comedy from the story by Alice Duer Miller."

The Herald-Tribune reviewer said, "Admirers of Betty Bronson, the 'Peter Pan' of the films who had any fears that the youthful actress might be doomed to be an inane picture-star can now rest easy. For in 'Are Parents People?' her second photo-play which is playing at the Rivoli Theatre this week, she reveals once more all of the vivid and distinctive charm of her first performance.

Pathe Offers Exciting Baseball Serial Written by Manager John J. McGraw of New York "Giants."

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Only a few months ago Pathe released a police serial written by Commissioner Enright of New York and now that organization is following it with a baseball serial based on a story by John J. McGraw, manager of New York's National League team "The Giants."

Allene Ray and Walter Miller are the featured players with the latter cast as a rookie member of the team. The outline follows the usual line of serial construction and the first few episodes which were shown for review introduce the Giants' training grounds at Sarasota, Florida, with McGraw, Hughie Jennings and a number of the real players on the team taking part in the action. Both McGraw and Jennings are shown handling Miller and another rookie as if they were real players.

According to the plot, Miller is the disowned son of a senator who is to investigate the activities of Sutton a millionaire who is the father of the heroine portrayed by Allene Ray. There is a typical serial villain in the person of a foreign count portrayed by Harry Semels, who does not hesitate to use crooked methods, including kidnapping of the girl, to gain his point with her father. A rather unusual role is that of a small town girl, winner of a beauty contest, who he gets in his power and uses as a pawn.

The three leading players need no introduction to serial fans and the other roles are capably handled. The atmosphere of the baseball field and a carnival in Florida furnish pleasing backgrounds for the early episodes, and it has been capably directed by Spencer Bennett.

"Play Ball" should surely appeal to the baseball fans and should satisfy the regular serial patrons as well, for there is plenty of action and melodrama and the usual stunts and carried over suspense. The stunt at the end of the first episode is especially well handled and provides a good punch. Allene is shown being dragged through the water by a shark she has caught and Miller rescues her by diving and cutting the line. There are some good under-water shots. The second episode shows Miller rescuing Allene from thugs who seek to kidnap her and immediately after that stopping runaway horses attached to a blazing float, while in the third the villain almost succeeds in making him miss his train which he catches in an auto after a thrilling ride.

"Play Ball" is well up to the high Pathe serial standard.

"Nicely Rewarded"

(Universal—Comedy—One Reel)

Fat and good-natured Charles Puffy, the new Universal star, has a rough and tumble time of it in this comedy. Starting out all dressed up, he gets picked up by the bumper of a car used in chasing bank robbers and finds himself in the center of a storm of bullets. Accidentally he gets hold of the swag and is hailed as a hero and made a detective while his girl thinks he has been arrested. Considerable ingenuity has been shown in the means used by Puffy in rounding up the gang of criminals, especially in a scene where he rigs a set-up behind a fence that looks like cops with drawn clubs. It is a fast-moving comedy with a good amount of laughs and should prove amusing to the average patron.—C. S. S.

"A Rough Party"

(Universal—Comedy—Two Reels)

Hilliard Karr and Al Alt are the featured players in this Century comedy distributed through Universal. They are cast as two flirtatious young fellows who start out in a dilapidated flivver that is seized by the garbage man as a tin can. In a ten-cent store they get it made over like new and meet a girl who invites them to a party where all dress like kids. It is a slap-stick offering with a fair amount of humor of the familiar type. The "flivver' situation in the first reel is the most amusing. The director seemed somewhat at a loss for material for the stunts in the kid party and as a result this section is inclined to drag. As a whole, this picture is hardly up to the Century average but will probably prove moderately entertaining to slapstick fans.—C. S. S.

"Oh Bridget!"

(Educational—Comedy—Two Reels)

Walter Hiers is in one of his most screamingly funny roles in "Oh Bridget!" an Educational two-reel comedy. This funster should convulse even the most serious audience. The fat Walter dons the roomy gown of a cook in order to gain access to the home of his sweetheart which is tyrannized by a two-fisted father. The cop on the beat, the ice man and the majority of the male end of the tradespeople go into raptures over this bulky impersonation. The ice man is particularly funny. In the passionate manner said to be characteristic of his warn "old country" he pecks the "female" on both of "her" fat cheeks.

The policeman insists that "she" sit on his lap with the result that the chair breaks and Walter has no time to spend with his girl. As the first specimen of the new cook's culinary ability a roasted duck is presented. Little ducklings breaking from the eggs which had been "ruthlessly" used as stuffing afford much merriment. They race about the table, using the soup plates for their aquatic sports. The comedy terminates in a maelstrom of all that is slapstick with Walter making known his identity in time to be married by a justice of the peace who had been drafted earlier into service by the ice man.—T. W.

"The Pronto Kid"

(Universal—Western—Two Reels)

This Universal-Mustang two-reel western stars Edmund Cobb in the role of the owner of a mine who is believed by the girl to be the man who robbed the sluice boxes. A pleasing little romance is introduced with amusing comedy and human interest touches, where the girl falls in love with him and makes him promise to reform. Eventually the real robber is captured and the girl is overjoyed to find out that her lover is innocent. While there is not quite as much "western" hard riding and fighting as usual, the picture should prove entertaining for the average spectator.—C. S. S.

"Official Officers"

(Pathe—Comedy—Two Reels)

The "Our Gang" youngsters essay the roles of junior cops in Hal Roach's "Official Officers." The theme is one that will make kid fans go wild with glee and at the same time highly amuse the average adult patronage. The gang is deputized by a new officer on a tough beat in the slum section of a city. As junior officers their antics furnish the peak of hilarity. The little fat boy, as an illustration, has that part of the big cop's patrol which includes a fruit stand. He proves himself to be a gormand for bannanas. Tiny Farina, parading through the black belt of the town, witnesses many skilled hands manipulate the razor. The kids have a home-made patrol wagon drawn by a

Rebate Checks on Bulk Ticket Purchase Is Helpful Stunt for These Warm Days

EVERY manager knows that the man with a block of tickets will be a more frequent patron of a theatre than the man who has to dig the price at each visit. A ticket does not seem like money, though it represents a real cash value, and he will spend tickets more freely than he will dimes. The trouble is to get him to make the original purchase.

A. E. Jarboe, of the Royal Theatre, Cameron, Mo., has solved this problem in a novel manner and has been good enough to send along the idea for the benefit of his brother managers. Just how much of a benefit it will be depends wholly upon yourself.

In brief Mr. Jarboe's idea is merely the issuance of "Treasurer's Checks" on the box office, good for fifty cents toward the purchase of three dollars worth of seats. In other words the purchaser pays $2.50 in cash and the check for three dollars worth of admissions.

No Cut Price

This really is nothing more than the usual sale of a three dollar book for $2.50, but there is better psychology back of the idea.

You are not told that you can get a reduction on the book. You are given fifty cents toward its purchase. It's just a piece of paper, worth nothing for any other purpose, but it is a potential fifty cent piece if you add $2.50, and the temptation to give it value is strong. The price reduction may not interest you, but you will be interested in making the check good.

Probably Mr. Jarboe more than doubled his sales. He does not give figures, but he does remark that it's a great stunt for hot weather.

Backs the Program

As Mr. Jarboe used it, the "check" is printed on the back of his weekly program, which is merely a strip of white paper 2 3/4 by 7 1/4. The typography closely approaches the usual check form, and the heading runs: "Treasurer's Check," in fourteen point caps with an eight point "Must be presented within thirty days from date."

The check is dated and is made out to "Holder" with: "This check will be cashed at the Royal Theatre, Cameron, Mo., for face value upon purchase of $2.50 in tickets."

This is a bit vague. It might mean that $2 in cash is required or that it is good for fifty cents when a purchase of $2.50 is made. It would be better to change the text to read: "This check will be accepted at this face value toward the purchase of tickets to the value of $3.00."

It Will Get Them

The check may be used in a variety of ways in addition to its original use as a program. It may be handed purchasers of tickets, or it may be given out through merchants; who then can advertise they are giving away fifty cents with each dollar purchase. They can be given with tickets purchased for some advanced price attraction, to take off the sting of the higher price, or mailed to a selected list.

The best scheme is that which will bring the greatest number of these checks into the public's hands, always provided that the distribution is such that the check is not cheapened by being made too promiscuous. Offer it as something worth while and it will be more highly valued.

Hurl's Can Matinee

Joe B. Hurl, of the Opera House, Milford, Mass., took a special two threes to announce a tin can matinee as his contribution to clean-up week. He ran a special show on Saturday morning, admission to which was by five tin cans.

The newspaper gave him a three and a half inch box to help the idea along, and the box alone was worth the cost of the special show. It's an ancient and honorable but still very useful stunt.

Prologued Sally

Frank Holland, of the Victory theatre, Evansville, Ind., used a newsboy prologue for "Sally," with a bunch of singing kids and a girl dressed to represent Colleen Moore. They worked against a drop showing a fence, and Holland thoughtfully pasted the fence for "Quo Vadis," which he had underlined.

Tod Browning, of the Olympia theatre, New Haven, sends in what seems to be the first issue of a house program; an eight pager with some interesting reading and enough outside advertising to cover the cost.

Regun Novelty is Generally Useful

Figuring out a novelty throwaway for Wings of Youth, the Regun Theatre, New York City, has hit upon an idea that will work for a hundred or more titles. Because of color complications we cannot reproduce the idea in cut form, but it does not depend upon typographical display particularly, though attractive printing will do much to help along.

The originals are printed on "safety" paper, such as is used for checks and railroad tickets. Across the top is the copy: " your husband or lover faithful? This innocent piece of specially treated paper will tell you."

The middle third of the space is taken for a display of the house name, title, star and dates and below this comes the directions which read: "Paste this paper securely on your mirror in room with temperature of 68 degrees. After five days if the paper curls your husband or lover is unfaithful. If it remains flat you have only to worry about getting a seat in the Regun Theatre to see the sensational screen success, Wings of Youth."

This Will Stick Around

That may sound idiotic to you, but get some out and try them on the women, and you'll find that they are interested if you are not, and the pasted mirror will be a constant reminder of the title, so get them out a week in advance. Be sure to use some paper that will live up to the suggestion of special treatment. If you can't afford safety paper, spray the white sheets with a solution of some strong essential oil. Your druggist can fix you up, but don't use perfume, get something that smells like a chemical.

A PRACTICAL TAXI HOOK UP THAT GIVES YOU BANNERS

This was started in Seattle, where Robert Bender, of the Columbia Theatre, arranged to give a rebate on all incoming or outgoing taxi business during the run of The Last Laugh. It brought extra trade, not all of which was carriage business

In a Nutshell

One hot afternoon recently the two cockatoos which are part of the interior decorations of Loew's State Theatre, New York, were brought out on the sidewalk to get a breath of what little air there was. One stand was placed either side of the lobby.

One bird was absolutely unnoticed. The other bird was surrounded by a crowd varying from thirty to fifty persons. They were absolutely alike, as far as birds go, BUT one bird was sitting stolidly in its perch; the other was climbing around, doing stunts. It was ballyhooing —and it got the crowd.

That's the epitome of showmanship. If you want to get the crowd, do something.

Tied Dress Design to The Dressmaker

E. B. Roberts, of the Majestic Theatre, Austin, Texas, worked out a good one for The Dressmaker of Paris. With the co-operation of the Statesman and a local firm he offered one of the firm's $29.50 dresses for the best design for a gown, preferably for evening wear. Ten pairs of tickets to the play were offered for the next best designs, with twenty single tickets following.

To help along, the newspaper printed daily an outline of a woman's head, shoulders and arms and at a suitable distance below a pair of legs, so that only the costume needed to be filled in. This was offered merely for a convenience.

As many designs could be submitted as the contestants desired, and to help along the newspaper and store collaborated on a book of late designs, made up of mat service and store cuts, the books being given out in the store's dress department.

More than 600 designs were received, and interest was widespread, but the store got more than its fair share, for the only concession was the sale of the dress at cost instead of sale price. It could well have afforded to donate the dress.

Production Hints from Edward L. Hyman

Managing Director, Mark-Strand Theatre, Brooklyn

THE record-breaking hot spell saw this theatre prepared with a light program which was bound to satisfy all who could brave the torrid weather. With Weber and Fields in "Friendly Enemies" as the feature picture, and a shorter comedy from Educational called "Dragon Alley," the film part of the program was composed almost entirely of laughs. The Topical Review balanced the cinema portion of the bill up very nicely. There were four musical presentations, requiring altogether 31 minutes. The films took up 99 minutes with "Friendly Enemies" running 1 hour and 11 minutes. "Dragon Alley" required 20 minutes and the Topical Review the usual 8 minutes.

The most elaborate of the stage numbers was "Viennese Impressions," ten minutes long, which held the spot immediately preceding the feature picture. The set for this number was a French garden with foliage border. A swing entwined with roses was hung on one side, while a mound of flowers occupied center stage. Rustic bench and sun dial on the other side. Painted backdrop of a French garden, with 9 deep blue box lamps lighting the drop. Overhead spots on the sun-dial and mound of flowers, orange and rose. Pink and green spots lighting the roses of the swing. Green box lamps for the foliage. The sequence of this number was as follows: "Beautiful Lady" sung by tenor to soprano, who was seated on the bench; Solo by soprano, "Just For Tonight," center stage; violin solo "Liebesfreud" by concert master standing in the orchestra pit, while premiere danseuse and male partner danced on the production stage. Duet by tenor and soprano as closing number, with business by the dancers. All costuming in 1830 period.

Each of the four de luxe performances of the day was opened by the orchestra in selections from "The Fortune Teller," Lights: 4 purple arch spots on the purple spangled draw curtains closed across over the production stage; 2 Mestrum floods of magenta on the musicians from the dome; color blends on mirror mosaic vases in transparent windows on either side of the orchestra; foots and borders of the large stage in blue. Eight minutes for this overture.

Stage incident No. 2 was a return engagement of Lilly Kovacs, the girl-pianiste. Her selections were "Twelfth Rhapsody" by Liszt, and "Faust Waltz" by Gounod. The piano was set to the left, and to the right was a bronze vase filled with yellow and lavender wisteria on a three foot pedestal covered with black velvet. The back-drop was a blue satin lighted with 9 deep blue open box lamps. For the opening number a rose-pink Mestrum flood from the dome lighted the whole set. This dimmed down for the second number, as an overhead spot of orange dimmed up on the musician and an overhead spot of rose-pink dimmed up on the wisteria branches. All other lighting was dimmed out. Nine minutes for this number.

After the Topical Review and just before "Viennese Impressions" came a coloratura, on the apron of the orchestra stage. Her selection was "Lo, Hear the Gentle Lark," by Bishop. The lights: 2 light blue Mestrum floods from the booth on the musicians; pink spot from the dome on head and shoulders of singer, with blue spot from waist down; arch spots of purple lighting the pleats of the gold draw-curtains closed across the production stage. Four minutes for this selection.

Rigged a Rug

When he got The Thief of Bagdad, Earl Settle, of the Palace Theatre, Muskogee, Okla., borrowed a fancy rug and hung it from the ceiling with fine wires, carding it, "The Magic Rug Used by Douglas Fairbanks in The Thief of Bagdad." Below was a huge head of Fairbanks.

And over in the furniture store was a fine assortment of rugs tied up to the play. Note it was "the" furniture and not just "a" store.

Changed a Little

Howard Price Kingsmore adapted the "Laughing Lloyd" idea to Charley's Aunt at the Howard Theatre, Atlanta. He used for the lobby several cat cutouts with "It's enough to make a cat laugh." Each of them concealed a phonograph playing the laughing record, just to prove that it could. Nut cards and a perambulated impersonator of Syd Chaplin were other highlights of a highly profitable campaign.

Let Newspaper Sell Quo Vadis Opening

Tod Browning, of the Olympia Theatre, New Haven, laid off his special showing of Quo Vadis to the Union, and the newspaper sent out 2,000 invitations over the personal signature of the editor, paying all the costs.

Among the invited guests were the school teachers, the Yale faculty, heads of the various Italian fraternities and representative Italian citizens.

It gave the newspaper a good circulation scheme, saved Mr. Browning the mailing costs, and brought an unusual press story. It often happens that a laid off stunt will work better for two people than it will for one. The newspaper was appreciative, and Mr. Browning built business—a better business than he probably would have gotten single handed.

Helped Along

Recently Memphis declared in on a Better Homes Week and Howard Waugh, of Loew's Palace, obligingly ran a one reel special the Federation of Women's Clubs was sponsoring. He did not expect much extra business, but looked on it as a good will stunt that could not harm and possibly might help. He invited the Committee of Matrons to be the guests of the house at a matinee, and that, as well as the film, helped to roll up the box office totals very nicely, as well as getting him into several desirable windows with special advertising for the short.

Private Lamppost

Getting over Lady of the Night at the Riviera Theatre, Knoxville, Tenn., a girl was dressed as Molly of the slums, provided with a private lamp post of pine and told to take it out on the street to lean against. The stunt made a whale of a business, but we think that some cities would not take kindly to this idea.

Schade's Pendants

George Schade, of Sandusky, found a good one on K—the Unknown. He had cutouts about 7 by 11 inches in the form of the letter, printed with the house name. Strings were tied to the top and to the other end of the string a small potato.

The letter, the potato end could be tossed into a low branch, an awning support or other bar, winding around and holding the letter suspended. With a little practise the marksman could make a bullseye every time and the stunt proved much better than tack cards. The effect of 200 letters along the main streets can be imagined.

You can work this on a straight card, but an outline is much better.

Useful Suggestions Made by Henry Seel

Henry Seel, of the People's Theatre, Greenville, Miss., who has reduced the local talent idea to an exact science, sends in some programs to show that he is still on the job.

It seems to be the benefit season down in Mississippi, for some of the items are for the benefit of local organizations. Others are merely "under the auspices of" which means that the organization gets the advertising and the house gets the money.

For a Fire Department benefit he booked Fighting the Flames, and this was preceded by a locally produced blackface skit with "Smoky Joe" and "Jerry Fire-eater." He also added a singing fireman and a couple of other native acts.

Trying Out the Juniors

Another stunt was a kid show offered as the Junior Follies, while the Girls High School Athletic Association took a benefit and staged "Tom Thumb's Wedding" with about fifty local youngsters, all of whom had admiring parents and friends.

The Dressmaker from Paris benefitted the King's Daughters hospital, and for this he had a style show, but "not a display advertisement by local merchants, but a musical sketch, sparkling with wit and humor and replete with beauty and charming feminine finery never witnessed before." If your crowd has tired of the regulation style show, this might appeal to them.

Helping along another organization, he gave a special concert program with the orchestra sponsored by the Big Brothers movement and of which he is the leader, along with his numerous other lines.

Mr. Seel writes that he expects to have to go to Shreveport to open the new Saenger house there. We are watching for a wonderful opening campaign.

the value of Menjou's name, save that it is run in the reading notice just along side the upper left. Mr. Larmour has worked so many good stunts with the saw that we are surprised that the idea of trimming did not suggest itself to him. At any rate he got an unusual form, which helps to get it over. In a reduction of nearly three times you probably can see nothing of the white lettering, but even in the original you cannot read these lines. Paramount puts out such good advertising that it is surprising to find such small reverse letters in their small ads. Probably the general idea was suggested by the title, the "dark" suggesting the use of the tar brush, but it is not at all in the Paramount general line. We think that Mr. Larmour is right in his contention that he had to use a heavy border. A light rule around the cut would have been pointless. The cut was made to run alone, and in a three-title display he had to do something to hold it in the space. One little thing in his frame is the use of double rules for the bottom and base sides. Twelve point here, the same as the rest, would not have given nearly as good a result.

Simple Lettering is Fine Attractor

This cross page eight on Charley's Aunt carries little reading, but it sinks in that little with an emphasis that would have been defeated by more talk. You don't have to argue about Charley's Aunt. Everyone has known for years that it is a funny play. All you need to do is to tell them that you have it on sale and when, and this large lettering gets it over better than a thousand words of copy. We do not particularly like the all capitals at the bottom, but this does not matter much. That single lettered title is better than a raft of cuts; the three small ones used being more than sufficient. Old timers will remember that cat back in the days of the original run of the play at the old Standard Theatre, in New York, when the cat one and three sheets were regarded as being pretty fancy advertising. The device is still good, but it does not stand out the way it did in those earlier days when exploitation had not yet been taken out of the dictionary and lost jewels still were good press work. This space is from the Isis Theatre, Topeka, and we think it one of the best things that has been done on this play because the management has had the good sense to avoid overselling and to get a strong display for the title.

Oddity of Design Catches the Eye

We don't know whether or not this is a specially planned cut or whether it comes from the plan book. If it is a stock cut the chances are it was cropped from a larger design, but in any event the shape makes it a fine eye-catcher, and at the same time provides two every convenient boxes for sales rather than the story, though it runs into a few glowing lines about the play at the bottom, and the smaller features are carried below the portrait cut. This latter is interesting because it is made by the drop out process, which completely cuts out the highlights and gives greater strength to the cut than where a lighter stipple stands for the white. It costs more, but where space costs what it does in the New York papers, a slightly higher cost for a cut that will double the pull is a highly profitable investment. This was the same process that was used on the Beaucaire cuts. Well done, it doubles the value of a halftone.

Rule Supplements Small Sized Cut

Arthur Swanke, who does the work for the Rialto and Mission theatres, El Dorado, Ark., writes that this is about the best he could get with the one available cut, but we are inclined to think that he has done better than he might have done with a larger cut. He has resorted to the use of twelve point solid rule to work the single column cut in a three column cut, and the rule really gives more strength to the display than an involved cut might have given. Swanke does the lobbies as well as the newspaper advertising, as numerous examples have shown, and he is first of all an artist. Probably he was not even conscious of a striving for effect when he made the rules of dissimilar length. It is likely that he used these merely because he knew that this would be better and not through any conscious study for effect, but using two rules of equal length above and below the title would have given much less effect. It is the contrast in length which gives them their chief value, and this device is further useful in that the shortened rules give the type title more display. His compositor seems to have the common failing of wanting to set all advertising lines in all capitals. There is not an entire lower case line in the entire display, other than the three words of address just under the signature, but the lines are mostly short and keeping them up does not hurt as much as is the case where four and five line banks are used. There is also a slip in running that all cap line across five and a half inches, down at the bottom. The eye will slip off these too easily. Setting that upper and lower, and in two columns, would have helped a lot. Apart from this he has produced a very creditable advertisement; the first he has sent in. He does most of his selling with his excellent lobby displays. That is most generally the case in small towns.

gives it a reach for the eye that beats larger spaces to the attention. You look at this first because it seems to be well worth looking at. The panel is evidently printed in larger type and then pasted onto the art copy; a device that should be more generally employed by houses having staff artists. Hand lettering in that size would have been lost, but the reduction still preserves the clarity of type and it gets over, though the small lines are about a four-point. It's different from the usual New York display, and decidedly better, too.

Look at that last panel in the Rialto ad and swear off hand lettering in small spaces.

"Don Q" Makes New York Critics Dig Out Superlatives for Doug's Newest

"THE best" or "the greatest" Douglas Fairbanks picture. This is the almost unanimous verdict of the New York newspaper critics in their reviews of "Don Q, Son of Zorro," which had its world premiere at the Globe theatre, the evening of Monday, June 15.

The value of this new Fairbanks feature from the standpoint of sheer entertainment, with a view to the box-office, also was brought out strongly in nearly every review.

The opening at the Globe was typical of the greeting awarded to every new Fairbanks picture. There was a packed house, with an abundance of first night faces everywhere in the audience. Applause, genuine and wholly spontaneous, punctuated the unreeling of "Don Q," and particularly did this apply to the many stunts in which Fairbanks showed at his best.

"'Don Q, Son of Zorro' is just as full of new ideas as the average Fairbanks effort," said Mordaunt Hall in the New York Times. "With a whip for a weapon he stirred an audience to many an outburst of genuine merriment and at the end there was a peal of applause. It is a swift picture with plenty of pleasing surprises and action. It has an ideal part for Mr. Fairbanks."

"The sets and the settings are magnificent, and the photoplay is beautiful," said Henriette Underhill in the Herald Tribune. "Never for a moment does the picture seem too long. Where one enemy was slain in previous Fairbanks pictures, ten are slain in 'Don Q.' It is a bigger and better picture. Don't miss it."

"It is as winning and exuberant a Douglas Fairbanks as you ever have seen that cracks the whip in 'Don Q,'" said Quinn Martin in the New York World. "Douglas Fairbanks never made a scene sitting down in his life, and probably no picture which he ever has made has found him more actively engaged with the business at hand. In particular he begins his 1925 exhibit at a tremendous pace. As the finale approaches he is seen in a whirlwind of stunts and stunners."

Says the reviewer for the New York American: "If you want to forget your every day worries, or lose yourself in the gallantries of another age, or just gain enough courage to talk back to a traffic cop, don't miss it. It is the finest tale of adventure that has ever been screened."

"Douglas Fairbanks in 'Don Q, Son of Zorro,' provides first and last a picture of supreme entertainment, and just about as perfect a production as any the writer has seen," says George E. Bradley in the Morning Telegraph.

"'Don Q, Son of Zorro,' besides being a perfect example of showmanship is the best picture Douglas Fairbanks ever made," says Mildred Spain in the Daily News. "The picture has dash, charm, and an abundance of bubbling wit."

"'Don Q, Son of Zorro,' is Douglas Fairbanks' greatest production, and we do not slight 'Robin Hood' or any of his previous brilliant productions in saying this—but it stands in a glorious class all by itself as the most marvelous melodrama ever produced," said Dorothy Herzog in the Daily Mirror.

"Douglas Fairbanks has hit the bull's-eye again," says George Gerhard, in the Evening World. "In 'Don Q, Son of Zorro,' he exhibited a feature every bit as good as 'The Thief of Bagdad,' although the two productions are as dissimilar as it would be possible to make them."

Says the reviewer for the Evening Post, "'Don Q, Son of Zorro' is one of the most entertaining films that has ever emerged from the Fairbanks studio. Those who saw and thrilled at 'The Mark of Zorro' some years ago have the same sort of treat in store for them, considerably magnified in proportion."

"Swift, exciting, good humored and picturesque is 'Don Q, Son of Zorro,' the latest effort of the bouncing Douglas Fairbanks which aroused honest and resounding palm pounding," said the critic for the Evening Sun. "All parties who had a finger in the picture have done first rate work."

"'Don Q, Son of Zorro' is dramatic, dashing and decidedly well worth seeing. Fairbanks is absolutely perfect in his role," says Rose Pelswick in the Evening Journal. "'Don Q' is the best picture he has ever made, from the standpoint of sheer entertainment."

"Douglas Fairbanks is up to his old tricks again—and a power of new ones. In 'Don Q, Son of Zorro' he achieves the greatest triumph of his career with a picture that is as fast as a streak of lightning and much more certain in the way it always hits the mark for which it seems destined," says Frank Vreeland in the Evening Telegram.

"'Don Q' is a combination of D'Artagnan, Zorro, Robin Hood, Lochinvar and Napolean Bonaparte," says Regina Cannon in the Evening Graphic.

Colleen Moore to Sail for Home on Completing London Work, June 27

Refreshed by a good rest in Switzerland which has brought about a complete recovery from the injuries she asstained while on an American location trip, Colleen Moore is back in London filming atmospheric scenes for her next First National starring vehicle, a screen version of Israel Zangwill's "We Moderns." Miss Moore is to sail from England on June 27th on the Berengaria, due to arrive in New York July 3rd. After a short stay in New York she will go on to Hollywood to complete "We Moderns," following which she will be starred in "Irene."

The popular screen star sailed from New York on May 2nd on the Majestic, arriving at Southampton on May 9th and proceeding to London, where she was guest of honor at several receptions and parties. After a stay of about ten days in London she went on to Paris for a short visit, thence to Lucerne, Switzerland, for a complete rest. Miss Moore left Lucerne June 6th, and, after a day spent in Paris, proceeded to London, arriving there June 10th, and stopping at the Ritz Hotel. This is Miss Moore's first trip abroad.

Alfred Weiss to Europe Seeking Foreign Pictures

ALFRED WEISS, one of the executives of Weiss Brothers' Artclass Pictures Corporation and formerly Vice President and General Manager of Goldwyn Pictures, sailed on the Leviathan, June 13, for an extended trip to Europe.

While there, he will make a survey of the European market and the production activities of the large continental producing interests, among whom he is very well known.

This survey will be made with a view toward the acquisition of the best foreign film product for American distribution. It is Mr. Weiss' contention that there is a very good market in this country for many pictures now being made in Europe, particularly when these pictures are backed up with the same degree of forceful advertising and sales effort as is given to American productions of equal importance and artistic value.

A number of foreign interests have been studying, closely, American films exhibited in Europe for the last few years and have also sent representatives to this country for the express purpose of studying American production and marketing methods with a view toward offering pictures which shall be adaptable to the requirements of the American public.

It is now an undisputed fact among American producers, with UFA's "The Last Laugh" and Weiss Brothers' own successful presentation of "After Six Days," as outstanding examples, that the foreign producer is capable of making pictures that will appeal to the American public from both the technical and the artistic viewpoint.

Through his connections and acquaintance with these foreign producers Mr. Weiss will have access to the cream of the foreign product and it is his intention to purchase and brink back with him the very best of the pictures now being made and distribute them in America.

It is Mr. Weiss' hope to be able to assemble a comprehensive and well balanced program, and on his return offices will be opened in all key cities and arrangements made for the exploitation and distribution of the pictures from these centers. While not yet complete in detail, Mr. Weiss has outlined an extensive campaign for the distribution of these pictures. Further announcements in regard to this phase of this new project will be announced as plans are perfected.

Officials Aboard Trackless Train

Governor Alfred E. Smith of New York and Mayor Wm. S. Hackett of Albany boarded America's first Trackless Train when the special drove into Albany and toured the city as its guests through cheering throngs that crowded every sidewalk. The special, whose trip across the continent is being sponsored by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer in the interests of better roads and better motion pictures, was received at the city limits by a motorcycle escort and drove first to the City Hall, where a committee of city officials, headed by the Mayor welcomed and inspected it. The entire town turned out to view and admire the trackless transportation wonder.

Mayor Hackett boarded the train at the City Hall. The special then proceeded to the Capitol, where the Governor and members of his staff joined the Mayor's party. Stills and motion pictures were taken of the Mayor and the Governor on the observation platform and also of them individually in the cab of the train for the press.

The Trackless Train, on completing its transcontinental trip, is to be shipped abroad, where it will tour Britain and the Continent.

Five New Companies Start Work at the Warner Studio

THESE are busy days at the Warner Bros. plant in Los Angeles. Not only is every bit of studio space occupied with production work—besides several locations elsewhere—but scenarists, adaptors and casting directors are working overtime in preparation for other productions.

A wide range of subjects is covered in the attractions now under way—so wide that even if the total of productions on the Warner 1925-26 schedule fell far short of forty, the present number, nearly every fan would still find in the list something to satisfy his particular preference.

Having been in a Lubitsch comedy, "Kiss Me Again," and in another comedy, Marie Prevost is now to do a melodrama. Her next picture will be "Wanted by the Police." Also included in the cast are Clive Brook, John Patrick, Charles Conklin, Claude Gillingwater and Matilda Brundage.

Another interesting announcement of the present week tells of the selection of James Flood to direct Lowell Sherman in his first Warner picture, "Satan in Sables," from Bradley King's alluring novel. Mr. Sherman has arrived in California and is enthusiastic over the prospect of getting started at once. "Satan in Sables" will be the fourth picture directed by Mr. Flood, who formerly was assistant to Ernst Lubitsch and to D. W. Griffith. In Mr. Sherman's support will be June Marlowe, John Harron, Gertrude Astor, Frank Butler and Otto Hoffman.

Herman Raymaker, who lately finished "Below the Line," will direct the Vitagraph production, "The Love Hour," from the story by Gregory Rogers, with scenario by Bess Meredyth. In the cast selected are Ruth Clifford, Huntly Gordon, Louise Fazenda, Willard Louis, John Roche, Gayne Whitman and Charles Farrell.

W. Van Dyke has been borrowed from Fox to wield the megaphone in the production of Vitagraph's "The Ranger of the Big Pines," from Hamlin Garland's "Cavanaugh, Forest Ranger." In the cast are such popular players as Kenneth Harlan, Helene Costello, Eugenie Besserer, Will Walling, Lew Harvey, Joan Standing, Robert J. Graves, Harvey Clark and Eugene Paulette. The scenario is by Hope Loring and Louis Lighton.

Harry Beaumont, who directed Kathleen Norris's "Rose of the World," will perform the same service with Harry Leon Wilson's "His Majesty Bunker Bean," in which Matt Moore will star, with Dorothy Devore in the leading woman's role. Julien Josephson has prepared the scenario for this production.

Completes Second Picture for Chadwick

"Blue Blood," the second of the Chadwick series starring George Walsh, is now completed, and will be ready for release at an early date. This production is in keeping with the Chadwick policy for this series and offers Walsh in another of his action comedy drama stories affording the star an opportunity to display his athletic achievements.

The picture was directed by Scott Dunlop, and in addition to the star includes a sterling cast among whom is the new Chadwick find, Joan Meredith, who has been put under a long term contract by this producer.

Pathe Outing June 20

The employees of the Home Office and the New York and Newark Branches of Pathe Exchange, Inc., will hold an outing on Saturday, June 20th at the Panchard Inn, Massapequa, Long Island. The Patheites will make the trip to Massapequa via busses leaving the Pathe Building, 35 West 45th Street, New York, at 9:30 A. M. The outing will be in the nature of a general social get-together of the Pathe employees. Golf, baseball, and dancing are scheduled.

Noel Smith has been signed to direct "The Clash of the Wolves," Charles A. Logue's story, which gives a fine opportunity for the Warner wonder dog, Rin-Tin-Tin, to appear at his best. So far Dolores Costello, Don Alvarado and June Marlowe have been engaged for the cast.

DIRECTORS OF METRO-GOLDWYN-MAYER PICTURES

Mayer Says Public Demand Is for New Faces on Screen

"THE day of the movie star has returned and the coming year will see an avalanche of new favorites on the screen," says Louis B. Mayer, head of the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios.

"As an indication of the return of the star vogue, our organization has just promoted to stardom four favorites, including Ramon Novarro, Norma Shearer, John Gilbert and Lon Chaney, players who have sprung into particular fame within the past year. Marion Davies, Lillian Gish and Jackie Coogan are among the stars already firmly established who will appear in our pictures.

"Of recent years the star system in the movies has suffered. The so-called all star picture has been the thing. Within the past six months, however, players have again leaped into such tremendous favor among the public, that they have automatically become stars or players who are individually featured in pictures. This is true of other companies as well as our own, although it is generally conceded that Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer has developed nearly twice as many new stars during the past year, as any other organization.

"For years the demand has been 'Give us new faces on the screen.' For years this cry has remained unanswered. Following the merger of the Metro, Goldwyn, and Mayer companies a year ago, it became the policy of our organization to promote the presentation of new favorites.

"Within the coming year, you will see many of the old favorites fall from their lofty heights of stardom. In fact, I feel every reason to predict that within twelve months, more stars of former days will cease to shine than ever disclosed in the history of films. The new faces will supplant many of those who are doomed to go.

"A carefully prepared chart shows to a surprising degree a marked decline of popularity among many stars whose names today are household words. Only those stars who continue to show a steady increase in popularity will be seen in our productions."

Among the featured players who will appear in pictures produced by Mr. Mayer and his associates, Irving Thalberg and Harry Rapf, during the 1925-26 season are: Renee Adoree, Conrad Nagel, Mae Busch, Claire Windsor, ZaSu Pitts, Lew Cody, Conway Tearle, Bert Roach, George K. Arthur, Mathew Betz, Edward Connelly, Carmel Meyers, Gertrude Olmstead and Katherine Bennett.

Moore Bros. on Same Program

Tom and Owen Both on Associated Exhibitors' Schedule in Feature Roles

For the first time in many years, the Moore brothers, Tom and Owen, will appear on the same screen program. Associated Exhibitors is the distributing company whose producers have signed up these two members of a famous screen family.

Tom Moore plays the featured role opposite Eileen Percy in "Under the Rogue," the Louis H. Moomaw production filmed in Oregon. It was originally titled "The Greatest Thing" and is a story of the underworld and regeneration. Others in the cast are Mary Alden, James Mason, Clare de Lorez and Chester Conklin.

Owen Moore is appearing in "Camille of the Barbary Coast," a Hugh Dierker production. Mae Busch is the leading woman and supporting players are Burr McIntosh, Harry T. Morey and Tammany Young. This is the second production in which Owen Moore has appeared on the Associated Exhibitors' program. His first feature under this banner was "East of Broadway," adapted from the Saturday Evening Post story "The Tropic of Capricorn."

Both "Under the Rogue" with Tom Moore and "Camille of the Barbary Coast" with Owen Moore are in the first group of Associated Exhibitors' features for the new season.

Increase Stage Space

The available stage space at the F. B. O. Studios in Hollywood is already proving insufficient for the increased production program and for the number of rental companies that are operating on the lot independent of F. B. O.'s own units; so the sides are being knocked out of stages No. 1 and No. 2 and they are to be converted into one huge stage.

Century Lists Four Comedies for Release During June

JULIUS STERN, president of Century, announces that the June release schedule of Century Comedies, distributed through Universal exchanges, is one of the strongest groups of Centuries ever put out.

The group consists of four two-reelers made by such popular stars as Wanda Wiley, Edna Marian, Eddie Gordon, and Constance Darling.

Opportunely, the first June release is a "bride and groom" picture. It is "Speak Freely," and stars Edna Marian. It was directed by William Watson, with A Alt and Hilliard Karr in the chief supporting roles. It recounts the hilarious adventures of a young bride and groom whose parents visit them just after there has been the first marital spat.

The next June release is "Kicked About," starring Eddie Gordon, Larry Richardson has the chief supporting role, and the comedy was directed by Noel Smith. The two-reeler gives Eddie ample opportunity to do many of his funny acrobatic stunts and shows him as an amateur detective in one mix-up after another.

"Gridiron Gertie," the Century release for June 17th, is a Wanda Wiley comedy. It shows Wanda as a foot-ball substitute. Edward I. Luddy directed it and used in the cast such popular comedy players as Joe Bonner and Les Bates.

The last June release for Century also is a "June bride" comedy. It is entitled "Married Neighbors," and was directed by Charles Lamont. Constance Darling is the featured player, with Billy Engle and Hilliard Karr as the chief support.

Cast for "Pace That Thrills"

Earl Hudson and Director Webster Campbell have completed the cast for First National's new picture in which Ben Lyon and Mary Astor will be featured. This is "The Pace That Thrills," written for Mr. Lyon by Byron Morgan, who wrote many of the late Wallace Reid's automobile stories.

Production began on "The Pace That Thrills" last week at First National's studios in New York. In addition to Mr. Lyon and Miss Astor, the cast includes Thomas Holding, Tully Marshall, Warner Richmond, Fritzi Brunette, Eveleyn Walsh Hall, Dorothy Allan and George Stevens.

Two Hal Roach Comedies On New Pathe Programs

THE PATHE program of short subjects for the week of June 21st is headed by two comedies from the Hal Roach Studios, and includes also a chapter of the Patheserial "Sunken Silver," a Pathe Review, an "Aesop Film Fable", "Topics of the Day" and two issues of the Pathe News.

"Thundering Landlords" is the title of the Hal Roach two-reeler which stars Glenn Tryon. This screen comic depicts the experiences of a family who incur the wrath of their landlord and must make an early morning move into their own unfinished house. Fay Wray is the wife and other funmakers in the cast are Noah Young, Irene Allen, Marjorie Whiteis, "Husky" Hanes, and James Finlayson. James W. Horne directed.

The Hal Roach one-reel comedy bears the title "Into the Grease" and shows James Finlayson at his funniest.

The Pathe Review No. 25 shows another subject taken by the Alvin V. Knechtel "process-camera." In "The Mystic Menagerie," produced at the Selig Zoo in Los Angeles, leopards are featured in marvelous trick scenes. The Pathecolor feature brings one to "The Land of Eternal Summer," Pau in the foothills of the Pyrenees and another of the "Here Comes the Bride" series is presented. "The Dutch Bride" is revealed and the customs and costumes are authenticated by the Holland Society of New York.

"The Runaway Balloon" is the latest of the "Aesop's Film Fables" and tells the timely moral "A loud speaker is a sound investment." The Pathe release schedule for June 21st is completed by "Topics of the Day" and Pathe News Nos. 52 and 53.

"Official Officers," a jolly "Our Gang" comedy and "Animal Celebrities,' a novel Grantland Rice "Sportlight," add strong note of diversity to the Pathe program of short subjects for the week of June 28th, which also includes a new chapter of the Patheserial "Sunken Silver," an "Aesop Film Fable," "Topics of the Day," a Pathe Review and two issues of Pathe News.

Pathe Review No. 26 presents three interesting subjects: "Short and to the Point," the story of a pin; "The Turrets of Amboise," Pathecolor views of a French town that has survived the inroads of time; and "Acrobatics a la Mode," another novelty produced by the Alvin V. Knechtel "process-camera."

Pathe Continues to Sign New "Rex" Film in Key Cities

MANAGERS of first-run theatres in the key-centers of the country have been keenly on the alert to secure the initial showings of "Black Cyclone," the sensational success with Rex, according to advice from Pathe, the distributor of this Hal Roach feature with the wild horse as hero.

The Premiere of "Black Cyclone" at the Capitol in New York set the pace for other big theatres. In the Metropolitan district, the Loew Circuit booking manager signed up for 120 days' showings, beginning with the State in New York City on June 15th.

The list of first-run bookings includes the following theatres in key cities: Granada, San Francisco; Loew's, Newark; Rialto, Los Angeles; State, Boston; Paramount, Salt Lake City; Rialto, Denver; Valentine, Toledo; Columbia, Portland, Oregon; Columbia, Seattle; Clemmer, Spokane; Alhambra, Milwaukee; Rialto, Washington, D. C.; Royal, Kansas City, and the Broadway Strand in Detroit.

In addition to the above, contracts have been closed with Famous Players and Southern Enterprises covering approximately 70 towns and about 250 days.

Fred Wood Jackman directed "Black Cyclone" and has far surpassed his efforts achieved in the previous Rex starring vehicle, "Rex, The King of Wild Horses."

Mrs. Calvin Coolidge, the President, Tom Mix and Mrs. Mix on the White House Lawn

Long Contract for McCarey

Hal Roach has signed Leo McCarey, who directed the Charley Chase Comedies during the past year, to a long-time contract. McCarey is a son of Tom McCarey, fight promoter and prominent figure in Los Angeles' sporting history of a few years ago. The Roach director is a native son of California and graduated from the Los Angeles law school. He practiced law for two years, only to give it up for film work. The Chase-McCarey team has established the unique record of going up to two-reelers after less than one year of one-reel production, and their product is gaining steadily in popularity with exhibitors, according to trade-journal reports. "Looking for Sally," the latest Pathe release made by Chase and McCarey on the Roach lot, was featured as an extra attraction at the Colony Theatre in New York the week of June 1st.

"Lady Windermere's Fan" Is Lubitsch's New Warner Film

OSCAR WILDE'S masterpiece, "Lady Windermere's Fan," one of the greatest light comedies ever written, is to be the next Ernst Lubitsch production for Warner Bros.

Mr. Lubitsch had expected to use a colorful operetta, but his latest offering, "Kiss Me Again," has proved such a spontaneous success, and the picture possibilities in "'Lady Windermere's Fan" are so great, that Warner decided he should make one more comedy. Following "The Marriage Circle" and "Kiss Me Again," the Wilde classic will be the third comedy produced by Mr. Lubitsch, but each of the three is of a distinct type.

"Lady Windermere's Fan" had its first presentation at St. James' Theatre, London, February 20, 1892, and proved an outstanding success from the start. Two years later, on February 5, 1894, it had its New York premiere at the old Palmer's Theatre.

The American production was in the hands of a remarkable cast, numbering among its principals Maurice Barrymore, father of John, Lionel and Ethel, as Lord Darlington, E. M. Holland as Lord Augustus Lorton, and Julia Arthur in the role of Lady Windermere. Others in the first American cast were: Edward Bell, Mrs. D. P. Bowers, Fanny Jackson, Marie Henderson, Rose Barrington, J. G. Saville, Walden Ramsay, Edward S. Abeles, Guido Marburg, Emily Seward and Ann Urhart.

There have been many revivals of "Lady Windermere's Fan," both in the United States and England, in every case the original triumph being repeated. The play was been described by a famous critic as "an admirable specimen of light comedy, abounding vivacious dialogue and dexterous situations."

It was only after great difficulties that the Warners succeeded in procuring the screen rights to this masterpiece, for the executors of Oscar Wilde's estate were violently opposed to a transfer of the play to the films. Consent was obtained only when the executors learned that "Lady Windermere's Fan" would be placed in the hands of Ernst Lubitsch, whose "The Marriage Circle" had been highly acclaimed in London as well as throughout the United States.

Most of the former Lubitsch productions have been based on original stories, or adaptations of stories not widely known. In choosing a work which is world celebrated, the producer is, therefore, launching upon an entirely new venture.

One-Third Warner's Product to Be Completed by July 1

Hal B. Wallis, in charge of Warner Bros. publicity at the studios in California, who is in New York in conference with Watt Parker, general supervisor of advertising and publicity, brought east reports of remarkable activity production at the Warner plant.

"Eight of the forty productions on the 1925-26 schedule already are finished," said Mr. Wallis yesterday. "Five others are now in work and will be completed within a week or ten days. This means that by July 1 practically one-third of the attractions on the coming year's program will be ready, and September 1 should see the production schedule 50 per cent done.

"This is a record which, I believe, probably was never before approached by any producing organization, particularly when the number of special features and the magnitude of many of the productions are considered."

Mr. Wallis said production work on these three has been finished within the last few days: "The Man on the Box," starring Syd Chaplin, "Bobbed Hair," with Marie Prevost and Kenneth Harlan, and "Three Weeks in Paris," one of the Matt Moore starring vehicles, with Dorothy Devore in the leading woman's role. Previously, work had ended on the following five:

"The Golden Cocoon," (Helene Chadwick); "Rose of the World, (Patsy Ruth Miller); "Below the Line" (Rin-Tin-Tin), "The Limited Mail" (Monte Blue), and "The Wife Who Wasn't Wanted" (Irene Rich).

The police of Baltimore estimated that 200,000 moving picture fans gathered in the Maryland capital, before the Baltimore Theatre, to welcome Tom Mix (center), the famous William Fox star.

Gasnier's Second Production

"The Other Woman's Story," by Peggy Gaddis, will be filmed under the direction of Gasnier, as his second production, next season for B. P. Schulberg. An announcement from the producer to this effect added that work would begin as soon as Gasnier has completed work on "Parisian Love," which is now well under way. "The Other Woman's Story" is the co-respondent's side of a famous divorce case, the story of which was inspired by an actuality. John Goodrich is preparing the adaption.

"My Lady's Lips" Ready

The tenth and last B. P. Schulberg Production for the current year, "My Lady's Lips," is ready for release, the master print having been received this week in New York by J. G. Bachmann, general manager of distribution. The picture is from an original screen story written by John Goodrich. Clara Bow, Frank Keenan, Alyce Mills, and William Powell are the principals of the cast.

Leading Independent Exchanges Buy Tiffany-Truart Pictures

M. H. HOFFMAN, vice-president of the Tiffany Truart Productions announces that franchises for all of his productions for 1925-26 including the Tiffany Big Twelve, based on the books and stories of famous authors, and the Truart Blue Ribbon, Novelty and Cinemelodrama series, have been bought by the leading independent exchanges in the United States.

The franchise for California, Arizona and Nevada is held by Louis Hyman of the All Star Feature Distributing Corporation of San Francisco and Los Angeles who has closed for the Tiffany Products. There are other franchises pending for the Truart pictures.

H. Weinberg of the Premier Picture Exchanges, Inc., of Des Moines, Ia., will distribute the Tiffany and Truart productions throughout Iowa and Nebraska.

E. C. Roden of the Midwest Film Distributors, Inc., of Kansas City, holds the franchise for the states of Kansas and Western Missouri for Tiffany and Truart.

The franchise for the State of Wisconsin for Tiffany is held by J. S. Grauman of the Celebrated Players Film Corporation of Milwaukee, Wis., who also has for his organization the Truart six Blue Ribbon series.

The states of Louisiana, Mississippi, Texas, Oklahoma, Arkansas, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Tennessee, North and South Carolina are covered by the franchise held for Tiffany pictures by the Creole Enterprises of New Orleans with offices at Atlanta, Ga., Dallas, Texas and New Orleans, La.

Harry Charnas of the Standard Film Service of Cleveland will handle the Tiffany and Truart pictures for Ohio, Kentucky, Michigan, Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia through their Cleveland, Cincinnati and Detroit exchanges and through the Federated Film Exchange in Pittsburgh.

L. Berman of the Independent Film Corporation of Philadelphia holds the Tiffany and Truart franchise, excepting the Truart Novelty series, for Maryland, Delaware, District of Columbia, Virginia, Eastern Pennsylvania and Southern New Jersey.

The franchise for the New York and Northern New Jersey territory is held by the Renown Pictures Inc., with exchanges in New York City, Albany, Buffalo and Chicago, the latter taking in Illinois.

Mr. Hoffman said that within a short time he will announce the franchise holders for his Tiffany and Truart products in Indianapolis, St. Louis, Boston, Canada, Minneapolis and Denver.

Schulberg Will Have Nine Pictures Ready by October 15

BY the middle of October exhibitors will be able to view on the screen nine of the eighteen Preferred Pictures to be released during the new season by B. P. Schulberg Productions, announces J. G. Bachmann, general manager of distribution. Mr. Schulberg is now on the Coast personally supervising the work of three units that have already been working five weeks and will continue through the rest of the summer without a respite.

The three pictures that are now well under way are F. Oakley Crawford's story, "Parisian Love," directed by Gasnier—"The Girl Who Wouldn't Work," by Gertie D. Wentworth-James, directed by Marcel De Sano—and "With This Ring," Fanny Heaslip Lea's Saturday Evening Post novel, directed by Fred C. Windemere.

The next three to be put in production as soon as the first trio are in the cutting room, will be "The Other Woman's Story," by Peggy Gaddis; "Lew Tyler's Wives," Wallace Irwin's famous novel and "The Plastic Age," by Percy Marks, which was last year's biggest fiction seller. The scripts for these are now being prepared.

Next in order will be an unusually elaborate version of the celebrated stage classic, "Shenandoah," which with its Civil War background, is known to every American theatre-goer. Coincident with the production of this property, will be the filming of John Goodrich's story, "Eden's Fruit" and another spectacular picture, "Horses and Women," which is said to be an unusual story of the turf.

With the exception of the initial three pictures, no definite assignment of directors has yet been made.

Molly Malone Signs Contract

Molly Malone has signed a long term contract with Al Christie under which she will play as leading lady to Jimmie Adams in the new series of six two-reel Jimmie Adams comedies.

Miss Malone played in two of the Christie comedies last season, "Easy Pickin's," with Neal Burns and "Love Goofy," with Jimmie Adams, and was also Bobby Vernon's leading lady in "Don't Pinch," which was recently released.

Give Comedy Week's Run

So impressed was "Roxy" with the Educational-Tuxedo Comedy. "The Iron Mule," that he booked this two reeler for a week's at the Capitol, breaking what has almost become an iron clad rule in the big picture houses, for this picture is but the second two reel comedy to play his house in over two years.

F. B. O. Preparing Summer, Fall and Winter Program

THE visit of Major H. C. S. Thomson, president and managing director of Film Booking Offices of America, to the company's studios in Hollywood finds the big production plant humming on full time schedule with a promise of greater summer and fall activity than ever before in the history of this up and coming independent organization.

Of special interest during the visit of the president was the launching of "The Keeper of the Bees," the famous Gene Stratton-Porter novel, which is now being published serially in McCall's Magazine, and which is being advertised extensively in the same magazine.

Another note of interest on the F. B. O. lot was the first day's work on "The Wild Bull's Lair," Fred Thomson's fourth Western feature, in which the famous Western star and his horse Silver King, and Jocko, a bull which belongs to Mr. Thomson, dash through many thrilling sequences. The story is an original by Marion Jackson, and will be directed by Del Andrews. In support of Mr. Thomson are Catherine Bennett (the sister of Enid Bennett), Herbert Prior, Tom Carr, Frank Hagney and Frank Abbott.

Among other productions in work are Evelyn Brent's seventh production "Lady Robinhood," based on an original story by Clifford Howard and Burke Jenkins, formerly called "Tizona—The Firebrand." "Lady Robinhood" will lift Evelyn Brent momentarily out of the roles of crook-melodramas which she has been so successful in interpreting upon the screen, and will give the actress the role of a sort of Spanish Joan of Arc, and will be laid in a locale at the foot of the Pyrenees. Ralph Ince is directing.

Richard Talmadge is busily at work completing "The Mysterious Stranger," based by the author, James Bell Smith, on Dr. Samuel Johnson's classic, "History of Rasselas, Prince of Abyssinia." Jack Nelson is directing.

Bob Custer, who is making fast strides in F. B. O.'s series of Western action stories, has this week completed "The Bloodhound" for Independent Pictures Corporation, and will start work next week on "Jack, The Man." Mary Beth Milford will again support Mr. Custer as leading woman in the new production, and the remainder of the cast includes such well known thespians as Monte Collins, Hayford Hobbs and Buck Moulton. William James Craft will direct, from the story by George Paul Bauer and continuity by Adele S. Buffington.

Wesley Ruggles, who is directing the H. C. Witwer series of two reelers, "The Pacemakers," is at work on Chapter No. 12, called "Miss Me Again," co-starring Alberta Vaughn and George O'Hara. At the conclusion of the series, another will be started immediately, titled "The Adventures of Maisie," based on a series of stories by Nell Martin which appeared in Top-Notch Magazine.

Theda Bara's Picture

Screen Star Will Have Frederick Kovert With Her in the Cast

Frederick Kovert, the dancer, who appeared in Chadwick's "The Wizard of Oz" has been engaged for a prominent part in "The Unchastened Woman," which has been selected as the vehicle for Theda Bara's return to the screen.

One of the features of his appearance in the production will be his newest dance creation, "Mirrors." The costume used in this number strikes an unusual note, being entirely in black and white, and having 750 mirrors which flash, making myriads of varicolored light.

Aside from the mirrors, the costume is embellished with 10,000 pearls, 5,000 diamonds, and a head dress of pheasant feathers, measuring six feet across. A special elaborate set has been constructed for the staging of this brilliant dance.

Sign Lionel Barrymore

B. P. Schulberg announced the signing of Lionel Barrymore for the leading masculine role in "The Girl Who Wouldn't Work," which will be the initial Preferred Picture to be made by the new director "find," Marcel De Sano. While the feminine lead has not yet been selected, several of the other principals have already been signed, including Henry B. Walthall, Lilyan Tashman and Forrest Stanley.

"The Girl Who Wouldn't Work" has been adapted by John Goodrich from the novel by Gertie D. Wentworth-James, which created a sensation in London last year. It is slated for publication by an American publisher in the fall.

Harold Lloyd in his new feature comedy, "The Freshman," which Pathe will release. The girl is Jobyna Ralston.

Harold Lloyd's New Comedy For Pathe is "The Freshman"

THE Pathe Home Office announces that "The Freshman" has been definitely decided upon as the title for the next Harold Lloyd feature comedy which was recently completed at the star's Coast studio, and is scheduled for fall release.

"The Freshman" presents the inimitable Harold in the title role and is just as the name suggests—a jolly comedy of college life. As a youth, who has gleaned his idea of how a college man should act from the movies and books, Harold arrives at the University town expecting an ovation from an aggregation of "Rah! Rah! Rah!" boys and girls when he steps off the train. But college isn't always like the freshman expects it will be and Harold's experiences provide some of the best fun ever provided in a Lloyd vehicle. Perhaps the most thrilling as well as funniest sequence transpires upon the football field where the freshman finally gets into the game and makes a world's record field run for a touchdown.

"Harold Lloyd at his best—that is the judgment that will probably be registered everywhere by those who see his comedy," enthuses Edwin Schallert in the pre-view of the Los Angeles Times. "The picture is in most respects better than anything he has made since 'Grandma's Boy.'"

Jobyna Ralston is again Lloyd's leading woman and the cast includes Pat Harmon, Hazel Keener, James Anderson, Joseph Harrington and Brooks Benedict.

John Grey, Sam Taylor, Ted Wilde and Tim Whelan are responsible for the 'script, and the direction is by Sam Taylor and Fred Newmeyer. The photography is by Walter Lundin.

Record Bookings on F. B. O.'s "Drusilla With a Million"

THE record breaking business achieved by the Capitol Theatre, New York, during the showing of "Drusilla With a Million," the Associated Arts Corporation F. B. O. Gold Bond production, starring Mary Carr, Priscilla Bonner and Kenneth Harlan, which played the huge Broadway house the week of May 24, resulted in a number of unusually fine bookings for the picture.

The Stanley Company, Philadelphia, feel that "Drusilla" is the biggest box office bet to play their theatres this year, and shifted the showing from a one week engagement at the Karlton Theatre, to a two weeks' run at the Stanton Theatre.

Jones, Linick and Schaeffer closed a contract for a run of "Drusilla" at the Orpheum Theatre, Chicago.

The most pretentious engagement of the picture, however, goes to the Tremont Temple, Boston, when "Drusilla" opens on June 29 for an eight weeks' engagement.

Added factors in the prompt decisions of these first run theatres to play "Drusilla" were the excellent notices given the picture in the New York newspapers during the Capitol showing. The critics were unanimous in their enthusiastic praise of the production.

Announces Educational's Product for the 1925-26 Season

EDUCATIONAL'S line-up of product for the 1925-26 season was announced last week when Mr. Hammons, president of Educational, addressed the exchange managers of that organization, gathered in their fourth national convention at the Hotel Pennsylvania.

The line-up of product, as announced by Mr. Hammons is: Six two-reel Lupino Lane Comedies; six two-reel Bobby Vernon Comedies; six two-reel Walter Hiers Comedies; six two-reel Jimmie Adams Comedies; six two-reel Lloyd Hamilton Comedies; eighteen two-reel Mermaid Comedies; ten two-reel Christie Comedies; six two-reel Tuxedo Comedies; six two-reel Juvenile Comedies; twenty-four one-reel Cameo Comedies; twelve one-reel Lyman H. Howe's Hodge-Podge; twenty-six short reel Felix the Cat Animated Cartoons; Kinograms, the newsreel, issued twice a week.

After two strenuous days of business sessions, the delegates to the convention enjoyed an outing last Friday through the courtesy of Captain George McL. Baynes, publisher of Kinograms, Educational's news reel.

The outing included a trip by motor bus to the Sound View Golf Club where a tournament was held.

First prize was won by E. W. Hammons, president of Educational; second prize went to D. J. Chatkin, acting domestic sales manager; while third prize was won by G. Ralph Branton of the Minneapolis office. Gordon S. White, director of advertising and publicity, earned the "booby" prize with a score of 16 for the eighteen holes.

"Peak of Fate" in 2nd Week

"Peak of Fate," the film romance of a girl mountain climber of the Tyrolese Alps, enters upon its second week at the Central Theatre, New York, where it is being presented by the Frank B. Rogers Film Corporation with an orchestra and elaborate musical score. As all of the members of the cast are professional mountain climbers, there is plenty of thrilling adventure in the film. An attractive love story softens the deeds of daring to give it a sentimental interest to all young lovers. The film version used was constructed by Eugene Walter, the American dramatist who has also titled the photoplay.

Scenes in "Curses," the ripping Al St. John comedy in two hilarious reels, for Educational release. This is a burlesque of the serial type of thrillers.

Glenn Hunter Starts in Associated's "Pinch Hitter"

GLENN HUNTER, popular star of the screen and stage, started work this week on his second picture under the Associated Exhibitors banner, "The Pinch Hitter," sponsored by Oscar Price and directed by Joseph Henaberry.

Hunter's first starring vehicle for Associated Exhibitors is "His Buddy's Wife," listed in the releasing firms first group of pictures for the new season. Edna Murphy of Patheserial fame, plays opposite him; and Douglas Gilmore, Flora Finch and Marcia Harris are in the cast.

Tom Terriss directed "His Buddy's Wife," the story of which was adapted from T. Howard Kelly's Smart Set magazine serial.

The Associated Exhibitors' star recently returned from a trip abroad and shortly after played a guest engagement with the Lyceum Players in Rochester, New York, for a series of try-out performances of "The Dark Chapter." George C. Tyler and Hugh Ford will present Hunter in this stage vehicle early next season. Hunter proved a great drawing card in Rochester and all records for stock were broken at the famous Lyceum.

It will be recalled that Charles Ray originally appeared in "The Pinch Hitter" for the old Triangle company. It proved one of the most popular of his early vehicles. With the improved methods of production and the constantly increasing popularity of baseball (the theme of the picture), Associated Exhibitors expect the new version of "The Pinch Hitter" to prove one of the season's best attractions.

Chosen for Lead Roles

B. P. Schulberg Selects Clara Bow, Lou Tellegen and Donald Keith for Leads in "Parisian Love"

Clara Bow, Lou Tellegen and Donald Keith were chosen for the leading roles in F. Oakley Crawford's colorful melodrama, "Parisian Love," according to word just received from B. P. Schulberg, who is supervising the production of this story on the Coast. Otto Matthieson has also been signed by the producer for an important character role, and several other big names will be added to the cast in the course of a few days.

Gasnier is handling the direction of "Parisian Love," which will be offered by B. P. Schulberg Productions as the first of eighteen stories for release during the coming season. The story is from a well known novel of the French underworld which is highly melodramatic in its development.

First National's Summer Play Date Contest Ends

AT the end of the first period of the Summer Play Date contest inaugurated eight weeks ago by E. A. Eschmann of First National Pictures, the Buffalo branch stood first, New Orleans second and Boston third. These standings may be changed by the amount of these summer dates actually played during June, July and August.

A selling period of eight weeks was alloted to the branch managers and their sales forces in which to write contracts for summer play dates, ending May 30.

The final winners of the contest, for which three sets of prizes to the branch managers and salesmen winning the first three places, will be awarded, will be determined on the amount of business actually played during the thirteen weeks of playing time.

This may change entirely the standing of the branches at the end of the writing period. Another factor making for possible change is the later decision by Mr. Eschmann to include in the business actually played during June, July and August, bookings that may be written in those three months. If it is not played before September 1, however, it will not be counted to the credit of the branch writing it.

Patheserial Magazine and Newspaper Ads Designed to Help, Not Sell, Showmen

By P. A. PARSONS
Advertising Manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc.

PLANS for 1925-1926 insure the continuation of the kind of national advertising on Patheserials which has proven so successful during the past two or three years.

The policy behind this advertising may best be expressed as follows: "Advertising to help the exhibitor to sell his entertainment, rather than advertising to force him to buy."

In pursuance of this policy Pathe has now for some years been giving the major portion of all serial advertising appropriations to papers and magazines with concentrated territorial circulations, rather than those with large but nationally distributed circulations. The individual exhibitor is not concerned with nor interested in any circulation figures save those that provide reader interest within the circle of his own sphere of influence. Under the Pathe advertising plan he is shown the number of subscribers that fall within that category; and it frequently happens that the papers carrying the advertising are those whose very names show local appeal or state influence. Some large national magazines, it is true, carry the Patheserial advertising. But they are used to fill in circulation gaps; give emphasis to the advertising carried in the publications with a more local appeal; or to reach certain specific classes, such as young people between the ages of fifteen and twenty-five.

Many Letters Received

During the last twelve months there have been received over 100,000 letters from persons who have read the Patheserials advertisements and have requested information as to where they may see the serial advertised, etc. In many thousands of instances we have directed inquirers as to the name of a theatre easily reached by them, showing the Patheserial. We have felt, that in so doing we have been rendering a real service to exhibitors, and one which would be appreciated. The figures given of course do not include the large numbers of persons who have written or phoned to our various local branches; nor can they include the letters and phone calls direct to exhibitors asking for date of showing. We have reason to believe that the latter have not been inconsiderable, by any means.

To further interest in Patheserials and to enable exhibitors to capitalize upon an idea of their own advertising and exploitation, we have been aiding, with large cash prizes, contests which may be conducted by exhibitors in their own houses with the lure to successful contestants of winning one of our national prizes. For instance, on "Idaho" and "Sunken Silver," two of our current serials.

Helping to Sell "Idaho"

With "Idaho" there is running at this present time a Typical American Family Contest, with prizes amounting to $1,500.00 for winning photos of American families containing at least a father, mother and two children. Anyone may see at a glance the opportunity given to any exhibitor for arousing local interest with such a contest, with the view of getting entries from his own community, and showing these entries either in person or in slides in his theatre. Also, in our advertising on our latest serial, "Sunken Silver," we are offering $3,000.00 in cash prizes for photos of the most beautiful girls. In addition to a grand prize of $1,000.00 we offer a four weeks' engagement in a Patheserial. Here are golden opportunities for live exhibitors to cash in and build up great local interest. The ways in which they may take advantage of the contests and our advertising are legion. And I repeat it is all done to help them, rather than to sell them.

25,000,000 Circulation

To create new Patheserial customers for the exhibitor, three years ago we started to advertise extensively in farm papers. We made our biggest use of the so-called "state" papers, with concentrated circulations in one state. Pathe was the first motion picture company to recognize the farm paper, and the first to place advertising in one. Among the farm papers on the list we find the Iowa Homestead, Nebraska Farmer, Indiana Farmers Guide, Missouri Ruralist, Washington Farmer, Idaho Farmer, Oklahoma Farmer Stockman, Progressive Farmer, Southern Agriculturist, Southern Ruralist, Kansas Farmer, Wisconsin Farmer, The Farmer, The Farm Journal, Ohio Farmer, Michigan Farmer, and two weekly newspapers with large circulations among farmers, the Kansas City Star and the St. Louis Globe Democrat.

General magazines selected because of their large circulations among mothers and housewives are Comfort, Gentlewoman, Needlecraft, Household, with circulations totalling into the millions.

"Sunken Silver" Contest

Among the other general magazines outside those mentioned above there is another class selected because of their influence with young women. These are valuable in the case of a contest like the Beauty Contest on "Sunken Silver." This group includes Photoplay, True Story, Cosmopolitan, Liberty and the McFadden group.

In addition to these the newspaper group include the American Weekly Magazine, issued as the Sunday supplement to the large number of Hearst papers, and the Daily News of New York. Not all of the papers and magazines listed are used on each campaign, but all have been or are being used, each campaign having its own list.

The publications mentioned herein have a total number of readers of approximately 25,000,000, a number so vast as to represent a majority of the so-called reading families of the country.

Coincident with the adoption and initiation of this advertising policy has come a greater care in the selection of serial stories, better casts, more costly production and true feature detail. A much improved product, plus helpful general advertising is the reason why Patheserials have broken into the largest first-run houses, and definitely made good.

Schulberg Signs Windemere

Director Completes Third Unit Now Working On Initial Releases for Next Season

Telegraphic word from B. P. Schulberg has been received by J. G. Bachmann, general manager of distribution, that the producer had signed the well known director, Fred C. Windemere to a contract which calls for him to begin work immediately on Fanny Heaslip Lea's novel, "With This Ring." This story, which ran serially last winter in the Saturday Evening Post, and is now on the best selling list of Dodd, Meade & Co., is one of the most important properties of eighteen pictures to be presented by B. P. Schulberg during 1925-1926.

The signing of Windemere completes the third production unit now functioning on the Schulberg lot. In addition to "With This Ring," two other stories are in the making —namely, "The Girl Who Wouldn't Work" which Marcel De Sano is directing, and "Parisian Love" being filmed by Gasnier.

Franklin Merges with Hoffman

The Franklin Film Company of Boston, one of the leading film distributors in the New England territory, announces through William Shapiro that his company has been merged with M. H. Hoffman of the Tiffany Productions, Inc., and the Truart Film Corporation, the latter acquiring a half interest in the Franklin Film Company.

The announcement further states that the Franklin Film Corporation will devote itself entirely to the exclusive distribution of all the products of the Tiffany and Truart organizations and all other worthwhile pictures that Mr. Hoffman and Mr. Shapiro will purchase jointly for the Renown exchanges and the Franklin Film Corporation. The Franklin Film Corporation have exchanges situated in Boston, New Haven, Conn., and Portland, Me.

William Fox Creates Short Subject Comedy Department

CREATION of a new and distinctive comedy unit was announced today by Fox Film Corporation, with George E. Marshall as Supervising Director.

The new unit will film a series of two-reel, high-class comedies, continuing the successful Van Bibber stories and creating screen versions of the widely read newspaper stories on "Married Life of Helen and Warren," by Mrs. Mabel Herbert Urner.

A third company of this unit will picturize a series of O. Henry stories, rights to which have just been purchased by William Fox from Doubleday, Page & Company.

The success of the Richard Harding Davis' Van Bibber two-reel subjects convinced Fox officials that the public today appreciates clean, fast moving, modern, thoroughly delightful comedies, free from the much used and much abused slap-stick methods. Searching for such available material, the O. Henry and "Married Life" stories were purchased.

A separate scenario department for the new unit, headed by Harold B. Lipsitz and Monty Brice has been created. A staff of six readers will thoroughly canvass the stories of O. Henry and Mrs. Urner for available material. Robert Kerr will continue to direct the Van Bibber series, starring Earle Foxe.

Casting and shooting on the new picturizations will commence in a few days and as soon as material, directors and actors can be secured.

The Fox Imperial comedies will continue under the direction of Lou Seiler, Ben Stolaff, Bryan Foy and others to be announced shortly.

Radio Tells of Warner's Invasion of the South

THE radio was used to tell the world of picture fans about Warner Bros. invasion of the Southern exhibition field. One of the attorneys for the firm was in the South a few days ago to close negotiations for the acquisition of several theatres. He reported to the home oáce in this telegram, sent from Charlotte, N. C.:

"Tune in Station WBT two seven five meters eleven o'clock, Standard time."

Not only the Warners, but many thousands of others, did tune in, and learned not only of the taking over of the houses, but, in the cases of some, of the first days' operations under new management.

Theatres purchased by the Warners included the Pastime, Concord, N. C., and the Lexington, Lexington, N. C., both of which had been operated by the late H. C. Varner, and the Broadway, Charlotte, N. C., and the Ideal, Columbia, S. C., properties of R. D. Craver. The Warners also obtained a management option on the Lincoln, a Craver theatre at Winston-Salem, N. C.

PROJECTION

EDITED BY F. H. RICHARDSON

Narrowmindedness

G. W. Bennewitz, Projectionist, Sioux Falls, So. Dakota, as a prelude to the answers to a bundle of questions in the Bluebook School, says:

I see that the banana peel on page 20 of the Bluebook (arc voltage drop) caused me to slip and burn my pretty whiskers. Take a peek at that one, F. H. I suppose if I were narrow minded I would get peeved and quit the "school," but the fact that some of them (His answers he means).—Ed). are correct and may give some one a better understanding; also that I am not narrow minded, will keep me pounding the typewriter keys, with my eyes open in future.

I'm not so certain as to just what Bennewitz has reference to, but it runs in my mind that I called him down recently on some slip he made in answering a Bluebook School question. Yep, I've found it on page 482 of May 23rd issue. He said: "Arc voltage drop is the potential between the tips of the electrodes of an electric arc. It represents the drop in potential due to overcoming the resistance the current encounters in passing through the arc stream between the carbon tips."

The definition Bennewitz refers to, page 20 of Bluebook, reads: "Arc voltage drop: The drop in voltage between the tips of the carbons of an arc lamp, due to overcoming the resistance the current encounters in passing from one carbon tip to the other."

Owe Explanation

I think perhaps I owe Brother Bennewitz an explanation. The matter on page 20 is a definition, and as such I would call it correct. One cannot well incorporate all details of operation in a definition. When, however, I ask a question which is designed to draw out ALL a man knows about a certain matter, I don't expect him to look at the mere definition of it to get the answer.

If Brother Bennewitz will examine the text on pages 56, 57 and 58, and on pages 391 and 392 of the Bluebook, I think he will agree that there is considerable more to the matter than what is contained in a mere definition. When I asked that question I had definitely in mind the various elements of the arc and the resistance they offered. This was the question propounded: "Explain exactly what is meant by 'arc voltage drop.' WHAT DOES IT REPRESENT?"

That last should have told a man of Bennewitz high calibre that the information contained in a definition would not serve; also I pretty well knew and know that he really knew it would not, so that's that.

Incomplete

When I said the answer given by him was wrong I had those things in mind, and I still hold the answer to be wrong in the sense that it was very incomplete. And now to the point of all this:

I said what I did very well knowing I was talking to and about a man who has something more than a crack for a mind. I knew I could speak frankly and plainly to men like Bennewitz, Dobson, Gray and most, if not all, of the rest of the Bluebook School "students," because the very fact that a man enters the "School" is pretty conclusive evidence that he is NOT narrow minded. Possibly he may not be exactly broad-minded, but he is not the other thing anyhow.

And let me tell you it is a real relief to know there are men to whom I can talk plainly without giving offense—men I don't have to stop and weigh every sentence I write lest I "hurt their feelings"—men who can give and take.

Had I been wrong in my comment I would have expected Bennewitz to have come back with a wallop, and believe you me I'd have printed it too. I'm not a bit thin skinned—if I were I'd have been devoid of any skin at all long ago. The only fellow who gets me mad by what he says is the chap who talks ONLY to see how much injury he can do. That chap is not narrow minded. I very much doubt if he really has anything we could justly call a mind—just a hollow space under the roof of his head which, through some error got itself filled with the think works nature designed for a mule. It's really too bad to have that sort of a brain, without the wallop to back it up.

Of course Bennewitz will continue. If he ta"ed otherwise through such a cause I'd prob'ly jump a "rattler," hike for the middle nor.hwest and enter into personal argument with him—and he's a husky gink too; also he's peeved, because friend wife is away on a visit and he has to do his own cooking—oh gosh!

That Phone Stunt

From a Chicago projectionist I have known for years comes this most interesting communication:

Dear Brother Richardson: For Heaven's sake, if you mention this letter in the department, forget my name for the time being. Make no mistake, most of our men read the department, and profit by it, too. By just saying "Richardson" in the hearing of some of them is like waving a scarlet rag in front of a gentleman cow—that is, unless it be to cuss you.

At that, though, I guess printing my name would be all right (though don't do it) in this case, because I'm going to tear a shunk of your darned old hide off and hang it on my fence to dry. When it is dry I'm going to stick it back on you, though, for after all, though there are times when I'd like to bust a hickory club over your dome, still I like you. I like you because of the GREAT work you've done for projection and the men engaged in it and because of your sincerity and because you have the courage of your convictions.

Courage Admired

One admires courage, even in an enemy (though I don't at all mean you are that) and that you have courage is amply proven by the way you have, on more than one occasion roasted and toasted local union 110, and some of the men in this, my own home town, Chicago. Much as I may disagree with your conclusions concerning projection in this city, I will say that it takes very real nerve and courage to hand a large and powerful organization like our union the solar plexus jolts you did on more than one occasion. And at that, I am bound, in common honesty, to confess, and thus meet you half way, that while I thought you rather unnecessarily harsh, still you lacked quite a bit of being altogether wrong, especially as to the individual cases of punk work in theatres you cited.

There, Brother Richardson (for with all your faults I hold you to be my sort of elder brother, both in the profession of projection and in unionism), I will let it rest at that, insofar as concerns Chicago, except to say that I hope and believe the day will come when F. H. Richardson and Chicago projectionists, as represented by Local Union 110, will be fast friends. We have some splendid men here, as well as some awful dubs, exactly as the case in every large city, New York City NOT excepted. Local Union 110, of which I am, and for years have been a member, lacks a lot of being perfect, but I have faith to believe its faults will in time iron themselves out. Meanwhile the organization as a whole is, I think, trying to do the best it can, under all circumstances, remembeing always that we have to deal with some AWFUL square heads in the shape of exhibitors. Don't overlook THAT highly important fact, friend Richardson. It may account for more than you think in the way of apparent wrong procedure on the part of the union.

Many Friends

You have many warm friends here, mostly among the better class of the men, though they are a bit careful about admitting that fact, because to "stand up for Richardson" just now means incurring the enmity of some men who wield considerable power, which same we cannot afford to do, unless it be very necessary.

And now, confound your old battle-scarred hide, what in the Hot Place do you mean by printing that fool head phone stunt? Want to tie the man to the projector with a wire, do you? Why not get a chain, one end fastened to the wall by means of a stout staple embedded in the masonry, and the other locked to the leg of the poor fish, with the padlock key in the pocket of some pea-eye manager?

Honest, Richardson, I'm ashamed of you for letting anybody pull one like that on you. When you published that, you just put a club in the hands of your enemies. Do you approve of our men being made deaf, and to have them acquire headaches wearing a cussed old head phone all the time? Gee, F. H., when I read that I felt like taking you out to the woodshed, like you did Dobson and Bennewitz, only you wouldn't have recovered so quickly.

You know darned good and well that you pulled a boner when you printed that, and I'll be looking for a retraction, well knowing you to be honest enough and courageous enough to admit error when error is apparent. Get busy!

In closing, let me convey to you, unofficially, the best wishes of many of our men who are (sub rosa for excellent reasons) your friends. Stop roasting Chicago, and join with us in making it the banner projection city of this country.

Want to Help

I am very willing to do anything possible to forward the movement for improvement in Chicago projection. I wrote an official of the union twice, after learning in a roundabout way that steps were being taken to inaugurate an educational campaign in technical projection in that city but my letters were not even accorded the courtesy of a reply. I then wrote again, and did receive a reply which, to all intents and purposes, advised me to attend to my own business, and that if ever the Chicago men thought they could possibly benefit by consulting me, I no doubt would be consulted. So that was that.

I know I have a great many friends in Chicago. Hardly a week passes without at least one letter from your city, which, for the reasons you have suggested, must always be replied to by mail. I am sorry, NOT for what I have done, because it has always been done for what I believed and do still believe to be the true and best interests of the Chicago men and the Motion Picture industry. The reason I am sorry is because Chicago is the second city in North America, and OUGHT TO BE A STAUNCH SUPPORTER OF THE WORK OF THIS DEPARTMENT.

Local Has Resented Criticism

Had the men of that city believed themselves to have been dealt with unjustly, and taken the matter up with me through the union, they would have found me to be always willing to meet any fair proposition even more than half way. The trouble has been that Local 110 has always resented any criticism of any sort by any one, regardless of how just that criticism may have been, and has in considerable measure set itself up as a law unto itself, which is a stand I am most emphatically NOT in sympathy with, because I hold the welfare of the motion picture industry to be paramount to any and all other considerations of any kind whatsoever.

There, that is sufficient of that. If Local 110 and my Chicago "enemies" get satisfaction or amusement out of opposing Richardson, that is their privilege. I am very willing to be friends, and to try to work in harmony with them, but NOT by relinquishing my right to make suggestions or criticisms for the good of the profession of projection, and the good of the motion picture industry. In one of my letters I distinctly offered the "olive branch." Apparently it was tossed aside, for which I was truly sorry, but in no degree worried. I believe with you that the friendship of even so powerful an organization as Local 110 by crawfishing on what I firmly believe to be RIGHT.

The Head Phones

I have received many comments on the head phone stunt, some of them couched in bellicose language, some mildly censuring my having approved this idea and some peacefully arguing that the idea of it is entirely wrong.

Not only that, but I have had quite some personal arguments with projectionists right here in New York City. Only last evening the President of Local Union 306, New York City Motion Picture Projectionists and I stood out in the middle of Broadway, at Times Square, and argued the matter in tones which must have been quite audible a full block away, though traffic roared past

Over two million a day—

Every hot day this summer over 2,000,000 people will be cooled by Typhoons.

Of these, at least a quarter—500,000 of them—go to Typhoon-cooled theatres only because they know they'll be comfortable.

Typhoon Cooling—and nothing else—pulls these 500,000 extra admissions, and thereby saves $100,000.00 every hot day for the exhibitors of this country. That's $5,000,000.00 in just one summer.

If you want some of this five million dollars this year, get busy NOW.

us incessantly. He pronounced the head phone as just plain silly. He sprung the "ball and chain" argument, and said they had "put one over on me." Also President Basson and I have for years been and still are warm friends, though I find myself unable to agree with either Chicago, Basson or any other opponent of the head phone idea.

The head phone is NOT in any sense of the word a hardship. The headaches and deafness argument is fully answered by the fact that telephone girls wear a head phone, using both ears instead of one, day in and day out, for hours on end, and there are NO evil effects.

As to the "ball and chain" argument, I will merely reply that you all very well know, and I think will not dispute the fact that THE ONLY RIGHT PLACE FOR THE PROJECTIONIST IS RIGHT BESIDE THE PROJECTOR WHILE IT IS IN OPERATION. HAS A SINGLE MAN JACK OF YOU THE TEMERITY TO ARGUE AGAINST THAT PROPOSITION?

If you admit that he DOES belong there, and has no business to be elsewhere while projection is in progress, then WHAT EARTHLY OBJECTION IS THERE TO OBLIGATING HIM TO STAY WHERE HE BELONGS—COMPELLING HIM TO DO THAT LITTLE THING, IF COMPUSSION IS NECESSARY, provided the method of compulsion works no physical hardship?

If you were riding on a railway train and you knew the engineer was in the habit of standing down behind the boilerhead, where he could see neither the track ahead nor the signals, talking to the foreman for minutes at a time, without even glancing ahead, I'll bet dollars to no-good eggs that you would DEMAND that the engineer be COMPELLED to stay at his post, and you would advocate a "ball and chain" to keep him there if necessary, nor would the fact that the engineer might object, and claim the right to leave his post, win any sympathy from you whatsoever.

Well, the only difference between the two propositions—the engineer and the projectionist away from their posts—is that the danger to the public would be considerably greater in the case of the engineer. President Basson, in the course of our argument, said: "I never leave the projector when it is in operation," and I will say that I never saw him do it. Well, Joe, if it is not necessary or at least highly desirable that you be there, why do you stay here? That settles YOU on that point, I think.

I have paid an admission to a motion picture theatre, found a perfectly ROTTEN projection in progress, mounted to the projection room and found the projectionist with his feet cocked up on a table very comfortably, reading, or (in one case at least) both projectionists at a bench fully ten feet away from the working projector and any observation port, building a radio set.

To Brother Basson, to Chicago, and to those others who have argued against the head phone, I repeat that I have not yet heard what I would consider a valid objection to their use raised. Were I again projecting, I would have not the slightest objection to using them, because I am always beside the projector, hence they would mean no added burden. The only "hardship" they work is in preventing the projectionist who does NOT remain at his post from leaving it. They are only intended to be used where two projectionists are on duty, mind you. I am of the opinion that those who do stay at their post while projection is in progress, ought to approve of the other sort being COMPELLED TO.

Oswald Promoted

Messrs. Marvin H. Thoreau and Locksley Clark, Projectionists Strand Theatre, Vancouver, B. C., sent in answers to some Bluebook School questions and in an accompanying letter said:

* * * By the way, Oswald has been promoted to some extra duties, which we will leave to him to tell you about. Needless to say, the boys are all with him, as "Bill" is a square shooter.

Two heads are better than one, so it is said, so my partner and I are combining our answers to the questions, the same as we do with our job. Harmony and co-operation is essential for good work. Remember our letters have to come a long way, but we expect to keep this up, so look for a letter from us weekly.

Attaboy! I've been wondering and, to tell the truth have been just a wee bit surprised that no Bluebook School answers have come from such a bunch of live wires as you have in Vancouver. Better late than never, they say, but some of the rest of you chaps out, up or over there are getting pretty darned late, so get thee busily busy, pronto.

By way of explanation, William Oswald is the man who determines the capability or lack of it of those who apply for projectionist's license in British Columbia. I shall await news of the details of that promotion with interest, because I fully endorse the statement that Oswald is a "square shooter." But in an unquoted part of the letter the boys say he claims I did not answer his last letter, and in that he is making statements which Old Man Truth would NOT recognize as any baby of his'n. Out upon you, Oswald! I writ l-a-s-t!!

Your answers will arrive in plenty of time, provided you get busy as soon as the paper reaches you each week.

From Escanaba

C. H. Watkins, Projectionist Delft Theatre, Escanaba, Michigan, says:

I cannot agree with Projectionist Hile regarding the placing of the cue sheet in the film container. I make a cue sheet for change over, and place one in front of each projector along with my running time.

As to taking out punch marks and stickers, I have many times thought I was the only one who did it, judging by the looks of film I have received and have seen projected, holes and all, in Omaha, Neb., Kansas City, Mo., and Chicago, Ill., but I guess Brother Hile's idea is a very, very good one, always assuming that projectionists will do it.

The Des Moines exchanges are removing all punch marks, etc., or were last fall when I was working in Iowa, putting a "pink slip" in each can. That it improved things cannot be questioned. It would not hurt Minneapolis and Milwaukee exchanges to try the same stunt.

Bluebook School—Answers 281-285

Question No. 281—Explain the relation of volts and amperes to horse power.

C. H. Hanover, Burlington, Iowa; G. W. Bennewitz, Sioux Falls, So. Dakota; Leslie Yates, Waco, Texas; T. R. Guimond, Mobile, Alabama; W. C. Budge, Springfield Gardens, Long Island; G. L. Doe, Chicago, Ill.; Glenn G. Wallace, Muskegon, Mich.; Chas. C. Colby, Santa Fe, New Mexico; H. E. Hurlbutt, Oshkosh, Wis.; Walter Johnson, Champaign, Ill.; W. C. Whitt, Red Bluff, Cal., and Thoreau and Clark, Vancouver, British Columbia, were the ones who gave satisfactory answers to this one.

By the way, what has become of Keuster, of Brooklyn? Also Gray and Dobson will soon be here with a bundle of extra well-polished excuses, I reckon. Some of 'em will be setting up a hot weather alibi, but it doesn't go, because I'm danged if I can sidestep on that account.

Doe replies to the question as follows:

In steam engineering one horse power is the force which is equal to the power which must be expended to raise a weight of 33,000 pounds a distance of one foot in one minute of time—see page 30 of the Bluebook.

In electrics the energy represented by one horse power is presumed to be the same thing, and it has been found to be 746 watts. Watts of energy expanded is always equal to the product of the number of amperes flowing and the number of volts impressed. it is the voltage of the power supply times the number of amperes necessary to accomplish the work in hand, thus: if there are ten amperes flowing through a lamp, or if a lamp "consumes" ten amperes, and the impressed voltage is 110, then we know the lamp is using 110x10=1,100 watts, and if we wish to know how many horse power, or what fraction of a horsepower is being used, we divide the watts by the number of watts in one electrical horsepower (746), and we have that bit of information before us. In this case there are 1,100 watts being used, and1,100÷746=1.47+horsepower.

We therefore see that since volts amperes gives watts, and 746 watts equals one horsepower, the relation of volts and amperes to horsepower is that of the two elements which, combined, produce horsepower.

Good answer, Brother Doe—a darned good answer. Wallace puts it quite clearly also. He says:

In electrical calculations, when we desire to know the number of horsepower used by a certain motor we measure the number of amperes it uses and multiply the voltage impressed upon its armature, which gives us the wattage the motor uses, or "consumes." Consulting Page 30 of the Bluebook, or any standard text book on electrics, we learn that 746 watts equals one horsepower, hence if we divide the wattage consumption of the motor by 746, we shall have the horse power of electric energy it is using. If, for example, we have a 440-volt motor using eight (8) amperes of current, and desire to reckon the horsepower consumption of the same, we have this problem: 440×8=3,500 watts, and 3,500 divided by 746 equals 4.69 plus horsepower. We may then know that the motor will deliver that number of horsepower, less whatever its internal mechanical friction and its electrical losses may be.

We thus see that the relation of volts and amperes and horsepower is volts times amperes equals watts, and watts divided by 746 equals horsepower.

Whitt puts it in another way. He says:

The ampere and the volt are the units of current flow and electrical pressure which determine the electrical energy expended, measured usually in horsepower. The amperage may be small and the voltage relatively high, or vice versa, but their product divided by 746 always give the number of electrical horsepower being used or delivered.

Question No. 282—If you have one D. C. 55 volt arc taking 50 amperes through a rheostat, another arc pulling the same, two stereopticon arcs, each using 15 amperes through rheostats, supply voltage 115, what is the total horsepower being consumed.

Brother W. C. Whitt, Projectionist, Red Bluff, California, busily engaged in projecting the idea: "Lookut what I caught," with generous accents on the "I".

Hurlbutt, Wallace, Bennewitz, Doe, Hanover, Colby, Whitt, Johnson and Guimond made good, though Johnson made some error in his figures. His method was correct, though.

Wallace says:

Under this condition, taking current through a rheostat, the wattage consumed in the rheostat is registered by the meter exactly the same as is the wattage consumed in the arc itself. We therefore have each of the 55-volt arcs using watts equal to not 55 times the number of amperes flowing, but equal to the number of amperes times the full line voltage, which is 115, which is 5,750 watts, or 5,750×2=11,500 watts for the two arcs.

We also have two fifteen volt stereopticon lamps, also taking current through rheostats, which means that wattage equal to the line voltage (115) times the amperage (15), or 1,725 watts is being used in each lamp, or 1,725×2=3,450 for both lamps when burning at the same time.

As a total for the four lamps, therefore, we have 11,500 plus 3,450=14,950 watts, and since there are 746 watts to the horsepower, 14,950÷746=20 plus horsepower, the total amount of energy consumed.

Benewitz puts it into form of a formula in which E is the line voltage, I the total amperage and 746 the number of watts in a horsepower. He says:

We have two 50 ampere arcs and two 15 ampere arcs taking current through rheostates from a 115-volt supply, hence

$$\text{H. P.} = \frac{E \times I}{746} \quad \frac{115 \times 130}{746} = \frac{300}{746} \text{ H. P.}$$

Note: I and 130, of course, equal 50+50+15+15 amperes.

Hurlbutt divides things up by calculating the wattage consumed in the rheostat and arc separately. He figures a 115-55=60-volt drop in the rheostat, which multiplied by 50 gives a total of 3,000 watts used in each rheostat. He then multiplies 55 by 50, which shows 2,750 watts used in each lamp, and 3,000 plus 2,750 is 5,750 watts for each arc, or 11,500 for both. He then multiplies 115 by 15 and that result by 2, all of which is correct enough, but the straight multiplication of the total amperage of all lamps by the line voltage is just as correct, and shorter, therefore it is better.

Question No. 283—Suppose you have a 55-volt, sixty ampere arc, taking current from a 110-volt A. C. supply circuit through a Transverter, the efficiency of which is 74. What is the horsepower consumed?

Bennewitz, Budge, Hurlbutt, Doe, Hanover, Wallace, Colby, Johnson, Guimond and Whitt figured this out correctly.

The most simple, direct reply was by Whitt, who says: "5.97 plus." And that was that! But it leaves methods of arriving at the "5.97" entirely to the imagination, therefore is a bit unsatisfactory.

Wallace says:

The arc would be consuming 55×60=3,300 watts, but this represents only 74 per cent of the power taken from the line, and if 3,300 is 74 per cent of the total, then one per cent would be 3,300÷74=44 22/37. If 44 22/37 is one per cent of the total, then 44 22/37×100, or 4,459 is the total wattage taken from the line. Since 746 watts equals one horse power, 4,459 divided by 746 gives us 5.97 as the H.P. taken from the line.

That certainly is a simple way of figuring totals, when the percentage of loss is known.

Bennewitz again resorts to formulae, which are excellent, only I fear some men won't understand them very well. Just remember that in formulae of this sort a certain letter is used to designate voltage, amperage, etc., and the horizontal line means "divided by." In this case E is the line voltage, I the current, Ef the efficiency of the set (.74) and 746 the number of watts in one horsepower. Bennewitz says:

$$\text{H. P. equals } \frac{E \times I}{Ef. \times 746} \text{ or } \frac{55 \times 60}{.74 \times 746}$$

$$\text{which equals } \frac{3,300}{552.04} \text{ or 5.97 horsepower.}$$

Both the methods of Wallace and Bennewitz are simple and correct; also they are easy of application. They are darned good things to KEEP on file, lemme tell you.

Budge puzzled me a bit. He arrives at correct results as follows:

55×60=3,300 watts delivered by Transverter.

$$3,300 = \frac{74}{100} \text{ and } 3,300 \div 75 = \frac{44}{74}.$$

$$\frac{44}{74} \times 100 = 4,459,$$

which is the total watts consumed from the line, which divided by 746 watts in one horsepower gives us

$$5 \frac{727}{746} \text{ horsepower used.}$$

Definite and Real

Exhibitors who keep a careful eye on the box office find that photographic quality on the screen has an influence with patrons that is definite and real.

That's why it's worth while to make sure the picture is printed on the film that carries quality from studio to screen—Eastman Film.

Eastman Film is identified by the words "Eastman" and "Kodak" in black letters in the film margin.

EASTMAN KODAK COMPANY
ROCHESTER, N. Y.

That method of figuring it had me temporarily stumped, but it is just another way of doing the same thing Wallace did.

Question No. 284—Insofar as concerns horsepower, what is the difference between ten amperes at 110 volts and 110 amperes at ten volts?

Every one agrees that there is no difference, so every one is correct.

Bennewitz, continuing his formula answers, says:

Insofar as concerns horsepower there is no difference between ten amperes at 110 volts and 110 amperes at ten volts, as is proven by the following:

$$H.P. = \frac{E \times I}{746} = \frac{110 \times 10}{746} = 1.47 + H.P.$$

$$H.P. = \frac{E \times I}{746} = \frac{10 \times 110}{746} = 1.47 + H.P.$$

Note: In these formulae E represents voltage; I amperes and 746 the number of watts in one horsepower.

Hurlbutt says:

"Insofar as horsepower is concerned, we deal with power as represented in watts, and since volts multiplied by amperes, divided by 746, equals horsepower, and since there is no difference in 10x110 and 110x10, it follows that there can be no difference in watts of power produced by 110 amperes at 10 volts and 10 amperes at 110 volts. Hence there can be no difference in horsepower between the two combinations. They are exactly the same, insofar as horsepower produced be concerned."

Question No. 285—We speak of the "voltage of the arc," or "voltage drop of the arc." Exactly what is meant by this?

Bennewitz says:

"When we speak of 'voltage of the arc,' or 'arc voltage drop,' we mean the electrical pressure or voltage necessary to force the number of amperes of current the arc is using through the resistance it encounters in (a) passing from the floor of the crater of the positive carbon, (b) through the arc stream and (c) into the negative carbon. It is, in amount, the reading of a voltmeter the terminals of which are attached to the upper and lower electrodes, or carbon arms, when the arc is in operation."

Strictly speaking Bennewitz is in error when he says "or carbon arms," since then the loss through resistance in the carbons is included, which is not properly a part of the "arc voltage drop." Outside of that slight inaccuracy he is quite correct.

However, we will forgive him that slip, because his squaw is away and he is patronizing "one-arms" and other food foundries. We all know that when one is accustomed to being fed on pancakes so light they have to be weighted to keep 'em on the plate, omelets that are so fluffy that one puts one mouthful under his thumb while he eats the other, and angel cake that seems only a dream of sweetness (you see I've partaken of the things Mrs. B. concocts and am making a bid to be invited again), and then must suddenly fall back on something which comes after a rough neck waiter has raucously bellowed: "Adam 'n Eve on a raft 'n a tub o' brown," you all know what state of mind (and tummy) a man soon gets into. So all is forguv, Brother Bennewitz; also Bennewitz says neither Gray or the Toronto "Irishman" have written lately, and that makes him lonesome.

Hanover says:

"Arc voltage" or "arc voltage drop" is the consumption of power necessary to force the requisite number of amperes across the various elements of the arc, and overcome the resistance they offer—see page 391 of the Bluebook. It may be measured by means of a voltmeter placed across the carbons (as close to their tips as is practicable for accurate results), when the arc is operating normally. It increases as the arc length is increased, and vice versa. It is higher for the high amperage arc than for the low amperage arc, because (this may be only partially correct) the high amperage arc is longer. It must be longer for best results.

I am not so certain as to exactly all the effects the low and high amperage arc has on arc voltage—just what the various effects may be, but certainly what Hanover says is correct as far as it goes.

So that's that for this week! Don't let the hot weather discourage you, or the fish line or gun wean you away from our work entirely. If you just simply MUST murder a poor li'l innocent fish, take the questions and your Bluebook along, and work while you watch—the cork. If you become too much absorbed in the work, tie the line to your toe and pray a shark don't get the hook and the wet water absorb YOU.

P.S.: When I said "Watch the cork" I mean the cork on the fish line, of course.

From Griffith

John Griffith, Ansonia, Connecticut, who attended the lecture meeting of the American Projection Society held at the Powers Testing Room, recently, and reported in these columns, has the following to say:

Dear Frank: I enjoyed the meeting immensely. The high intensity crater talk and demonstration you gave us was very interesting. I noticed that when the crater was being projected (A pin-hole image of the crater projected to the screen, so that it could be critically examined by the audience.—Ed.) to the screen, the gas was being ejected from two or three vents, instead of from the core as a whole; also that as soon as it was generated it did not remain in the crater, but flowed out, leaving the vents exposed, hence there was not a ball of gas in the crater, as there should have been, even at the correct amperage—when the lectrodes were working at their rated capacity.

This, I believe, was due to a faulty set of the negative, and tends to prove the extreme importance of a correct setting of the carbons with relation to each other. Users of high intensity would do extremely well to study the crater action of their arcs by means of pin-hole projection, if for no other reason than to ascertain the exact setting which gives the best results by confining the gas ball in the crater in its true form.

Information Wanted

And now, Frank, if you could induce some impartial party to supply us with the total number of lumins contained in the light beam under the following conditions it would constitute a very valuable piece of data for the projectionist. It would enable us to see at a glance the comparative value of the different light sources used for projection, and thus prevent us from being bunkoed by fake "tests."

I would suggest that a standard large diameter projection lens of medium focal length be used for all the tests, so that no light loss occur at the lens itself; that plano convex condensers be used in all tests, and that the light source image be focused at the film plane in all the tests, the condenser being 6½—7½ for ordinary arcs and 6½—8½ for high intensity, reducing the Y distances for the higher amperage so as to keep the spot of uniform size. I would suggest the following tests: First: a 900 watt Mazda. Second: reflector type arc at 20 and 25 amperes. Third: an A. C. arc at 60 amperes. Fourth: D. C. arcs at 40, 60, 80, 100 and 120 amperes. Fifth: high intensity arc at 75, 100, 120 and 130 amperes.

All very well, John, BUT where will I find that "disinterested party" who has facilities and an engineering force of recognized standing to make such tests?

Difficulties

Leaving the Mazda out of it I am perfectly willing to accept the results of tests made by the National Carbon Company. I personally would be quite willing to accept their tests as to Mazda, but quite possibly MAZDA folks would NOT.

Then, too, there are difficulties in the way. When it comes to light measurements as applied to screens, there is, I hold, such a thing as light intensity as measured by the photometer, and APPARENT intensity as "measured" by the human eye. Two screens which "look" exactly alike to a photometer, and which really are exactly alike in light density, may look entirely different to the human eye. A white light looks brilliant. An amber light which is of precisely the same density may look very much less brilliant to the eye, and there you are.

It is for this reason, John, that I hesitate about attempting to have such tests made. I will, however, submit your proposal to the National Carbon people, and see what they think of its feasibility. Here is what I am writing them.

Gentlemen: It has been suggested to me by a projectionist of high standing (John Griffith, Ansonia, Connecticut) that I have tests made by some reliable, disinterested party, of all projection light sources used for professional projection, to the end that we have reliable data as to the total light available from the various sources, in lumins, and thus be not entirley helpless when confronted with "tests" which may or may not be fakes.

Mr. Griffith has suggested the following tests, under the following conditions.

First: That a medium focal length, large diameter projection lens be used for all tests, to the end that there be no loss of light at the lens itself.

Second: That plano convex condensers, spaced not to exceed 1/16" apart be used for all tests, the combination to be 6½ collector lens and 7½ converging lens for ordinary arcs, both A. C. and D. C., and 6½ collector and 8½ converging for high intensity. That the lens combination recommended by the manufacturers of such equipment be used for the reflector type lamp.

Third: That the Y distance (distance face of converging lens to aperture plane) be reduced for the higher amperage, so to maintain the same spot diameter.

Fourth: That the following tests be made (Our readers can see list above).

I would like to ask if you consider this sort of a test as being such as would give approximately reliable results—results which the projectionist might depend upon? Also if you would be willing to make them in your laboratories? I would add to Mr. Griffiths' suggestion for procedure, that all the ordinary arc craters must be maintained at a 55 degree angle to the optical axis.

I shall advise our readers later as to what the National Carbon company says.

From Escanaba

correct direction, but it was worded very foolishly and had other objections. I took the matter up with the Des Moines Film Board of Trade and the slips were withdrawn, or reworded, I forget which. The Film Boards of Trade are undoubtedly accomplishing good work in decreasing film damage. They went about it perhaps not the best way, but anyhow they did go about it, and wrong methods can be and are being corrected.

Just what the present situation is in Milwaukee and Minneapolis I don't know, though I just returned from the first named city. While there I had things other than film damage to attend to, however, and don't remember any of the men saying anything about it.

young donkey. When the wagon approaches the big policeman holds up all traffic until it passes. The entire gang attacking an ex-cop, who was fired because of his belligerency, furnishes excitement when he blackjacks his successor. The dogs of the gang scent him out and he is brought to justice.—T. W.

"Unwelcome"

(Universal—Comedy—One Reel)

Somewhat out of the ordinary so far as story is concerned is this single reel Universal comedy starring Charles Puffy. He and Billy Engle appear as surveyors who not knowing what they get up against invade the land of a family of desperadoes who have already killed or driven away forty-eight previous surveyors and are anxious to make it an even fifty. Of course, our hero and his pal manage to get away alive. There is a definite idea running all through this comedy and it is not just a series of unrelated episodes. Some of the situations are amusing and it should prove of average entertainment value.—C. S. S.

"Mexican Melody"

(Educational—Hodge Podge—One Reel)

"Mexican Melody" is Lyman H. Howe's Hodge Podge version of how various creatures and animals in various corners of the universe are affected by the broadcasting of ancient refrains played by two Mexicans on antiquated instruments. This one-reeler also includes other "shots" and sketches among which are the sun drawing water, the falling of the rain drop and a river on its course to the sea.—T. W.

"In the Grease"

(Pathe—Comedy—One Reel)

Jim Finlayson in this Hal Roach one-reeler, titled "In the Grease," has the chance to substitute as a teacher in a school in a tough neighborhood. Some of the students prove to be bigger physically than the teacher and they soon make him appreciate that all is not gravy under the hickory limb. The comedy is of a standard type and one that will provoke the giggles of any average audience.—T. W.

"Animal Celebrities"

(Pathe—"Sportlight"—One Reel)

How animals have to train as well as human beings for the stellar honors in filmdom is the subject Grantland Rice depicts in this "Sportlight" titled "Animal Celebrities." Among the animal stars shown in this one reeler are: the horse "Rex," star of "Black Cyclone" and the canine specialist "Rin-Tin-Tin." Dogs aspiring for stardom are also shown going through their stunts, making this offering quite unique and entertaining.—T. W.

"Office Help"

(Pathe—Cartoon—One Reel)

Mice walk the tight rope, play tricks on one another and ruin Farmer Alfalfa's adding machine in "Office Help," the cartoon is right up to the regular standard maintained by Cartoonist Paul Terry. In other words the large number of spectators who are amused by these pen creatures will be provided with a good time by this offering. —T. W.
